"[WOCLN] is a shelter for emotional healing," said Lily Lopez, 22, WOCLN staff member. "It is a place that embraces every part of you with unconditional love."

Mantia, 19, dies in motorcycle accident

A motorcycle accident that occurred Friday left one University of Massachusetts student in critical condition and another dead.

Lisa Mantia, an undeclared junior at UMass, was pronounced dead at Baystate Hospital following the 8 p.m. accident. Mantia was to turn 20 this coming Thursday and was originally from North Reading, Massachusetts.

The motorcycle driver, 21-year-old UMass junior Adrienne Silvia, is currently listed in critical condition at Baystate Hospital. Silvia was transfer student from Hollston.

The accident took place on route 116 by Crocker Farm Elementary School when the motorcycle collided with a car that was driven by 26-year-old Ayman Taha. Both women are from the class of 2002.

Counselors are on hand to speak to students about the accident.

"As always, students who feel that they need to talk about this can go to Mental Health Services or to the Dean of Students," said Barbara Pitoniak, News Director of the campus News Office.

The cause of the accident has not yet been determined and no charges have been filed in the incident. Both women were wearing helmets at the time of the crash.

"It is very sad when a student dies like this. It effects the entire community," Pitoniak said. "We extend our sympathy to Lisa's friends and family."

Melissa Hammel

Protests at Wal-Mart to mirror global action

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

Opponents of globalization will protest tomorrow at the Hadley Wal-Mart in solidarity with World Bank and IMF protests in Prague, Czech Republic.

Demonstrations targeting local corporations will be held in 45 U.S. cities to coincide with the World Bank's semi-annual meeting. 20,000 people have gathered in Prague to protest.

The Pioneer Valley Central Labor Council has planned with MassAction, Western Mass Global Action Coalition [WMGAC] and United Students Against Sweatshops to rally and picket Wal-Mart at 5:30 p.m.

"People have been looking at organizing for solidarity actions knowing the IMF meeting was going to happen in Prague," said Tim Scott, a University of Massachusetts graduate student at the Labor Center and member of MassAction. "Not only can most people not go to Prague to participate, but groups are moving towards working more locally and organizing local movements within their communities."

Participating cities are listed on the September 26 "Call to Action" web site, www.pwj.org.

Store manager Charles Hedden refused to comment on the rally, as did Wal-Mart public relations spokesperson Jose Gomez at the corporate office in Arkansas.

An estimated 500-1,500 people are expected to participate in tomorrow's rally, according to Yaju Dharmarajah, spokesperson for the Pioneer Labor Council and head marshal for the protest.

Dharmarajah said that their organization is working closely with the Hadley Police Department to ensure safety and to make sure no laws are broken.

"We are not planning civil disobedience," said Dharmarajah. "In no way will we be stopping people from entering [Wal-Mart]."

The rally at Wal-Mart is a joint action between labor, community and student activist groups, a trend seen in the large protests against globalization and corporate interests in Seattle and Washington D.C. last year.

"You're seeing a real shift in this movement," Scott said, "that specifically young people and students who have gotten involved have developed more of a sense of class politics and class consciousness, and you're seeing more of an awareness of the labor movement and getting involved with it, as well as internationally with the sweatshop movement and the structural adjustment policies."

Turn to WAL-MART page 2

License to Spill: Pruddy's --vs-- Amherst

Town and bar feud over codes

By Kate Pitts
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst City Council and Pruddy's are currently battling over the restoration of a liquor license that states that the establishment would be available to serve alcohol until 1a.m. without regulations.

The business' liquor license was revoked in September 1998 after 20 police officers (two of which were undercover) conducted a raid and discovered four minors in possession of alcohol.

According to owner Pruddy Gomez Sr., the raid was brought on after the bar fired one of its employees. The employee then allegedly went to the police to expose underage drinking at the bar. Of the four minors in possession of alcohol, one of the individuals was the ex-bouncer's girlfriend and another was his roommate.

"I've been in this town for 10 years, and I've never seen this many officers involved in a raid," Gomez Sr. said.

Since then, the establishment's original liquor license has not been returned. Instead, a new license has been issued stating that Pruddy's cannot serve alcohol past 11 p.m., in addition to other regulations. According to the Town of Amherst's alcohol license, these 17 limitations include, "live, non-amplified music only, no standing service at any time and occupancy shall not exceed seating for 115 people." Gomez Sr. contends that his is the only such establishment in town that must adhere to such stringent restrictions.

"We're spending money on lawyers," Gomez Sr. said. "It's not just about the liquor. Give us the same conditions as everyone else."

According to Brian Harvey, chairman of the Select Board of Amherst, "[Pruddy's] original intent was to run a Latino, sit-down, family-style restaurant. It slowly changed into a bar."

Harvey further expressed concern that the bar is located next to the Clark House, a residential complex for the elderly and disabled. According to him, there have been numerous complaints from the neighborhood concerning Pruddy's.

"You have to understand that this has a troubled history," Harvey said. "You cannot have a bar here. It's in a residential neighborhood."

Owners of the Clark House could not be reached for comment.

Amherst Town Manager Barry Del Castillo said, "There have been complaints of noise. There have also been some fights."

However, Gomez Sr. refuted allegations that any fights had happened within the establishment itself. He said that the noise complaints have resulted from incidents that have occurred around his business, arguing that they have all been beyond his control.

"There have been instances of complaints but it hasn't been from our place – it's been outside," Gomez Sr. said. "We have no control of what happens outside."

Gomez Sr. argued that his establishment has been discriminated against by town officials, but that members of the community have been supportive of the Gomez's business.

According to the minutes of a Dec. 5, 1996 town meeting with the Zoning Board of Appeals, the town has recognized Pruddy's establishment as being beneficial to the community.

"They noted the obvious respect that the patrons have exhibited for Mr. Gomez and that Pruddy's is safe and respectful of all cultures and colors," the document stated. "The Board appreciated that Pruddy's is a well-run bar and geared for students."

Ann Awad, a member of the Select Board, said Pruddy's has acted as a supportive influence for many students of diverse backgrounds and races.

"Black and Latino kids went there and it worked for them – it has been a real community support group," Awad said. "I've known a lot of people of color who have supported the Gomez family and felt at home at Pruddy's."

According to Awad, "He [Gomez Sr.] has done quietly, without much recognition, so much for the community yet he hasn't gotten the awards he has deserved for his community service."

In September 1999, the Gomez's case went to trial with the Alcohol Beverage Control Commission (ABCC). Their ruling was in favor of restoring the license with the original conditions. However, the town appealed this decision and gave no further comments on the ruling.

To date, the restricted permit states that Pruddy's can only serve alcohol until 11 p.m. The alcohol permit is waiting to be claimed at the Town Hall by the Gomez family. According to them, they are going to fight until their original license conditions are restored. They have refused to accept the new liquor license with the existing restrictions.

"We have to work with the town to get all the permits we need," Gomez Sr. said. "We want the chance to compete with other bars. Don't play favorites."

The zeros on a parking meter outside Pruddy's reflect the cooperation that the owners have reportedly received from town officials toward the restoration of their liquor license.

Penn student takes film into future

By Sarah Feuer
Daily Pennsylvanian (U Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – It's not everyday you meet an upand-coming movie director. But if you're a University of Pennsylvania student, you may be surprised to know there is one living among you.

This winter, Engineering senior Neil Chatterjee will become one of the first people in the world to complete a full-length digital movie.

His film, entitled Wired Awake, chronicles a Penn student suffering from insomnia who enters an experiment to help him sleep. He begins experiencing dreams for the first time, and the film is about the repercussions of those dreams.

Chatterjee, who worked on the project with a high school friend, shot most of the film in Boston and a few scenes around Penn's campus. The actors were amateurs, the budget small and the equipment minimal. At the movie's Web site, http://www.wiredawake.com, states, the project was "a true labor of love."

"It alternating felt really good and really bad. Sometimes it felt like I was doing something really special, and the other half of the time I felt like I was deluding myself... It was a big emotional risk," Chatterjee said.

With 90 percent of the work behind him, Chatterjee is currently involved in editing the dream sequences and adding sound to the film. He hopes to present a screening of the film on campus sometime in the spring.

"In the big picture, I'm going to try to go to film festivals – that's my goal, film festivals and contests and stuff like that. I don't know if it has any merit to get noticed in that way, but there's no harm in trying," Chatterjee said.

Chatterjee transferred into the Engineering School two years ago, right around the time that the deans of the Engineering, Fine Arts and Annenberg schools were finalizing plans on a new interdisciplinary major: digital media design.

The program, which admits only 20 students per year, brings together each of the three mediums for students interested in graphic design, computer animation and other forms of special effects.

"There's sort of a rift between the technical people and the artists" in the entertainment industry, Chatterjee said. "And this was a program created to try to bridge that gap."

The program is not just about taking courses in Fine Arts, Engineering and Communications. It is about mastering a new, cutting-edge technology likely to one day surpass Digital Video Disk and other technology.

Currently, there are two classes of digital-based movies: computer animation, as was used in Toy Story, and regular film shot on digital video, as in The Blair Witch Project – the 1999 movie that shot two obscure filmmakers to stardom. One of the advantages of digital films is that it tends to be very cheap to produce.

KELLY TYRRELL/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Fame!
The UMass Dance Team held their annual tryouts last Friday night at the Cage.

■ Walmart

continued from page 1

Students in the five-college area contribute actively to a nationwide movement addressing human rights issues, especially in relation to the global economy. MassAction is a branch of the WMGAC, and was organized by a core group of students who helped coordinate transportation to the World Bank and IMF protests in Washington D.C. last April. They mobilized about 600 students who attended the rallies for several days.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc., listed as a main target at www.jwj.org, is accused of supporting sweatshops, opposing increases in minimum wage, and suppressing employees' right to organize. The world's largest retailer, Wal-Mart remained nonunion for 38 years, successfully discouraging and intimidating employees from organizing according to Walmartwatch.com.

"Wal-Mart is notorious, and I think they take pride in it – being the most anti-union company in the U.S.," Dharmarajah said.

Last March, Wal-Mart meat-cutters in Texas voted to join the UFCW, making them the first unionized Wal-Mart employees. Two weeks later Wal-Mart announced its plans to close meat-cutting operations in all 180 of its supermarket/retail stores, effectively ending the union.

Last summer, Wal-Mart sought a court injunction against the UFCW to stop the distribution of labor-rights information in Wal-Mart stores in Arkansas. The injunction was recently overturned after it was revealed that the presiding judge in the case owned significant stock in Wal-Mart.

Wal-Mart has long been the target of anti-sweatshop activists because of their dependence on cheap labor to manufacture low cost products. Wal-Mart Canada came under protest in July for selling goods produced by forced labor in Burma after repeated promises to stop selling products from countries where labor unions are illegal.

"These broad economic trends toward globalization have really manifested in Wal-Mart," said Helene Busby, a third year history and social theory student at Hampshire College, "and this is really important to students who are working on human rights issues, as well as the labor movement who are trying to compete with sweatshop labor."

UMass labor professor Frank Borgers, an organizer with MassAction, said that Wal-Mart is an interesting target because of their shoddy reputation on so many human rights issues.

"They have a code of conduct, but it's a corporate code that is kind of impossible to enforce or monitor in any effective sense," Borgers said "So there have been all kinds of sweatshop related scandals on the one hand internationally, and on the other hand in this country they've been stridently anti-union and have succeeded in defeating every organizing drive domestically, and they're the world's largest retailer, so they play a leadership role in the retail market, yet remain almost completely non-union in this country. So it raises a lot of questions, and a lot of student groups, and younger activists have been focusing on the international aspects, but the unions in this country having been focusing primarily on the domestic issues, so it brings these two together well."

Dharmarajah, a native of Sri Lanka commented on Wal-Mart's use of sweatshops there and around the globe.

"On the globalization side, Wall-Mart is notorious for violations of workers rights," said Dharmarajah. "All their products are manufactured in sweatshop conditions – in China, Sri Lanka, Indonesia – in FTZ's – free trade zones. These zones are created by governments and give foreign corporations incentives and tax breaks encouraging non-adherence to union standards and union labor laws."

"So what you see is the proliferation of sweatshop conditions," Dharmarajah said.

The rally will begin when the Teamsters Local 404 arrive in a large semi-truck and trailer used for labor rallies around the country, including the protests in Seattle last November. The trailer will be used as a platform for speakers addressing the role of labor and human rights issues in the community. A speech recorded in Prague by activist Gene Gonshalls will be played. United Students Against Sweatshops will hold a mock fashion show, satirizing sweatshop conditions. Following the performance there will be a picket outside Wal-Mart for one hour.

"We really hope to send a message to the public that the protest is something they can relate to," said Dharmarajah, "that the community and labor are intimately involved in trying to preserve worker's rights, especially worker's rights to organize. These people are your friends, neighbors, grandmothers, sisters and brothers. American Corporations have to respect that in this booming economic climate workers have a right to a living wage and benefits."

On average Wal-Mart workers make five dollars less than union counterparts in retail grocery stores and only 40 percent of Wal-Mart employees receive health insurance benefits, compared to 60 percent of the U.S. workforce (www.walmartwatch.com).

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Stic Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeattie Gorlowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Jaret Barr Photography Editor

Marc Menschel Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Katie Beith Promotions Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Chris Brennan Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

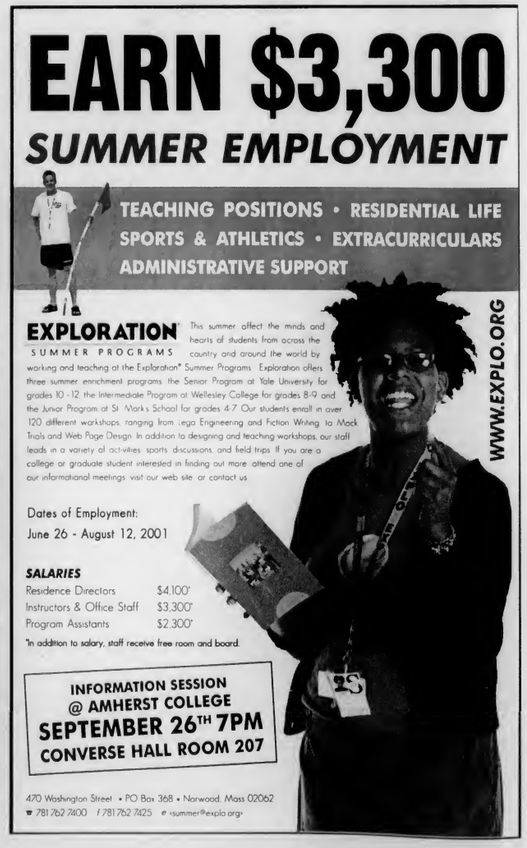
from the writer / director of "Jerry Maguire"
A CAMERON CROWE FILM
ALMOST FAMOUS
DREAMWORKS PICTURES PRESENTS A VINYL FILMS PRODUCTION OF A CAMERON CROWE FILM "ALMOST FAMOUS" BILLY CRUDUP
FRANCES McDORMAND KATE HUDSON JASON LEE PATRICK FUGIT ANNA PAQUIN FAIRUZA BALK NOAH TAYLOR AND PHILIP SEYMOUR HOFFMAN
DANNY BRAMSON NANCY WILSON BETSY HEIMANN JOE HUTSHING, A.C.E. SAAR KLEIN JOHN TOLL, ASC
LISA STEWART CAMERON CROWE IAN BRYCE CAMERON CROWE
www.almost-famous.com
DreamWorks Pictures
NOW PLAYING IN THEATRES EVERYWHERE



EARN $3,300
SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
TEACHING POSITIONS • RESIDENTIAL LIFE
SPORTS & ATHLETICS • EXTRACURRICULARS
ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT
EXPLORATION SUMMER PROGRAMS
This summer affect the minds and hearts of students from across the country and around the world by working and teaching at the Exploration® Summer Programs. Exploration offers three summer enrichment programs: the Senior Program at Yale University for grades 10-12; the Intermediate Program at Wellesley College for grades 8-9; and the Junior Program at St. Mark's School for grades 4-7. Our students enroll in over 120 different workshops, ranging from Lego Engineering and Fiction Writing to Mock Trials and Web Page Design. In addition to designing and teaching workshops, our staff leads in a variety of activities, sports, discussions, and field trips. If you are a college or graduate student interested in finding out more, attend one of our informational meetings, visit our web site, or contact us.
Dates of Employment:
June 26 - August 12, 2001
SALARIES
Residence Directors $4,100*
Instructors & Office Staff $3,300*
Program Assistants $2,300*
*In addition to salary, staff receive free room and board.
INFORMATION SESSION
@ AMHERST COLLEGE
SEPTEMBER 26TH 7PM
CONVERSE HALL ROOM 207
470 Washington Street • PO Box 368 • Norwood, Mass 02062
781 762 7400 f 781 762 7425 e <summer@explo.org>
WWW.EXPLO.ORG

Activist takes fight against AIDS globally

By Barton Gellman
The Washington Post

NEW YORK – The king of Swaziland shouldered aside a White House speechwriter the other day as he angled toward Sandra L. Thurman. His Majesty Mswati III warmly embraced Thurman and called her Sandy.

Then came President Paul Kagame of Rwanda. Then President Jerry Rawlings of Ghana.

At the Waldorf Astoria, where President Clinton had just spoken to African leaders about AIDS, a Zambian stopped to book a spot on Thurman's calendar for President Frederick Chiluba. Then it was the foreign minister of Thailand.

Usually, it's the ambassador who has to work a room, angling for face-time with heads of state. These days, the world is working its way toward Sandy Thurman, Clinton's personal envoy in the global fight against AIDS.

Thurman, an Atlanta activist and third-generation Georgia pol, was chosen more than three years ago as director of the White House Office of National AIDS Policy.

Last month, amid intensified attention to the pandemic's global toll, Clinton added an international portfolio. The catastrophe's scale – 19 million dead, 34 million dying – has begun to sink in with world leaders, and Thurman aims to help coordinate the global response.

Smart money said she wouldn't get the job. Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright and Frank Loy, undersecretary of state for global affairs, wanted to fill the post with a foreign-service officer, reporting to them. After six months of internal debate, they thought they were winning, and Loy announced that the naming of a career ambassador was imminent. The next day, he called a reporter to retract the report.

People have a way of underestimating Thurman, who dresses for society, calls most everyone "love" or "dear," and at 47 lets her blond hair drape over her shoulders.

"My daddy used to have a saying, that I had the check in the bank before most people realized I had a brain," Thurman recalled.

"Time and time and time again" people mistake her manners for softness, said James Carville, an old flame of Thurman's from their days on former Georgia governor Zell Miller's 1990 campaign. "The State Department and everybody's taken a run at her, and they ain't the better for it. She kind of has a cashmere glove over a steel fist."

Carville demurred about their romance, except to recall that "she dragged me to I don't know how many damn fundraisers" for humanitarian causes.

After five years as executive director of AID Atlanta, a community-support and care program for people living with AIDS, Thurman had sweet-talked donors into tripling her budget. She took leave to serve as political director of Clinton's 1992 Georgia campaign, remaining in health care advocacy until Clinton's second term.

Thurman is blunter in her gracious southern way, than is common among high-level appointees. She made clear in public within months of becoming AIDS "czarina," that she strongly disagreed with Clinton's decision against funding for needle exchanges to prevent the spread of AIDS among drug abusers. And she did it without making an enemy of Barry McCaffrey, her White House counterpart for drugs, who opposed such funding.

She describes Air Force One, on which she flew most recently to Tanzania and Nigeria with Clinton, as "16 hours trapped with 40 of your co-workers, like a big bus with wings."

"Of course I'm burned out," she said, in mock exasperation. "I've been doing this for 18 years!"

But not too burned out to spend her vacation on the "family disease," politics. Thurman's mother was a Georgia Democratic Party chairman, and Thurman knows where the power is. Her job at the Los Angeles convention was running credentials.

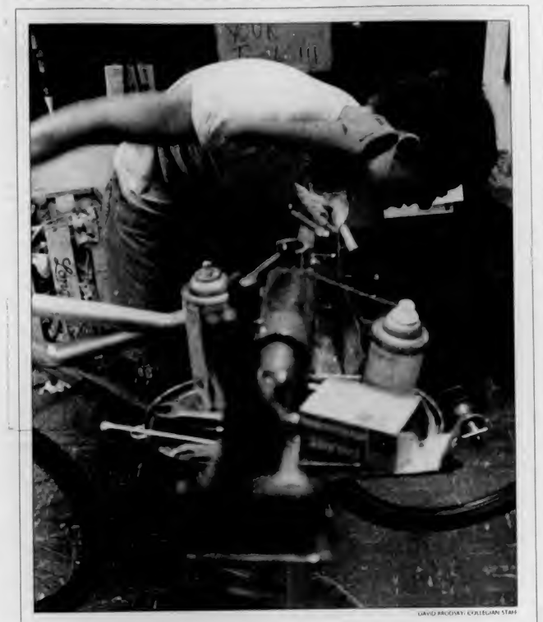
If you wanted someone in, said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., "who (were) you picking up the phone to talk with? Sandy Thurman. She catches you one way or the other."

In her White House office, Thurman has only six staff members to help coordinate AIDS policies that spend billions of dollars across a dozen agencies. Some colleagues in other departments describe her headquarters as a black hole for paperwork. She has a way of missing meetings, or saying the date is no good, that "stops progress dead in the water" when she doesn't like the direction her colleagues are going, one of them said.

Thurman said before leaving for Africa last month that she is "very sensitive to the quality of work that comes out of this office" and agreed she might not "move as quickly as people would like." But when she came back, she took a steelier line.

"The more I thought about that, the more it ticked me off," she said. "With such a small staff we operate in triage mode, so most of our energy goes where the bodies are dropping fastest.

"There's a certain level of arrogance to folks thinking what is their priority ought to be (my) priority."



DAVID BROOKS/ COLLEGIAN STAFF

You spin me right round...
UMass student Kevin Connoy working hard at the Bike Co-op in the Student Union.

Penn prof lifts the veil on Wall Street secrets

By Bret Hays
Daily Pennsylvanian (U Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – You may think you know a lot about money, but you probably don't know as much as Jeremy Siegel does.

To kick off this year's Provost's Lecture Series, Siegel, a stock market expert and Finance professor in the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, delivered a lecture to a standing-room-only audience in Logan Hall yesterday afternoon.

Siegel's lecture was the first of the year for the series, a pet project of Provost Robert Barchi that he hopes will enrich the intellectual life on campus.

The title of Siegel's talk was simple: "Are Stocks Overvalued?" But the answer was far more complex.

Siegel is a leading finance expert who appears regularly on CNBC and CNNfn. His research has examined the performance of stocks and bonds from 1802 to the present. He also recently penned a best-selling book, Stocks for the Long Run. In it, Siegel found that stocks tend to rise at a steady 7 percent rate, while bonds tend to rise at 3.4 percent and fluctuate significantly due to inflation.

While it is generally agreed that stocks give the highest average returns, Siegel's research disproves the conventional wisdom that bonds are more stable than stocks.

According to Siegel, risk numbers – which indicate the likelihood of an investment losing money – are irrelevant to the average investor. The most commonly cited figures are for one year, which show stocks around twice as risky as bonds. However, the figures for the long term tell a different story, Siegel said. After 20 years, stocks are less risky than bonds, which don't "snap back" from adverse conditions like stocks do.

Though bull and bear markets capture popular attention, Siegel said they are "mere blips that fade into insignificance" when considering long-term performance.

"We will never again have a great depression," Siegel said, because of a modern central bank. "We have virtually eliminated the risk of double-digit inflation."

Considering these factors, non-technical stocks are not overvalued, according to Siegel.

Turning his attention to technology stocks, which have captured the attention of the media and investors in recent years, Siegel cautioned against blind investment. He noted that to justify their prices with respect to earnings, tech stocks would have to continue growing at their present extraordinary rate of 22 percent a year for 10 years.

But Siegel noted that there has already been a "shakeout" in Internet stocks, with little damage to the market. Siegel projects that a fall in tech stocks would bring the market down by only 10 percent.

After his presentation, Siegel discussed the short-term economy. He expects third-quarter earnings will be good, but the fourth quarter could be disappointing. He said this decline may lead the Federal Reserve Bank to lower rates in early 2001.

Barchi, who organizes the lecture series and selects the speakers, acknowledged that choosing only a few of Penn's faculty members is difficult.

He also noted that he wants to include speakers whose topics will appeal to a wide range of people in Penn's "community of scholars."

Judging from those who attended, Barchi was successful in attracting more than a Wharton audience.

Graduate School of Education student Angela Becker said, "It's a large voice for the student body."

Wharton sophomore Chad Edmonson said he came because he "wanted to see what all the hype's about."

Edmonson was not disappointed, as he praised Siegel for delivering a "vivid, entertaining lecture."

MTV highlights Gore's visit to U. Michigan

By Yael Kohen
Michigan Daily (U Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, Mich. – University of Michigan students who want to ask Democratic presidential candidate Al Gore a question will get their chance.

The vice president is coming to campus Tuesday for a taping of MTV's Choose or Lose 2000. The program aims to give college aged young adults from the community the opportunity to address their concerns.

The taping is scheduled for Tuesday from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Media Union Audio Studio on North Campus.

It will air nationally Tuesday at 8 p.m.

MTV and Time Magazine are sponsoring the event and working with Michigan Student Assembly's Vote Your Vote. The University was chosen by MTV and the Gore campaign partly because of its "national reputation and incredible student body."

MTV Vice President of Communications Jeannie Kedas said.

MTV invited Gore to hold the forum during the Democratic National Convention. The event will be hosted by MTV News correspondent John Norris.

Voice Your Vote Task Force Chairwoman Shari Katz said she was contacted earlier this week about having the Choose or Lose program in Ann Arbor.

Katz said MTV officials told her that they chose the University for three reasons. First, she said Michigan is a swing state of great electoral significance. Second, Katz cites the extensive outreach efforts of campus groups to register students and third, because of the University's reputation for being an "active school inside and outside the political system," she said.

"If we're going to put college students on the map, U of M is the place to start," Katz said.

MTV has opted to interview students and community members at least 18 years of age to be chosen to participate in the program.

One hundred fifty audience members will be picked this weekend by MTV staff.

Students will be chosen to participate in the forum Friday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Michigan Union room 2105A and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. in room 2105D.

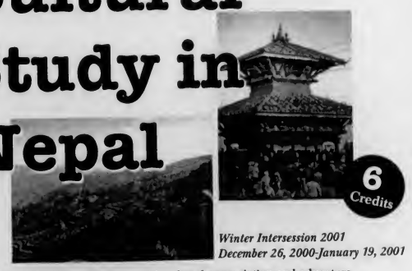
Interviews will consist of casual conversation, Katz said, adding that interviewers are looking for students from diverse backgrounds and who are "able to contribute and add an educational and exciting dialogue" with Gore.

Rehearsals for the taping will be held Monday from 3 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Mindy Tucker, a spokeswoman for the Bush campaign, said their participation in a future MTV program is being seriously considered.

Got breaking NEWS???
Call the Collegian Newsroom at 545-1762

Cultural Study in Nepal



6 Credits

Winter Intersession 2001
December 26, 2000-January 19, 2001

Integrating classroom instruction with cultural appreciation and adventure, UConn's unique Cultural Study in Nepal program allows students to earn 6 academic credits. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students will learn about Nepal's language, culture, economy and ecology, and develop a research project tailored to their specific academic requirements.

For more information, visit us online at www.ce.uconn.edu/nepal.html, call us for a free brochure at 800-622-9908 or come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus.

OPEN HOUSES
Tuesday, September 26, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
Wednesday, October 4, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
Saturday, October 14, 1:00-3:00 p.m.

University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies

National Anthem Auditions!!

The UMass Athletics Department will conduct auditions for persons interested in performing the National Anthem at Winter Sporting Events on Thursday, September 28, 2000. The Auditions will be held in the Curry Hicks Cage beginning at 7:30 P.M.

Note: Auditions will also be held for the UMass Minutemen Hoop Band beginning in October at Grinnell Arena. The following instruments are needed: trumpet, saxophone, trombone, tuba, bass and guitar, keyboards and percussion. Call 545-6060 for more information.

GREAT FOOD!! ● CHEAP EATS!!

Weekday Specials ● Monday thru Friday

2 BREAKFAST SPECIALS EACH $2.92 ●6:30AM to 11AM
•Two eggs any style, home fries, choice of bread, and juice or coffee
•One French Toast or Pancake, two eggs any style , and juice or coffee
4 LUNCH SPECIALS EACH $4.94 ● 11 AM to 2 PM
Choice of iced tea, coffee or soda (free beverage refills)
●Soup and Half Sandwich ● Hot sandwich of the Day with fries, pickle & slaw
●Entree of the Day with one side ●Quiche and Salad

THE SIT DOWN DINER
Breakfast, Lunch, Dinner & Late Night
Open 7 Days● 6:30 AM to 2 AM
We accept OCMP & Major Credit Cards
Rte.9 in front of Stop & Shop and Liquors 44
413-256-1222
Owners: Sue & Jim Tourtillotte - UMASS 1985

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Diversity coverage: still absolutely essential

There are certain issues that arise again and again.

Some controversies simply do not fade, be it because there are politicians hoping to use them for their own advantage, businesses with a monetary stake in keeping them alive, or other such artificialities. Then, there are issues that refuse to die simply because they continue to be relevant and crucial, then need to survive because they must be talked about.

One of these issues is diversity.

Diversity cannot be killed off as an issue because it touches us on so many levels.

The obvious example is that of racial diversity. Discrimination, preferential treatment, affirmative action, reverse racism, racial profiling... these are all relevant issues in society today. They affect each and every one of us in ways that are often not noticed or appreciated, and they aren't going away any time soon.

There is religious diversity; this has probably caused more conflict all over the world than any other issue.

Class diversity, class conflict, issues of economic discrimination and manipulation, the oppression of the poor, the excessive taxing of the rich – these are all the other monetary gradients that cause harm to society.

The issue of diversity is one of such ubiquity that it gets massive amounts of play in the media. There are television stories, newspaper articles, radio briefs, movies, books, websites – just about every medium that is accessible to the American public has been inundated for decades with the topic of diversity and all its ramifications.

It's enough to make a person never, ever want to hear another word about diversity ever again.

That would be a mistake.

The reason that diversity in its various forms gets such volume of press is that it is important. These are the issues that have impact on the lives of every American who is subjected to the media storm that accompanies it. This coverage is necessary.

You may think that we in the media are beating a dead horse, that we've talked about these things enough and that we should find some 'real' news instead of another story about a business with a majority African American clientele being discriminated against, or where another musician is screaming 'faggot' in his songs, or where a woman was once again passed over for a promotion for a man of far inferior qualifications.

These stories deserve to be written and need to be read because, despite the publicity, and despite the fact that they have been discussed to the point where people don't want to be burdened with it anymore, it is still happening. It is wrong for discriminatory acts to be taking place in this society that we are proud to call ours. We need to be aware of the things happening around us if we ever want them to change.

We here at the Daily Collegian are committed to providing the best, most complete, and most current coverage of diversity issues (and all the issues that go along with it) as we possibly can. We believe that it is essential for the growth of this campus and its student body that everyone be aware of the problems and thus be better prepared to correct them.

It may seem like overkill at times, but the advancement of such a diverse place as UMass is well worth it.

What do YOU buy into?

CHRIS COLLINS

This is the response I received when I emailed Abercrombie and Fitch to ask what percentage of their clothing is made in the United States. Now it's obviously a you-silly-person-I-don't-want-to-answer-your-question response, but it is important to my latest complain about Abercrombie and all the rest of the lifestyle brand (as in they brand you like cattle) clothing lines.

What's my problem? Well it all has to do with marketing.

Stores like Abercrombie and Fitch, American Eagle, and American Outpost are all marketed in the same way. They use the image of America (or more accurately, the United States) in their advertising, on their bags, etc. That is, when you think of these stores you get a stream of images of young people, outdoors, wearing their clothing and enjoying all that life has to offer. These images are meant to connect to the image of America at its best is supposed to be: free, alive, and beautiful. Now normally, I don't mind people who use high ideals in this way when they are advertising. However, the ridiculous hypocrisy that comes alone with these stores abuse of our collective ideas about America is just plain wrong.

In general, the merchandise they are selling doesn't come from America; it comes from places like Brunei, Pakistan, China, Taiwan and other sources that are distinctively not America. I spend some time looking at the labels in these stores, (which was fun, if nothing else because the salespeople were thoroughly unsure of what to make of the six foot guy who kept pawing through their teenie bobber tank tops) and found out plenty. In American Eagle, I looked at a total of 56 items. Two of them (socks and a bottle of perfume) were labeled as being made in the United States. That's a little fewer than four percent of the products they had on the shelf. So, if they really want to be true when they are advertising, they should call themselves, "Almost four percent American Eagle."

> "That's tough because the stuff gets made in a complicated process. The stitching and construction and dyeing of the garments may take place at one factory in one country and then screening or marketing may take place at another.

American Outpost was even more fun. They had four items that were domestically produced. Socks, one set of their T-shirts, a women's sweater group and a style of women's tank tops were the only none imports. I looked at the same number of products, so they only need to change their name to "Maybe eight percent American Outpost." Of course the real fun came when I realized that attached to the tags of all this foreign made clothing was a small beige tag that read, "American Outpost is committed to producing exceptional value on 'All American' fashion styles."

Which is just too funny, as maybe eight percent of their stock is made in America (and remember these are rough numbers, but they are pretty representative).

Of course, the corporations themselves don't want to talk about it, I put in calls to all three marketing departments, and the results were simple. Two of them were completely unwilling to listen and the third, where a nice guy named Ron took the call, was unwilling to talk to me after he tried to get clearance from his bosses to grant me an interview. Of course, if they didn't think they were doing anything wrong, why would they be unwilling to answer a couple of simple questions from me?

So why am I bothering at all to do any of this? Well, it's simple, I think we all need to be aware of the ways that media manipulates us on a daily basis; and the lifestyle stores that are likely to abuse our civil pride by twisting are exactly the place to start. We need to be aware that the corporation usually creates corporate image and if we are buying into that image, well then we are allowing ourselves to be manipulated.

I mean, I could tell you that I am a five-foot-one woman named Sandy, but you wouldn't believe me, yet plenty of us have bought into the American Abercrombie Eagle and Fitch Outfitters Trap. And now, many of the generation behind us are too. They are ready to buy from what they see as the cool brand name, not realizing everything that actually goes on behind the scenes in the brainwashing factory that makes them think that they should buy from them.

So am I looking for a total ban on these stores? Well it would be nice (just because many of the overseas factories do have bad conditions, but that's another subject for another time), but I am more concerned about encouraging all of us to start thinking about the subtle manipulations we all fall prey to from the advertising departments of any company. Think before you consume media, and I will be happy as a tennis bopper in a tank top.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

Simpsons 2025

How many of us have spent dozens or so Sunday evenings watching a recognizable, five-member family with a dog, a cat, a favorite clown, an amusing doctor, an interesting actor who attempts murder a dozen or so times, a wealthy businessman with a homosexual sidekick, two ugly and disgusting sisters in law, and twenty or so different individuals all with the late Phil Hartman's voice acting as their own? At least two-thirds of this campus I'm guessing. But some may be getting tired of this show. I know not all of you are, and I don't mean to offend those that still love it, even though it is getting tiresome and not nearly as hysterical as it used to be.

However, what I'm going to do today is tell the future of the Simpson family and the other main characters, all the way from the "A" in Apu to the "Y" in Krusty. That way, if you miss an episode or twenty, you can catch up quickly and not waste your time on the bad episodes anymore. Behold, "The Simpsons" 2025.

Sideshow Bob and his brother... these two individuals, after finally getting out on parole, decide to go into the television industry and will become quite successful. They have a show on Thursday evenings and ratings are reasonably high to say the least. On the other hand, even though these two have made it to stardom, they have not given up their murderous ways. They still are crazy, killing off viewers' brain cells and attention spam in the process.

Barney...if you can believe it, finally quits drinking. He takes the twelve-step plan and leaves liquor forever behind him, returning to his roots as a lawyer. He becomes so successful and wealthy after he defends Bill Clinton for the charge of murdering Hillary, then he moves to Amsterdam and discovers a new habit that can be even better than drinking for some people. It doesn't last too long because it turns out it isn't a first-rate cool, frosty beer. So instead he turns to food, and stars as Fat, Fat Bastard in "Austin Powers 7."

Apu and family... the fellow has about a million kids, and only owns the Quick-E-Mart. There was only so much that he could take of having no money, screaming children, a bossy wife, and people stealing from him. So one day he decides to leave. He torches his store, takes the insurance money, and runs for the sunny beaches of the Florida Keys never to see his family again. Eventually he opens up a new Quick-E-Mart and is very successful. Meanwhile, his wife ends up on Jerry Springer along with the children and they state their case of how Apu abandoned them. They are laughed at and they all end up owning 7-11's throughout the country.

Dr. Hibbert and family...the doctor always had successful practice until Steve Young's wife sued him after Steve died suddenly. The good doctor was the one finally responsible for letting Young play in the year 2000 and allowing him to receive the 500th concussion of his life—the final blow. So he goes to jail, and the whereabouts of the family are unknown.

Mr. Burns and Smithers...Mr. Burns, although he gave a good fight, finally passed away at the ripe young age of 126. Smithers, at the time of Mr. Burns's death, was 87. So even though he is given a factory to maintain and an unbelievable amount of wealth, he is too old to enjoy any of it. He gives the profits to a local college named UConn, where most of his pathetic friends and relatives attended school. He then passed away one year later when my roommate, homeless and drunk out of his mind, murders him after Smithers steals one of his beers.

Flanders and family...Ned, although he loves his wife and children very much, will not let go of his religion. After Father passes away, Ned leaves his wife and kids for the opportunity to become a priest. Little did his wife know that they actually were never married. Ned had apparently been friendly with a priest who made sure that he, in case he wanted to someday turn to the priesthood, could do so by using faulty papers regarding Ned's marriage. Finally Homer has a "good" reason not to go to church and never goes again.

Janitor Willie...he finally meets a woman that he finds to his liking and marries her. He and Chyna from WWF have a great life together.

Karl and Lenny...Karl, who had never bought a lottery ticket, finally did. And won. So he and Lenny travel to Peru where they take their five thousand dollars and live like kings with beer, women, and a new mansion. Of course they are swindled out of their money after one week and are eventually murdered trying to cross the border in Mexico.

Moe...he finally has enough of those prank calls Bart had been pulling on him for years. So he goes crazy. Fortunately for him and the rest of America he destroys Yankee Stadium to get back at the world that had so wronged him in the past. America, in turn, loves him for it. Dan Duquette, Jr. has an honorary ceremony for him. He is given the key to Boston, Chicago, Atlanta (although John Rocker wanted to take it away because Moe has an accent and he didn't like it), and almost every other major city. Because of this the Yankees are forced to play all road games under the new contract that says a team must do so if their stadium is destroyed. They're pelted with pieces of garbage every night, so much so that leter can't take it anymore and leaves, thus breaking his contract of $25 mil per year. A real shame, a real shame indeed.

ADAM VALACHOVIC

Krusty...While extremely famous in Springfield, his jokes start to get thin and he finally runs out of material, so he decides to move. He moves to L.A. Here he is normal and thrives with his small amount of wit, mainly because even his bad jokes are better than those around and the people here are so dull that he becomes amusing.

Millhouse...He to this day has a crush on Lisa Simpson and refuses to let her go. He becomes a stalker, follows her around, and eventually is arrested after he breaks his third restraining order brought against him. He is put away for years, locked down with all of the sodomites and those who've been away from the outside world (i.e. women) for too long, so long that they see him as...enough said.

Homer and the family...All will live happily in their later years. Just as they both lost weight and Homer grew back his hair when Bart and Lisa attended Camp Krusty. Homer and Marge will both drop years when Bart leaves after his 35th birthday to join the circus in Krusty's honor. Lisa, meanwhile, has become one of the world's most important scientists although everyone who has ever known her, spoken to her, seen her, or knows about her, hates her. Finally, Maggie lives the best life of anyone. She becomes a successful politician and will become the first female President of the United States. She cares for Homer, Marge, and the rest of the family via her paychecks and bonuses. It makes one wonder, however, how she got that far with such little clout. Although now that I think about it she was always sucking that pacifier...Did somebody say Monica Lewinsky?

Adam Valachovic is a UMass student.

Seeing the light

I had planned on writing a column about the injustices of Parking Services. My strategy was to detail with the way parking services squeezes the green out of the people it "services," but something has come up and Parking Services has escaped my wrath until another date. As a writer when an event occurs and inspires emotion the worst thing to do is force it down. I usually do, which results in a lack of understanding about life that encompasses most of us all the time. If you are one of the few who has it all figured out then please stop reading, for you can gain nothing from the blood letting that I hope this column is.

Are you still with me? I read Rob's column on his breakup (Monday Sept. 11), and was moved by the raw honesty that he shared with the 17,000 plus who read The Collegian each week. To spill your blood in front of a school where people rarely have time to hold a door for one another takes balls. I respect Rob for this and could empathize with his pain, as I know many of us can. It is my sincere hope to capture some of that throbbing, twisting, and painful honesty for you. Those who care, read on. Those of you that are bored already, I'll be back to my ranting about world and University issues next week.

Still with me? Good let us get to it. What are we all doing here? Attempting to educate ourselves, well yes, but why? Is it to get a fabulous job, or the immense money that we are all assured as we enter the market place with our shiny new University degrees? Why place importance on money? My theory is it makes us more attractive to a potential mate. Do you believe that people want the money so they can have a beautiful home only to share it with no one? Do people have savings so they can take that long over due second honeymoon with themselves, of course not. Money makes us attractive to others, it speaks to ability to accomplish things, and everyone loves a winner. If I lived in a van down by the river, it would be hard to attract anything but the police for parking violations.

People will tell you that true love has nothing to do with money. Talk to those same people after their precious one has lounged around the apartment for a year. Always promising to look for that golden opportunity that awaits them in some elusive ad in a fantasy paper "maybe tomorrow." countless people utter without knowledge that tomorrow was yesterday and yesterday ended last week. This person would rather sleep through life, slowing daily, and draining the once immeasurable respect that their partner held.

The stress of daily life often takes its toll on our relationships and one of those stresses, unfortunately, is money. The bottom line is that there are few people that can see past the humdrum practicality and engulf themselves in the purity of another. I used to believe that loved conquered all, then I loved a few times and figured out I must have read the greeting card wrong. Perhaps it said doves live in malls, or maybe it said Visit Concord Falls or something, but love conquers all who would believe this idealist fodder.

I am faced with the death of my Peter Pan. The same Peter Pan that allowed me to labor under the assumption that someone would drop magically from the thick underbrush and apply a tourniquet to my cynicism. As I travel, I discover that everyone has a wound and needs a tourniquet; the problem we all face is the world does not have enough medics to go around. So we learn to apply the bandage ourselves, more often then not this teaches us, like a Pavlovian dog, to fear and distrust our emotions. Some would rather choke down the emotion of their Peter Pan for the safety of a meaningless encounter. A person that knows virtually nothing about you, except what you like for breakfast, has little chance of causing much of an impact (good or bad). These relationships lead us away for the sensual pleasure of love.

ETHAN BERGERON

This takes us to the point of this seemingly endless tale. I love a woman I can never have. I can taste her breath although we are time zones apart. I can feel her in the bed of my heart, buried securely in down blanket like warmth. She haunts me, like the vision that you catch a glimpse of in the corner of your eye. We don't have to speak to express emotion, it simply is. I cannot explain how I understand her or why my emotions hoil when she crosses my mind but those who have walked (or ran) this path, understand.

Now that the inadequate extravagant description of my accidental love has made my audience sufficiently ill, I should share my dilemma with you. This woman is center stage, the main attraction. She is intelligent but not arrogant, beautiful but avoids vanity, focused without insanity and effortless in her style, in short she oozes class and dignity. However, as always, there is a catch. She lives on the other side of the world and my educational obligations limit my travel.

For now, she exists only in hilarious emails and phone bills that seem to dwarf the national debt. She has invited me to spend the summer and the following year with her in Europe, this is sure to change my life in aspects that I could not even fathom, but this takes us back to my earlier point. My dreamer, my believer has gone into hiding thanks to the through pounding I received courtesy of the opposite sex since I was old enough to recognize women as "different." I am not complaining, everyone gets thumped by relationships and takes their licks at the hands of love, but the byproduct of those beatings is reluctance.

My view is, say I jet off to Europe spend my time writing, reading and encountering experiences with this marvel of a woman, why would I ever want to do anything else? If the goal of life is to love, why should I pursuit that brass ring and attend Graduate school or do anything else for that matter? I am not ready for the changes that undoubtedly occur when you trip, fall, or stumbling into the arms of a love.

So, I'll send Peter Pan to his room and let you get back to your day. Thank you for journeying into my column and sharing some my personal thoughts. Sorry if this has been self-indulgent, I hope your coffee is still warm. If you have any reaction please write to The Collegian and to all the lovers sitting by the pond, basking in your recent sunshine, you're the lucky ones, you have beaten your fear of the dark, enjoy your time in the sun.

Ethan Bergeron is a Collegian columnist.

MIXFEST 2000

COURTESY DANNY CLINCH

Vertical Horizon gave fans everything they wanted at Mixfest this weekend.

'BNL' brilliant in quality line-up

MIXFEST 2000
Suffolk Downs
September 23, 2000

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Mixfest 2000 rolled through Suffolk Downs in Boston this past Saturday with a variety of talented acts. Barenaked Ladies, Goo Goo Dolls and Tracy Chapman headlined a star-filled day. Though the organizational skills of Mix 98.5 (WBMX in Boston) were strongly questioned, the music was exceptional.

Mix 98.5 puts on the annual concert in the city every fall, and has had some huge acts such as Dave Matthews Band, matchbox twenty and Melissa Ethridge. The station did not hold anything bad with this year's show. Headlined by the Barenaked Ladies, who Mix calls their "house band," the festival was revamped from last year's twenty plus lesser known artists, to thirteen acts all headline caliber.

Barenaked Ladies put on a show that could quite possibly be one of the best concerts I have ever seen in my life. The band is just beginning a tour in support of their new album, Maroon. Though I was not a big fan of the band before I went to the concert, I am now convinced that you truly do not get the BNL experience without seeing them live. The band adds a unique improv-comedy style to the poppy recognizable music that everyone seems to know. Fans sang along to selections such as "One Week" and "The Old Apartment," but were equally as attentive when the band seemed to be joking around. They took shots at the huge vendor signs in the back of the crowd that said, "beef" and "fried dough." They made fun of Eminem and Brittney Spears. They did their own rendition of Destiny's Child's "Say My Name." Plainly put, BNL had fun.

Goo Goo Dolls were the hardest rocking act of the day. Unlike BNL they are just wrapping more than a year's worth of touring, and this was their last scheduled show for a while. Lead singer John Rzeznik said, "I don't know about you, but we need to write some new songs because I'm sick of playing the same ones over and over again." However, the fans were extremely responsive to all of the familiar material.

Tracy Chapman was the weakest of the three headliners. During her set, many fans avoided the stage that she was on to get good seats for Goo Goo Dolls, and her constant usage of the same guitar riff made each song sound the same, and her performance was boring and mediocre at best.

Macy Gray brought her original smooth style with her. She was also very unresponsive to the enormous amount of children in the crowd. She was one of the only people all day to drop an infamous f-bomb, and lead the crowd in an homage to the male reproductive organ chanting "the dick, the dick, the dick."

Besides Goo Goo dolls, Smash Mouth tried hard to keep the crowd rocking hard. They did a very good job, but the surprise of the day was the remarkable performance by Vertical Horizon. The band alluded to their local roots, and got a huge response from some very die-hard fans.

The Go-Go's returned to the music scene after a very long absence, fronted by Belinda Carlisle. They played an array of new songs that will be on their new album due out in April 2001.

Something that Mix 98.5 seemed to be shocked by was the incredible amount of people in attendance for Guster. The Boston band has a huge following in the local area.

Lisa Loeb, Roxette, The Corrs and Fastball all played sets earlier in the day.

Despite terrible organization, Mixfest 2000 produced the enjoyable bluster of music that only a star studded line-up could

Hey! You're stepping on my face

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

"I'm so, so sorry!" These are the words that I exclaimed to some random guy that I've never met before, who I landed on top of, missionary style Saturday afternoon. Yes, you read that previous sentence correctly.

Though the music at Mixfest was excellent, the comfort level was exceedingly small. When Mix 98.5 (WBMX in Boston) organized the event, they showed no care, concern or value for the concert goers who would be in attendance.

Firstly, Suffolk Downs in Boston is a beautiful place. It is a huge racetrack, with a large grassy area in the middle. A pond with a geyser resides next to the lawn. Given the right conditions, it may even be a nice place to see a show. Mix 98.5 did not have anything close to the right conditions. Even as I sit here a day after the show, looking at the map that was given me, I can't understand who could be crazy enough to think that the set-up would be anything more than a congealed cell for fifty thousand people.

The huge stage sat on the front of the lawn, which was adjacent to two sides of the racetrack. About ninety percent of the people were packed into the small chunk of space on the lawn. Ninety percent of fifty thousand is 45,000 fans in one tiny block of grass. That wouldn't be too much of a problem had all of those people not brought blankets to sit on. The blankets took up anywhere between five and twenty feet. People don't like it when you step on their blanket. There simply was not enough space to accommodate everyone.

Furthermore, vendors and beer gardens were set-up around the exterior areas of the lawn creating huge lines that spilled into the crowd. There were no ropes or gates to guide walkers or prevent people from sitting in front of the vendors. The entire place was a free-for-all.

When I first arrived, we were greeted by what seemed to be a mile long line. The line wrapped around the entire complex and led into the parking lot. I still don't realize why there was a line at all. It seemed like people formed a line, just to stand in a line. The line actually passed the place where the train

Everyone had a different unpleasant experience at Mixfest. Alicia Fedele, a Westwood, MA resident and UMass alum said, "It was awful! We left at 5:15p.m. People were stepping all over us, and we couldn't even see anything. We tried to clear pathways so people could walk around us, but all that happened was more people would come sit in those paths and block other people from getting through. I'm amazed that no one got hurt."

My experience was equally as bad, but almost the complete opposite. The time it took me to walk with my little sister to the bathroom and get back was over two hours. We missed two band's performances, and became utterly annoyed. During that time, we were pushed, kicked, spit on, sneezed on and punched repeatedly. Not exactly the type of fun that Mix 98.5 would like to promise.

During the show frustration began to rise. The morale of the crowd was exceptionally low. Cries of irritation could be heard absolutely everywhere. People who had nowhere to walk were sick of stepping over everyone and their possessions. People who wanted to sit and relax were tired of being stepped on and kicked around. People who were waiting in line were had to do so for what seemed like forever, and couldn't stand having people cutting them, and pushing them around.

Apparently the complaints were abundant immediately following the show. People were annoyed, and this was proven at the end of the show when a representative for Mix 98.5 told people, "There's only one way out, and that's the way you came in, so be careful. The crowd responded with groans of displeasure. On the way out, annoyed fans ripped down tents that prevented them from walking, and some even stayed an extra long time to prevent having to deal with more problems.

How responsive was Mix 98.5 to the complaints? Well, after talking to some people who have already called the station, they claim that station representative deny any problems, and brag that no one was hurt. The station has ignored problems in the past.

For Mixfest last year, they ran a promotional advertisement that had a DJ saying, "If you don't have your tickets for Mixfest yet," and a woman with a heavy Boston accent chimed in with, "You're a retard!" After voicing several complaints to the General Manager through email that were not responded to, I placed a note on the station's web page bulletin board for fans to email the station if they found the commercial inappropriate. The only action that was taken, was the removal of my note by the site's maintainers.

Complaining about the irresponsibility of Mixfest will get us nowhere. There are steps that should have been done, and should be done in the future to insure safety and comfort to the paying fans. First of all, blankets should be outlawed at festival shows. People trip on them (I know this from experience) and owners get overly upset when people step on them.

Secondly, the organizers of an event such as this must utilize the space much more efficiently. It is really bad if everything blends together making one huge mess. I'm sure there are tons of other ways to make things better. Maybe if these things had been done, I wouldn't have found myself up-close and intimate with some stranger's personal space.

COURTESY LANCE STADLER

Mixfest bragged to have everything from Goo-Goo to Go-Go.

NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANNA EAT?
CAN'T FIND A MENU?
DON'T WANNA PICK UP THE PHONE?
LOG ON TO WWW.MASSMUNCHIES.COM
Point, Click, Eat!
Browse menus and order food for delivery with a few clicks of the mouse!

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH
D.J. MATT Filmore
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
DRINK SPECIALS
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

Say goodbye to Old Navy Fleece and hello to Catwoman Leather

Style File with SHAUNA BILLINGS

God, I love fleece. It's soft, it's washable, and life didn't get much better than when it was the style to wear something more comfortable than your pajamas. Remember walking into the GAP last year, and everything was fleece in bright, happy colors? And bright! Old Navy Performance Fleece for the bargain price of $19.50?

Well guess what, it's over. Now I'm not saying to throw your stack of vests out the window... that would be insane. A big fleece hoodie will always be the best armor against the giant wind tunnel that is UMass. It's just that fleece is not the fabric of 2000, and it may be time to move on.

Instead of making a logical transition to something soft, comfortable and affordable (fleece, the fashion dictators of the world labelled the antithetical material... leather. Yes... that's right leather. It is about as opposite from fleece as you can get. It's expensive it's hell to wash, and you can't wear it to bed at night. But despite its lack of wearer friendly qualities, the simple fact exists that if you wear leather, you look hot.

Whether it's a nod to the booming American economy, or if it's an attempt to be all sleek and sophisticated in our new millennium, leather in all shades and textures is the big trend this fall. To hop onto the bandwagon here are some very easy steps to follow.

Step One: Apply for a job doing menial labor.

Step Two: Find large jar, and label "The Leather Fund." Add all spare change, and salary from said minimum wage job.

Step Three: In November, when you've finally saved up enough money to purchase desired leather item, hitch a ride to the mall, and dump your change on the counter at Wilson's Leather.

Note: Steps One through Three can be skipped if: A: You've got a job that pays you mad cash (I hate you!) B: Your parents like to drop you a hundred from time to time (I really hate you) or C: You've learned how to tan leather at the family business and are presently working on a stunning new pair of pants for yourself (I don't hate you, but I am a little frightened by you).

Once you've scrounged, begged, borrowed, or earned the money, head towards a store that caters to your price range. Most stores offer a variety of leather qualities and reasonable facsimiles like pleather or vinyl. Different stores owned by one major company often have similar pieces at very different prices. Old Navy, GAP and Banana Republic offer similar leather jackets priced at $138, $198, and $348 respectively.

The GAP, known for its classic pieces, gives basic jean jackets and pants a twist by creating them out of leather. While the store offers guys a limited color choice of black, brown and the occasional olive, women can have fun with the additional colors red, turquoise and orchid pink.

One of the hottest items for girls is a below the knee, A line skirt, which looks sophisticated and sexy when paired with tall boots. Men should check out a longer length jacket, like GAP's Car Coat, $268, which falls below the hip.

All textures of leather are in, but just remember that the softer the leather, the more comfortable you will be. Suede is popular, and is appearing often this season with a patchwork quality. Garments are either pieced together with multiple colors, or a single colored article will have a whip stitched block pattern. Another hot texture is python or crocodile, which adds even more of a wild look to kicky boot cut pants. But classic leather, from matte to shiny is dominating the fall line.

With so many texture options, one can expect an array of colors as well. From trendy red python print, to flirty pink, to sophisticated black, the choices are available in nearly every style. Fashion magazines are touting purple and wine as the hot colors of the season. So for the ultimate in trendiness, pick up a purple leather over shirt or knee length skirt.

For those who were unable to follow the easy three step guide to purchasing leather, and/or for those who are unable to condone spending $200 for a pair of pants, consider purchasing pleather. At stores like H & M, one can spend somewhere in the $20 - $35 range for a similar-to-the-leather-kind pair of boot cut pants in pleather/vinyl. Or visit Express for vinyl python print pants for a fraction of it's leather sister.

Aside from price, the major benefit to pleather and vinyl is easy clean-up. For those of you as unable to walk and carry a tray of food simultaneously (such as, oh, me!) you'll be happy to know that pleather pants are like wearing one of those giant wipe off tablecloths wrapped around your waist. Should you happen to spill a bowl of corn chowder and a large root beer on yourself (stop laughing at me!), instead of running home to change your stained khakis, simply wipe your pants clean with a napkin and continue on your merry way. It saves major time, embarrassment, and perpetual purchasing of Stain stick (Which I really should buy in bulk.).

Whether you opt for klutz-friendly pleather or the real deal, get sleek and sophisticated, and live it up this fall in leather.

Shauna Billings is a UMass Student.

COURTESY COMEDY CENTRAL

She's got something to say!

Check back for our interview with Donna D'Errico from "Baywatch" and Comedy Central's "Battlebots" Wednesday in Arts.

Go Wireless
Without Going Penniless.

Bring your College ID to the TSR Wireless booth for Back-to-School Savings! Now through September 30, you can get 250 Anytime Minutes and 250 Night & Weekend Minutes of clear calling for just $29.99 a month when you sign a one year Sprint PCS Advantage Agreement*.*

See us at tsrwireless.com or call us at 1-800-795-RING for the store nearest you!

Sprint. Sprint PCS®
Dual-Band Sprint PCS Phone™ Samsung® SCH-8500
Sprint PCS Wireless Web

TSR Wireless™ Its where to go wireless.

*$29.99 offer good for new customers only. Some restrictions apply. See printed materials in stores for details. Offer ends September 30, 2000

Hampshire Mall

You should write for ARTS

YANKEE CANDLE

If you're looking for a SEASONAL or PART-TIME position, we want to meet you!

Come meet us at the UMASS Campus Center Tuesday, September 26, 2000 8:30am to 5:00pm

Flexible schedules, including Seasonal and Part-Time Weekend hours, are available to fit your unique scheduling needs. We are currently looking for help in the following areas:

- SEASONAL SALES ASSOCIATES
- SEASONAL RESTAURANT STAFF
- SHIPPERS (year round)

We are a progressive company offering our Seasonal and Part-Time associates many extras including: competitive wages, generous discount on candles, as well as use of our fitness center. We compensate all employees required to work on Sundays with time-and-a-half pay.

If you are unable to attend, please stop by our Corporate Headquarters, YCI, at 102 Christian Lane in Whately, MA. Directions: Route 116 North to Route 5 & 10 intersection, take left onto Route 5 & 10 South, left onto Christian Lane.

No phone calls please, EOE

YCC Listed NYSE

www.yankeecandle.com

For a complete listing of current job openings, please call the Yankee Candle Jobline at 800-899-6038 and select menu option 4.

Minutemen "tie" up Bulldogs

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Inches from victory, mere centimeters from a four-game winning streak, the Massachusetts soccer team played 120 minutes of soccer against the Fresno State Bulldogs and without a winner being anointed. The Minutemen had to settle for the title of UMass Classic co-champion as they left Totman Field with a 1-1 tie.

Coach Sam Koch said after the game that UMass made "one silly mistake early," and although that mistake may very well have cost the Maroon and White another win, a better than .500 record and a four-game unbeaten streak is something positive to take into Atlantic 10 play.

UMass was shell shocked at the onset of the game by a three-striker formation set by Fresno State coach Dave Chesler. The strategy, not yet seen by the Minuteman defense, allowed the Bulldogs to send more players forward into the box, and often times outnumbered the Maroon and White backs.

The game plan paid off in the opening minutes of the half as a Fresno run to the left side led to a free kick from 25 yards out. Bulldog midfielder Noah Delgado bent a ball into the box, which was headed back across the grain, fooling UMass keeper Bryan O'Quinn. Fresno's Danny Risch touched the ball into the open net to give the visitors a 1-0 lead.

The Minutemen were not fazed by the early scoring strike, as they would counter with their own offensive pressure. At the 39 minute mark UMass had a free kick from 35 yards cleared by the Fresno fullbacks. Three minutes later the Maroon and White placed a long ball into the box off a set piece. Fresno Goalie Jeremy Proud came off his line to intercept the pass, but the attack did not end there. Another Massachusetts free kick came two minutes later as Derek Rhodes sent a bending strike into the box, only to be muffled by the Bulldog goalie.

Fresno State's second scoring opportunity of the half came with 26 minutes remaining when striker Ron Davis fired a shot from 15 yards against the grain, beating O'Quinn but sailing just wide of the post.

The Bulldogs would then have to fast instead of feast as Junior fullbacks Shawn Green and J.R. Pouncey led a physical UMass defense in shutting down the visitor's attack for the rest of the half. Shortly after the scoring chance, Green headed away a cross into the box, stopping another scoring bid. Minutes later he played a through ball perfectly, running stride for stride with a Fresno forward, intercepting the ball, then making a pass up field.

UMass	1
Fresno	1

Sparked by the defense, UMass attacked the Fresno backs bidding for a score. This goal proved unreachable, as chance after chance was knocked away or intercepted by the Bulldog goaltender. A series of long throws near the end of the half were picked off or punched out and a number of crosses were too long or misplaced. The Minutemen went into halftime frustrated offensively and down a score in the match.

The Maroon and White took the pitch for the second half with a strategy implemented for victory. To the surprise of many in the crowd, UMass took the field minus top scorers Fred Kinateder (3 pts), Jeff Deren (5 gls) and Yuri Morales (6 pts). In their places stood freshman standout Ptah Myers, Jared Weintyt and Max Wolf.

The plan worked in part, as the offense played with a fire absent in the first frame. Five minutes into the period a golden scoring chance off a long throw was halted when the official whistled the Minutemen for interfering with the Fresno keeper.

The game was played on an even playing field for the first 25 minutes of the half as each team traded scoring chances. Coach Sam Koch waited until there was 26 minutes left on the clock to start bringing the big guns back in. Fred Kinateder came in at this point and provided a good charge up front by creating chances and ball possession.

"Young Gun" Jeff Deren came in at the 22 minute mark but the real spark came three minutes later when his partner in crime, Yuri Morales, entered the game and proceeded to make an immediate impact. When Morales came in, UMass was setting up for a long throw, and thanks to his header, that long throw ended up in the back of the net.

Morales tied the game, and that's the way it would stay through the rest of regulation and throughout two 15-minute overtimes. Both keepers came up big in the extra frame, each stopping point blank shots. UMass' chance came when Seth Lilburn sprung freshman Obie Gravely in on goal. Gravely attempted to chip the ball against the grain and over the keeper, but his shot was deflected away. The rebound came to Max Wolf who faked the keeper, but sent the 18-yard shot wide.

The breakaways were the best chances in overtime for each team to come away with a win, but in the end there was no declared victor. After the 1-1 tie some UMass players were honored. Fullbacks J.R. Pouncey and Shawn Green received all tournament honors as did sophomore strikers Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales. The UMass goalkeeper earned a "save of the tournament" award while Green won the Defensive M.V.P. award.

"We're starting to play better," Coach Koch said after the game, as the Minutemen look ahead to opening their Atlantic-10 schedule against St. Bonaventure on Friday.

■ Wildcats

continued from page 10

throw right into the box, which Deren got his head on amongst a group of ball hungry players.

Deren scored five goals in his last three games for the Minutemen, making him the leading scorer and point man for UMass. His stepped up play has also given quite a boost to a sometimes-frustrated Maroon and White offense.

Morales, who combined with Deren to produce what would later be the game winning goal, ranks second in points behind Deren, netting a goal and an assist in his last two games.

Yet, despite their recent winning streak, the Minutemen still want to raise their game's scores.

"We are creating the chances and they are going to go in," Koch said. "How many close non-goals can you score? Sooner or later they are going to go in. I think we will put them in; they're just not going in right now."

Yet, no matter how many goals the Minutemen would like to score, they were able to manage enough this season to give head coach Sam Koch his 100th victory with the UMass men's soccer team. Koch now has an even greater place in University history, as he is only the second coach to get 100 wins, behind only Lawrence Briggs who earned 123 victories in 38 seasons with the Minutemen.

"It's definitely neat to have a hundred wins, but players are the ones who win games not coaches," Koch said. "We've had some great players. I just sit on the sidelines and yell at the referee."

■ Aztecs

continued from page 10

Over on the defensive half of the field, freshman goalie Kelly Nigh came into the game in the second half in a pre-planned move by Rudy. The rookie made several spectacular stops, including a point-blank chance by Fay DeLeon with 15 seconds left that would have evened the match.

"That was the game right there, when she made that save," Rudy said. "We worked on that in practice last week, with low balls. I said at the beginning of the game [that each keeper would play one half], but no one knew it but the keepers."

Added Nigh, who improved to 2-0 on the season: "I was just counting down the time on the last one. All that I wanted to do was just get the ball out. I was just trying to stay focused in there."

UMass [4-4] came out of the blocks with a vengeance in the opening 35 minutes. The Minutewomen struck first only 11 minutes into the game when Brooke Bartlett ran a ball down along the left flank and crossed it to a wide-open Kara Clocca. The senior tucked the ball past SDSU keeper Linnea Quinones for a 1-0 lead.

From there, UMass controlled the pace of the game until late in the first half. It was at that point when Aztecs defender Shawni Flint delivered a vicious tackle on Clocca. With the UMass forward lying on the ground in pain, Flint proceeded to show no sympathy, leading to an exchange of words from both benches.

"It was an unappreciated, contrived tackle," said Rudy of the incident.

"And their kid is laughing about it right in front of our bench. But in the end, they got what they deserved."

San Diego State then used the stoppage in play to regroup, while UMass lost its momentum in the process. Less than three minutes after Flint was awarded a yellow card, Jane Specht knocked home a corner kick from DeLeon to knot the score at 1-1.

The Aztecs continued to employ pressure for much of the second half, but Nigh was up to the task when tested. She robbed Hannah Gurl with a diving stop to her left midway through the stanza, and also punched out several corner kicks during the frame.

But with 18:07 remaining, Rudy brought in his second wave of reserves, which proved to be the missing element that put UMass back in control.

Machamer drew a host of fouls in the waning minutes thanks to her aggressive play, with the last infraction setting up the winning score.

"This game showed that everyone is important to this team," Rudy said.

"Tonight Kar waited patiently, and when she got a chance, she impacted this game at the right time. We're a [team that is a] sum of our parts."

Additionally, UMass had been 0-2 this season in one-goal games prior to Friday night's victory. Syracuse University and the University of Connecticut each recorded 1-0 wins over the Minutewomen earlier this year.

"There's been a lot of times this year where we dominate teams and we don't finish them off," Mink said. "Then they get a lucky goal and win the game. Tonight they dominated the second half, and we tried to hold our own. This time we were the ones who put in the [game-winning] goal."

UMass took on No. 17 ASU on Sunday night in Tempe.

Feel, come down and write for Collegian Sports

Pair of losses drags UMass to basement

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

It is a common saying that a good start is essential to a team's success in a long season. Unfortunately for the Massachusetts women's volleyball team, it will not have that "essential." In fact, the team will have to find the adversity to overcome a negative start after opening its Atlantic 10 conference schedule with two losses at Dayton and at Xavier this past weekend.

DAYTON (15-10, 15-12, 15-5)

In Friday's game, the Minutewomen fell in a hard-fought three game sweep at the hands of Dayton. The Flyers (7-4, 1-0 A-10) came strong out of the gate, charging to a 6-1 lead early in the first game. But the Minutewomen battled back to trail by just two, 8-6. The upswing was short-lived, however, as the Flyers finished off the Maroon and White by virtue of a game ending six point run.

In the second contest, UMass again stumbled early, falling behind 9-4. It would keep pace with Dayton and fought hard to get back in the game, but eventually fell 15-12. The final game saw Dayton start strong yet again, this time building a lofty 10-0 lead. The Minutewomen took a time out and got their only five points of the game to make the score 11-5, but it proved to be too little, too late for the Maroon and White.

In the match, the Maroon and White were led by the ever-consistent co-captains Rebecca Hasson (15 kills, four digs) and Lymarie Llovet (12 kills, five digs).

For the Flyers, it was senior Sierra Ashley and sophomore Susan Westhock leading the way, each tallying 14 kills in the match. Senior setter Carla Muntz had 36 assists on the day as well.

XAVIER (15-0, 15-9, 7-15, 14-16, 16-14)

In Saturday's match, the Minutewomen suffered a heartbreaking loss to Xavier, falling just short in what would have been a colossal comeback. The second loss of the weekend dealt a huge blow to the confidence of the Maroon and White, who dropped to 0-2 in A-10 Conference play.

The Musketeers (8-4 overall, 2-0 A-10) dominated the Minutewomen in the first two games, and it appeared that UMass was headed for another sweep to end the weekend. But the Maroon and White showed its heart by fighting back for two strong wins in games three and four of the match. Game five proved to be a tight match in which the Minutewomen fell just short of pulling off the come from behind victory.

Hasson led UMass in kills once again, this time throwing down 21 and picking up three digs. Llovet and senior Jenni Drennan each added nine kills and six digs in the loss.

For Xavier, it was powerhouse Sara Bachus who led the charge, putting up 19 kills and 11 digs in the victory.

The Minutewomen will return to action on Wednesday for their first home match of the season as they take on the Rams of Rhode Island at Curry Hicks Cage at 7p.m.

Walker, others honored in Boston

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON – Some of the finest athletes who ply their trade in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were honored on Monday night at the third annual Boston Sports Awards. Athletes from all across the state traded in their shorts and spikes for a night of Gucci and Ralph Lauren at the Berkeley Performing Arts Center in Boston.

Nominees such as Antoine Walker of the Boston Celtics, Rusty Pierce of the New England Revolution, 1998 Hobey Baker Award winner and former Boston College defenseman Mike Mottau and Chelsea heavyweight boxer John Ruiz were joined onstage by presenters from area television and radio such as ESPN hockey analyst Barry Melrose, 104.1 WBCN's Bill Abbott and 98.5 WMBX's Lynne Hoffman. The event, which benefits the Boston Youth Sports Congress, was hosted by ESPN's Steve Levy and Linda Cohn.

The only disappointment on the night was the failure of many of the nominees to actually show up. All five nominees from the Boston Red Sox, Trot Nixon, Nomar Garciaparra, Carl Everett, Pedro Martinez and manager Jimy Williams were notably absent as was the only UMass nominee, basketball player Monty Mack.

Aside from thanking their moms and the fans of Boston, some of the night's winners spoke of what it is like to make the step from college to pro ball. Perhaps the man with the best insight on this was the night's first award winner, Rookie of the Year Rusty Pierce.

"The biggest difference for me was the mental aspects," Pierce said. "In college, you could lose your edge out there for a bit and still not put the team in danger, but in the pros you have to be in tune for the entire 90 minutes."

Pierce, a 21-year-old rookie from the University of North Carolina Greensboro, went on to add that he was surprised at the attention to detail demanded in the pros, not only in games but day in and day out in practice.

Another to speak of the benefits of college preparing a person for life in the pros was Antoine Walker of the Boston Celtics who, despite being only 24 years old, was awarded the Veteran of the Year Award.

"I loved being in college," Walker said. "If they're giving you an education, take it. I came out early and didn't take full advantage of what they were offering me."

When asked, Walker said that he would like to return to complete his degree but that it would not be feasible until after his playing days are over.

The ceremony closed with a Special Legend Award being presented to the first member of the New England Patriots to be elected to the Professional Football Hall of Fame, offensive lineman John Hannah.

DAN SANTELLI / COLLEGIAN

The Rifleman

Richard Lucero guns the football over the head of New Haven defenders Bryant Robinson and Dwayne Brown. Lucero threw for 263 yards and tied a school record with five touchdown passes on the day.

Now Open! Come visit us!!!

"Where you don't stand in line for BIG DISCOUNTS!!!"

Contemporary. Egalitarian. Inclusive. Participatory. And All Expenses Paid.

THE RECONSTRUCTIONIST RABBINICAL COLLEGE has full-tuition merit scholarships ready and waiting for rabbinical students applying for the Fall of 2001. The MORDECAI M. KAPLAN SCHOLARSHIPS and the MARJORIE AND AARON ZIEGELMAN SCHOLARSHIPS include stipends for living expenses and are renewable annually for five years. Applications will be considered as they are received through the closing date of March 1, 2001. To obtain an application or a catalogue, please contact the office of the Dean of Admissions at 215-576-0800, ext. 145, or e-mail admissions@rrc.edu. Many other scholarships and financial assistance packages are available. Please visit our website at www.rrc.edu to learn more about the distinctive education and participatory learning community that the RECONSTRUCTIONIST RABBINICAL COLLEGE has to offer.

http// www.rrc.edu

Attention Seniors!
Apply Now for positions overseas after graduation. All majors welcome.
Contact the 5-College Peace Corps office @ 112 Stockbridge, 545-2105

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
OOPS!
- Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.

(On bus route)

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

Special Offer: $25 off

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

I invite you to use the Eye Care Services

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

Honda Accord 92 two door, 5-speed, sun roof, 24k, runs great 665-8616

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gastank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

CHILDCARE

Afetschool child-care needed in Amherst home, 2 children, M, T, Th 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30 - 5:30, or some combination. 545-0258

CHILDCARE

Mothers helper wanted with breakfast & dinner with some overnights. Hourly wage nego. Call Abbey 586-0207 ext. 305

Childcare needed for Weds 1:30-3:30pm experienced with references. Call 253-1655

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 for sale. For further information. 413-667-3084

EMPLOYMENT

The Fine Arts Center is hiring ushers for the 2000-2001 season! For more information, please contact: Cheryl at 545-0190 (after October 1 - 545-0192)

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

STAGE HANDS WANTED At the Fine Arts Center. $6.75/HR. Applications at Production Services rm 146 F.A.C.

EMPLOYMENT

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957 zMinutemen.com Internships Interested in working for an emerging dot-com? zMinutemen.com, has 3 paid internships available. Candidates should be Internet savvy and interested in marketing or technology. Duties include: online and offline marketing to students and alumni, building community websites, creating on-campus awareness. Send resume or letter of interest to: cdillon@zuniversity.com

EMPLOYMENT

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials , Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Resturant Cashier. Speaking and writing Chinese and English part-time or full-time (413)582-7045

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

FOR SALE

FLYWHEELS SKATES & ACCESORIES 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

FURNITURE

Lovely Antique Dresser for sale. Call Erica 253-6504. Will deliver

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sororities/Fraternities: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

FREE KITTENS 2 cute kittens need loving homes 413-665-7315 Act quickly

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate needed ASAP Mill Valley. Prefer male, on bus route, washer/dryer 253-7026

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SPORTS

Attention Wrestlers, Boxers, anyone who likes to workout. Mixed Martial Arts Program located at local gym. Looking for interested athletes. Kirik 256-0080 www.mixedmartialarts.com kirik@mixedmartialarts.com

TRAVEL

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free! Largest Selection of Destinations. Lowest Prices Guaranteed. Highest Commissions. Best Reps Get Free Trips & Parties! Call for Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WANTED!! 30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 30LBS IN 30 DAYS FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO MassMuscleInc.com

Need to Advertise? Don't have time... Just Call 545-3500

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....

because you can use jock font too!!!

HSCN . Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN International
14	UMass Academic TV
15	WB/New Haven
16	Sundance
17	The Learning Channel
18	LIVE–TV19
19	ABC/40 Springfield
20	Gavel to Gavel
21	NBC/22 Springfield
22	CNN Headline News
23	CNN
24	CNN Fn
25	CNN Si
26	TBS
27	BET
28	College TV Network
29	Univision
30	Comedy Central
31	Cartoon Network
32	TV Land
33	C-Span
34	ZDTV (Tentative)
35	Bloomberg Financial Network
36	History Channel
37	HSCN Programming
38

MONDAY EVENING C - Campus SEPTEMBER 25, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		Lost Treasures-Ancient World		Force More Powerful-Nonviolent Conflict			Religion
WFSB 3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Old and New Bonds"		Family Law (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Old and New Bonds"		Family Law (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	20/20 Downtown		NFL Football: Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts. (In Stereo Live)				Friends	Change-Heart
WLVI 6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Love Stinks"		Roswell "Destiny" (In Stereo)		News		Friends
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Saturday"		Blind Date	Real TV	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Friends	Frasier
WTIC 8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	'70s Show	'70s Show	News
WWLP 9	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)				Force More Powerful-Nonviolent Conflict		Daring to Resist (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose
WGBY 11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		NFL Football: Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts. (In Stereo Live)
WGGB 12	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	20/20 Downtown		Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier	I Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WSBK 13		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	NFL Football: Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts. (In Stereo Live)		Family Law (In Stereo)		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS 22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "The Devil's Advocate" (1997, Horror) Keanu Reeves, Al Pacino.							"The Devil's Advocate" (1997)
A&E 23		L.A. Law "Douglas Fur Ball"		Law & Order "Rebels"		Biography: George Reeves		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports		Sports	Law & Order "Volunteers"
CNN 20	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Moneyline
COM 28	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	League-Gentls	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC 29		Wild Discovery: Creatures		Wild Discovery: Crocodile		On the Inside: S.W.A.T.		Cove of the Glowing Skulls (N)		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files "Psycho Killers"
ESPN 31		Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)			Great Outdoor Games		Great Outdoor Games		Baseball Tonight (N)
LIFE 32		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	"Woman on the Run: The Lawrencia Bembenek Story" (1993, Drama) Tetum O'Neal, Bruce Greenwood.								Changing Face of Beauty
MTV 33		Direct Effect	Makeover	To Be Announced				TRL (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Road Rules	Making-Video	Fear (In Stereo)
NICK 35		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Blue's Clues	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Bredy Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI 45		Sliders "Obsession" (In Stereo)		"Babylon 5: The Gathering"		Outer Limits "Origin of Species"		Outer Limits "Phobos Rising"		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC 47	28	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours "In the Danger Zone"		Code Blue: Sweet Charity (N)		Police Force: Day Watch		Secret World		Pretender (In Stereo)	Code Blue: Sweet Charity
TNT 25		ER "The Peace of Wild Things"		Pretender "Under the Reds"		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)				Bull		Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
USA 42		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Deja Vu" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		Breaking the Magician's Code: Magic Revealed				★½ "Blue Streak" (1999)
HBO 43		★★½ "We're No Angels" (1989, Comedy) Robert De Niro. PG-13		★★★★ "Saving Private Ryan" (1998, Drama) Tom Hanks, Edward Burns. (In Stereo) 'R'				★★ "Lured Innocence" (1999) Dennis Hopper. 'R'		"Body of Love"
MAX 44		(5:15) ★★½ "The Muse" (1999)		Princess Diaries Dresses		★★½ "There's Something About Mary" (1998) Cameron Diaz. 'R'				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		★★½ "A Simple Plan" (1998) 'R'
SHOW 46		"The Sandy Bottom Orchestra" (2000, Drama) Glenne Headly		★★ "The Wood" (1999, Drama) Omar Epps. (In Stereo) 'R'

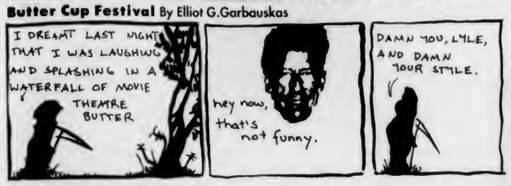
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

YOU TWO SHOULD STOP SITTING ON THE COUCH AND DRINKING. IT'S NOT GOOD FOR YOUR BRAINS. YOU'LL DEVELOP HEART AND LIVER PROBLEMS. I'M GOING FOR A RUN
HONK HONK HONK CRASH
THAT'S GOTTA HURT. SHOULD WE GO HELP HIM?
NAH. I THINK FULL HOUSE IS ON.

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

WHY DID YOU HOGTIE ME?
I'M ROUNDIN' UP CATTLE FOR MOO RANCH. HA!
BUT I'M A BIRD. YOU'RE THE CATTLE.
QUIT YER YAPPIN' OR I'LL BRAND YA.
SIZZLE

Butter Cup Festival By Elliot G.Garbauskas

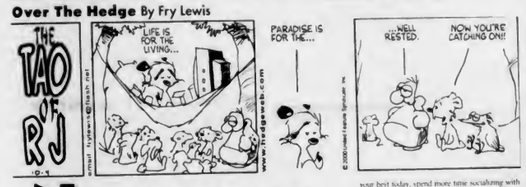


I DREAMT LAST NIGHT THAT I WAS LAUGHING AND SPLASHING IN A WATERFALL OF MOVIE THEATRE BUTTER
hey now, that's not funny.
DAMN YOU, LYLE, AND DAMN YOUR SMILE.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, THIS IS MY NEW FRIEND, COTTON. A GROSS.
HI, BUCKY! IT'S SO NICE TO MEET YOU!
EOB. I REALLY DON'T THINK THIS IS SUCH A GOOD IDEA.
OH. WHAT COULD POSSIBLY—

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

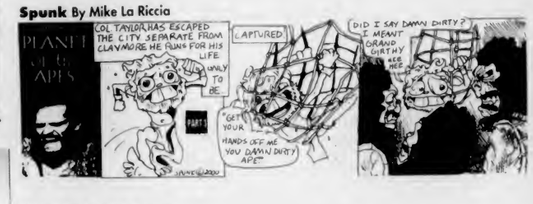


Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

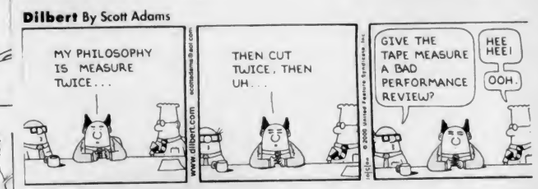
The spending priorities of this university are really screwed up.
I mean, come on...
...does every campus bus stop really need a dance floor?

Spunk By Mike La Riccia



PLANET OF THE APES
COL TAYLOR HAS ESCAPED THE CITY. SEPARATE FROM CLAYMORE HE RUNS FOR HIS LIFE.
CAPTURED
ONLY TO BE...
PART 3
GET YOUR HANDS OFF ME YOU DAMN DIRTY APE!
DID I SAY DAMN DIRTY? I MEANT GRAND CHATHY APE AND ME!

Dilbert By Scott Adams



MONKEY-BOX
BY PBS-J
WITH SLUGWORTH IN HOT PURSUIT, CHARLIE HAD NO CHOICE BUT TO EAT THE LAST EVERLASTING GOBSTOPPER.
© 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

Virgo (Aug. 23- Sept. 22) There is definitely such a thing as being too cautious today. Concern for your own health and safety turns into hypochondria at some point in the day. Is there really a problem? If so, you can solve it by finding yourself a creative Pisces.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Try to capitalize on your reputation, even if you'd rather not sign any autographs – an element of celebrity can do a lot to further your cause. Pack as if you were going on the journey of a lifetime, but keep in mind that your destination is still subject to change.

Scorpio (Oct. 23- Nov. 21) When you see people turning away, it may be because they're tired of being controlled. You're alienating yourself and it's a turn-off to everyone. Get a grip by loosening your grip.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22- Dec. 21) Different strokes for different folks. Today, more people around you will differ in their beliefs from yours. Rather than clash with all of them, listen respectfully to their opinions.

Capricorn (Dec. 22- Jan. 19) One minute you had it all under control and the next it's practically slipping through your fingers. You have no choice but to act surprised when a project that you thought was running on track suddenly falls off its wheels. If you are confident that you know what you're doing, any setbacks will be only temporary.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Recognize the people around you as something other than symbols of your struggle. No matter how it may seem, there are still some members of the team who are on your side.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) If the people in your path don't stand back, they are sure to be knocked out by your unbelievable power! That is no time to be shy about your inherent gifts. The Moon demands that you strut and brag, so who are you to argue? Some don't believe that there's a person of substance behind that dazzling facade, but you'll soon prove them wrong.

Aries (March 21-April 19) Although you may feel that you bear more responsibility than others and are tired of them getting the credit, you have to persevere if you want to gain seniority. Unfortunately, it's part of the initiation process. Don't let your pride spoil a wonderful opportunity. Never underestimate the power of hard work and patience.

Taurus (April 20- May 20) Don't let anyone rain on your parade today. You may have many strange requirements for happiness, but they're not completely unknown. Just because no one has ever done what you are suggesting doesn't mean that it can't be done, in bed.

Gemini (May 21- June 20) You're the fortune cookie that always holds another message, the book that never reads the same way twice. Your greatness is so effortless that it feels like an act, yet you are the most real person in the room. Try to be a hero to the person who really needs one.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) People power. To feel your best today, spend more time socializing with others. Attending a party would fit the bill perfectly! But that's not the only solution. You can also go to any crowded public place where you can mingle with lots of people.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) Can you avoid money? Today you may want to try! That's because today your judgment regarding the use of money is at below normal levels. Try putting off any major purchases or investments.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 66 LOW: 48	HIGH: 55 LOW: 41	HIGH: 63 LOW: 40

Quote of the Day

"You people worry too much about what is. You never stop and think about what ought to be."

-Prof. Bevilacqua Dept. of Communication

Today's D.C. Menu
call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

BBQ Pork Sandwich
Baked Ziti

Ratatouille with Ricotta Cheese & Basil (vegetarian)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Dinner

Thai Meatloaf with Curry Sauce

Leapin' Lizard Chicken

Mixed Bean Creole (vegan)

Grilled Tofu (vegan)

California Chili (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcester)

SpinachTortilla Casserole (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Today's Staff

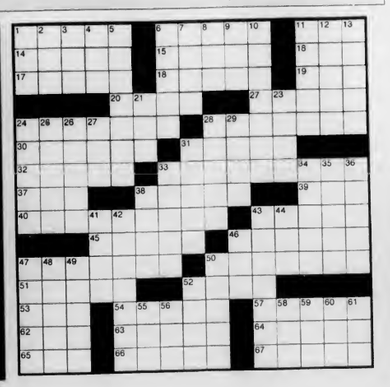
Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zakoshansky, Soren Nash

ACROSS
1 Written reminders
6 Bitten
10 — Appia Roman road
14 Wide open
15 Pusan's country
16 Unusual
17 Seattle and New York
18 Bandleader Desi
19 August sign
20 Cozy
22 Author — Allan Poe
24 Dream up
28 Free
30 Frontier establishment
31 Net fabric
32 Writer Chekhov
33 Arty places
37 Anecdote collection
38 Blazes
39 Chilly and damp
40 Paper product
43 Actress Garbo
45 O. Henry's forte
46 More conceited
47 Seek advice
49 Praise
51 Brightly colored fish
52 Fuzzy fruit
53 "— Miserables"
54 Rider's outfit
57 Deserves
62 Morsel
63 Overjoy
64 Type of sailing vessel
65 Vote against
66 Was brave
67 — bear

DOWN
1 Explorer's need
2 Type of trip?
3 Spool
4 Make a choice
5 Meeting
6 Travel on ice
7 Flipped
8 Vase
9 Teachers' org.
10 Antelope
11 Europe's longest river
12 Brainstorms
13 Love dearly
21 Actress — -Margret
23 Forest creature
24 Musician Hayes
25 Food from heaven
26 Bride's destination
27 Gunk
28 Governed
29 Additions
31 Linger
33 King-size
34 Dunne of films
35 Gobbled up
36 Meadow
38 Deceive
41 Bowl or saucer
42 Grazed against
43 Pluckiest
44 Wheel part
46 Oath
47 Punctuation mark
48 Met offering
49 Bad-tempered
50 Gave as an example
52 Lightweight toy
55 Pie — mode
56 Prohibit
58 Malt beverage
59 Pole
60 Head motion
61 Secret agent

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-7-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



ALL YOU CAN EAT FOOTBALL MONDAY NITE WINGS
The HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, September 25, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen too close for comfort

New Haven proves worthy adversary

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The home team - leader claimed to not even know where New Haven is. Truth be told, he probably wishes he had never heard of it in the first place.

UMass	39
New Haven	29

Richard Lucero and the Massachusetts football team (2-1, 1-1 Atlantic 10) had to overcome a rather opportunistic UNH defense Saturday in outlasting the Chargers, 39-29, at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The Minutemen dominated statistically with 21 more offensive plays for 246 more total yards than the Chargers, yet surrendered a pair of defensive touchdowns and actually trailed New Haven, 22-19 with 13:58 to play in the third quarter.

"We really didn't play to the best of our ability, but we got the job done," UMass tailback Marcel Shipp said. "We have a lot to work on come next week."

Division II New Haven (2-2) entered Saturday's matchup with a seemingly balanced offensive attack, having averaged 122 yards rushing and 259 yards passing in three games this season. But from the very first play against the Maroon and White, in which the Chargers lined up with five wideouts and UMass linebacker Corey Potter tattooed UNH quarterback Jason Barnett for a four-yard loss, alarming trends began to form that would spell a long afternoon for the visiting offense.

New Haven managed only eight net rushing yards over the entire contest, while Barnett was the victim of 10 UMass sacks.

The home team's attack got a chance to put up early fireworks thanks to its defensive counterparts, as Paul Bolden's leveling of Barnett on the second UNH possession knocked the ball loose and into the arms of Potter at the Charger 29-yard line. On the vets next play from scrimmage, UMass Adrian Zullo beat New Haven's George Euller to the inside on a post pattern and Minuteman QB Lucero threaded a perfect strike to put his team up by six.

A 31-yard Doug White field goal on UMass' fifth possession staked its lead to 9-0, but that's when the Chargers began making the big plays that kept the game close. The next UNH punt saw Minuteman DeShon Hardy put together a solid 15-yard return, only to have Charger Jamar Williams strip the ball from his hands and rumble down to the UMass 23.

A gang-sack of Barnett by Anton McKenzie and Kole Asi and a delay of game penalty kept New Haven from capitalizing immediately, bringing up third down and 27. Barnett then threw up a rainbow prayer that landed in the arms of UMass safety Jeremy Robinson, who inexplicably hung onto the ball for an interception at the 3-yard line. A harried Lucero was then himself intercepted, and Charger Steve Cedor took the pick in for New Haven's first score.

The Maroon and White faired no better on its next possession, as Lucero's first pass attempt of the drive ricocheted off Charger left Peters' helmet and into the hands of teammate Dwayne Brown. Brown stumbled toward the UMass end before handing the ball back to Peters, who went the distance to give New Haven its first lead.

Lucero got some redemption with a 13-yard TD strike to Darrell Shabazz with 2:49 to go before halftime, capping a drive highlighted by Shipp runs of 19 and 16 yards. But Lucero's first pass of the third quarter was once again thrown to the Chargers 34 yards off the pick to set up a 5-yard TD toss to Matt Marcks.

A successful conversion pass left UMass on the short end of a 22-19 score. UMass coach Mark Whipple contended afterward that even the three interceptions and second-half deficit did nothing to shake his confidence in Lucero.

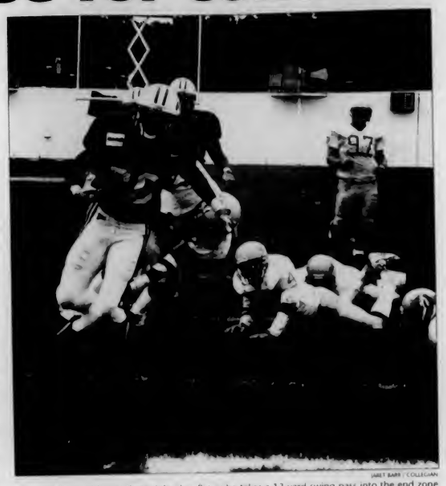
"That never even crossed my mind," said Whipple of the prospect of yanking the transfer signal caller. "He's my quarterback, and these things happen. It's how you bounce back from them."

Bounce back is exactly what Lucero did, leading UMass on three-straight scoring drives that ended with touchdown passes. The third, a 13-yard swing pass on which Jimmie Howard left three defenders in his wake, put the home team up to stay at 39-22 with 4:12 to play in the third.

A late scoring strike from Barnett to Marcks ran the final tallis to 39-29. Despite his team's massive advantage on the stat sheet, Whipple viewed the final outcome as an important lesson for the Maroon and White.

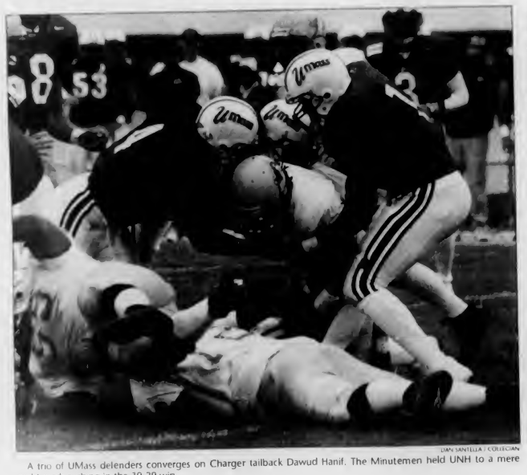
"That's what makes football the greatest game of all, and maybe the toughest – how you handle adversity," Whipple said. "When it was time to just play the game, our guys knew there was a sense of urgency."

The team returns to action this Saturday, when A-10 rival Hofstra invades McGuirk for a noon showdown.



JANET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Jimmie Howard leaves three defenders flat as he takes a 13-yard swing pass into the end zone to finish off New Haven on Saturday.



DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

A trio of UMass defenders converges on Charger tailback Dawud Hanif. The Minutemen held UNH to a mere eight yards rushing in the 39-29 win.

Statistics fail to tell whole story; UMass can't put Chargers away

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Never take your opponents lightly, no matter who they are.

The Massachusetts football team almost learned this the hard way on Saturday afternoon, when Division II opponent New Haven charged into Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Statistically the Minutemen dominated the Chargers, but the final score is all that counts and the 10-point victory was hard fought for UMass.

"Everybody had preconceived notions about Division II," UMass head coach Mark Whipple said. "I guarantee you there are 50 I-AA teams out there that are not as good as New Haven. If they were they would have stepped up when we tried to schedule a game. Ask any Ivy League team... they don't want to play us."

The Chargers put a scare into the Maroon and White midway through the second quarter, when the New Haven defense did what its offense could not: put points on the board.

The first score came when UMass quarterback Richard Lucero had pressure up the middle from Idris Pierce. This forced an off-balance pass that went straight into the arms of Steve Cedor.

Cedor rumbled eight yards for the Charger touchdown, and the momentum began to switch.

On the ensuing Minuteman possession, New Haven did much of the same, when on a fluke play, the junior's pass hit the helmet of defensive tackle Jeff Peters and fell into the hands of Dwayne Brown.

As Brown was about to be brought down he had the presence of mind to hand the ball back to Peter, who scampered 25 yards to paydirt.

At this point in the contest the UMass defense had allowed a meager four yards of total offense, but the Minutemen were trailing 14-9.

"I would take this group of guys that I have right now on my team and play against anybody in the country," New Haven head coach Darren Rizzi said. "We just show so much heart and so much desire... I can say with a straight face that I don't think [UMass] is that much better than us.

"We didn't come here to hang in the game, we didn't come here to lose by 10 points... we came up here to win."

When the Chargers took the lead there was a collective groan let out by the Minuteman fans in attendance.

After relinquishing the lead, the UMass defense did as it had all day, stopping the New Haven offense. The defensive dominance allowed the offense to right the ship.

Eventually the trio of Marcel Shipp, Adrian Zullo and Lucero took control of the game. Lucero finished the game 18-of-30 for 263 yards and five touchdowns (tying a UMass single-game record).

Shipp carried much of the running load, going for 147 yards (his third consecutive 100-yard game) on 31 carries. Zullo ended the contest with seven catches for 113 yards and a touchdown reception.

These numbers may be deceiving. Like the aforementioned deficit that the Minutemen faced after the defense had allowed only four yards, the numbers did not show how close the game was.

If the statistics told the story then UMass should have beaten New Haven by 30 points, but that is why the games are played. The only numbers that matter are the ones that show on the scoreboard at the game's final whistle.

"We bring out the best in people," Whipple said. "I think it's a good quality. I think it'll only make us better.

"It was a good football game. Not perfect, but good."

UMass conquers Aztecs despite sweltering heat

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

TEMPE, AZ – With the and conditions of the Southwestern desert beginning to fatigue his team, Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy looked to his bench for a key contribution in the second half of Friday night's game with San Diego State University.

UMass	2
San Diego St.	1

After an opening 45 minutes in which the two clubs traded goals, both sides substituted frequently in the second stanza in order to stay fresh.

However, it was Rudy's team who won this cat and mouse game, as freshman midfielder Amy Mink netted the game-winner with 2:50 remaining to propel the Minutewomen to a 2-1 victory over the Aztecs at the Arizona State University Soccer Stadium.

The go-ahead goal was the product of a free kick by junior Kat Machamer. The lefty clanked the shot off the crossbar, where it ricocheted back to Mink, who deposited the ball into the back of the net.

"I've been watching Kat in practice, and every time she pretty well hits the upper corner," said Mink of the free kick. "I saw the ball hitting off the post, so I just wanted to get in there and finish up the play."

Said Machamer: "Obviously, I was trying to score, but Coach always says to try to aim for the crossbar. Sometimes hitting the crossbar can turn out to be as good as scoring a goal."

Mink entered the game along with Janelle Khouri midway through the second half. A few minutes later, Machamer and Anna Morozuk subbed into the contest.

And while all four players provided a shot of energy into a tiring UMass lineup, it was the two who connected on the game's final goal who clearly had the biggest impact offensively.

Turn to AZTECS page 7

Minutemen snarl viciously at Wildcats

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Joining the prestigious century club, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team head coach Sam Koch picked up his 100th career victory with the team, during a win over Binghamton University on Friday afternoon at Totman field during the UMass Classic.

UMass	2
Binghamton	0

Putting away the Wildcats 2-0, the Maroon and White dominated much of the game, and consistently threatened the Binghamton goal. The strong offense displayed by the Minutemen kept the Wildcats in their defensive end for most off the game, limiting any kind of serious attack on the UMass goal.

"It was a good win," said Coach Koch. "We created a lot of good chances."

Finishing both of the successful scoring opportunities for UMass this weekend was sophomore Jeff Deren. He netted his first goal just over twenty minutes into the game, when Deren and sophomore teammate Yuri Morales found an opening in the Binghamton defense. It then became a two-on-one with the goalie of the Wildcats, as Morales passed to Deren who hit the back of the net to give UMass the lead.

Six minutes into the second half, Deren scored his second, giving UMass a little room to work with as it finished off Binghamton. The goal would come after senior Seth Lilburn delivered an on target

Turn to WILDCATS, page 7

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Minuteman defender Shawn Green uses his head to keep a Binghamton player at bay while teammate J.R. Pouncey (6) looks on.

Macy Gray hit the stage at Smith College this past weekend. Check out the review and more in Arts.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 15 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, September 26, 2000

Jeff Deren of the UMass men's soccer team was named A-10 Player of the Week. Read all about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

UMPD: Take them seriously

By Melissa Hammel and Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Some of them ride horses; others wear flak jackets and carry M16 rifles. If an individual commits a crime on this campus and is caught, they are the force that will intercede.

They are the officers of the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

Every day, the UMPD handles the traditional issues of a police force with one exception: most of the perpetrators with whom they deal are young adult college students. Jim Lyons, spokesmen for the UMPD explained that the UMass police force often encounter different types of crimes than the Amherst police department, due to the student population on campus.

"We have all sorts of different types of crime," Lyons said. "We have over 30,000 students on any given day on campus."

Aside from their location on a college campus, both the enforcement abilities and the training of the UMPD mirror that of the Amherst police department. Barbara O'Connor, Chief Deputy of Police, explained that the UMPD are trained at the same Police Academy in Agawam that the Amherst Police are.

"It is really not all that different on campus, we exercise the same laws," O'Conner said. "We go through the same Police Academy program that the city or town police officers go through."

According to O'Connor, all UMass police officers are sworn in as special police officers in order to assist the Amherst police with off-campus problems.

She explained that in addition to this, the officers go through the typical police training and then are also trained in first aid, receive a yearly certificate to carry PR 24m and must qualify to carry firearms.

According to Lyons, UMPD officers often go through special training to work for the campus police force and are required to participate in a field training officer program.

"It is a pretty rigorous program," Lyons said. "They [the officers] are not allowed to go out on patrol until they have gone through these hoops. They must demonstrate proficiency with a list of specific tasks before they graduate, and officers are not allowed out on unsupervised patrols prior to graduation."

In addition to this training, the officers also receive different types of training in various special areas of enforcement. Some officers are given special training in a 40 hour course on how to deal with assault cases, others attend courses on crime scene investigation, ethics, how to handle individuals from diverse backgrounds, and also on how to take police photographs.

"We have an extraordinarily well-trained and well-led force," Lyons said.

Sometimes members of the UMPD force can also help to train other officers within the community in a variety of areas.

The force itself consists of about 58 officers and includes officers on both horseback and mountain bike. Officers for the department work a variety of shifts that include days and evenings. The UMPD relies on their own force for police work in enforcement activity but will call Amherst Police Department for backup in extreme situations.

"We are actually a larger police force," O'Connor said. "We would call [the Amherst Police Force] if it was pretty major."

O'Connor explained that outside help was called in from both Hadley Police Department and Amherst Police Department when Southwest experienced a power outage last year.

In addition, the UMPD also works with the Amherst Police Department when crimes occur that are on the border of campus and the jurisdiction of the town force.

Typically the force deals primarily with alcohol related crimes that increased in frequency during the weekends on campus, O'Connor explained. She commented that most often students vandalized parked vehicles on the weekends or dormitories due to intoxication.

"Most everything we are dealing with is alcohol related in nature," she said. "This is the sort of behavior that we see frequently."

As an official residence, students living in dormitories are protected from "unreasonable searches and seizures" by UMPD officers under the fourth amendment to the constitution.

"Students are made aware that they

Turn to POLICE page 2

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sergeant Mark Jacques, a 16-year vetran of the UMass police force, checks for speeders using a radar gun on University Drive. The UMass police force is the second biggest police force in Hampshire County, behind only Northampton.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Patrolman Tom Provost pulls over a motorist for an expired registration sticker on University Drive yesterday afternoon.

Wal-Mart eyed as sweatshop

By Lindsey Knox
Collegian Correspondent

Yesterday at 1:00 p.m., the UMass Students Against Sweatshops and the World Trade Organization spoke out against Wal-Mart and sweatshops on the steps of the Student Union.

"This is a protest against Corporate Globalization," Aaron Johnson said, a member of the UMass Students Against Sweatshops and the main speaker of the event.

According to Johnson, the purpose of the event is to draw attention to the worldwide demonstrations, which are happening in Prague and locally at Wal-Mart today at 5:30 p.m.

"Wal-Mart is the symbol of everything wrong with Corporate Globalization," Johnson said. "For instance, they are notorious for using sweatshops labor in Honduras, Guatemala, and China. Also, for labor conditions in the U.S. They are strongly anti-union in their policies: they threaten and intimidate workers who try to defend their rights on the job."

According to Johnson, out of the 800,000 people employed by Wal-Mart in the United States, 400,000 receive full health coverage. In order to receive health insurance, employees must be working at Wal-Mart for two full years.

"Wal-Mart advertises that 'we create jobs everyday,'" Johnson said. "This is a myth. For every two jobs Wal-Mart creates, the community they are located in loses three. Wal-Mart is not about creating jobs, this are about propaganda."

Sweatshops are created by retail and apparel companies who are trying to increase profits by driving down costs, which means workers work around the clock and are paid the lowest wages. For example, workers in Honduras are paid forty-three cents per hour, and workers in Guatemala are paid with pennies. Some places sweatshops are located are in China, the United States, Honduras, Guatemala, and Haiti. These sweatshops allegedly make clothing for retail stores such as Lord & Taylor, and sports attire and basketball caps for Nike, Champion and colleges and universities such as Notre Dame and the University of Michigan, according to the UMass Students Against Sweatshops web page.

"Two-thirds of Wal-Mart's merchandise comes from overseas," Johnson said. "Wal-Mart exploits sweatshops labor. Workers in Honduras that make Wal-Mart merchandise work from seven o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock at night. Sometimes they have to work twenty-four hour days. If they refuse they are fired and blacklisted. The majority of these workers are women under fourteen years of age."

Johnson also said that sweatshop workers are not allowed to form unions, and if they do they are fired from their jobs. This also includes any indication to form a union, or any union-like issues.

A protest of Wal-Mart's corporate globalization will be held today at 5:30 p.m. off of Rt. 9. Buses will be transporting people from Hagis Mall to Wal-Mart.

Traffic stops on rise

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Correspondent

Despite pulling over 600 more cars on campus for the 1999-2000 school year than they did the previous year, the University of Massachusetts Police Department is increasing their focus on traffic enforcement this semester.

The U.M.P.D. is conducting a focused traffic enforcement effort beginning this semester, which is funded by a $2,000 grant from the Western Massachusetts Safe Roads Program, in addition to equal funding from UMass.

"It's important to encourage everyone to develop safe driving habits, right from the start of the academic year," said Jim Lyons, associate to the director of public safety at UMass. "Strict enforcement isn't about the police writing a ticket to ruin someone's day, it's about keeping the campus safe and reducing the chance that someone's going to get seriously injured or killed in a motor-vehicle crash or pedestrian accident."

According to U.M.P.D. statistics, the police pulled over 2,953 cars during the 1999-2000 school year as compared with 2,284 cars pulled over in 1998-1999.

"The small grant we received will be put toward overtime for officers on traffic patrols. The increase in patrols will be targeted to times during which we expect more traffic violations-namely evening," Lyons said.

The increased patrols will focus on three areas: speeding, driving under the influence, and use of seat belts.

"Speeding, failure to use seat belts, and drunk driving remain the leading cause of deaths and injuries to motorists," according to Lyons.

To crack down on speeders, the U.M.P.D. will be stationing radar patrols around campus, and later in the semester will post "Speed Boards" which flash a driver their speed on an electronic display.

The U.M.P.D. is also strictly enforcing seat belt laws. Massachusetts Law requires the use of safety belts when operating motor vehicles. Based on statistics, which assert that college-aged people use seat belts less than 50 percent of the time, the U.M.P.D will give tickets for failure to use safety belts to drivers stopped for another violation.

The Western Massachusetts Safe Roads Program is supported by the Hampshire Council of Governments and is funded by the Massachusetts Governor's Highway Safety Bureau. The Safe Roads Program is now conducting a campaign in cooperation with Mothers Against Drunk Driving and Students Against Destructive Decisions to combat drunk driving in Western Massachusetts.

Parking, privatization top questions

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Senate is holding elections today. Students can vote in the Dining Commons or the Campus Center until 5:00 p.m.

In addition to the more than 80 Senate seats open for election, four issues will be on the ballot.

The first question asks students if the quantity of parking spaces on campus should remain the same but be better managed, or if there should be more parking available.

The second question has to do with whether or not the student body thinks first-year students should be allowed to have cars on campus.

Another question asks students where they prefer to have the Spring Concert—indoors or outdoors.

The final question deals with the possibility privatizing Food Services.

Mike Brennan, Director of Parking Services, said the parking issues will be discussed by the Parking and Transportation Advisory Board regardless of the election outcomes.

Student opinion on the parking issues seems to be mixed.

Charlotte Otahor, a sophomore Economics major, said she thinks freshmen should be allowed to have cars.

"If you have a job in Amherst," she said, "a car is a necessity to live here."

Others disagreed, though.

Senior Physics major Hunter King said he didn't think first-year students should have cars on campus.

"There are too many cars in general. We've got a free bus system; there's no reason to have a car," commented King.

While students were divided on the parking matters, many seemed to favor holding the Spring Concert outside.

Among those who support the outdoor concert is Andrew Kye, a senior Economics major.

"It's the Spring," Kye said, "enjoy the outside."

For the last two years, the Spring Concert has been held at the Mullins Center.

Ann Rasmusen, Sales and Marketing Manager at the Mullins Center, said, "The UPC [Union Program Council] and the UMass police have been pretty pleased with the outcome of that concert."

Rasmusen went on to say that the Mullins Center would like to continue working with the UPC, the group that organizes the event.

Just as the Mullins Center wants to keep the Spring Concert at that venue, Ken Toong, Director of Dining and Retail Food Services, said he would like to see the Dining Services stay independent of any private company.

Currently, Food Services is a part of the UMass Auxiliary Services. As part of the University, Toong said Food Services tries "to keep the meal plan as affordable as possible."

If Food Services were to privatize, prices would most likely rise, as it would be run as a business rather than as a service to students, Toong explained.

When asked what he thought of the possibility of privatizing Food Services, King said, "I don't particularly like the idea. It seems like it would be more expensive and less efficient."

Other students, like Kye, were in support of privatization. He said he would like to have "more McDonald's and more Pizza Huts in the Campus Center."

Toong, however, stressed that privatization would not necessarily mean better quality food.

The final decisions on all of these issues are still a long way off.

Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate, said these questions are merely a way to "gauge campus opinion" on some issues that concern nearly everyone at UMass.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian explained that the Executive Cabinet chose to put these referenda on the ballot because they are the "more pressing issues affecting students."

The results of the referenda questions will give the SGA a clear idea of how students feel about these issues. The SGA will then be able to take solid facts to the administration so the issues can be further investigated.

Running on empty: The dangers of sleep deprivation in students

By Julia Connors
The Chronicle (Duke U.)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, NC – Most people know that drinking several drinks and then driving is dangerous, but few realize that a lack of sleep, especially when combined with only one serving of alcohol, can make driving just as unsafe.

According to the National Institutes of Health and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, roughly 56,000 crashes occur each year due to driver fatigue, and 1,550 fatalities result from these accidents.

Sleeping less than approximately eight hours each night, combined with as little as one alcoholic beverage, has a compounding effect, meaning that the effects of the two separate conditions together can severely increase the risk of causing an accident.

In fact, driving while partially sleep deprived has the same effect as driving with a blood alcohol level of .05, said Dr. Bill Wohlgemuth of the Duke University Medical Center Sleep Disorders Clinic.

Charles Lee of the North Carolina State Highway Patrol said people who drive while sleep-deprived can, in certain cases, be prosecuted under state law.

"If a son fall asleep while driving and you cause an accident or cross the center line then you can be charged with careless and reckless driving," he said.

Medical experts define sleep deprivation as simply not getting enough sleep. Although Wohlgemuth acknowledged that the biological need for sleep varies from person to person, he said the average person needs about eight hours of rest each day.

But advances in modern technol-

Turn to SLEEP, page2

Police Log

Arrests

Sept. 24

Marc J. Capone, 19, of Somerville was arrested for possession of alcohol as a minor.

Grant F. Dooley, 21, of Pittsfield was charged for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.

Scott F. Palmer, 19, of Hadley was arrested for wanton destruction of property and disorderly conduct in Lot 33.

Ralph G. Papitto, 18, of Cranston, Rhode Island was arrested for possession of alcohol as a minor.

Larceny

Sept. 18

Checks were stolen from a room in Van Meter Dormitory and written on a bank account.

Sept. 22

A bicycle was stolen from Kennedy Dormitory.

Tools were stolen from Goessmann Laboratory.

Sept. 23

A bicycle was stolen from the Fine Arts Center.

Food was stolen from the delivery person in Patterson Dormitory.

Two lap tops were stolen from Cashin Dormitory, they were valued at over $2,000.

Vandalism

Sept. 18

Holes from a BB gun were found in a window in Prince Dormitory.

Sept. 22

Damage was done to flushometers and pipes in the bathroom of Hasbrouck Laboratory.

Sept. 23

Damage was done to the fire alarm in Kendrick Dormitory.

Damage was done to a vehicle in lot 32 south of Massachusetts Ave.

A vending machine in Dickenson Dormitory was damaged.

...sleep

continued from page 1

ogy combined with the skewed schedule of college life often forces students, faculty and employees alike to skimp on sleep.

Since the turn of the 20th century, the amount of time that most people allocate to sleep has decreased one to two hours, partly because technological developments like artificial lighting and the Internet, which can keep people awake and in touch with the world 24 hours a day.

"I haven't gotten eight hours of sleep in at least a week, mostly because I procrastinate on my work for social reasons," said Duke University freshman Rashida Leggett.

On the other hand, some students refuse to sacrifice their sleep, cutting back time spent on other areas of college life.

"I rarely deprive myself of sleep," said senior Sam Dwarakanath. "It's called sleeping through class. That's one thing I've learned in the last three years."

Research has shown that besides clinical problems, daily habits can interfere with normal sleeping patterns.

Eating directly before going to bed, like many college students do, may keep people awake or cause fragmented sleep because the body is working hard to digest the food.

Late-night exercise, another common college campus behavior, may also keep people awake because it raises their body temperatures. However, when people exercise earlier in the day, they find it easier to fall asleep because there will be a steeper decline of their body temperatures in the evening.

Many turn to drugs to help counter these popular habits' effects, but Wohlgemuth cautions against employing such methods.

"Some drugs, such as Sy-Quil, contain alcohol, which will help relieve anxiety and allow you to fall asleep, but once the alcohol leaves your system, your body will over-compensate and you'll fall into a lighter-than-normal sleep," he said.

Other drugs like Tylenol PM contain antihistamines and cause drowsiness.

Wohlgemuth recommended that sleep-deprived drivers always assess the risk of driving in their condition and take the necessary precautions.

"When a driver becomes tired at the wheel the best thing to do is pull off the road and sleep for 30 to 45 minutes," he explained. "Only sleep will solve the problem in the long term, but there are counter-measures that you can take for a short-term solution. Caffeine will make you more alert for about an hour, but after that you're back to where you were before you took it."

JARED BARR COLLEGIAN

Stop looking at me swan!

One of the swans that calls the Campus Pond home stares intently at an onlooking student.

...police

continued from page 1

do not have to open their doors to UMPD Officers or Student Security without a warrant through a letter sent by the SGA which they receive at the beginning of the year," according to Senior Art Major Michael Phillips, a Residential Assistant in Van Meter dormitory.

"A dorm is an official residence and so an officer can't come in without permission or a warrant," Lyons said. "That doesn't mean that if your roommate says, "come on in" that anything in plain view doesn't count."

In addition to regular police forces Public Safety Officers and Student Security also maintain campus security. Both security branches fall under UMPD jurisdiction.

The University's brown uniformed Public Safety Officers are responsible for traffic direction, general patrols and monitoring access to buildings.

The Student Security force serves as the "eyes and ears" of the UMPD on campus. Student Security is responsible for monitoring 43 security posts on campus in addition to locking outside doors on the University's 41 residential dormitories. A UMPD Officer oversees operation of Student Security.

Furthermore, the UMPD runs the UMass Escort Service, which provides escort vehicles, as well as walking escorts for students who are inadequately served by public transportation. Walking escorts are equipped with radio communication and are easily identified by their student security badges. Security vans travel on a continuous route around campus between 5 p.m. and 2 a.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benhartis Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinions Editor
Jaime Gorlevsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trefzlik Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photographer Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Simawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantia Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beth Assistant Advertising Manager

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

GREAT FOOD!! ● CHEAP EATS!!

Weekday Specials ● Monday thru Friday

2 BREAKFAST SPECIALS EACH $2.92 ●6:30AM to 11AM

•Two eggs any style, home fries, choice of bread, and juice or coffee

•One French Toast or Pancake, two eggs any style , and juice or coffee

4 LUNCH SPECIALS EACH $4.94 ● 11 AM to 2 PM

Choice of iced tea, coffee or soda (free beverage refills)

•Soup and Half Sandwich ● Hot sandwich of the Day with fries, pickle & slaw

●Entree of the Day with one side ●Quiche and Salad

FRESH DOME DINER

Breakfast, Lunch, Dinner & Late Night
Open 7 Days● 6:30 AM to 2 AM
We accept OCMP & Major Credit Cards
Rte.9 in front of Stop & Shop and Liquors 44
413-256-1222
Owners: Sue & Jim Tourtillotte - UMASS 1985

CONGRATULATIONS!

The Department of Biochemistry & Molecular Biology wishes to acknowledge the following students who were named to the Deans List- Spring, 2000. There were 419 honorees in Arts and Sciences -Natural Sciences and Mathematics -54 from Biochemisty and Molecular Biology!

Abrahim, Abraham D.	02	Frimpong, Thomas	01	Mintz, Raymond J.	00
Andrew, Paul S.	00	Gabriel, Luke R.	02	Mossick, Karin E.	00
Andrews, Marie S.	02	Gladden, Emily J.	02	O'Donnell, Carolyn M.	03
Arguinzoni, David A.	03	Gonzalez, David A.	04	Okada, Hajime	00
Baldwin, Kristin M.	00	Hales, Benjamin J.	00	Polumbo, Kimberly M.	01
Bergeron, Brian R.	00	Horak, Helena M.	02	Pong, Winnie W.	02
Bigham, Christopher D.	01	Kiley, Brian T.	02	Quyssner, Annie G.	00
Brodeur, Lauren G.	02	Kellogg, Adam R.	00	Sandhu, Kulmeet K.	01
Chaloux, Michelle M.	02	King, Sandra M.	02	Scars, Courtney A.	00
Clarke, Thomas E. IV	02	Levin, Elena	03	Seeley, Arthur W.	02
Cummings, Lisa L.	02	Lewis, Matthew W.	02	Smelkinson, Margery G.	01
Drisdale, Robert D.	00	Ling, Hui-Chung T.	02	Terrell, Rebekah M.	01
Dufie, Ariel M.	00	Lovasco, Lindsay A.	03	Terry, Marie A.	01
Dunleavy, Patrick R.	03	Macquarrie, Kyle E.	02	Turaga, Diwakar	03
Dutta, Kolmol N.	01	Mathew, Sheeba I.	02	Vinson, Julia M.	00
Eisenhaure, Thomas M.	04	Mirda, Mohammed	03	Wang, Joann	02
Fiorello, Jeremiah D.	03	Mckeen, Mark J.	03	Ward, Jon E.	02
Fiorentino, Michael E.	01	McClary, S. Christine	PG	Wittin, Anthony R.	01

INDICATES HONORS

National Anthem Auditions!!

The UMass Athletics Department will conduct auditions for persons interested in performing the National Anthem at Winter Sporting Events on Thursday, September 28, 2000. The Auditions will be held in the Curry Hicks Cage beginning at 7:30 P.M.

Note: Auditions will also be held for the UMass Minutemen Hoop Band beginning in October at Grinnell Arena. The following instruments are needed: trumpet, saxophone, trombone, tuba, bass and guitar, keyboards and percussion. Call 545-6060 for more information.

Take The Bus!
No gas money. No tolls.
No parking. No smelly Bob.

Save a few bucks and catch a ride home in Billy's car!...with Jason, Thomas, sleazy Andrew, crazy Jennifer, Kevin and smelly Bob. Oh, and Billy needs the car back on Sunday. Be sure to bring fifty bucks for gas and tolls...whatever! How 'bout some personal space? Maybe leaving on your own time, with some a/c, more leg room, a bathroom...and on some schedules, even a movie. Take your next ride home with Peter Pan/Greyhound. And leave smelly Bob behind.

Peter Pan
www.peterpanbus.com

GREYHOUND.
www.greyhound.com

Nader rally draws 12,000 at U. Minnesota

By Peter Johnson
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS – Conventional wisdom might prompt some voters to write off Green Party Presidential candidate Ralph Nader almost immediately.

As a third-party candidate who accepts no corporate campaign finances and speaks about "corporate extremists" dominating the government, Nader's political views could be viewed by some as the most left-wing stances American presidential politics has ever seen.

Yet to the more than 12,000 people filling the University of Minnesota's Target Center on Friday night, Nader's message resonated as a viable alternative to the Republican and Democratic parties.

"They are parties of slogans – they don't say what they mean and don't mean what they say," Nader said.

Nader officials, who said the event was the largest presidential rally in U.S. history, charged $7 per person. Besides Nader and vice presidential candidate Winona LaDuke, the roster of speakers included former talk show host Phil Donahue, campaign finance reform activist Doris "Granny D" Haddock and filmmaker Michael Moore.

The large turnout helped the Green Party raise more than $110,000, gave Nader an international audience via C-SPAN and lent credibility to an insurgent campaign which many predict is doomed to defeat. Speeches centered on reform-minded issues about everything from education and environmentalism to corporate welfare.

"This is a country which has no shortage of solutions. What we have however is an absence of political will," LaDuke said.

The party's goal appeared to be the acquisition of political will. This is a task attempted through organizing and party-building – fundamentals which have proven difficult for some other third parties. Yet the Green Party seems to have no shortage of prominent supporters. Talk-show icon Donahue supports Nader, finding collusion on issues like Nader's opposition to capital punishment and campaign finance reform.

"To the spinners and handlers of the two parties: we're not going away, we're getting bigger. We're reaching out to young people," Donahue said.

Filmmaker Michael Moore is unabashed in his support for Nader.

"Nader is a real alternative; that's a real choice. Nader has done more for this country than Gore or Bush," Moore said. "A vote for Nader is a political Molotov."

If Nader's supporters seem outspoken, his own words pull few punches – especially when talking about his two main rivals. "(Republican) George W. Bush is really a major corporation running for president disguised as a human being," Nader remarked. He is equally critical of Vice President Al Gore, criticizing him for his constantly changing convictions.

Speaking on Gore's book "Earth in the Balance," Nader said, "He has turned his back on (the book) so many ways as to set a political record."

Nader's tallest hurdle may be battling the perception that voting Green Party is throwing a vote away – or worse, is a vote for Bush.

"If they want to throw their vote away they should vote for Bush or Gore, who represent two parties who are wasting our democracy," Nader said.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN STAFF

The gift of life

Despite being a little nervous giving blood for the first time, sophomore Theresa Nelson managed to share a laugh with sophmore Scott Neas yesterday afternoon. The Red Cross will be back at UMass on Wednesday from 10:30 AM to 4:30 PM in the campus center.

Jeans at ZANNA

BCBG MAXAZRIA

BUFFALO

ZANNA

downtown Amherst

Come down to the Campus Center Basement and write for the Collegian.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES AT UMASS

TICKETS ONLY $5/$10 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

Ratan Thiyam's Chorus Repertory Theatre in Uttar-Priyadarshi

Travel with warrior Uttar-Priyadarshi as he travels to Hell and back and discovers the path of non-violence through Buddhism. This epic tale comes to life in a spectacle of rich imagery, rhythm, and sound. Performed in the Manipuri language with English super titles.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL

Co-presented with New WORLD Theater and the Asian Dance & Music Program

Puppet Theatre for Weekend

Teatro Hugo & Inés

Combining music, dance, and puppetry, Hugo & Inés play out the romances of everyday life with the help of a parade of characters composed largely of bones, feet, hands, elbows, and bellies. This duo's dexterity and creativity will amaze children and adults alike.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5 AT 7:30PM
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7 AT 1PM AND 8PM
BAND THEATER

Co-presented with the University Theater Department

American Repertory Theater in King Stag

The American Repertory Theater Company brings the 18th century fairy tale of King Stag to life with costumes, marionettes, masks, and life-size puppetry by John Tiymon, famous for Disney's Broadway hit The Lion King.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL

Sponsored by Tea Room

Tickets are only $10 for children 17 and under

Uncommonly Good Chamber

The Berlin Philharmonic Woodwind Quintet with pianist Jon Nakamatsu

Join us for a rare opportunity to experience one of the world's best woodwind quintets joined by Van Cliburn Gold Medal winner Jon Nakamatsu. The program will include Mozart, Poulenc, Jolivet, and Rueda.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12 AT 7:30PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM

Touchstone Classic

Mandy Barnett

You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Diana Krall's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the country music scene as Barnett and her band deliver an evening of pure Nashville.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL

Stars, Stripes and the USA Forever

The Boston Pops
Keith Lockhart, conductor

It's a 25th Anniversary Celebration complete with an all-American program of Copeland, Bernstein, Loesser, Williams, Gershwin, and tributes to Elvis Presley and Paul Simon. Join the fun and catch the Boston Pops right in your own backyard.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL

Sponsored by HEALTHCHANNEL.COM, COCA-COLA, PEOPLES BANK, and WHMP 1180 AM

Special Event, No Discounts

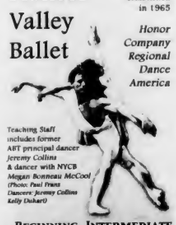
www.finearts.com

Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS

Pioneer Valley Ballet

established in 1965

Honor Company Regional Dance America



Teaching Staff includes former ART principal dancer Jeremy Collins & dancer with NYCB Megan Bonneau McCool (Photo: Paul Trant) Dancers Jeremy Collins Kelly (baby!)

BEGINNING, INTERMEDIATE & ADVANCED CLASSES
MON-FRI
Free registration w/ college ID

OPEN HOUSE
Thurs Sept 7, 5-7 PM
FREE mini-class:

NUTCRACKER PERFORMANCES
AUDITIONS

586-4142 or
PIONEERVALLEYBAL@AOL.COM for BROCHURE & REGISTRATIONS
free registration w/ college ID

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.

With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.

And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.* Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid history of investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.

So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan†

IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL

In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.

*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.

TIAA CREF

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.℠

1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1.800.842.2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. †You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a personalized calculation of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1.800.842.2776. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and tuition savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed.
© 2000 TIAA-CREF 09/03

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Policing the Web:

Battling child porn

Alex Helmy is a walking contradiction.

Despite his role as the founder of the group Adult Sites Against Child Porn, he owns and operates more than a half-dozen adult Web sites, several of which openly advertise "teen girl" content. That makes Friday's announcement by Helmy and fellow porn pioneer Andrew Edmond, stating that the industry needs to identify and report traffickers of child pornography, all the more ridiculous.

Granted, it is impossible not to applaud the efforts of several other adult site Webmasters, who earlier in the week raised $15,000 for the children's advocacy group Safeguarding Our Children – United Mothers (soc-um.org) through a charity auction. But the fact remains that by assuming a supposed watchdog role over questionable content that they themselves provide, smut-peddlers such as Helmy and Edmond are in no way taking the appropriate and necessary responsibility for their online endeavors.

There is no arguing that child pornography is a vile and unacceptable phenomenon. The issue reared its ugly head locally as late as last Tuesday, when former Easthampton studio photographer Roger Beaupgard pleaded guilty in Hampshire Superior Court to possessing nude photographs of a 17-year-old girl.

But nowhere is the problem greater than on the Internet, where sites boast of featuring "the freshest teens" and "barely legal youngsters" with no regard whatsoever to their perpetuity of the child pornography crisis.

As a matter of fact, when a Collegian reporter entered the words "teenage girls" into a major Internet search engine, seven out of the 10 sites found were pornographic in nature.

It has long been a standard in the entertainment industry that "sex sells." However, recent attacks on the business by Senator Joe Lieberman and other politicians concerned violence centered almost exclusively on its effects on children, lending further weight to the argument that any controversy centering on the young should be given an increased level of attention.

That being the case, other political considerations may be a serious factor in the adult entertainment industry's sudden eagerness to police itself. Many porn insiders fear that if George W. Bush captures the American presidency, his conservative agendas may include harsher obscenity regulations that could seriously impact the Web's adult site market. Those individuals' current "call to arms" over kiddie porn may in fact be nothing more than a preemptive strike to lessen the Republicans' potential hammering of the online porn-graphy industry.

But even as they project a façade of caring, individuals like Helmy continue marketing sites and content boasting "the Web's youngest models." Even though the women on these pages are all of legal age according to attached disclaimers, the very fact that they are frequently displayed in cheerleader outfits and pigtails pushes the envelope of federal child pornography laws outlawing even the portrayal of models as being underage.

And the fact that the models on sites such as Helmy's are over the age of 18 doesn't justify the degree to which Internet pornographers exploit the factor of age in their advertising. And as Parry Aftab, executive director of the watchdog group Cyberangels pointed out to Webmasters at a convention last week, those individuals pushing such content had better get serious about their concerns or be prepared to face the wrath of people who are.

"You can help in this fight more than anyone else," Aftab said. "But pretending … you have child porn puts you smack in the sights (of authorities) and they will come after you."

Information from MSNBC was used in this editorial.

The crime of deviation

MATT DESPRES

On May 5th, 1993, three 8-year-old boys from West Memphis, Arkansas finished a day of school at Weaver Elementary and set off for home. A few hours later, the three children – Steven Branch, Christopher Byers and Michael Moore – were reported missing, and an initial search by the boy's parents was soon underway.

At 1:45 p.m. of the following afternoon, a young boy's body was discovered submerged in a creek in an area known as Robin Hood Hills. The bodies of the other two children were discovered in close proximity to the creek, all in a similar and disturbing state. The boys had been stripped naked and bound with their own shoelaces. All had been brutally beaten, and one, Christopher Byers, had been repeatedly stabbed in the groin and castrated. The gruesome events sparked an immediate – and, as it has come to pass, flawed – investigation that led to the imprisonment of three teens that, to this day, are widely considered to be innocent.

The West Memphis Police Department, a unit that was not accustomed to handling situations as sensitive as a triple homicide, failed to properly secure the crime scene, tainting all evidence and rendering it useless in a courtroom. A juvenile probation officer present at the scene sparked speculation by hinting that a prime suspect may be Damien Echols, a local teen whom he had been keeping tabs on for years. Echols, whose choice of clothing and affinity for heavy metal music went against the grain of his small town, had been questioned about a number of incidents in the past, and whose Wiccan beliefs led authorities to believe the three victims may have been used in some form of cult ritual headed up by Echols. The juvenile officer and another police officer felt that Echols was, in fact, the only person capable of such an act. The exchange between the two officers was representative of the community: fingers were pointing without an ounce of evidence to support them.

Through a series of convoluted, second-hand testimonies, Echols was taken into custody for the murder of the three boys. With him went Jason Baldwin, a longtime friend, and Jessie Misskelley, a mentally challenged teen who was encouraged by a woman in the town to help the police as an "eyewitness." (The woman, it should be noted, was eager to help the police nab Echols. She was in trouble for writing bad checks.) It is believed that the police manipulated and intimidated Misskelley into falsely confessing a role in the crime; the bulk of his confession went unrecorded. What was committed to tape managed to incriminate him and the two others.

The West Memphis Police Department had jailed three individuals on charges of murder, based on mere speculation. No hard evidence, no witnesses. A trial began that was grounded in nothing but word of mouth hearsay.

In the seven years since the murders, Echols, Misskelley and Baldwin have become victims themselves, of both rampant speculation and gross lapses in the United States' judicial system. It has become a modern day witch-hunt, a relentless pursual by society of those whose physical appearance and ideals are at odds with the environment of which they are products. To raise an eyebrow at a deviation from the norm is one thing, but when the lives of three young men are put on hold for a crime in which there is no concrete evidence, a serious look must be taken at the system that is supposed to deal all involved parties an equal hand.

The focal point of the case is the complete lack of evidence produced by the prosecution. As a writer for the Phoenix New Times put it, the case begs for comparison with the O.J. Simpson trial, an overblown affair in which mountains of incriminating evidence resulted in his acquittal. In the case of the West Memphis Three, an underwhelming amount of evidence led to convictions. Strip away the hype and media circus, and it comes down to one defendant having the resources to buy his way out of jail, Simpson bought our judicial system. The WM3 do not have those resources: what they do have is a case that in no way connects them to the crimes, a case that in nearly every way works in their favor, yet they sit behind bars. Ladies and gentlemen, welcome to the United States.

What was it that convinced a jury that the three individuals sitting before them were guilty? One piece of "evidence" came in the form of Dale Griffis, a "cult cop" who was undoubtedly brought in because of the views he shared with West Memphis police. Griffis pointed out in a court of law that, often times, black t-shirts, painted fingernails and tattoos are signs of deviant behavior. Mr. Griffis, it should be noted, possesses a mail-order PhD. from Columbia Pacific University.

I happen to know people that own, and, yes, wear, black clothing. In fact, I happen to be in possession of some myself. Do I associate with individuals who express themselves through tattoos and nail paint? Yes. Are they deviants in society who could be singled out, and judged, based on appearance alone if a crime were to occur in proximity to where they live? Absolutely not. Appearance has nothing to do with quality of character, and nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of an individual. This, however, was the case the prosecution used to convict Echols, Misskelley and Baldwin.

John Logleman, prosecutor in the West Memphis Three case, has admitted that the case he brought against the three wasn't all that strong. He has been quoted as saying, "There was a remarkable lack of physical evidence against anybody." Another individual who helped to jail the three while chief of detectives for the West Memphis police, has also said to the press that much of the case has been carried out in the shadows. "You've got a lot of circumstantial evidence is what you've got. There's no smoking gun. This is not a smoking gun-type of case."

It clearly isn't. So why do three men sit in prison while those against them admit it was a shallow case that put them there? It's a look into the dark heart of the country, how the public opinion that preaches to us wins in the end, how those who don't fit the mold will always suffer. It gives us a clear picture of how this opinion has infected our judicial system, a supposedly impartial operation that has sadly, as we can see in this case, fallen in step with our twisted morals. In a case like this, public opinion amounts to very little. Certainly not enough to place three people in jail, and most definitely not enough to schedule one of those people for death by way of lethal injection.

While the three sit through various appeals and other courses of legal action, others have taken action in their defense. A website, www.wm3.org, has been established, providing information and documenting nearly every aspect of the case from 1993 to the present day. Several celebrities, including Pearl Jam front man Eddie Vedder, have used their public image as forums to spread the word. A benefit album to be released today, Free the West Memphis Three, compiles artists of a like mind who support the accused. It's a case that continues to gain attention as time wears on.

The root of the case, of whether the three are guilty or innocent, is something that may never come to light. What is agonizingly clear, however, is that the three were not given fair trial. The community has convicted them long before the case ever reached a courtroom, and both the jury and judge adopted this opinion without ever instilling any of their own.

Information from www.wm3.org and related sites was used in this column.

Matt Despres is a Collegian staff member.

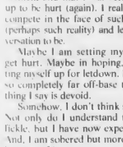
Living in the margins

"Pain and pleasure play off one another. Without pain, then one would not be able to enjoy pleasure. And without pleasure, pain would seem normal, because you would not know anything different than constant pain."



ADAM MARTIGNETTI

Consciousness is a curse. I think. I did. I suffer," says Craig Schwartz (John Cusack's character) at the beginning of Being John Malkovich. And my immediate impulse is to cheer, to take solace in the fact that somebody else recognizes the blackness of the human condition. Then I realize that Schwartz is talking to a filmmaker and screenwriter. Charlie Kaufman likely had something more absurd in mind when penning the scene.

About three weeks ago, I wrote an Ed Op detailing my general disillusionment with the world, and my specific heartache at having the person closest to you in the world turn their back on you, abandon you and in my case outright lie to your face. For those of you who didn't read it, I ended with something to the effect of, "I'm just twenty years old and my faith in humanity has not yet been restored. Pretty depressing stuff.

The editorial is not meant as a retraction to that, but rather as a qualification, and a refusal to some sort of mitigation. I may (and possibly others') misery. I like to live in the margins.

That is to say, if life were a piece of paper, I'd want to be lived on the outer edges. Then, arguments and there are those times when this may sound trite, but I think it is absolutely crucial to understanding and coping with my state of mind.

Many of my head-banging sessions of late have been spent coping with the loss and loneliness of recent months. Since I would not have survived as long as I have I would have killed myself a long time ago. My close friends will attest to that. On the other hand, if its entire life had been spent enjoying the love, sense of fulfillment and hope of the past two years, then I would not have been able to appreciate it. Anyone who has not seen Pleasantville should rent it immediately.)

In other words, pain and pleasure play off one another. Without pain, then one would not be able to enjoy pleasure. And without pleasure, pain would seem normal, because you would not know anything different than constant pain.

For the previous two and a half years, I have felt more alive than any other period of my life. For going on three months now, I have felt like a freight train hit me. I thank you to a friend for that description and thank-for helping me.

Neither constant pleasure nor constant pain is preferable to a mixture of the two, as hard as it is for me to say that right now.

Whenever something bad like my experience happens, the inevitable question becomes, "Do you have any regrets?" First of all, I do not pretend to be old enough or wise enough to determine what regret is. I've lived what I hope to be only a quarter of my life. Ask me that question in 50 years and, hopefully, I'll have a better answer.

Am I sorry for what happened? Sometimes, I can't help but saying that I am. No matter how hard I try, I cannot separate the last few months from the previous years. And, in a way, the previous years are tainted because of what has happened; the two coexist in my mind. However, I would not give up the previous two years for anything in the world. And for that, I cannot be anything but glad.

I am not sorry that I loved her. I am not sorry that she loved me. I am sorry about what happened. I regret none of it (I think). Such is life.

While discussing most of the above with a friend, the response came back that I was "just growing up." Besides this response being at least partially insulting, I did not care for its implications. I imparted how I wanted to remain youthful and idealistic and hopeful. I don't want to "grow up."

My friend explained that to be idealistic was to be stupid, th doesn't hope for anything, that she just lives for the moment and that I was setting myself up to be hurt (again). I really couldn't compete in the face of such cynicism (perhaps such reality) and left the conversation to be.

Maybe I am setting myself up to get hurt. Maybe in hoping, I am setting myself up for letdown. Maybe I'm so completely far off-base that everything I say is devoid.

Somehow, I don't think so though. Not only do I understand that life is fickle, but I have now experienced it. And, I am sobered but more complete because of it.

So, until some better perspective comes along to change my mind, I'm hoping, perhaps futilely, but hoping nonetheless. I'm hoping that what now seems forever lost will be found once again.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the Editor must be typed, they must be signed, dated, and be accompanied by a verifiable phone number and address. Phone numbers and addresses will not be printed, but letters cannot be published unless that information is included. As always, Letters to the Editors can by emailed to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, mailed to Letters to the Editor, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center Basement, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003, or delivered in person to the Collegian office.

A Puffton pentathlon

BRIAN LOHNES

Unless the rock you are living under doesn't have network television, you've probably seen some part of the Olympics. The Olympics are great and all, but who really wants to watch horse jumping? That's why we, the residents of a certain number apartment in Puffton, devised and carried out our own pentathlon.

The two competitors, my roommates Brian and Pete, are not what you would call evenly matched. Brian, the smaller of the two by about 70 pounds, was not heavily favored in the majority of the events. Pete, on the other hand, a large human being, was the odds on favorite to take the pentathlon home. The events were as follows: a tennis match, a golf match, 1 on 1 basketball, the car drag (yes I said car drag), and a question and answer period with a twist.

On the day of the first event, the tennis match, Pete was talking big time trash. "Dude, you are gonna need a walker when I am done with you." Then he lost. It should be noted that the equipment being used may have been seen at the 1912 Olympics, one neato wooden racket and one racket that may or may not have been constructed entirely of lead. Long story short, Brian kicked Pete's ass in straight sets.

The next event happened to be a round of golf. Again Pete began running his mouth early in the day. He actually had grounds to be confident because he has worked at a golf course for the last ten years. Brian, on the other hand, spent the whole day downplaying his golf skills. So off they went to one of the fine local courses and upon their return we learned that Pete lost again. "He was the better man on the course today." Pete showed signs of becoming humble, but that wore away in about thirty seconds. In all fairness, it was a close match. Brian only won by three strokes.

Next came the real crowd pleaser, the car pull. Both men were strapped to a Toyota Camry via a big tow strap and from a standing start had to pull the car over a set distance and be timed doing it. Pete, weighing in on the top end of two hundred pounds, was at a clear advantage here. He took a backwards strategy, facing the car and walking backwards. His time was respectable, but everyone seemed to be confident that his smaller counterpart would be able to put up in equally good time. Brian chose to stand facing away from the car with the strap over his shoulder. This strategy seemed like a good idea until he tried to move the car. After a few more seconds of persuasion, the Camry began to inch forward, and it was painfully obvious at that point that Brian didn't eat his Wheaties that morning. Pete, with a win under his belt, was poised to sweep the last three events, or so he thought.

Going directly from the car pull to the basketball court, the two athletic titans squared off. Pete, having built up much confidence from outmuscling Brian, was back to talking trash. Brian seemed to be pleading for mercy before the game began. "I haven't played basketball since ninth grade, and I scored two points the whole season." Whatever, stop crying. The guys played to 11 and it only took about 45 minutes of what may or may not be considered basketball for Pete to lose again, and lose the overall pentathlon. It was such an emotional moment to see Brian on the ground looking like clear picture of how this opinion has infected our judicial system, a supposedly impartial operation that has sadly, as we can see in this case, fallen in step with our twisted morals. In a case like this, public opinion amounts to very little. Certainly not enough to place three people in jail, and most definitely not enough to schedule one of those people for death by way of lethal injection.

While the three sit through various appeals and other courses of legal action, others have taken action in their defense. A website, www.wm3.org, has been established, providing information and documenting nearly every aspect of the case from 1993 to the present day. Several celebrities, including Pearl Jam front man Eddie Vedder, have used their public image as forums to spread the word. A benefit album to be released today, Free the West Memphis Three, compiles artists of a like mind who support the accused. It's a case that continues to gain attention as time wears on.

The root of the case, of whether the three are guilty or innocent, is something that may never come to light. What is agonizingly clear, however, is that the three were not given fair trial. The community has convicted them long before the case ever reached a courtroom, and both the jury and judge adopted this opinion without ever instilling any of their own.

Information from www.wm3.org and related sites was used in this column.

Matt Despres is a Collegian staff member.

Jewish Affairs Editor •
Sasha Senderovich
diversity@daily colegian.com

Of Holidays and other diseases

"Isn't Rosh Hashana a tropical disease?"

A few weeks into my junior year at a new high school in Central Maine, I found myself struggling to define one of the most important Jewish holidays to a half-interested secretary, whose blurry concept of Judaism didn't stretch much farther than Hanukah, and who didn't quite understand why, exactly, I had to be missing school on that early September day.

The meaning of Rosh Hashana, the Jewish New Year, had radically changed for me in the fall of 1993. Having just moved for the first time to a tiny town in Northern New England, I found out that my religion constituted of an extremely small minority. We were so small, in fact, that the arrival of my brother and I increased the Jewish population in my school by about 200%.

We were the only two full-blooded Jews in school.

NATTY YAGUDIN

So how should I explain to the secretary what Rosh Hashana was? As I stood by still trying to answer her question, I realized for the first time that my Jewish life in the U.S. was never going to look like the Jewish life that I had taken for granted in Israel.

Since we live in a Christian country governed by a Christian government, the meaning and significance of the Jewish calendar is extremely distorted in the States, albeit the freedom of religion.

For me who was living in Maine, that meant that everyone thought Hanukah was the most important holiday in Judaism. Some people went so far to term it "the Jewish Christmas". It was the only Jewish holiday any of my gentile friends were aware of. I had to struggle to point out the fact that Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur were, in fact, much more important and central for us. I set out to educate my peers about the Jewish holidays.

I was asked to go to history and culture classes. I even participated at a special conference. Every time I attempted to explain about the Jewish holidays at my school, my mind kept racing back to early childhood, to my growing up years in a small Moshav in Northern Israel.

The annual Israeli calendar looks extremely different from the US calendar, even for Jewish families. The presence of the upcoming high holidays is already felt at the end of August, although the holidays themselves often don't come until mid to late September, and sometimes even until October.

Throughout the years, I realized that that early holiday feeling actually came to place as a beautiful expression of nature. The end of September is the beginning of the rainy season in Israel, which marks the start of the agricultural cycle, an extremely important time for the cultivation of crops. Growing up in an agricultural community, I always felt that the start of the Jewish New Year was in tune with everything else in nature. In a sense, even the earth and the plants are "Jewish" in Israel.

The High Holiday season starts with Rosh Hashana, which literally means "the head of the year" in Hebrew. It is a two-day holiday, which starts on the eve of the first day. We have always had a big family dinner, which traditionally consists of a fish-head dish (to symbolize the "head" of the year), a host of regional foods, and an apple and honey dipping ceremony, as a symbol for a sweet new year.

After Rosh Hashana, there is a special 10-day period of repentance and prayer. People in the community ask each other and God for forgiveness for the sins they have committed during the year.

I always thought it was a funny ceremony, to ask my parents or my siblings for forgiveness for something that I might have done six months ago, that has already been forgotten. However, now I understand that it is a process that has allowed many people who have been in conflict to settle their differences with each other and to start the year on a good note. When, otherwise, can you get a chance to humble yourself and apologize to someone without running the risk of being ridiculed? This practice, although now on the verge of extinction, is one of many that have kept the Jewish community so united and unique from other communities.

As the 10 day period draws to a close, Yom Kippur enters 'Atonement Day', the ultimate holy day for the Jews. It starts in the evening as the sun sets. We put our best clothes on, pray, fast, and as the sun comes down on the next day we run for the refreshment table, set up for us at the back of the synagogue, to break our hunger and thirst.

Why do we do it to ourselves, year after year? Why do we take a day off from school and work, refuse to eat, and confine ourselves to the uncomfortable chairs in the synagogue, to a big stand up / sit down ceremony the whole day?

In my speeches, I dared to differ that Yom Kippur has more meaning than that. More than a ceremony, it is about the cleansing and reunitting of a spirit of the community and self, a day off that allows one to reflect on the past year and truly celebrate it and put closure to it, without the interference of daily life.

As the holidays ended and November drew near on my junior year, I found myself in the middle of a fight to reclaim the lost honor of the high holidays in the face of the "Jewish Christmas" phenomenon, to a community that knew little about both. I never wanted to set myself up against Hanukah; indeed, it is a holiday that I truly love. Simply enough, it is just not as important.

For a long time, I was furious about the reduction of the high holidays to a series of ceremonies in the United States. Finally, however, I found peace when I realized that while the spirit of the holiday comes from the community, it also comes from within. This realization helps me deal with the absence of the High Holiday atmosphere that there is in Israel.

It also helps me deal with the fact that unless people are really willing to learn about minority religions, ignorance is eternal.

Come December in Maine, I was excitedly chatting to my friend in the hallway about Hanukah. Someone, passing me by, stopped me short.

"But Hanukah," they must have said, "Wasn't that the bug back in September?"

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian Staff Member.

High Holidays Calendar

Rosh Hashana services:

Friday, Sept. 29, 6 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, followed by dinner at Hillel House at 7:15 p.m.

Saturday, Sept 30, 10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Lunch to follow

Kiddush. 7 p.m. services in the Student Union Ballroom.

Sunday, Oct. 1, 10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Lunch to follow at 1 p.m. in the Student Union.

Yom Kippur services:

Sunday, Oct. 8, Pre-Yom Kippur dinner at 5 p.m. in the Hillel House

Services at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Monday, Oct. 9, 10 services in the Student Union Ballroom. Break the-fast meal at 7:15 p.m. in the Student Union.

Deadline to sign up for Rosh Hashana meals is Sept. 28. Deadline to sign up for pre-Yom Kippur meal and break-the-fast meal is September 28. To sing up for the meals, please call 549-1710.

Birthright Israel 2001

If Birthright Israel International is looking for an ideal student to represent its' idea of someone whose life is changed by a trip to Israel, I might be the one. No, I did not have multiple body piercings and pink hair that I decided to abandon after my journey across the world. Nor am I suddenly converting to a zealous desire to forget my American life and move to the Holy Land, followed by an intense experience of patriotism. Yet, I have to confess that I am a shrimp-eating Jew, who enjoys sandwiches during Passover and was rather apathetic about his tradition, who all of a sudden discovered that there is much to be sought and treasured in my heritage. And - most importantly - I am proud to make this confession.

If nothing else, the trip to Israel was the beginning of a journey that I can call nothing less than spiritual. It's hard for me to talk about religion after growing up in the Soviet Union, where my only religious option was atheism, "Jew" was a bad word that some not-so-daring classmates teased me with, and my high school teacher, experiencing her bitter vestiges of Communist propaganda, has nearly flunked me once for not attending school on Passover. Not surprising then is that when my family immigrated to America, I wasn't longing for Judaism. I was running away from it, trying to shun it as much as I could. And, to a certain extent, I was quite successful in implementing this self-exercised forgetting.

How then do I call my journey to Israel a spiritual one? It is not religion that I am dealing with here. Rather, it is spirituality in a sense of something that is higher than the mundane, something that helps human beings make a personal connection to the world that's around us. Some choose to refer to it as God, some find Consolation in the world of Nature, and others choose to embark on a search that never results in a final answer. I was then only at the beginning of my spiritual quest, when, after emerging from the narrow streets of Jerusalem's Old City, I was confronted by the image of the Wailing Wall. Yet, it is hard to say whether it was the visual image of the Wall that created the sense of awe. Probably, it was a realization that I was the first person in my Eastern-European-exiled family to have returned to the place that my ancestors have kept in their prayers or simple memories for two thousand years. Only in the beginning of my quest, then, was I standing on a deserted street of the mystical town of Tzfat, watching the setting sun illuminating with rays the clouds and hills obstructing it from my view. Only in the beginning of my spiritual journey, did I emerge from the dark Children's memorial at Yad Vashem on your roommate's face when he or she has dragged their car faster then all the other competitors. Imagine the emotional connection you could make seeing the people you live with threaten and swear at each other while involved in the most ugly one-on-one basketball game in history. The possibilities for fun are limitless. Plus, who really wants to watch the "real" athletes who are using every known performance-enhancing drug available perform events that people see every four years anyway. On that note, I have to run. Bob Costas is interviewing the Argentinean archery team.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

A glimpse in the Life of a traveler: Guy Soudry

By Rachel Edelman
Collegian Correspondent

All the was from Glasgow, Scotland, via Manchester, England, may I present to you a charming young man named Guy Soudry. Being used to travelling around the world, meeting other Jewish people everywhere, Guy's main problem was finding people to play soccer with. (If you like to play, you can find Guy hanging around the Hillel House, where he is living this year while on exchange with his chemical engineering program.) Guy is also always ready for the social scene, which is very different here since back in England there are pubs in the basement of every dorm.

Off to Israel. Guy started his traveling right after high school, where he tells us many Jewish students take a year off to visit and live. While in Israel, Guy lived and earned his keep for 6 months on a kibbutz, an Israeli collective settlement, usually agricultural and often also industrial, in which all wealth is held in common. Then after 5 months with the Israeli army, Guy enjoyed tackling the Middle East for one final month, finishing his pre-university world exploration. (Guy explains that the university's admission officials in Europe like to see a student take time off and travel; plus, he "never has not enjoyed travelling.") Yet, after being accepted to a university in Manchester England, a three hour trip from his hometown, Guy decided to take the travel abroad option to come to America his junior year. And why did Guy choose UMass? "Well, my choices for studying chemical engineering were between Massachusetts, Louisiana and Tennessee, and a friend of mine from Manchester, Natalie, who is also Jewish, came to UMass last year – I wanted a school that had a big Jewish community."

Before tackling Massachusetts though, Guy spent this past summer with a friend working his way around China, roaming a new city "with guide-book in hand." Another amazement Guy sees in travel are all the incredible people you can meet – even in China where the language barrier slowly became less of a problem when you have a basic connection, like being Jewish. For example, while in China, Guy and his friend met a wealthy Jewish man who took them around for a few days and took them in as important guests. When telling his non-Jewish friends back home of the experience, Guy says, "they couldn't understand how we could go to the other side of the planet, find a Jewish connection, and be welcomed in like family – and that's not including Israel."

About America, Guy is surprised about how unusually friendly we are. But aren't people everywhere friendly? Yes, however, people here say hello to each other even when they don't know them; the majority of people do not do this. Guy answered, "even if one person says hello to me on the street in America, that's one more person than would in England." Overall, this friendliness makes Guy very welcome, even though a bit overwhelmed with culture shock; although living at the Hillel House rather than in a campus dorm has made the transition smoother for him. Guy is also not quite used to such a quiet campus during the week. Because the drinking age is 18 in England, students would get together in pubs ("there would be at least five in walking distance from your room, in the basement of dorms") every night after studying to relax – drinking and partying was not limited to just the weekend.

Guy has always been an active member of Jewish life on his campuses. Being Orthodox, Guy believes that a big part of practicing hadaism is simply doing just that, practicing; "doing action, not just belief and culture."

He still says prayers and continues learning, but it is the doing that he thinks there needs to be more of – another reason why he chose to live in the Jewish Living Community. He did note, however, that compared to the Hillel House back in England, Guy commented that "the building here is in better condition, I can walk around barefoot, even though I'm still trying to figure out this funny shape!" (The house is shaped sort of like an octagon, with a courtyard in the center.) Of course, the better food is easy to get used to, but sharing a room is a simple, especially when you've never had to do it before. Guy reassures that they get along just fine, but he's not used to having to share his personal space.

Despite a differently paced social life, Guy is having a good time here at UMass and is enjoying his study abroad experience. And don't forget, if you are looking for one more to play intramural soccer – get over to Hillel and give Guy a call.

KELLY TYRRELL/COLLEGIAN

Guy Soudry, an exchange student from Scotland, studies at Hillel House.

National unity, not greater division

In America, the notion of church and state separation is one of the most fundamental notions. While Israel strives to maintain a secular democracy, political conduct is clearly engaged upon by both non-religious and religious forces. The fact that Prime Minister Ehud Barak is coping without a coalition is no mystery. The departure of his foreign minister, David Levy, and the three right-wing parties in Barak's government—the Shas Party, National Religious Party, and Yisrael Be'aliyah—have left the prime minister susceptible to losing a vote of no-confidence when the Knesset (the Israeli Parliament) resumes session in six weeks. As such, there has been some recent discussion among analysts that Mr. Barak should align himself with the Likud Party opposition in order to stabilize his position and to divide Israeli political society along secular and clerical lines.

ERAN BENEDEK

Indeed, many argue that it would have been wiser for Barak to have invited secular parties into his coalition last year, rather than Shas and the NRP who pursue predominately religious agendas and are largely hostile to the peace process. Arithmetically speaking, Shas, the ultra-orthodox Sephardi party, was the most secure choice because they garnered the third largest proportion of votes in the 1996 General Elections. Otherwise, by excluding Shas, Barak's One Israel may never have achieved a majority coalition, making it impossible for him to pass any legislation.

Perhaps the real problem does not lie in the inclusion of the two religious parties. Instead, the central dilemma in Israel is the absence of a written constitution. At the time of the founding in 1948, David Ben Gurion purposely avoided crafting a constitution, fearing that religious Zionists would refuse to recognize a secular Israeli state not governed by Halacha, Jewish Law. To this day, no such legal document exists, and as a result there is no explicit separation between church and state in national affairs. Therefore, the prescription that the prime minister should ostracize the religious parties as a political tactic, rather than searching for a legal framework attempting to define the separation between civil and ecclesiastical authorities, is dangerous to the conduct of Israeli politics. While Barak could try to ally himself with the Likud Party in a union of partnership, this should be achieved with the intent of creating a national unity government, not a movement aimed at intentionally dividing secular and religious Israelis. Such a campaign could create a potentially destructive atmosphere for the State of Israel by fostering baseless hatred among the citizenry.

While Barak himself may not embrace Orthodox Judaism as the guiding path to life, there is no reason why he should shun those that do. Neither Barak nor any other future leader should ever ostracize Israel's orthodox community, and vice versa. Even though this may mean that coalition instability is inevitable, at least Mr. Barak incorporated a multiplicity of viewpoints by including Shas and the NRP in his government and did not erect a coalition exclusively of secular Israelis. Personally, I do not agree with most platforms of Israel's right-wing, whether religious or secular. I prefer a more moderate, centrist approach, which respects and cherishes Jewish tradition yet protects Israel's democratic foundation. Still, I applaud any government's initiative to invite and entertain opposing views so as to permit a synthesis of ideas.

Dividing the two camps, secular and religious, as a deliberate aim of crafting a governing coalition will create enduring disaster for Eretz Yisrael, exacerbating the unfortunate strife between chelonim (secular) and datiyim (religious). In my estimation, any Israeli government on the Right or Left has the obligation of appealing to the broad center of the population. The last piece of advice Israel needs is to foster more division than already exists: rather, the government should be more focused on mending the rift between the non-religious and religious. Barak should strive to include the Likud as a political partner, but this must be achieved in order to ameliorate the problems on the political, economic, social, and religious fronts. It could also be an especially wise move now as the country moves ahead in the peace process. A One Israel-Likud alliance must be done with the intent of gaining greater national unity and accord, not wider separation among the Israeli populace.

Eran Benedek is a U Mass student.

L'Shana Tovah! Happy 5761!

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Macy Gray Teaches Smith To Get Funky

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

MACY GRAY
John M. Greene Hall, Smith College
Sept. 24, 2000

It (the) didn't know how already-Smith College was taught to groove Sunday night when Macy Gray and her band stopped by John M. Greene Hall.

After the obscene success of "I Try," we all know about Macy Gray. We all know that she whacky, funkadelic, and about low. But after listening to her overproduced studio album, few people know how amazing her band is. Add the soul-outrageous talent and complete unity of these musicians to Macy's presence and you have a fantastic live show.

Following a great set by Princes of Babylon, the headlining act took the stage superb style. After every member of her band was formally introduced, including an impressive little stint with the lights, Macy stepped out to complete the production number.

The stuff you don't get to see on VH1's Fashion Awards or Saturday Night Live really made the audience forget how Smith overpriced tickets to the show. Macy is vulgar, but all in the name of fun. Between songs her interaction with the stage filled in where her eccentric voice fails her. She told the audience about what she feels is one of the greatest things ever created: "the dick." And insisted that everyone chant "the dick" and something else imperceptible, like a lot of what she says about what people do with "the dick."

Musically, the performance of "Sex-O-Matic" topped the evening. The song stretched at least eight minutes—pure funk, beautifully supported by Macy's three superb back-up singers. Just about every tune from Macy Gray On How Life Is was covered, with "A Moment to Myself," "Do Something," and I've Committed Murder" done particularly well. And when the band finally slowed down to perform "Still", they had no problem maintaining their intensity.

She's crazy. She's got soul. She likes genitalia. She's Macy Gray

Additionally, they did some surprising covers including "A Little Help With My Friends" by The Beatles and the classic "Que Sera, Sera."

I was almost really impressed that Gray decided to not perform "I Try" or her current single "Why Didn't You Call Me?" That was until she blasted into both during the encore. (Incidentally, she refused to start the encore until a fixed number of audience members took off their clothes and threw them on stage.) "I Try" faded nicely in and out of jams from the band, including a taste of Sly and the Family Stone. And "Why Didn't You Call Me?" was sweet and sparse, lending special attention to Macy's DJ's.

If she returns, even if you have to pay $24, it's a show you should see. The clean, poppy sound heard on her album is undesirably thin compared to the rich vibe Macy Gray (and especially her band) produce on stage.

The Final Cut:

Not Made for Legends

By Tim Letteney
Collegian Correspondent

URBAN LEGENDS: THE FINAL CUT
Directed by John Ottmon with Jennifer Morrison, Matthew Davis and Joey Lawrence (whoa)
Playing at Mountain Farms Four in Hadley

Urban Legend: The Final Cut... wow, what a refreshing taste of good Hollywood filmmaking. Great character development, fantastic cinematography, and a very innovative plot. If you sense sarcasm you are quite astute and perhaps should look into English as a major. Seriously though, I haven't felt so ripped off since I bought notebooks at A.J. Hastings in downtown Amherst.

Urban Legends: The Final Cut takes place at Alpine University, one of the country's most prestigious film schools, which evidently does not have an acting department. The acting mirrors that of a soap opera. The movie could have easily been titled Urban Legends: the Art of the Dramatic Pause. The only entertainment that I got out of the actors in this film was saying "Whoa!" every time Joey Lawrence walked on camera.

The story line goes like this: during a competition to determine the best thesis film, Amy (Jennifer Morrison) decides to make a Hitchcock-like movie dealing with an anonymous serial killer that offs his victims using urban legends. Just as she starts shooting her movie, her cast and crew start to "disappear" one by one. The story line of this movie makes Scream look like Citizen Kane.

This slasher film brings nothing new to the table. The characters are paper thin, the cinematography is week and cliché, and the plot...well I guess I can't denounce the plot for one simple reason: there really wasn't one.

One could argue that none of the above matters, for this movie is classified in the horror genre, and nothing matters but gory death scenes and nudity. Well, I would argue against that point, being a self-proclaimed horror buff myself. But I must admit that I do have an affinity for the shuck value of horror films. Lo and behold, this movie failed in that department too. The first death scene is horribly gross and is designed to get the audience's attention. Every other death scene either happens off screen or is just plain boring. One would argue that using off screen deaths is more effective than using on screen deaths, the reason being that whatever the viewer thinks happened to the victim is ten times worse than what any special effects guy can do.

Turn to URBAN, page 7

Now Open! Come visit us!!!
americanatextbooks.com
"Where you don't stand in line for BIG DISCOUNTS!!!"

resources
HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
• FLEXIBILITY
• Competitive Pay
• Temp
• Temp to Perm
• Career Opportunities
• Vacation
Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.
Car necessary.
CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

Hey! Need a Job!?
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

You can get lost at a huge investment bank,
or join us and find out how good you really are.
You're invited to the Prudential Securities Investment Banking Presentation for Analysts.
Thurs., September 28, 6:00 pm, Alumni House Amherst College.
For more information visit our website at: www.prudentialsecurities.com/investment_banking/careers.htm
Prudential Securities
©9/00 Prudential Securities Incorporated. Member SIPC
Prudential Securities Incorporated is an Equal Opportunity Employer (M/F/D/V)

Thirty Years Later, Maceo Parker Still Grooves

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

MACEO PARKER
Higher Ground, Winooski, VT
September 22, 2000

Put a handful of the world's best jazz/funk musicians together, including two former members of the James Brown Band. Stick them in a club full of college students ready to shake their asses. And have Maceo Parker lead the event.

How could this be anything short of amazing?

Friday night the Higher Ground—a line little club three-and-a-half hours away from Amherst, in scenic Vermont—played host to quite a show. After a tight but comparatively uneventful performance by Manhattan based funk group Topaz, Maceo Parker took the stage to begin what was roughly a four-hour set.

Impressive, isn't it? More impressive when you realize how old this man, and most of his band, is. Consider the fact that Parker was already in his prime thirty years ago when he worked with James Brown. From approximately 10:30 p.m. until 2:30 a.m. the band played, fully dressed in three-piece suits, with only one ten minute break.

Parker covered at least a few minutes of every funk staple, paying special homage to George Clinton, James Brown and Marvin Gaye. Tunes from his latest release dial: MACEO – on which he collaborated with James Taylor, Ani DiFranco, The Artist and Sheryl Crow – dominated the set list, however.

Maceo's audience is a happy one. The club did not stop moving, mostly because it's impossible to not groove to Maceo. Even when the band slowed down two or three times, to cover a classic like "Georgia On My Mind," nobody seemed to notice it was time to relax.

It's interesting to note that Parker has been recognized as one of the foremost musicians in a couple of different genres for over three decades now, but he still enjoys only small club celebrity status. Before and after the performance he had no trouble walking around conspicuously. Most people wouldn't be able to tell you who he was at first mention of his name. And he's played with everybody... including the Parliament Funkadelic and The Red Hot Chili Peppers. On Ani DiFranco's To The Teeth Parker along with the rest of the former James Brown [illegible], anything he can be heard [illegible]. That's only to name a few.

Parker is [illegible] currently on tour and [illegible] for a within reasonable distance of you, it's certainly worth [illegible]. Not only is he and [illegible] this show extremely [illegible] his sun rapper Corey [illegible] undoubtedly will [illegible] up and coming hip [illegible] all very attentive [illegible]. Opening and closing [illegible] made a special [illegible] everyone there [illegible] Maceo, we love you!

w w w . d a i l y c o l l e g i a n . c o m

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups Fall 2000

MONDAY
Come Out, Come Out Wherever You Are!
A GLBT Support Group
Our goal is to create a setting for self-exploration and for making new connections with others. We plan to have fun in the process.
Mon., 3:45-5:00 p.m.

TUESDAY
Coed Self - Exploration Group for Undergraduates
For college men and women who experience difficulties in inter-personal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.
Tues.,3:30-5:00 p.m.

WEDNESDAY
Women's Eating Issues Group
This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight obsessions and enhancing self acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues, and to develop coping strategies.
Wed.,3:45-5:00 p.m.

THURSDAY
Women's Self-Exploration Group
(For older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees)
This group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits.
Thurs., 9:00-10:30 a.m.

Alcohol and Drug Discussion Group
This support group is for individuals who are trying to live free from alcohol and drug abuse. In this safe, confidential setting we will explore each person's struggle to achieve and maintain sobriety. (An initial intake at Mental Health is required prior to group attendance.)
Thurs., 12:45-2:00 p.m.

Coed Self-Exploration Group
(For older undergraduates, graduate students student dependents and covered employees)
This group provides an opportunity for men and women to explore interpersonal relationships. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits.
Thurs., 3:30-5:00 p.m.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff. Groups are deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Supplemental Plan or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays. Application to the behavioral health network of GIC is pending. Groups require an initial screening which can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or by stopping by at 127 Hills North, Mon.-Fri. 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

Coed Self- Exploration Group for Undergraduates
For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships.
Wed.,3:30-5:00 p.m.

Stress/Anxiety Management Group
Stress impacts all of us physically and psychologically creating various medical and emotional symptoms. This structured 3-session group is designed to demonstrate effective ways to deal with stressful circumstances. We will use educational and behavioral methods to help members lessen their stress.
Session 1: Wed., 4:00-5:00 p.m. Oct. 4, 11, 18
Session 2: Thurs., 4:00-5:00 p.m Oct. 19, 26 & Nov. 2

CALL 545-2337
to schedule required pre-group screening appointmentor for further information.
Visit the Mental Health web site at: www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth

Bring it.

Where it matters most.
As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.
But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down to earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.
So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.
We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Plan on visiting our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors
• Computer Science
• Computer Engineering
• Electrical Engineering
• Mechanical Engineering
• Math
• Physics
• Chemical Engineering
• Aeronautical Engineering
• Finance/Accounting
• Human Resources
• Industrial and Labor Relations
• Marketing/Communications
• Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. As Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge
Raytheon

Emo Rides The Horse Silly Iron

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

EMO PHILIPS
Iron Horse
September 22, 2000

To some, the name Emo Philips might mean nothing more than the gaunt comedian with the bowl-cut hair and the homo the Frog voice who accidentally cuts his fingers off with a table saw in the film UHF and then exclaims, "Just call me Mr. Butterfingers!" However to others, Emo is a gift from above.

At least he was when he performed two shows this past weekend at Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall. The intimate bar and grill was packed to capacity, with myself and a friend most likely being one of the few under the drinking age.

The rest of the crowd made up of mostly thirty-somethings (although I caught an elderly woman drinking a martini) were welcoming of the exuberant entertainer and were most attentive as he performed his hour and fifteen minute set.

To those unfamiliar with this stand-up, it will aid your understanding in knowing that his opening act was a professional vocal demonstrator who goes by the name of Todd. A one-time UMass Amherst student, the now Fall River, MA resident travels around the globe in vocal competitions and the audience at the Iron Horse were fortunate enough to be given a few of his tricks. While this was amusing, I found it far more comical that this is a person's career and source of income.

The house erupted, however, when Emo hit the stage. Despite his newly-spiked haircut and gaining upwards of twenty pounds, the famously comedian hit all his marks. He touched upon such discussed subjects such as fecal burning in New England, mushy bananas, working part-time in a morgue, and so on. Being an Emo fan, it was a pleasure to find that most of the material was new, except for a song he played on the piano and I use that term very loosely, about the town he grew up in, Dodgers Grove, Illinois (if there's a real place, I'd love to visit).

A few times during the performance he conversed with people in the audience, including a nurse named Debbie. When he called her a "hot mama" and told her how every woman dreams of having their own personal Emo, Debbie rebutted "You wish." The audience "awww"ed as Emo put on a downtrodden face. Nonetheless, Emo carried on.

It was a thrill to see that Emo's unique style of comedy still lives on in a day-and-age where a lot of comedy is the same old song and dance.

His one-two punch and sometimes perverse humor is still a pleasant departure from today's big-name comedians.

■ urban

continued from page 6

Boy, would be wrong if they said this about this movie. John Ottman (director) is no Alfred Hitchcock; hell, he isn't even Gus Van Sant (director of the Psycho remake).

Do your dwindling checking account a favor – don't go see this movie. If by some chance your checking account is still flourishing, go waste six bucks, but make sure to thank your parents afterward. If you honestly want to go see a horror movie this weekend rent Prom Night, or Friday the 13th part 4 (God bless Corey Feldman!). Sure these movies are far from innovative, but at least they ripped off John Carpenter's Halloween and not Kevin Williamson's Scream.

I blame the same people for this movie that I did for I Still Know What You Did Last Summer: the audience. These over-budgeted under-produced horror sequels will always get made if we continue to shell out our money. See you at Blair Witch 2.

■ olympics

continued from page 10

An international baseball dynasty for more than a decade, Cuba was rarely challenged by any team in both its gold-medal runs. But the Netherlands, with several former New York Yankees in tow, ended their streak at 21 with a 4-2 win last Wednesday and now for the first time, Cuba has serious competition in defending its title. For a nation that prides itself on its success in "baseball," it appears that the detections are now taking their toll. And this Wednesday will be Cuba's biggest test: Three-time Olympic champs or runners-up for the first time in history.

Ironically, the U.S. softball team finds itself in a similar position to the Cuban baseball team. The Americans (6-5) arrived in Sydney as the heavy favorites to defend their gold medal. They were the only team in the world who could claim a streak of 110 straight international victories, extending it to 112 with a 6-0 win over Canada, where Lori Harrigan pitched the first no-hitter in Olympic history, and a 5-0 win against Cuba.

But then the unthinkable happened: the women lost three consecutive games and seemed on the brink of elimination until they won their last two games. Yet this team has been unmatched by resiliency and heart.

Write for Arts!

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments. FREE HEAT/HOT WATER, Fully applianced kitchen, designer bath On PVTA busline. Call 665-3856

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Honda Accord 92 two door, 5-speed, sun roof, 24k, runs great 665-8616

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

1994 VW Passat GLX, 5spd VR 6, Dark Green, 6 Disc, CD, Phone, Loaded $6200 OBO 549-1553

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker $1500 obo 413-665-3630

CHILDCARE

Afetschool childcare needed in Amherst home, 2 children, M, T, Th 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30 - 5:30, or some combination. 545-0258

Mothers helper wanted with breakfast & dinner with some overnights. Hourly wage nego. Call Abbey 586-0207 ext. 305

Childcare needed for Weds 1:30-3:30pm experienced with references. Call 253-1655

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 for sale. For further information. 413-667-3084

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT
Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays. Sugarloaf Estates 665-3856

STAGE HANDS WANTED At the Fine Arts Center. $6.75/HR. Applications at Production Services rm 146 F.A.C.

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for household cleaning help for Amherst home twice monthly. References 548-7008

The Fine Arts Center is hiring ushers for the 2000-2001 season! For more information, please contact: Cheryl at 545-0190 (after October 1 - 545-0192)

Second Shift 3pm-11pm. Part time Monday, Wednesday and Friday with possibility of full time. Duties include maintaining a large recirculating aquaculture & hydroponics greenhouse. Applicant must be responsible, mechanically inclined and able to work alone. Great for students-Earn while you learn. Send resume to Bioshelters, Inc., 500 Sunderland Road, Amherst, MA 01002, Fax (413) 549-9945, e-mail bioshelter@aol.com. NO calls please.

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Resturant Cashier. Speaking and writing Chinese and English part-time or full-time (413)582-7045

EMPLOYMENT

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

RECREATION POSITIONS
Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

EMPLOYMENT

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

FURNITURE

Lovely Antique Dresser for sale. Call Erica 253-6504. Will deliver

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sororities/Fraternities : SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

2 long-haired, female kittens. First set of shots and advance flea control included. $15 fee to cover vaccines. 413-253-2465

FREE KITTENS
2 cute kittens need loving homes 413-665-7315 Act quickly

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate needed ASAP Mill Valley. Prefer male, on bus route, washer/dryer 253-7026

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SPORTS

Attention Wrestlers, Boxers, anyone who likes to workout. Mixed Martial Arts Program located at local gym. Looking for interested athletes. Kirik 256-0080 www.mixedmartialarts.com kirik@mixedmartialarts.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

SPRINGBREAK 2001 Hiring On-Campus Reps SELL TRIPS, EARN CASH, GO FREE!!! Student Travel Services America's #1 Student Tour Operator Jamaica, Mexico, Bahamas, Europe, Florida 1-800-648-4849 www.gospringbreak.com

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001
Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free!
Student Travel Services
1-800-429-7710

WANTED

WANT CASH? Sign-up your classmates for cool Internet sites, and receive a minimum of $1.00 per person!! Log onto TeamMagma.com or call 1-877-866-2462

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WANTED!!
30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 20LBS IN 30 DAYS
FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO MassMunchies.com

Your Ad Could Be Right HERE! Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN Channel Guide

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	Umass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC–TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gavel to Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus SEPTEMBER 26, 2000

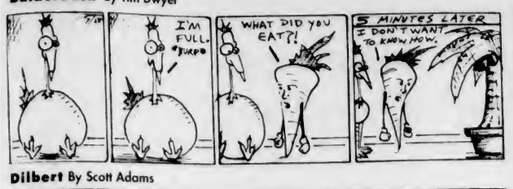
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		World of National Geographic		Nova: Escape! Accidents		P.O.V. "Live Free or Die" (N) (In Stereo)		News	Inside the Box
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	King	Survivor "Crack in the Alliance"		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	King	Survivor "Crack in the Alliance"		Judging Amy (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	Spin City	News	Nightline
WLVI		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Judgment" (N)		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX		7th Heaven "Halloween"		Blind Date	Real TV	Killers in the Water (In Stereo)		Danger in Our Skies		News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Friends	Fraser
WTIC		Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	70s Show	70s Show	News
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		World of National Geographic		Nova: Escape! Accidents		P.O.V. "Live Free or Die" (N) (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City	Spin City	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	Killers in the Water (In Stereo)		Danger in Our Skies		Frasier	I Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Major League Baseball: Atlanta Braves at New York Mets. (Live)						Whst' Life Adventures		"Jackie Chan's First Strike"
A&E	23	L.A. Law "December Bride"		Law & Order "Consultation"		Biography "J. Edgar Hoover: Personal and Confidential"				Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Entrapment"
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"It's Pat" (1994, Comedy) Pat Paulsen.				Toothbrush	Whose Line?	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC		Wild Discovery "Cobras"		Wild Discovery: Snakes		On the Inside: Crash		New Detectives		FBI Files "A Stranger in Town"		Justice Files
ESPN		Sportscenter		Major League Baseball Teams to Be Announced (Live)						Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	"And the Sea Will Tell" (1991, Drama) Richard Crenna, Rachel Ward.				TRL (In Stereo)		First Listen: "36 Degrees"		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV		Direct Effect	Makeover	To Be Announced		Al Gore Town Hall				Love Lucy	Ben. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
NICK		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Ben. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI		Sliders "Cmetheles" (In Stereo)		"Babylon 5: The Gathering"		"Alien 3" (1992, Science Fiction)		Supernay Weaver, Charles S. Dutton. (In Stereo)				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	28	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours "Real ER"		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Maternity Ward: Every Stitch		Operation		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT		ER "Humpty Dumpty"		Pretender "Keys" (In Stereo)		"Last Man Standing" (1996, Drama) Bruce Willis.				Bull "Final Hour" (N)		ER "Last Rites" (In Stereo)
USA		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Washington Holiday"		Nash Bridges "Backout"		"The Big Lebowski" (1998, Mystery) Jeff Bridges.		Strip Poker		Martin
HBO		(5:30) "Simon Sez" (1999)		"The Chanzese Kid" (1996, Comedy) Gilbert.		"PG-13"		"The Guilty" (1999, Drama) Bill Pullman. (In Stereo)		Sex and-City		G-String Divas
MAX		(4:45)		"Stripes" (1981, Comedy) Bill Murray.		"Octopussy" (1983, Adventure) Jean-Claude Van Damme.				"Skeleton Kompotes" (1999) Casper Van Dien.		"Chill Factor"
SHOW		(5:30) "The Age of Innocence" (1993) Daniel Day-Lewis.				"Ronin" (1998, Suspense) Robert De Niro. (In Stereo)				Dangers and Choosers		Filmmaker	Filmmaker

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer



Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

TELL YOU WHAT I'M CALLING IT LIKE I WANT TO VOLUNTEER FOR DUKE LOVE
REALLY? WHAT DO YOU WANT TO DO FOR US?
NOT SURE YET. WHAT POSITIONS DO YOU HAVE OPEN?
WELL, WE COULD USE A SMART GUY.
HAH. TOO MUCH STRIDENT WHITE BLOKE YOU GOT?

Dilbert By Scott Adams

YOUR OFFICE IS TOO FAR FROM THE EXECUTIVE OFFICES
IT IS?
THEY ARE ACTIVELY FORGETTING YOUR NAME EVEN AS WE SPEAK. IT'S GOING. GOING GONE!
CAROL. WE HAVE TO MOVE MY OFFICE!
HAVE WE MET?

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

THE TAO OF RJ
THE GOLDEN RULE: DO UNTO OTHERS AS YOU WOULD HAVE THEM DO UNTO YOU.
RJ'S PLATINUM RULE: TREAT YOURSELF AS OTHERS WOULD HAVE THEM TREAT THEMSELVES.
SO IF WE WANT TO KICK BACK, RELAX AND STORE A FEW CASES OF BEER IN THE BATHTUB, WE SHOULD BE ABLE TO DO THAT.
AS A DEVOUT SLACKER, IT'S MY ETHICAL OBLIGATION...
TO RELAX.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

I REALLY WISH YOU HADN'T HAD A BIG ONION IN THERE GARLIC BAGEL FOR LUNCH...
OH MAN! WHAT KIND OF BREATH MINTS ARE THOSE?
WOW! YOU SMELL LIKE SOMEBODY LEFT A MEATLOAF IN A BIG ONION IN THE BED OF A HOT DOG!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

COME ON SATCHEL, THE SOONER YOU START YOUR BATH, THE SOONER YOU FINISH IT!
ONE DOLLAR KEEPS YOUR LOCATION SECRET NO DOLLAR AND I SQUEAL LIKE A PUPPY
BUT THAT'S THAT'S BLACKMAIL!

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Something which seems to be a crapshoot at first may prove to be a sure thing before long. You can enjoy a good deal of success very soon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Gather about you those who share your aspirations and who can work with you to get things moving once again – in the right direction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – It's time once again for you to concentrate on versatility. You can surely excel in more than one arena at this time – with a little more work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone or something has been protecting you lately, and it's time for you to recognize that you are indebted – and to return the favor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) What you begin doing today you must be willing to continue on a regular basis; now is no time to do anything halfway.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) What you wish for yourself you also wish for others today, which makes cooperation highly probable and quite beneficial.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can enjoy something entirely new today without forsaking your love for the traditional and the tried-and-true.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're nearing the end of a major pet project today, and it's time to put your thoughts toward those things that are looming in the future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) –It is important for you to be on the move today — if not literally, then figuratively — in the office or at home. Many new projects beckon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – It's time to focus on your dreams with a little more dedication. Today can make the difference between happiness now and happiness later.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – People may have hidden agendas today, and you mustn't make any lasting decisions without sounding out the most hidden feelings and opinions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Someone will capture your interest and your imagination today, spurring you to explore a new option and considering a subtle though major change.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 51 LOW: 42	HIGH: 65 LOW: 49	HIGH: 56 LOW: 54

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

www.monkey-box.net

ANGERED BY THE INFLUX OF TOURISTS INTO OZ, THE MUNCHKINS PREPARE FOR WAR

© 2000

Quote of the Day

"I know someday you'll have a beautiful life, I know you'll be a star in somebody else's sky, but why, why, why can't it be mine?"

-Eddie Vedder

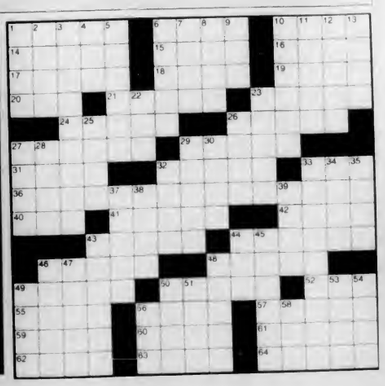
ACROSS
1 Shady place
6 Yen
10 Guardian's charge
14 Sea creature
15 Cleveland's state
16 Water, in Mexico
17 Does a banking job
18 Magician's stick
19 Den
20 Gloomy
21 Declaim
23 Eye movement
24 Chef's attire
26 Tag — accompany
27 Contribute
29 Junk
31 Hindu princess
32 Condescend
33 Python
36 Difficult problem
40 Commuter vehicle
41 Actor Jack —
42 — spumante
43 Become mellow
44 Wrinkle-resistant fabric
46 Thin material
48 Fruit pulp
49 Pain-like
50 Wild horse
52 Tennis shot
55 Elevator inventor
56 Comic Rivers
57 Subarctic forest
59 Gait
60 Impulse
61 Not moving
62 Winter transport
63 Pullovers
64 Restaurants

DOWN
1 Leatherworker's tools
2 Ms. Perlman
3 Large handkerchiefs
4 Ancient
5 Sea
6 Des Moines resident
7 Not this
8 Movie
9 Coal scuttle
10 Smack
11 Once more
12 Bemoaning
13 Until
22 Caviar
23 Bugs Bunny's voice: Mel —
25 Couple
26 Golden Fleece ship
27 Cheerleans
28 Honolulu's island
29 — one's ways
30 Quote
32 Jazz musician Ellington
33 Certain sculpture
34 Eight: pref.
35 Similar
37 Lace mat
38 Scruff of the neck
39 Hurry
43 Washed off
44 Hound for payment
45 Cold place
48 Urgent
47 Chilled
48 Corn breads
49 Dandies
50 Make weary
51 Fad
53 Monster
54 Belfry residents
56 Protrude
58 Med. workers' org.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-9-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

24 GOOD REASONS TO GO TO UNIVERSITY DRIVE (THE WINGS AIN'T BAD EITHER) 24 TAPS AND THE BEST PUB FOOD ANYWHERE
the HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich

Taco Bar

Eggplant Parmesan (vegan) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Vegetarian Bean Taco (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Dinner

Fried Chicken

Cheese Lasagna (vegetarian)

Meat Lasagna

Jamaican 3 Bean Stew (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Brian McDermott
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Mike Kulak, Jess Grant, Adi Huseinovic

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, September 26, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

No. 17 Sun Devils turn up heat in 2-0 win over Minutewomen

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Despite a 2-0 loss to host Arizona State, the Minutewomen came back from Tempe with a split. UMass defeated San Diego State on Friday night.

Podhrasky's career-high nine saves not enough to hold off Arizona State

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

TEMPE, AZ – The Arizona State women's soccer team proved why it is one of the top teams in the country on Sunday night at the ASU Soccer Stadium.

Thanks mainly in part to their smothering defense, the No. 17 ranked Sun Devils were able to remain perfect on the season with a 2-0 win over UMass in a non-conference matchup. ASU improved to 9-0 with the win, while the Minutewomen fell to 4-5.

"We would have liked to get a tie with a nationally ranked team, but we showed that we could play with them," Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "The key thing that we have to take from this weekend is that our intensity has to be at least as high as it was tonight. It can't be any lower than that."

The contest was a one-goal game for most of the match thanks to the goalkeeping of UMass junior Julie Podhrasky. Following a goal by Sun Devils defender Temryss Lane midway through the first half, the Dallas, TX native made several spectacular stops to game the Minutewomen close. All in all, she made nine saves on the night.

Meanwhile, ASU held the UMass offensive attack in check thanks its relentless pursuit on its half of the field. The Minutewomen managed only three shots in the game, none of which came in the second half.

"I thought that we gave a ranked team a hell of a tussle," Rudy said. "They are one of the better organized defensive teams that I've seen in a while, but our kids battled damn well." Nevertheless, the visitors hung around for most of the night. The issue wasn't completely settled until the final minutes, when All-American Stacey Tullock blasted a beautiful shot past Podhrasky while cutting against the grain. The junior midfielder worked her way into the box and dribbled to her right before striking the ball into the upper left corner of the net from about 10 yards out.

ASU opened the scoring with just over 17 minutes remaining in the first stanza. Freshman Patrice Feulner served a corner kick into the box, where Lane headed it home.

For the Minutewomen, it was the fourth straight game in which the opposition tallied a goal off of a corner kick.

"We have some work to do on our corner kicks," Rudy said. "We're giving up too many chances. I think that we need to look at the tapes and see where we are going wrong."

UMass will delve back into the Atlantic 10 portion of its schedule this weekend when it hits the road for games at St. Bonaventure and Duquesne.

Men's tennis hits big in opener

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's tennis squad stepped into Providence, Rhode Island this weekend with the hope of starting off the season with a bang. It's safe to say that they succeeded.

The Northeast Intercollegiate Championship involved nine schools: Assumption College, Boston College, Boston University, Brown, Connecticut, Marist College, Niagra, Providence College, Rhode Island, Buffalo and Vermont.

The big challenge for the Minutemen was to play competitively against Ivy League foe, Brown, a known powerhouse. The team also wanted to do some damage against rival UConn.

Eight players from the UMass squad played in both the singles and doubles matches. The singles competition involved four flights split into A, B, C and D. Each flight contained two players from each school. The doubles had an A and B flight with two teams in each flight.

The Minutemen involved included freshmen Aron Gortman, Brent Davis and Phil Rodrigues, Senior Bill Greener, junior Todd Champeau, sophomores Will Shaw and Eric Rehlin and junior Steve Prisco brought experience to the tournament.

Greener lost early in the D flight but found a comfortable spot in the consolation bracket and finished strong by winning the flight.

Prisco and Davis made it to the doubles finals and lost to a No. 2 seeded Brown doubles team of Jamie Cerratitti and Nick Malone of Brown.

When asked about the play of the freshmen, Coach Dixon spoke highly of their first collegiate matches. "Overall they played very well and held their own. Brent [Davis] lost a competitive match to the No. 1 from Brown."

Davis, a freshman from San Diego, CA also played well with his doubles partner Prisco. Gortman, another freshman from California advanced to the quarterfinals of singles flight A. He lost a hard-fought match to Ivey Kasiman from Buffalo (6-4, 6-3).

Though the tournament will not affect UMass' team record Greener said, "It's a good time up for the matches we're going to get into. It's important to get back that competitive edge back."

Tomorrow the team will test that edge, when they travel to Hartford to face the Hawks. The game will be played in West Hartford at 3 p.m.

When asked about expectations for the match Dixon said with a chuckle, "I'm expecting it to rain.

She continued by saying that Hartford's major threat is their strong No. 1 singles player Pedja Zdravkovic. However the rest of their line up is weak in comparison to the Minutemen. Dixon sees two major question marks in the Maroon and White line up.

Fabian Rabanal, last year's No. 3 or No. 4 player has been out with a bad shoulder. Champeau, who played well this weekend, also suffered an injury.

The UMass squad is still highly favored despite these problems. Greener added, "Since our rival UConn beat Hartford 7-0, we'd like to duplicate that. We expect to work hard and win. This is an senior year and I'd really like to see us do well. I see us as favored going into this match."

Deren named A-10 Player of the Week

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

A telltale sign of a great player is the ability to step up and lead when the team needs it most. Heading into a road game against the Siena Saints on the 17th of this month, the Massachusetts soccer team stood two games under .500 with a 1-3 record. The leadership and the spark they needed came in the person of sophomore striker Jeff Deren, the recently anointed Atlantic-10 player of the week.

Deren came up big in the Siena game notching the game-winner with a volley off a far-post run. The super sophomore did himself one better in the New Hampshire match on Wednesday of that week. 15 minutes into the second half he buried his second game-winning goal in as many contests. Deren was in the right place at the right time with 25 minutes left to play as he gave UMass all the insurance they needed with his third goal in two games. The "Young Gun" followed the effort against UNH by accounting for all the Maroon and White offense in a 2-0 shutout win over the Bearcats from Binghamton.

With five goals in four games the Atlantic-10 Player of the Week led UMass above .500 for the first time all season. Deren and the Minutemen now take a 4-3-1 record into the conference schedule starting Friday against St. Bonaventure.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jeff Deren was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for the first time.

U.S. baseball returns to glory as Lasorda patrols dugout

Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the fourth installment of a seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000.

He's traded in Dodger blue for the red, white and blue.

And this Wednesday, when Hall of Fame manager Tommy Lasorda attempts to coach the U.S. baseball team to its first team championship title, he could add Olympic gold to his resume.

Now 73, the man who was a national icon for 20 years, leading Los Angeles to two World titles, four National League pennants, and eight division titles, built his career on the power of inspiration and the mastery of motivation. If anyone knows how to coach a team to glory, it's Tommy.

Perhaps no one said it better than Hall of Fame second baseman Joe Morgan when he quipped, "Just watch. Before he is done with these kids, Lasorda will have them believing they are the 1927 Yankees."

Murderers Row? That may be pushing it just a tad, but this team has surpassed all expectations and looks to improve on the best finish for an American team in the Olympics, which was a bronze in 1996. Brimming with talent but filled with 28-"no-names," the most recognizable player on the roster is 37 year-old Pat Borders, 1992 World Series MVP for the Toronto Blue Jays. Borders is now a minor league catcher with the Tampa Bay Devil Rays. The other players are all minor-league prospects or former major leaguers, banished to the minors like Borders. But they possess more self-confidence, a potent offense and efficient pitching that could lead them all the way to the big show.

Lasorda may have worked his magic to lead this team to a 6-1 record, but it is essential to point out that this is the first Olympics to allow pro players to compete in the tournament. This is the first American team to be composed of all pro players in this instance; all minor league-since Olympic baseball was upgraded from a demonstration sport in 1992. The decision by Major League Baseball to keep the season intact and not send its top players to represent the U.S. has in retrospect, worked out more than adequately. MLB chose the Olympic team from its minor league system and unanimously picked the world renowned Lasorda as head coach.

Beginning the tournament with a 4-2 win over Japan in 13 innings, the longest game in Olympic history, the Americans went on to win the next four games over South Africa, the Netherlands, South Korea and Italy. They eliminated Australia 12-1 on Sunday to advance to the semifinals, which will be contested against South Korea (4-3) on Tuesday. The game should be an exciting rematch. Last Wednesday, the U.S. and South Korea were locked in a scoreless tie until American first baseman Doug Mientkiewicz's eighth inning grand slam that gave the U.S. the victory, 4-0. The winner on Tuesday will advance to Wednesday's gold medal final against either two-time Olympic champion Cuba (6-1) or Japan (4-3).

The U.S. suffered its sole defeat at the hands of the Cubans on Saturday, 6-1, a significant and ugly loss for two reasons. First, a rematch would give the victors the gold. And second, in the last two Olympics and in last year's Pan American Games, the meetings between the two teams were overshadowed by politics, mainly because so many Cuban players have defected to the U.S. to play in the major leagues. The fear in Cuba of more defections is reported to be so great that the Cubans left several of their best players at home.

In fact, Saturday's game was marred by several ill-natured incidents, including a bench-clearing moment in the fourth inning when the Americans' best hitter, outfielder Ernie Young, showed Cuban catcher Ariel Pestano after he was hit by a pitch by Jose Ibar, who up to that point, had a no-hitter, and a 4-0 lead. Pestano had to be restrained by the home plate umpire, and both teams were warned after exchanging words. In the bottom of the inning, Mientkiewicz blocked Miguel Caldes, diving at the Cuban's legs, as he reached first base on a slow roller from third that couldn't be fielded. The game was delayed as Caldes was treated for a leg injury. And then in the eighth inning, Cuban Yobal Duenas intentionally slid high and hard into Borders at the plate, spiking the catcher with his cleats and drawing protests from the American bench.

The message sent was clear: Cuba is not going down without a fight. The Olympic champs scored four runs in the bottom of the first off of veteran lefthander Rick Krivda, and tacked on two more, before Krivda was replaced by reliever Jon Rauch. Ibar struck out eight in seven innings, and U.S. batters struck out 14 times in all. If the two teams meet again for the final, an American win would be a major upset. Desire and faith will not be sufficient-the U.S. will have to play with all the dexterity and performance they can muster.

Turn to OLYMPICS, page 7

UMass takes three from Boston foes

Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Correspondent

There are certain qualities that define great teams. One such quality is the ability to make up for a missing player, especially a star player. No. 12 UMass men's water polo team was tested for possession of this quality when leading goal-scorer Adam Moore was unable to play in the CWPA tournament this weekend due to an illness. They passed the test with flying colors winning all three games in Cambridge, MA against Boston College, MIT, and Harvard.

In order to counteract the loss of Moore the team focused on taking an early lead and establishing momentum. "We talk about that before a lot of our games," Greg Trayer said. "We make it a point to come out strong in the first quarter. We don't want them to think they can play with us."

Junior co-captain J.R. VanderWall knew the team needed to pick up the slack and make up for the absence of the junior that scored 6 goals in last week's two games.

"We were down a couple of players and it was Mike Foley's first game since his preseason hand injury," VanderWall said.

Mike Foley's return and utter domination made the absence of Moore easier to swallow. The junior had an astonishing 13 goals in this weekend's three victories, 11 of them in two games.

"Mike played like the old Mike," VanderWall said. "He really stepped up."

Senior Brook O'Neill tossed in seven goals with juniors Trayer, Carlos Ramos, and sophomore Chad Arnold adding six goals each. VanderWall continued his dominance in the net; recording 19 saves in just two games.

With the weekend sweep, UMass improved to 10-2 overall on the season, and 3-0 in the CWPA. UMass extended their winning streak to nine.

The first game of the weekend pitted the Minutemen against Boston College. The Maroon and White jumped out to a 5-1 lead over the Eagles in the first quarter and never looked back, holding onto the lead for an eventual final score of 15-7. Chad Arnold led the way with five goals and was complimented by a pair of goals from Foley, junior Evan Lutz, O'Neill, and junior Ramos. Freshman Rodrigo Gonzalez was in the net and played well, racking up 13 saves in the victory.

Coach Russ Yarworth looked at the second game against MIT as a warm-up for that evening's matchup against No. 20 Harvard.

"(Coach) Russ (Yarworth) wanted us to play tough against MIT to get ready for a tough Harvard game," Greg Trayer said. "We had a really good game."

UMass had a dominating performance, overwhelming MIT by the score of 21-5. UMass again jumped out to a big 6-0 lead against MIT and didn't let up, posting an impressive 8 goals in the 2nd quarter alone, making the score 14-1 by the half. The Minutemen posted seven more goals in the second half and allowed only four as they beat up on MIT for the full four quarters.

Mike Foley led the way with five goals, Greg Trayer chipped in with four goals and Carlos Ramos had three goals. VanderWall anchored the defense with nine saves and Rodrigo Gonzalez made two saves in relief of VanderWall.

In the final game of the weekend, the Minutemen took on the Harvard Crimson and were able to jump out to a quick 3-1 lead after the first quarter and extended it to 7-3 by halftime. After three quarters of play, the Maroon and White had pulled away to a big 12-5 lead and had the game well in hand.

"We got out to that big lead," Trayer said, "but we let them back in the game, maybe we were tired (from the last two games)."

Harvard was able to put up three goals to UMass' one in the final frame to make the final score 13-8. Mike Foley again led the way with six goals and was complimented by a pair of scores from Brook O'Neill. J.R. VanderWall turned in another terrific performance on defense, making 10 saves in the net.

The Minutemen showed this weekend that they possess one of the vital qualities of a great team. As the weeks have passes, more and more of the team's qualities are being brought to the forefront. With nine straight wins and some dominating performances by key players, the team is gaining the confidence needed to move even farther up the national polls to number one.

"We have all the pieces of the puzzle. We just have to put it together. If we (do), we're going to surprise some people," VanderWall said.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 16 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, September 27, 2000

Cameron Crowe makes a successful return to the big screen with the warm-hearted rock and roll tale, Almost Famous. Check out our review.

ARTS p. 6

Janeen DeMarte and the UMass volleyball team host URI in their Amherst debut today at 7 p.m.

SPORTS, p. 12

Retail Rally

Protestors gather locally, think globally

Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

Globalization opponents rallied at the Hadley Wal-Mart last night to show solidarity with protests against the World Bank in Prague, Czech Republic, and focus attention on the local impact of globalization.

Western Massachusetts Global Action Coalition (WMGAC) led about 300 activists, including local labor unions and student groups in an hour and a half protest outside of Wal-Mart.

Stephanie Luce, assistant professor at the University of Massachusetts Labor Center, led the rally and introduced speakers representing various local organizations.

"You've heard the saying think globally and act locally," said Luce. "And now in solidarity with our comrades in Prague we are acting globally together to change things locally."

Despite rainy conditions and a smaller turnout than the expected 500-1000 protesters, the rally was well organized and peaceful. The Hadley police department monitored the protest but had not expected any problems.

Frank Gentile, president of Teamsters Local 404, opened the rally on behalf of organized labor.

"We're here to bring justice to the workplace, not just at Wal-Mart, but in all businesses, and to protest the sweatshops of corporate greed," said Gentile.

Father Bruce Teague, of St. Brigid's Church in Amherst, was present at the rally as an observer to help mediate possible conflicts. Teague called for the recognition of all oppressed peoples around the world.

"Let's take a moment to remember all those who suffer in the world, in sweatshops, or in our prisons, over two million people, and the homeless people on the street," said Teague.

One of the speakers, Martina Robinson, a UMass graduate student in community health information, accused Wal-Mart of supporting sheltered sweatshops in the US that exploit disabled workers.

"In addition to exploiting people in sweatshops, Wal-Mart also exploits disabled people," said Robinson. "In the United States, there is a form of legal sweatshop called sheltered sweatshops. People with severe disabilities who cannot be part of the workforce are blackmailed into working for subsistence wages, 5-35 percent of minimum wage, without benefits."

"The corporations get a write-off," said Robinson, "There is no sick leave, no vacation leave and no maternity time. I'm here in solidarity with the half million workers in sheltered sweatshops."

Michael Burns, graduate student at the UMass Labor Center and spokesperson for the United Students Against Sweatshops (USAS), spoke on his experience visiting sweatshops in Indonesia.

"I got to see first hand what free markets are capable of doing," said Burns, who visited workers for Nike, Adidas, Jansport and Eastpak, as well as manufacturers of UMass apparel.

"There was nothing positive to see," said Burns. "Places like Wal-Mart create a lot of jobs in Indonesia, but they're slave wage jobs. Workers are treated like animals. Their excuse is to develop democracy and help the economy, but this only helps Wal-Mart."

Quoting Malcolm X, Burns said that the new global economy represents the same relationship between imperialism and colonialism. "Instead of colonies," said Burns, "now we have free trade zones."

"They don't understand the dedication involved," said Burns. "They think we're just kids and we'll drop this stuff. But as long as there are companies like Nike and Wal-Mart, we will be out here to protest."

Mayor Hamilton, UMass junior in social thought and political economy, helped organize the rally as a member of MassAction. Hamilton said that localizing the anti-globalization movement is the next step for activists.

"I'm here primarily to start localizing the movement against global capital," said Hamilton. "Instead of putting these huge one day protests together like in Seattle and now in Prague, it is more important to bring this movement to the next step and really start bringing this home and making a connection between the people in the community, organized labor, and students."

"I think the only way things can really change is if people can connect and communicate and begin to really establish connections with each other and create a climate for change," said Hamilton. "Every time you get a small community, and people start getting together and organizing, just multiply that by a hundred or a thousand and you get this movement starting all over the world."

The rally culminated with a march in front of Wal-Mart under the watchful eyes of the Hadley Police Department, complete with chants of solidarity and resistance to globalization.

The procession of protesters marched to the popular chant "There ain't no power like the power of the people cause the power of the people don't stop." handing out leaflets to Wal-Mart shoppers. Protesters waved flags of global solidarity with slogans like "Human Need, Not Corporate Greed."

Charlie Hedden, Wal-Mart store manager refused to comment on the protests.

Protests in Prague yesterday erupted into violence after 20,000 protesters briefly shut down the World Bank and IMF semi-annual meeting. According to Reuters, Czech police used tear gas, riot grenades and fire hoses to displace

About 300 protestors braved a chilly rain to protest the effects of globalazation at the Hadley Wal-Mart yesterday evening. Similar protests aimed against the World Bank have recently occured in Prague.

Turn to PROTEST page 2

UMass dining services spices up Worcester dining hall

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Imagine the "Taste of the University of Massachusetts" in all campus dinning halls, all the time. Stations of different foods. All cooked fresh and hot. As of tomorrow this picture will become a reality, for one on campus dining facility. The Worcester Hillside dinning commons becomes the first to open it's new and highly unique facility.

"We have various marketplace concepts. When you go inside, we have several new concepts like the grill, potato bar, "fun" bar…chicken wings, chicken fingers, entree bar, pizza bar, pasta bar," said Ken Toong, Director of Dining and Retail Food Services. "What makes it different is that instead of one line, each station is a format and each format is self-contained."

The dining hall will be set up like a food court with stations ranging from Chinese display cooking to a chef carving station to old traditional salad bar with 40 items.

With much time and money involved in this new renovation, hopes for the future are high, as UMass looks on to improve the rest of the dining facilities in the future.

"Our plan is to renovate each dining hall like Worcester Hillside. It will take lots of planning and capital, so Worcester is really a new concept for UMass student," said Toong.

However, along with this new dining commons comes a few changes. One of those would be seating.

"One major difference is the seating area. The seating area should be a little smaller, but it shouldn't be a problem. If there's an overflow, Basics will pick it up, and people can their to sit down and eat," stated Toong.

However, to compensate for reduced seating, students will get their meals fresh and hot. The food court model is also intended to cut down waiting in line and having to question how long food has been sitting in the assigned trays.

"You always go for the hot line. Here, if [you] don't feel like [you] want a hot entree, you can go to the pasta or potato bar or pick up macaroni and cheese and lasagna…all of it made in front of you. So this way you don't have to depend on the line. Each line is a hot line. If you don't like the meatloaf, where can you go? You can go to the Chinese food line…pizza food line…prime steak rib line…etc."

Another new aspect to the dining commons, besides the fact that it offers you a wide variety of food, is the fact that it now offers a wide variety of desserts. With a retail fare style accompanying the new dining commons, this new aspect of dessert will replace the cups of pudding usually placed out for students.

"We have lots of varieties of delicious desserts. Everything we do is like a retail flare. We'll have lots of traditional cakes. Now, it's all retail… you can pick the piece of the cake that you want and there will be lots of different cakes to choose from."

Toong also explained that changes are being made to benefit the staff as well.

"Something else that's very exciting about this is the fact that the staff will be in new uniforms and people will be wearing chef hats. A lot more customer service will be involved, because you will see how the food is prepared because it's in front of you."

"Our focus is on freshness…everything will be made 'just in time' for you," said Toong.

The Worcester Hillside opens its doors to students tomorrow evening from 4:30 to 7 p.m.

Property damage keeps police busy

By Melissa Hammel and Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

The beginning of the semester has proven to be a busy time for the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

On Monday, two visitors to UMass were apprehended by the UMPD on Webster Dormitory at 11:30 p.m. Ben Silva, 18, of Falmouth and Phineas Heywood, 19, of East Falmouth entered the dormitory and were reported-ly creating a disturbance on the third floor claiming that they had, "knives and guns."

A resident assistant in the building made the call to the police, and the two were apprehended outside the building. Silva was arrested and charged with possession of a Class D substance, while Heywood was apprehended for possession of alcohol by a minor, furnishing a false name, and for a previous outstanding warrant. Police reports indicate that both suspects were intoxicated at the time of the arrest.

Grant Dooley, a 21-year-old UMass student from Pittsfield, was arrested on the charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest on Sunday at 4:30 a.m. According to Jim Lyons, the spokesman for the UMPD, the initial call to the police was regarding an assault with a knife involved.

Lyons explained that when the police arrived at the scene there was no evidence of a knife but that Dooley failed to cooperate with the officers on the scene.

"While the investigation was going on, Grant Dooley was agitated," he said. "He got in the officer's face, and was arrested for refusing to obey him."

The alleged victim pressed no charges.

The police received a call on Sunday for annoying behavior. Lyons explained that the officers were called to the Native American Pow Wow after a neighbor complained that his chair had been stolen and fence had been damaged.

Officers apprehended Owen Szabo, 20, of Needham after the neighbor who made the call positively identified him.

"When the police approached him, Szabo was still holding the chair," he said.

Lyons commented that the suspect seemed to be intoxicated, and was demanding that the police stop "treating him like a criminal." He was arrested for larceny under $250, destruction of property, and disorderly conduct.

On Sunday, five witnesses flagged down an on-duty officer after they witnessed vandalism on a motor vehicle in Lot 33, west of University Drive. Scott Palmer, a 19-year-old Hadley resident, was charged with destruction of property valued over $250, and disorderly conduct.

The car's right passenger's side mirror was broken off and destroyed. The police suspect that alcohol was involved in the incident.

Six cars were discovered vandalized at 4:14 a.m. on Saturday in Lot 33, antennas were bent on all six cars. Police have no leads at this time.

Two laptops, valued at over $2,000 were stolen from a room in Cashin Dormitory at 11:40 p.m.

"The roommate was sleeping the room and could not see or hear anything," Lyons said. "The room was unlocked."

Greeks compete for seats

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Yesterday at the Campus Center polling station, three lists were found containing the names of more than thirty fraternity and sorority members who were candidates for the Student Senate.

Forty-six candidates were on the ballot for thirty-four commuter seats. This is the first time in recent history that there has been any competition for the commuter seats.

The undergraduate student body at the University of Massachusetts is roughly 18,000.

According to Millis Mershon, Office Manager of Greek Affairs, approximately 850 of those 18,000 students, or about 5 percent, belong to fraternities or sororities.

Even if one counts only commuters, Greeks comprise a mere ten percent of the population. And yet seventy-six percent of the Senate commuter candidates were Greek members.

To make quorum, forty-six Senators must be in attendance. It is likely that more than thirty of those could be Greeks.

This situation has raised some questions. Student Trustee Seth Avakian commented on the abundance of Greek candidates.

"A body that is supposed to represent the entire student body that is made up of fifty percent of Greeks . . . would not be a representative body," Avakian said.

Many point to the upcoming Senate vote on Title V, a document that primarily governs Area Governments, as the main incentive for the increased Greek involvement.

Last March, the Student Government Association (SGA) passed Title V, under the condition that it would be reviewed and voted upon again before December 31, 2000.

The new Title V groups Greek Life with Commuters. The old Title V, which had been in operation for six years, classified Greeks and Commuters separately.

Such technicalities may seem trivial, but to those involved in Greek Life, the details are important.

Area Governments receive $3.00 from the SGA for every person in their jurisdiction. This money helps Area Governments hold functions such as Fill the Hill and Bowl Day.

With Greek Life clumped together under the broad category of "commuters," many fear that fraternities and sororities will not receive their proper funding.

Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate, confirms this fear.

"[Greek Life] wants to make sure the funding that is earmarked for Greeks is still there," he said.

Jeff Bazydlo, a candidate whose name appeared on the lists in question, explained why he was running for Senate.

"Greek Area Government was dissolved last year," Bazydlo commented, "[And we] want some sort of leadership back."

Several current SGA members, including Central Area Governor Ken Campbell, praised the Greeks for organizing.

"They recognized there's a problem that needs to be fixed," said Campbell. "I commend them for getting involved."

Eltringham agreed. He said he was glad to see the fraternities, a group that traditionally hasn't been very involved in the SGA, taking an active part in this fall's elections.

"Some people don't want to see [Greeks] getting involved," continued Eltringham. "[But] it's democracy. If you're going to start editing who gets to run and who doesn't get to run. . ."

Chocolate good for you? Recent studies say 'yes'

By Hillary Bentman
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON – Despite Mom's warnings about sweets, recent studies have shown that eating chocolate can actually help fight cardiovascular disease and cancer.

For years, doctors have urged people to eat more fruit and vegetables because they contain significant levels of antioxidants, natural compounds found in the body that ward off oxidation and prevent heart disease. Studies have now revealed that chocolate actually is a high-quality and high-quantity source of antioxidants, topping a list that includes raisins, broccoli and prunes.

Antioxidants are found in fruits and vegetables.

Although chocolate does not appear to be a fruit, it is derived from the cocoa bean, the fruit of the cacao tree.

Chocolate contains flavonoids, an antioxidant that helps protect cholesterol from being oxidized in low-density lipoproteins (LDLs). Lipoproteins are responsible for transporting cholesterol and saturated fats to tissue. High levels of LDLs, which are often called "bad cholesterol," lead to atherosclerosis, or clogged arteries. If substances such as fats and cholesterol clog an artery, blood flow is impaired, often resulting in heart attack or stroke.

Certain vitamins contain flavonoids, but according to Joe Vinson, a professor of chemistry at the University of Scranton, they are not enough to fight oxidation and atherosclerosis.

"Chocolate has the ability, like vitamin E, to bind bad cholesterol and protect it from being oxidized," Vinson said. "Chocolate can actually help out vitamin E and beta carotene, because you can only load up on so much vitamin E and any more won't help."

Funded by the American Cocoa Research Institute, Vinson studied the antioxidant levels of market samples of milk chocolate, dark chocolate and cocoa powder. Vinson tested five samples of each type, but did not know the brand names of the products.

In terms of quantity, cocoa powder contains two times the amount of antioxidants as dark chocolate, and milk chocolate has the least, according to Vinson's study. However, cocoa powder often loses many of its antioxidants after it is diluted with milk, sugar or water to make a cup of hot chocolate.

"The quality of antioxidants in chocolate is extremely good, several times better than vitamins C and E, even by tenfold," Vinson said. "Even though cocoa powder has more antioxidants, dark chocolate has the best quality, followed by cocoa powder and then milk chocolate."

BRIAN MCDONOUGH / Collegian Staff

A protestor at yesterday's rally at the Wal-Mart in Hadley.

■ protest

continued from page 1

the police lines. The meetings continued as scheduled although delegates were trapped from leaving the Pyramid Conference Center for several hours. Demonstrators attacked police barricades with Molotov Cocktails and stones, setting several police on fire. Several dozen protesters and police were injured in the violence, though none hospitalized. Numerous arrests have been made.

Univ. of California system pitches new admissions plan

By Royo Aziz
The California Aggie (U. California-Davis)

(U-WIRE) DAVIS, Calif. – In a move that could increase minority enrollment, University of California President Richard Atkinson announced a new proposal on Thursday that will open UC campus doors for an additional 8.5 percent of California's high school graduates.

Under the proposed Dual Admissions program, this percentage of students would be given admissions somewhere in the UC system, provided they successfully complete first-year and sophomore requirements at a community college.

The plan does not consider race, ethnicity or gender as factors for admission.

"The University of California has always sought creative and innovative ways to increase educational opportunities for the next generation of Californians," Atkinson said in a release. "I believe that more must be done to recognize and reward high-achieving students from all areas and backgrounds across the state."

Under current UC admissions policies, the top 4 percent of graduates from each public high school are admitted, and the top 12.5 percent of graduates statewide are guaranteed admission based on Scholastic Assessment Test scores and grade point averages.

According to the UC Office of the President, the program is "intended to identify high-achieving students from educationally disadvantaged backgrounds."

They also added that the plan does not violate Proposition 209, a California law that bans preferential admissions based on race or ethnicity.

Atkinson's plan has drawn support and criticism from members of the UC Board of Regents.

Regent Ward Connerly – who led the anti-affirmative action movement – has openly stated his reservations about the proposal.

Preliminary estimates by UCOP predicted that between 1,500 to 3,500 additional transfer students will enter the UC system by the 2005-06 school year. These figures, however, "should be reviewed with caution," UCOP stated.

Similarly, preliminary data indicated that 35 percent of students eligible under the plan are underrepresented students.

Atkinson also emphasized the increased involvement with community colleges that the plan calls for.

"This proposed effort will in effect constitute a dual admission program that strengthens our relations with California community colleges and extends the long-term viability of the Master Plan for Higher Education," he stated.

Furthermore, Atkinson expressed the importance of opening access to the UC for underrepresented groups.

"Most importantly, it will send a clear signal to students all over the state, from urban and rural schools, from all ethnic groups and all socioeconomic groups, that they have a clear path to a UC degree."

UC Board of Regents chairperson Sue Johnson supports Atkinson's plan.

"If successful, the dual admission proposal will expand access to UC and increase the number of students prepared to pursue a bachelor's degree at a CSU campus and other four-year independent colleges and universities," she said.

UC officials also anticipate that the recently signed legislation to expand Cal Grant scholarships will alleviate the costs of transferring to the UC.

East Timor tumultous

By Katy LoConte
Collegian Correspondent

East Timor has been devastated, both financially and agriculturally, since being set free from Indonesia last year. The country's battered economy is in desperate need of assistance, and the U.N. has been hard pressed to help this shattered society rebound from the destruction that the militias have caused.

But some help has finally begun arriving in East Timor. Four U.S. ships, the USS Tarawa, Belnoth and Anchorage and the missile-carrier USS Bunker have reached the country's shores with building materials, food and approximately 4,000 soldiers to begin reconstruction.

The fleets were sent not only to help rebuild the country but also to counter the threat of further attacks from the militias. The desolate island is still victimized by acts of violence, despite the assistance. On Sept. 14 in neighboring West Timor, three U.N. aid workers were killed. Gang violence claimed the lives of two U.N. peacekeepers in a separate incident as well.

"We want to provide aid and we don't want anyone getting in our way," said Marine spokesman Lt. Jeff Landis. "Any militia activity that goes on in our presence, we won't tolerate. We will basically get the aid where it needs to go."

Landis went on to explain that US forces in East Timor are authorized to return fire if they are attacked.

But according to professor of Political Science Michael Klare, the amount of aid is too little. Klare, who has been teaching political science to students in the five-college area for 15 years, is not opposed to the help that has been provided thus far. But he contends that instead of just sending soldiers, the US' main goal should be to pay its bills to the United Nations so that the proper level of UN care can be provided to East Timor.

Professor Klare feels the US has an "obligation to get involved" with more non-military assistance.

A simple argument that the non-military assistance recently provided isn't enough can be made by examining the fact that even the aid now sent is endangered by the same militias that initially terrorized the East Timorese. If the help is even getting killed, how much protection can the East Timorese actually be receiving?

The militias that have been torturing East Timor are the same that were opposed to East Timor gaining its independence from Indonesia last year. During that time, these forces acted in a similar manner, rampaging and killing hundreds. They demolished thousands of buildings last year as well, and the violence and turmoil ended only because international peacekeepers got involved.

According to Klare, the U.S. made the difference last year and it is the government's responsibility to once again step in and assist this crippled country in its time of need.

Collegian News.
Snow/Sleet
545-1762.
365

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating costs are recouped by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the Index in 1890, Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a tri-weekly publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bethuerns Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlevsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Serdetchnyh Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kuhnlarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sinaiwski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargarita Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UPC

The University Productions and Concerts, better known as UPC, has been presenting concerts on campus since 1977. UPC is a student run organization designed to enrich campus life by engaging popular musicians to appear in concert. UPC has done a phenominal job in forseeing trends in the music industry and in the musical tastes of the general public.

UPC also began producing an annual Spring Concert 20 years ago. It is free to UMass students and the all-day event draws nearly 10,000 people each year. Last year's concert showcased Methodman & Redman, Long Beach Dub All-Stars, Fuzzbubble, Antigone Rising, Bruce Bass, Beenie Man, Biz Markie, and the winner of the battle of the bands Traveling Matt.

The annual Spring Concert for spring semester 2001 will take place on May 12th.

If interested and would like to become part of the UPC, our first general committee meeting tomorrow September 28th at 7pm in the Commonwealth Room, in the Student Union.

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 52 of 74

Every hooker has a heart of gold, but none of them have herpes.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from directors like Doug Liman (Swingers), and producers like Sherry Gunther (The Simpsons). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment clichés, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it.

nibbl@box.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

© Nibblebox 2000

Oklahoma St. cheerleader found dead

By Cory Aspinwall
Daily O'Collegian (Oklahoma State U.)

(U-WIRE) STILLWATER, Okla. – An Oklahoma State University student and member of the cheerleading squad died Saturday morning, shortly before he would have cheered at the Cowboys' football game against the University of Southern Mississippi that evening.

Jimmy Smith, nutritional sciences senior from Cedar Hills, Texas, was found unconscious in his apartment in the Ambassador One complex on North Perkins Road early Saturday.

Smith's roommate, Brandon Norman, said he found Smith lying in the bathroom of their apartment shortly after 3 a.m. on Saturday.

"It was the scariest thing I've ever seen," said Norman, leisure management junior and fellow member of OSU's cheerleading squad. "I searched for his pulse and couldn't find it — it's a picture I just wish I could get out of my head."

Friends said Smith had attended a date party with his girlfriend on Friday evening.

Nick Trougakos, OSU journalism and broadcasting senior, teammate and longtime friend of Smith's who also lives in the Ambassador One apartment complex, said he saw Smith "only about an hour or so" before Norman found him unconscious.

"He wasn't drunk or sick or angry — I just don't understand," Trougakos said. "I really hope we find out what happened."

Norman dialed 911 after finding Smith. Police and a medical emergency crew arrived at the apartment to investigate the call.

"They started CPR and then took him to Stillwater Medical Center, and then he was life-flighted to St. Francis in Tulsa and put on life support," Trougakos said.

Friends and family gathered Saturday at the Tulsa hospital and hoped for good news.

"All the doctors could tell us was that he had a super-high concentration of carbon dioxide in his blood," Trougakos said.

"Around noon on Saturday, the doctors told us their was no hope and they kept him on life support only until his family could see him."

Friends said Smith had asthma, but no one was sure if that could be related to his death.

Stillwater Police officials could not be reached for comment Sunday evening. A spokeswoman for St. Francis Hospital in Tulsa confirmed that Smith was treated until his death at the hospital Saturday.

To those who knew him, Smith was more than just a likable guy.

"He was the kind of guy who — if he had to buy a birthday present and an inhaler for his asthma, but he only had enough money for one — he'd buy the present," Trougakos said.

He and Smith had cheered together since 1997, when both were roommates and freshmen at Texas Trinity Valley Community College. They were on the cheerleading squad there together and transferred to OSU at the same time.

"He was my best friend," Trougakos said. "He tried to make everybody happy and always looked out for everyone. He left a mark on everyone he was involved with."

Smith had hoped to work in the fitness and nutrition industry after graduating, friends said.

"When I think about Jimmy, all I can do is laugh," Norman said. "He was the nicest guy in the whole world.

"He loved helping people. It hurt him to see other people in trouble. He was one of those guys you don't find every day, that's for sure. He loved everybody."

Before the start of Saturday's football game, officials asked the crowd to observe a moment of silence in honor of Smith.

Services for Smith will be 10 a.m. Wednesday at Sunnybrook Christian Church, 421 E. Richmond Road.

If you make sense, you'll get cents

By Joe Sasanuma
The Heights (Boston College)

(U-WIRE) CHESTNUT HILL, Mass. – Say you like to write. Say you love to write. In fact, your dream is to be the next Rick Reilly, the columnist on the back page of every issue of Sports Illustrated. The only problem is that you are a full-time student at Boston College, a pre-med with a double major in math and biology and a minor in physics (is that possible?).

Writing may by your passion, but you just don't have the time or the experience to skillfully and consistently write letters to the editors, much less articles for The Heights. But passion, any passion, should not be neglected. So what do you do?

The solution: the Internet. A relatively new Web site called Themestream (www.themestream.com) is dedicated to creating a site for passionate writers, experienced or amateur, to write and have their articles published. Even more, you can get paid to do this.

Get paid?

Themestream explains itself as a central source of information on your personal interests, from aromatherapy to Zinfandel wines. With more than 1,700 topics categorized in a Yahoo! search engine style, there is certain to be a particular category into which your articles will fall. Because this site does not hire you as a writer, you are free to write about anything, at any time. If you like the idea of writing on one specific topic every week, there is an option to start a column.

If you choose to do this, Themestream does ask that you to commit yourself every week, although they have no way of enforcing it. The articles you write will remain your copyright, not Themestream's, unlike other sites. This will allow you to have the articles you write for Themestream published elsewhere should such an occasion arise. It also means that Themestream cannot secretly profit from publishing your article elsewhere without your knowledge.

As you may expect, a start-up Internet site dedicated to creating a place for capricious writers will not consistently pay you a high "salary." This does not mean, however that you will not be able to make any significant salary by writing for Themestream. The pay system is based on how many unique hits your article receives. In other words, the amount of hits from different computers determines your paycheck.

They pay two pennies a more two cents, for each hit. Under this system, 50 hits will give you a dollar, 100 hits, two dollars and so on. To earn $10 dollars, you need 500 hits. It isn't much, but it can pile up. It will be possible to make $20 on an article you may have spent only one hour writing.

Unfortunately, there is no universal "trick" it varies from article to article. The key to making money at Themestream is to get exposure. The most important thing you must remember when writing articles for Themestream is to make a catchy title. Calling your article "A Discourse on Investing" is probably not a good idea.

You must also publicize the content of your articles outside of Themestream, because, quite frankly, this site does not have enough traffic for you to earn even one dollar. Directing traffic is difficult, but once you find a location where you can post a link to your article, the amount of hits will amaze you.

For example, if you write an article on a particular stock, you can post a link on a Yahoo! finance message board. If you write an article on Macs, look for sites which publish links related to Macs, like Macsurfer (www.macsurfer.com).

Once your readers have become familiar to you and your articles, they have an option to "subscribe" to articles. With this option, the reader will be notified when you publish a new article and when a new article is published in a certain category. In fact, as a writer, you may want to subscribe to a category for which you write in order to see what others are writing about.

There are, of course, numerous things you wish were better once you begin to write for Themestream.

Beside the pains of constantly trying to draw traffic, the options for what you can do with your articles are limited. You can post an image in your article to make it more attractive, but it is difficult to post a hypertext link within the article. If a reader wants to post feedback at the bottom of the page, Themestream forces them to either log in or register for Themestream. This will undoubtedly annoy your audience.

Nevertheless, you have nothing to lose if you want a great opportunity to write while earning money. The registration to become an author is surprisingly easy. Simply go to www.themestream.com and click on the "Publish Today" link at the top right-hand corner. You will be asked to fill in some personal information and your address so the site knows where you check. The check is sent four times a year, but you must have at least $25 in your account. If not, your payments will be withheld until your account reaches $25.

Now Open! Come visit us!!!
americanatextbooks.com
"Where you don't stand in line for BIG DISCOUNTS!!!"

Styles by Deborah proudly announces
New Spa Services featuring All Natural Skin Care Products
- ❑ Luxury Facials
- ❑ Spa Pedicures
- ❑ Body Waxing
- ❑ Manicures

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

Attention All New Students:

For your convenience
Meningitis Vaccine Clinic
University Health Services
Tuesday, October 3, 2000
Tuesday, October 10, 2000

Students under the age of 30 who would like to receive the vaccine should call the University Health Services at 577-5101 and ask for an appointment with the Meningitis Clinic. The cost of immunization is $75. Cash, check or credit card accepted. For additional information, call the Public Health Line at 577-5041.

ARE YOU THE FUNNIEST STUDENT ON CAMPUS?

PROVE IT AT

PERFORM YOUR BEST:
- STAND UP
- JOKES
- SKETCH

ENTER & WIN!
You could win a chance to go on tour with
JEANEANE GAROFALO & FRIENDS!

FREE

HOSTED BY ANDY DICK
as seen on NewsRadio
FEATURING THE COMEDY OF
RALPH HARRIS
as seen on Seinfeld, The Tonight Show & The Jon Stewart Show

UMASS AMHERST
FINE ARTS CENTER
CONCERT HALL
8:00PM
TUESDAY, OCT. 3RD

TO REGISTER: CALL WENDY ZHU AT 413-545-1278 OR 1-800-843-2536 TO COMPETE IN THE BAKE OFF OR STOP BY THE iCAST TENT AT THE UNIVERSITY LAWN OCT. 3RD
CHECK OUT ALL THE ACTION INCLUDING THE ONLINE COMIC STRIP, ANIMATION & SHORT FILM CONTESTS AT COMEDY.iCAST.COM

VOTE FOR YOUR FAVORITE AT I.CAST.COM

Cool Mint LISTERINE POCKETPAKS
salonselectives see it. do it.
HYUNDAI

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

SGA election questions
Tarnish student senate

Yesterday's Student Government Association elections could have been a great thing and may still turn out to be. Unfortunately, as tends to always be the case in SGA matters, questions have arisen about the quality of the election.

Even before the constant hope that enough voters turnout to make the elections official (and it should be noted that preliminary guesses had the turnout at enough to count), the elections have been called into question; this time because the Greek Area may have left voter guides beside at least one ballot box. Those guides advised individuals to "Vote Greek" and were apparently made to encourage members of the Greek community to elect a majority group in the Student Senate.

There were 34 seats available to Commuter area residents in yesterday's elections. The Greek area had at least that many candidates and possibly more running for election. Because of the typically low voter turnout (candidates being elected by as many as nine votes total), a concerted effort on behalf of Greeks to get out the vote could easily win all 34 seats.

Quorum for the Senate has been estimated to be 46 seats this year; all 34 Greek senators showing up could, quite easily, control the Senate anyway they wanted to.

They shouldn't be faulted for possessing such an idea as controlling the Senate; the problem comes in the possibility that voter guides were left to intentionally influence how students were voting. They could have been left accidentally, but the real question is their placement on the tables at all.

Voter guides given to interested voters are one thing; voter guides on tables for people to consult when voting is something else all together. The presence of the guides needs to be investigated, as the election, partially rigged or otherwise, can affect the Senate in various serious ways.

At least one senator worried off the record that the Greek representatives would resign after passing Title V, a provision giving them an area government. If the entire Greek area was simply elected to pass that one piece of legislation and then stepped down, the Senate would fall well past its usual state of absolute chaos.

And while the power of the Student Government Association has always been an issue for debate, a weakened Senate that represented perhaps half of all students would be a downright embarrassment. Considering that the government represents so few students as it is, and taking into account how much infighting goes on within the organization, the last thing that the organization needs is a Senate without commuter representation.

Thus, the Collegian feels that there are only two acceptable solutions: a full investigation occurs into the possibility of wrong-doing by those involved or the Senate finds someway to ensure that, should there be a massive departure by Greek representatives who have passed their piece of legislation, a stopgap can be found to keep commuter residents represented in the student body.

Ideally, all elected Senators stay with the SGA, through good and bad, until the end of the semester, but that some senators are already afraid of a mass departure is indicative of the possibility of worse problems. That's the last thing the SGA needs.

Growing up is hard to do

DANA OPPEDISANO

Damn, I'm getting old. I am a junior in college now. On September 6, when I sat down in my 12:20 class, I became officially closer to the end of my collegiate career than the beginning. In about three months, I will be able to obtain alcoholic beverages without the gracious services of another party. Now that's scary. On top of that, I am just beginning to understand why people have been making those faces all these years when I tell them that I am a journalism and English major.

Now, anyone who has ever read my column knows that I need all the help I can get, but I am honestly writing close to ten papers a week now. I have to be responsible, I am paying all sorts of bills, it's like I'm an adult all of a sudden. Well, at least nobody's calling me "dad" yet. Although since I never have been responsible, maybe somewhere ...oh God, forget it.

Anyway, since my childhood is apparently on its deathbed, I've been spending a lot of time thinking, and in many ways trying to reclaim my youth lately. Basically, I've been wasting a lot of my free time playing video games, watching cartoons, and eating junk food (Okay, so it's not that much of a stretch, but I'm trying). In the process, I have made the observation that kids of today (when I'm supposedly an adult) are in dire need of some better "kid stuff." Of course, I'm biased, and it's true that I haven't spent much time with any eight-year-olds lately, but honestly, how much better did we have it when we were kids? I realize that maybe I have matured a little over the years, and perhaps the whole nostalgia factor is influencing my opinion, but come on- what are most of these kids thinking these days?

My first beef is with this totally overhyped, overrated, and overly stupid-looking Pokemon cartoon. Okay, I will admit it; I am a Pokemon virgin. I have never had the time, nor the patience to sit through a Pokemon cartoon for longer than 37 seconds. However, it is to my understanding that some kid named Ash Ketchup (or something like that) captures and trains these cute and cuddly animals...who apparently aren't so cute and cuddly after all. Now, it goes without saying that the single most important characteristic of any action cartoon is its main character's ability to whup some ass. Therefore, it's your superhero's appearance and persona that means everything. I mean do the Pokemon animals even talk? And as far as appearances go, I've seen scarier stuff in the 3rd floor bathroom on Saturday mornings.

Does anyone remember the ThunderCats or He-Man? Now those are superheroes. Every ThunderCat brought something cool to the table: Lion-o was the leader and master of the Sword of Omens (Although he did talk like kind of a cornball). Panthro was the technical genius, and he brought some much-needed street credibility to the gang ("Dag Lion-o, Mumm-Ra be trippin' again!"). Tigra was the architect who constructed their lair, and he was hittin' Cheetara! She was so hot with her gymnast stance and that little leotard she wore. What could you say about Mumm-Ra, the ThunderCats' archenemy? He was pretty resilient, considering that he consistently failed at his attempts to capture the ThunderCats and the Sword of Omens. He was also quite modest, as well. I mean, you ever see how ripped the guy was under those old rags he always wore? Jeez, even Snarf looked cooler than most Pokemon critters.

Do you know what my favorite food to eat while I was watching cartoons was? Cereal. Cereal for breakfast, lunch, and dinner, cereal for a snack, cereal 18 times a day! I was elbow-deep looking for the decoder ring at the bottom of the box, and the more sugar the better. My absolute favorite cereal of all-time is Frankenberry. Do you think most kids today have ever heard of Frankenberry? Right now you should all be saying, "oh yeah...what ever happened to Frankenberry?" Well, I'll tell you what happened -- the dopes at General Mills decided to push Count Chocula as the premier monster cereal and totally dissed Frank and BooBerry. Supposedly, you can still find Frankenberry at some supermarkets, the closest of which being a Shop n' Save in East Bum, Alaska. (Luckily though, the only supermarket in the continental U.S. with an endless supply of BooBerry is Big Y on Rte. 9) So why push Count Chocula, anyway? Let's listen in:

General Mills Executive #1: "What are we going to do about the monster cereals? Three is a bit much, don't you think?"

G.M. Exec #2: "Well, if you've got to go with one, it's gotta be Chocula. No one's really conquered the chocolate cereal market yet."

Exec. #1: "My god, you're right! That explains why Cocoa Puffs, Cocoa Crispies, Oreo-O's, Cocoa Pebbles, Cocoa Frosted Flakes, Reeses' Peanut Butter and Chocolate Puffs, and Cookie Crisp are doing so well!"

Exec#2: "And, get this - it turns your otherwise regular old white milk into...CHOCOLATE!?!"

I realize that I am just overly stressed right now, but I'm serious here. I really do wish that I could go back to when the ThunderCats weren't only on at 4 am on Cartoon Network, when Def Leppard was the absolute coolest band on Earth, and when the topic of my next paper was "What I Want to be When I Grow Up." Oh well, at least now I'm old enough to stay up and catch those late-night reruns, and in three months, I can get pretty blasted in the process.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian Columnist

It's a random world

KRISTI CECCAROSSI

I hate the word random.

I know what you're thinking. How random. A column about someone who hates the word random. Where the hell did that come from?

Well, what can I say? I'm random like that.

More than I hate word random, I hate people who refer to themselves as random.

"And I just started talking about how frequently bonobo monkeys mate. I guess it's because I'm random."

"I'm so random. Yesterday I decided to go to 11 Mass and buy a pair of slippers."

Now that's not random. That's just plain obnoxious.

I realize I'm being unclear. I'm only giving you random examples of how people abuse the word random. I'm not really getting into the history of my problem. Which, when I think about it, is kind of random.

It started during my junior year of high school in my creative writing class. A balanced group of students who wanted to write well and students who didn't care at all, students who were under the misconception that they could write, others who didn't realize the scope of their genius at 16. You can guess where I fit in.

Rachel. She wasn't a horrible writer. I considered her a friend. That is, until the day she brought in a story for us to workshop about a girl who wore green shoes, mismatched clothing, and had a huge crush on the most popular guy in school. I know, totally random. And by random, I mean completely predictable. Well, if that wasn't enough, Rachel's story was laden with the word random. Her main character wore random shoes. She randomly selected those random shoes. She ate random breakfast cereal. She had random bumper stickers on the station wagon her father randomly gave her. She randomly got a zit the night before her big date, which the guy she liked randomly agreed to go on. You get the idea.

Back in those days I wasn't so against the word. It was just making its appearance on MTV. An episode of "Friends" might have featured Joey getting into some trouble, which Ross would later refer to as "random." I even thought it was a kind of cool and used it, on occasion, like everyone else, for ridiculous generalizations of people, actions, statements or breakfast cereals.

It was like a large group of teenagers who listened to Bush and Nirvana, who wore Dr. Martins, who put red streaks in their hair, and held the belief that they were something socially odd and for that reason special -they formed some kind of cult around this word. It crept into every breath of their being. They couldn't think of any descriptive language, save the occasional wicked or retarded, besides random when talking about anything. They wanted to believe they were random in a word full of well-grounded design.

It was everywhere when I entered my freshman year of college. By then, I was sure there was something fishy about it and didn't like it. It got worse when I was cast in a play and attended the first rehearsal to find the entire cast and crew were random lovers. I actually tried to count how many times the word was used by different people within the two hours I was there. I stopped at 47. I quit the play a week later.

I don't know what to say when my friends direct me to their web sites and they are invariably titled something like Matt's Random Web Site or Mary's House of Randomness. For some reason this has happened a lot. (Hello! Random!) And if they miss random in the title, it will undoubtedly appear in the text: check out these random links! or read my random inspirational quotes!

Now, as you know, it's out of control. I see people walking around campus with T-shirts that simply say RANDOM across the front of them. And people will describe anything as random. "When I was walking in town yesterday I saw this guy standing at the bus stop. He was wearing a purple shirt. Isn't that random?" Or, "I sniffed six valiums over the summer and woke up with this random guy next to me."

I've tried to convey these feelings to friends and usually I come up with nothing. They think I'm just stupidly hung up on what's grammatically wrong with using random. Truthfully, I don't care about that at all. My family is barely literate so I'm used to poor language skills.

But it's a handwagon. It's overdone. I've had traumatic experiences that I associate with the word. It's a fad; as legwarmers were to the 80's, randomness was to the 90's.

It's a dead word. Alternateens have led it to its grave. Let's allow it to rest peacefully.

It makes us linguistic sloths.

I am never compelled to move society towards something better, but I can't help proselytizing when I hear this word. It makes me ill.

For the love of God, would you just stop saying it?!

Woah. How random was that!

Here's a random thought. Whenever you get the urge to say random, take a deep breath and think about how progressive you will be if you would just stop and say arbitrary instead.

Kristi Ceccarossi is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the editor
A few facts, Colombia and soda

To the editor:

On behalf of the Five Colleges Native American Indian Studies Curriculum Committee (NAISCC), I wish to thank the Collegian and reporter Elizabeth Pariseau for her wonderful article on the September21st Native American Forum at Hampshire College. We had a very attentive, standing-room only audience for our guest speakers. Two important corrections to the article need to be noted.

First, the NAISCC did NOT found the Dr. Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center (JWECC). The Center was founded in 1989, and named in memory of Dr. Josephine White Eagle, a member of the Ho-Chunk Nation and a well-respected faculty member in the U Mass School of Education. JWECC offers a cultural and social support system and gathering space for Native American students, faculty and staff throughout the Five Colleges. The Center's web site notes that it also serves as "a cultural diversity awareness resource for the UMASS campus and the Pioneer Valley area." JWECC Director Joyce Vincent offers support and advocacy for Native students regarding work, study, legal rights, and campus life, organizes the annual U Mass Powwow, and acts as a liaison to regional Native communities and university groups that include the NAISCC.

The second correction concerns the description of Chief Thomas Porter, who is NOT the founder of the town of Fonda, New York. While the region is part of traditional Haudenosaunee (Iroquois) territory, the town known as "Fonda" was founded by white settlers who moved into the area in the 1700s. The Mohawk community of Kanatsiohareke happens to be situated within the present-day political boundaries of the New York state town of Fonda. With these two corrections in mind, again, we would like to thank you for your article, and for supporting the efforts of the NAISCC to bring Five College students in contact with regional indigenous speakers-people.

Sincerely,
Marge Bruchac
Marria Carlson
Northeastern Native American Indian Forum Co-ordinators
Five Colleges Native American Indian Studies Curriculum Committee

To whom it may concern:

I read an editorial in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, entitled" Paying for Peace: Big Mistakes in Bogota" last Friday, September 22,2000. It is my opinion that you should read information taken from Reuters more carefully because several things that you are exposing in the editorial are not only wrong, but insulting also. I will enumerate the most obvious blunders:

1.Colombia is spelled with 'o' not 'u', the Columbia you report is either a University in New York City or the epicenter of the United States government.

2.Our current president is not Camilo Gomez, the president of Colombia is Andres Pasirana and Camilo Gomez is the peace negotiator that you refer to.

3.Ernesto Samper was the Colombian president until August 1998, two years ago, not one as you mentioned in the paper.

As you can see, you have made some glaring mistakes in your coverage, mistakes that could have been rectified simply by reading a newspaper. You can only imagine the larger mistakes that you have made in interpreting the present environment in Colombia. I will not talk now about the problems that my country is facing. They are so complex and numerous that we would spend several days in those discussions. However, I would advise that in the future you to be more responsible about the information in your newspaper.

Sincerely,
Cristian Blanco

To the editor:

DO NOT BUY SODA ON CAMPUS! It costs $1.10 in the vending machines, $1.20 at the Blue Wall and $1.25 at the Student Union. Doesn't that speak for itself? In the past, the reason for buying a drink from such places was convenience. Carrying around a soda you bought from Stop & Shop just to save 50 cents wasn't worth it. But how convenient is it to pay $1.10 for a Coke? What do you do with the 90 cents in loose change? I'll tell you one thing you can't do with it is buy another soda.

Did you ever have a lemonade stand as a kid? Well I didn't, but I knew people who did. They had to charge a price that was high enough to give them a profit and low enough so that their costumers would buy it. The same is true with Coke, but just on a larger scale. Their costs are a little more than your lemonade (mostly for the actual bottle) but they are charging a lot more than a dime. But we keep buying it. There are still places where you can get a Coke for 75 cents. With the quarter you save there you could almost make a local phone call, but that's another story. Does that mean they're losing money on those machines? No. It means that is the most efficient price for that area. What does that say about our campus? Are we all so well off that we can afford whatever they decide to charge? I'm not. I'm walking around with an empty pocket and a parched mouth. Maybe it's the U-card's fault. It's like the soda is already paid for. You've got to use that money on something, right? Plus, once you buy it you just put that card away and you don't have to listen to that constant jingling the rest of the day reminding you how much you spent on a drink.

"This is ridiculous, outrageous, a rip off." This is how some of the students describe the prices. So I know I'm not the only one who opposes the price hike. I'm not saying don't drink the stuff. I'm just saying don't buy it on campus. A lot of people are organizing groups to protest against corporations like the Gap and now Wal-Mart. The reasons are good but it isn't easy to get the general public to listen, let alone boycott these places. Just look at Starbucks, it lives on even in Amherst. Part of my point is that our campus would be the perfect place to prove that we have a say in how much we'll pay for a product. I'm not asking for much. I'd settle for it to drop back to a dollar at the vending machines. That was actually kind of convenient, because I still have to deal with change at all. But in the meantime, please don't buy soda on campus. The "every vote counts" theory really applies here. The price jumped up 10% since last year. At that rate, it'll be $1.21 next semester. Dealing with pennies, won't that be nice?

Conzolo Migliozzl
Amherst

Calling all brother and sisters, diversity pages of the verge of extinction

It has been almost year over since I have written a single word for The Collegian. Like any addict, I fiend for my drug of choice-the stress of editing a diversity page. There is nothing fun about chasing down people for articles they have promised me, worrying about meeting a deadline or taking the heat for something controversial that another writer said, but it is worth it. There is a sense of joy when you bring a people together, just once every other week, to think about the issues affecting them.

This is my first time doing the Black Affairs page. I have been asked to do this for the past two years and I have always opted for greener pastures. But all that could change in this semester; this could either be the best semester for this page or the last.

This University is not very culturally diverse. All of the different races exist in a vacuum and separated from each other. We, as African-Americans, need to be connected each other and must gain visibility in the University as a whole. Black Affairs is the ultimate connector for the brothers and sisters to us and everyone else.

I have seen past editors go crazy trying to unite us on writing for this page to no avail. I have made it very easy for anyone who wants to write for this page to be able to. There is an email address (Black Affairs @yahoo.com) to submit articles and ask questions, having offices hours that make me available, and there will be heavy recruitment and promotion throughout the semester.

I promise that I will lead the charge to eliminate this page if our black community turns its back on this page. If you do not want it, we will not have it. I will not disgrace this University's African-Americans by having a Black Affairs page no one cares about. I will pull the plug personally.

Ask Kacey

Dear Kacey,

Just recently I was living with my boyfriend. We was together for almost two years. I came home early one day and found this fool in my senior year because he wanted to throw our relationship away on a white girl. Why do our black men want to crossover to the other side? What's wrong with us black women?
-Miss Dissed

Miss Dissed,

First of all, your man's cheating on you with another women, any woman got nothing to do with you. That is the first thing you need to know: that it's on him; it is his problem and his loss.

For the second part or your question, you obviously have a lot of anger in you. You can't judge a group of Not all black men walk over sisters to get with white women and looking at white women as the enemy is missing the point and will only get you angrier. There are many different reasons for brothers wanting to get with white women. Some are with them because they think it gives them status or power, this is a shame. Some are just attracted to the person inside and look past color.

So go and listen to "Chante's Got A Man" and know a real man is out there somewhere.

Dear Kacey,

I always wanted to write to (an advice column) for help. Let's see what you can do for me. I think my man "Kevin" is talking some stuff behind my back to girls I be trying to get with, trying to block a brother. I know this because (these women) be telling me and he tries to get with them on the down low. We been tight since freshman year but now he's sketchy. What should I do?
-Suspicious in Southwest

Suspicious in Southwest,

There are a few things you should do. Step one-damage control. These girls you like, make sure they know the truth, who you really are. Step two- you need to confront "Kevin." You have to let him know that you have heard people talking. Ask him if it's true and tell him, like a man, you want him to chill with that.

From there you need to decide what this friendship means to. Find out his reasons for putting you out there and go from there.

Please send all "Ask Kacey" submissions to diversity@dailycollegian.com

Census Shows Americans' Incomes Up, Poverty Down

By Melissa Healy
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - Incomes rose across America in 1999 for an unprecedented fifth year and poverty dipped to its lowest level since 1979, the U.S. Census reported Tuesday, underscoring the breadth of the nation's economic prosperity as November's election nears.

Driven by strong economic growth in the South and the Midwest, median household earnings reached $40,800 - the highest level the Census has found since it first began collecting income statistics in 1967.

And poverty rates, driven down in the West and Northeast, fell for all racial and ethnic groups for the first time since the Census began collecting such data in 1969, settling at 11.9 percent overall. The annual Census reports on household income and poverty showed that the incomes of African American and Latino households - with median earnings of $27,910 and $30,735 respectively, were at historic highs. But they remained stubbornly below the $42,504 median income of non-Latino white households. Asian and Pacific Islanders, with a median income of $51,200, saw income growth of 7.4 percent.

Even children, the Americans most likely to live in poverty, saw their economic lot improved in 1999. Some 12.1 million children were poor in 1999, down 1.4 million and two percentage points (to 16.9 percent) from the year before. The poverty rate among the elderly, meanwhile, dropped to an all-time low of 9.7 percent.

President Clinton touted the new statistics as further evidence that Democratic policies have brought boom times to more Americans than ever before.

"This is a good day for America," Clinton told a group of politicians and economists gathered at the White House. "We have proved that we can lift all boats in a modern, global, information-based economy."

Republicans also claimed a share of the credit for prosperity of historic proportions. On Capitol Hill, the Census report was hailed by the GOP authors of the 1996 welfare reform law, which imposed strict new time limits and work requirements on those receiving public assistance.

"These exciting developments are the direct result of the welfare reform law Republicans wrote and finally pushed into law in 1996," said Rep. E. Clay Shaw Jr., R-Fla. Without welfare reform, Shaw said, there would be "more children in poverty and more adults getting a welfare check instead of a paycheck."

But one labor organization said that the latest Census figures reflect a nation of families putting in longer hours as much as it does an era of new job opportunities and wage hikes. "Middle-income households are working more hours than ever to stay ahead," said Lawrence Mishel of the Economic Policy Institute, a labor-backed research organization in Washington.

Between 1989 and 1998, a typical married, middle-income couple with children added 274 hours - about seven weeks - of work a year. About 53 of those extra annual hours were added between 1998 and 1999, helping to drive the median income hikes seen in the Census Report, Mishel contended.

"That's a ton of work and the growth in hours explains most of growth in income over this last decade," he added.

While Tuesday's data suggested that economic well-being has improved across the spectrum of region, ethnicity and age, it highlighted troubling imbalances in two areas: between men and women and between haves and have-nots.

According to the Census, the median income earned by women in the full-time, year-round work force lost ground slightly in 1999, while men's median income grew by 1 percent. That widened an already-yawning earnings gap between women and men. While full-time, year-round working women earned 73.2 cents to every dollar earned by men in 1998, the 1999 figure slipped to 72.2 cents.

Meanwhile, inequities in income remained a strong feature of the American economy. The Census found no significant change in the distribution of income among those up and down the economic ladder - either last year or in the last six years. The poorest 20 percent of Americans still receive 3.6 percent of all income distributed through the U.S. economy in a year. By contrast, the richest 20 percent of Americans receive 49.4 percent - almost half - of all income the economy delivers annually.

Why does the Collegian need diversity pages?

Sina Oluwu
Senior, Computer and System Engineer
Sylvan

"They are needed because we have a lot of diverse RSO's on campus and (the paper) can foster information on their culture...we don't want only one side to be represented."

Chasidy Miller
Freshman, Undeclared
Southwest

"(Diversity pages) are needed so diversity of this school will grow and people need to be aware of the different ethnicities around them."

Alix Lazzari
Junior, English
Southwest

"It let's us know what's going on with other cultures we are familiar with."

Sammatha Singer
Junior, History
Off Campus

"We are a diverse University and we need to encompass every aspect of university life."

Roberto Alejanjro
Freshman, Political Science
Off Campus

"(Diversity pages) are useful because lots of people come here from areas with no diversity."

Tenyka Lassiter
Sophmore, Psychology
Southwest

"The diversity pages provide more knowledge of other cultures to tell about themselves."

PHOTOS BY THEORA GIRCZYC-BEUM

Flava of the Week

L.L. Cool J
G.O.A.T.
Def Jom

For any other rapper, naming an album G.O.A.T. (Greatest Of All Time) would be a shameless display of cockiness, but not for L. L. Cool J. After ten straight platinum albums (and this one will make 11), an MTV Video Vanguard Award, multiple Grammy's, and more hit singles than any other hip-hop artist, James Todd Smith deserves to call himself anything he wants.

"Imagine That" is the CD's first single and sets the tone with this Rock wilder-produced jam that will leave the guys on the dance floor sweaty and the girls pregnant. Uncle L knows the ladies love his cool self and gives them what they expect from him: sex on wax.

"Hello" features Amil at her sexiest and L at his freakiest in this ode to phone sex. The G.O.A.T. acts like Mr. Right in "You and Me" with Kelly Price's smooth voice singing the hook. There is even an untitled bonus track that gives shine to the dark-skinned honeys.

But don't get it twisted; this is L.L.'s first guy-inclusive CD since 1993's ill-conceived 14 Shots to the Dome. "This Is Us" will be an anthem for the fellas but with lyrics like "A man can be a man, but that's only half the scenario/You nagging ass cats you give 'em license to f a hoe," they will not be letting their girlfriends know it.

Getting down and dirty beside DMX, Method Man, and Redman on "Fuhgidaboudit" has L coming as hard as ever with his Def Jam cohorts. While "Back Where I Belong" with Ja Rule has a third verse so ill that it will be the final nail in the coffin of Canibus' career.

In a rare move, "Homicide" has L.L.'s most in-depth social commentary ever with a chorus that starts out with, "I don't mean this in a disrespectful way/But Columbine happens in the ghetto every-day" as he pleas for the media to focus on all deaths, not just those of the white middle-class.

It isn't all good, however. But even filler like the useless "Take It Off" and the mindless "Farmers" are forgivable in the shadow of near-classic tracks like "Ill Bomb" and "Queens Is" with Mobb Deep's Prodigy. This L.L. Cool J's best work since Mama Said Knock You Out. While he may not be the greatest of all time (hello? 2Pac), he is mad close.

Tale of the tape...

Paul Pierce	vs	Made Men
Mr. Kansas Basketball	formerly known as	Almighty RSO
Third-year NBA star	occupation	Three-member Hip Hop group
Up and under jumpshot	weapon of choice	Anything with an edge or a point
1999 Rookie of the Year runner-up	claim to fame	1987 BMA Best Rap Group
Celtic Green, Holy Leather Jacket	usual attire	FUBU, Huge gold "M" medallions
Rookie debut: 19 points, 9 rebounds, 5 assists, 4 blocks on February 5, 1999	greatest FleetCenter moment	Stabbed six people backstage at Rough Riders / Cash Money Millionaires show in April
Majored in Crime and Deliquency Studies at Kansas	schooling	Specialized in crime and delinquency on the streets of Boston
"We'll take on anyone, anywhere. We have no fear.....Alright, maybe we have a little fear."	Notable quote	"When we show up in the club, don't hate 'cuz we straight, and to blow up we won't wait."

Almost Famous golden

Almost Famous
Directed by Cameron Crowe with Patrick Fugit, Kate Hudson, Billy Crudup
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By Adam Mortgnetti
Collegian Staff

In the cannon of films director Cameron Crowe (Say Anything, Jerry Maguire) seems compelled by the idea of digging beneath a surface level of perfection and uncovering complicating characters with human stories. That is to say, perfection reveals a construct of perception. What makes Crowe unique (special (and in my opinion, such an excellent) director is his ability to deflower human perfection, while still finding the capacity for human greatness underneath.

Crowe's latest film, Almost Famous, shifts his focus somewhat from one particular character to an era – the era of rock and roll. Almost Famous is a semi-autobiographical tale of Crowe's early days writing for the then unknown, "underground" magazine, Rolling Stone.

It's most coincidentally the end of a decade and William Miller (Patrick Fugit) is a special child. He's already skipped two grades and is the pride of his mother.

Frances McDormand does her usual magnificent job portraying the '60s flower child turned single mother and college professor. Her contempt of society in general and rock music in particular are endearing, flowing out of a genuine, if not overbearing concern for her children's well-being.

His daughter doesn't see it this way, and bolts, taking only to leave William her smuggled collection of rock records before going. One listen to The Who's Tommy and young William is hooked.

Four years later, William is an aspiring rock journalist writing occasionally for the music journal Creem. Its editor and his mentor Lester Bangs (another layered, genuine performance from Phillip Seymour Hoffman) gives William his big break: an assignment to cover Black Sabbath.

As fate would have it William never makes it through the door that night. Rather, he meets the two people that will come to dominate the story and his life over the course of the following months. More accurately, he falls in love with them – one platonically, the other sexually. Russell Hammond (Billy Crudup) is the lead guitarist for Stillwater (read Allman Brothers Band here) who is taken in as much by William's wide-eyed eagerness as by his musical knowledge. Penny Lee (Kate Hudson, in what's sure to become her breakout performance) is a mysterious, music "band-aid" (groupies with class), who we later discover loves Russell.

Hence, Almost Famous presents an extremely odd, but fascinating love triangle. As both Penny and Russell grow close to William, their affections for each other shape and confuse the young adolescent.

William is eventually assigned to cover Stillwater by Rolling Stone, but Almost Famous is about much more than writing or journalism. It's about the experience, the tour busses, the backstage conversations, the music, the muses and the trash. As all of Crowe's films will attest, there is always truth to be found beyond appearance.

Almost Famous alerts us to this possibility immediately. Lester Bangs is experienced, but cynical, convinced that the rock and roll era is ending, that commercialization is ruining the purity and ultimately the music. He warns the young writer not to be swept up by the glamour and the desire to be a part of the scene.

William just can't help it though. He's fifteen years old and he's hanging out with rock stars. He's writing for Rolling Stone. He meets Penny. She's enchanting, mysterious, well-travelled. She's everything he is not, and he is obsessed with her because of it. He endears himself to Russell immediately. He becomes more of a friend than a journalist. William becomes a part of Stillwater, as much a fixture on the tour as the bus itself.

Everything about William screams that he belongs here; his body aches to stay, but he cannot. A story must be written. Eventually, he must leave the moment and return home, to reality, because the entire tour is just that – a moment. It's not reality – not for William, not for Penny and not even for Russell.

Crowe's familiarity with and compassion for his subject

Turn to FAMOUS, page 8

Harper steals kisses at Riverfest

RIVERFEST
Three County Fair Grounds, Northampton
Sept 24, 2000

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

It's a damn shame this festival didn't get half of the advertising it deserved. As a result, it was no surprise to see how few people made it to The River's 95.5 eclectic line up last Sunday in Northampton.

Ben Harper was this program's best name. That's not to say others, like Juliana Hatfield, Rahzel, or Toots and The Maytals, were nothing to be proud of. But it was clear whom the small crowd came to see.

In the interim, though, Rahzel caught some attention for his phenomenal beatbox skills, particularly in one of his better-known tunes, "If Your Mother Only Knew." Following his abbreviated set was one by Sonic Youth that never ended. The alternative band, made cult classic for God knows why, dragged their guitar distortion to obscene levels, taking too much time out of what could have been a longer subsequent performance by reggae band Toots and The Maytals. Toots arrived in complete Earth, Wind and Fire attire and in between what seemed like a condensed version of the band's greatest hits album, tried to convince the audience that he "created reggae music." Toots is old, but not that old.

The real action started when Harper and The Innocent Criminals took the stage. Opening with a slightly more relaxed arrangement of "Mama's Got a Girlfriend," the band was immediately on point.

A pretty well balanced set list from all of Harper's albums was compiled for the evening, highlighting his ability to completely rock out on vocals/guitar or lullaby his audience in poignantly themed tunes like "Burn One Down." And by poignant I mean marijuana.

Though Harper's more effeminate notes are impressive (the finer moments of the night were without a doubt in harder, fuller songs like "Ground on Down" and "Burn to Shine." His soulful but merciless talents were best illustrated in an extended version of "The Woman in You," off Harper's Burn to Shine.

TIBORA GINCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN STAFF
Ben Harper livened this weekend's otherwise gloomy Riverfest.

Predictably when the band was getting ready to close their set it was Harper's Top 40 charmer "Steal My Kisses" that wrapped up the show. Nick Rich joined the Criminals on stage to provide beatbox essentials and nearly upstaged the rest of the band with his energy.

On the topic of energy: perhaps it was the venue, perhaps it was Harper's style –the brief set never really achieved indelible concert status. Unfortunate, really, because the band certainly has the aptitude necessary to do that. But it was getting cold. The audience was tired from a day of waiting through mediocre performances. The entire tenor of the venue was rather depressing, like a forgotten amusement park. Harper didn't have the physical control that could unite his audience in sound and, as a result, the encore (only one) ended rather uneventfully. In a somewhat appropriate, though sad (for the musicians, mostly) twist, the stage apparently lost power just as the band was finishing their last song of the night. They just sort of drifted off stage and the audience, unsure of what was going on, did the same.

Still, when the band was really together and when Harper was clearly singing his heart out, something special was going on. Though the Riverfest was surely a financial failure for all involved, for the dedicated fans that stayed out all day playing hackysack, listening to the occasional inspired artist, it was laden with brief chances at joy. A whole bunch of them when Harper was on stage.

www.hamcam.com
YOUR LATEST DOT-COM BRAINCHILD.
Slightly different music (because you're slightly different).
SUBMARINE Skin Diving 11.99
AFI The Art Of Drowning 12.99
MORPHINE Bootleg Detroit 13.99
RICKIE LEE JONES It's Like This 13.99
VOODOO GLOW SKULLS Symbolic 13.99
PRAGA KHAN Mutant Funk 13.99
A GUY CALLED GERALD Essence 13.99
TRANCE ALLSTARS Worldwide 15.99
Join Replay.® The club that rewards your love of entertainment™ Ask associate for details
MEDIA PLAY® Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
MediaPlay.com™ Pricing may vary online.
Sale ends October 7, 2000.
Cassettes available on select titles. 825790 5286

A+ for the teacher
OUTSTANDING TEACHER AWARD
COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES
Students and faculty invited to submit nominations for the 2000-2001 award
Faculty in the following programs are eligible for nomination:
Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology
Apparel Marketing • Entomology • Environmental Design
Environmental Sciences • Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science
Forestry • Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration
Landscape Architecture • Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies
Plant and Soil Sciences • Resource Economics
Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation
• Forms available in 113 Stockbridge and departmental offices •

Peep Show is moody, successful

GOUDIE
Peep Show
Elektra Records

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

With their squirming vocals, effects-laden guitars, and general moodiness, it's hard not to hear Goudie as a piece of Radiohead fallout. Not that there's anything wrong with that.

Peep Show (the title suggesting the heroin-addict effeminacy of frontman and band namesake Johnny Goudie) opens with "Bahn Hello," which turns quickly from a deceptively charming guitar figure into a sharp-edged piece of modern brit-pop (notwithstanding the band's Texan roots). It's the sort of mission statement album-opener posturing bands adore, but it's also an engaging song that sets the band's style as derivative but not self-limiting. In short, we know where they came from, but we're not sure where they're going.

"Sugar Daddy" follows with verses constructed from drum loops, weirdly modified bass, and not much else, and a chorus of pounding rhythm guitars and falsetto background vocals.

The album reaches its most accessible moment when it arrives at "Tonight," the third track and the sort of song I'd be tempted to label as intentionally commercial if I didn't like it so gosh darn much.

Everything that makes for a solid piece of alt-pop is here: Johnny picks his way through a repetitious but inviting bit of guitar while a warm bass rolls through the chords. The drumming contains excellent moments of syncopation, and the drifting feedback (again referencing Radiohead) and tambourine during the outro finish the job. The band, apparently, knew they were on to something, as the song weighs in at a slightly excessive 5:40.

And then it's back to white-knuckled riffing with "Valentine," an energetic if altogether unpretty song. The songwritting on Peep Show is often hit-or-miss, but the clever production and the band's sincerity and enthusiasm for their material carries the listener through most of the less inspired moments.

Other highlights include "Julia," a darkly romantic piece punctuated by the hoarse ring of a snare drum and a fantastic chorus of soft xylophones and feedback effects, and the smooth tones of "Strange," another low-key tune that shrugs off the album's penchant for over-thinking arrangement and lets a few clean guitars carry most of the weight.

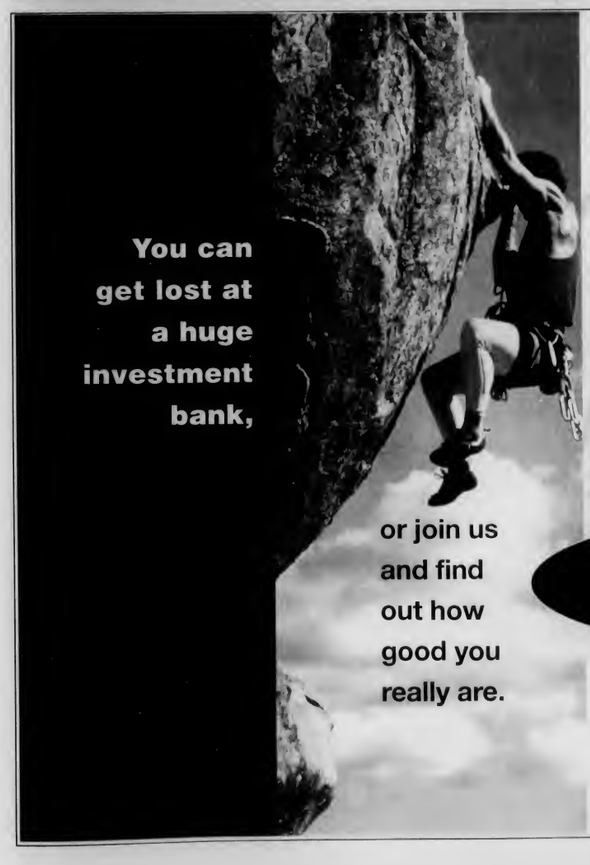
The lineup weakens somewhat as the album progresses, with the inaccessible and odd "Terminal" and the hard-to-take-seriously "Drag City." Peep Show finishes with "When Will You Be Mine?," a shockingly sweet ballad of keyboards and synth-bass which provides sufficient motivation to stick with the album until its closing moments.

Peep Show isn't an excellent album, but it's a solid album full of excellent moments, and a promising release by a band not afraid to take risks, but not foolish enough to forsake their influences.

Goudie in all of their artistic, moody glory

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday 10-1am
Positive ID Required

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A CO-PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com



You can get lost at a huge investment bank,
or join us and find out how good you really are.
You're invited to the Prudential Securities Investment Banking Presentation for Analysts.
Thurs., September 28, 6:00 pm, Alumni House Amherst College.
For more information visit our website at: www.prudentialsecurities.com/investment_banking/careers.htm
Prudential Securities
©9/00 Prudential Securities Incorporated. Member SIPC
Prudential Securities Incorporated is an Equal Opportunity Employer (M/F/D/V) famous

continued from page 6

make. Almost Famous, one of the most heart-warming genuine films of the year, I can't stop raving from the tour bus' entrance to the slick-talking Rolling Underwood to the band's garb adds to the nostalgia and genius of the film. And the groupies are gone. Crowe does not overdo any details and unspoken moment is lost.

Patrick Fugit (Hollywood Ending, Gossip) nails oddly resembles Jason Lee (Chasing Amy, Dogma) does an amazing job with his first major role. Billy Crudup's shaggy mane of hair and a dazzling smile. Still, I can't help but think that this is as much Kate Hudson's movie as it is Penny Lane's character. She's spacey, yet sharp, wild and at times truly vulnerable. She's part Madonna and part Winkerbell. You get the sense that she's always walking the fine line between audible and desperately helpless. It is an Oscar worthy supporting effort.

And as everything must, Stillwater's Almost Famous Tour ends leaving the characters only with reality and hope. Friendships mixes inner turmoil among the band, fighting and bickering. Love is not real" rock star" but there is enough romance in the air to cope with impending success. He sees and laments how people like Penny are used, then tossed away. And ultimately he saves her from the world and herself.

Penny finally discovers that she's more in way over her head (this is one of the most poignant and touching scenes in recent memories) and comes to grips with her own dreams. She can no longer live through others.

Patrick Fugit as William in Almost Famous.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS

Finally, Russell realizes that the glamour and the fame and even the sex are nothing. William's not the enemy looking to destroy the band; he's just a fan. It's still about rock and roll.

Cameron Crowe does all this with a delicacy and a craft that is hard to praise more than I already have. Sure, he's nostalgic, but then who wouldn't be? In Almost Famous, Crowe has captured a magic moment of innocence and purity – one of those rare moments in life when dream becomes reality, when all is right with the world. Then, he watches as it crumbles leaving good memories, great stories and human redemption. This is truly a remarkable achievement.

hockey

continued from page 12

These residents, unless they were fans, did not like the idea of their tax money supporting something that was of no benefit to them.

According to Wallis the failure of the plan, "pissed a lot of people off, that's for sure... It's tough being a Canadian and watching all the Canadian teams get smoked just because they can't do it financially."

Crumb explains it as, "frustrating, because the teams just can't compete."

Some people feel the NHL should do something to help its Canadian teams by way of revenue sharing and a salary cap.

"I like to see the federal government taking sport seriously... but I really don't think it should be the federal government's job to get involved in helping like that simply because it's all based on the free market and the teams are voluntarily part of the NHL," Hyatt said.

"So if they're having problems, the first place they should go is the NHL and they should deal with it," Hyatt continued. "If the NHL doesn't deal with it, then the NHL is sending a message that it's not important to keep these teams in Canada."

So, while the future of professional hockey in Canada is in limbo, the fans look to the junior and minor leagues to maintain the hockey tradition.

Wallis explains, "Some people would rather go watch the so-called 'stars of tomorrow,' then watch a guy that's making six million bucks give half the effort."

So if teams do leave Canada in favor of a better financial future in the United States, Canadians would not lose their passion for hockey and the memories the teams gave them.

"Yes, hometown alliances would be lost but Crumb put it best when he said, "I'd rather watch good hockey than a Canadian team that's terrible."

IF YOU WROTE FOR ARTS OR SPORTS, THIS SPACE COULD BE YOURS!!!!!

All New. All Yours. All Free

MadAdz welcomes University of Massachusetts Amherst

The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt

Just another way in which MadAdz.com will knock you up.

No Brainer.

$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day. Five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.

Live & Learn.

MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds Your Choice. Free

No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

National Anthem Auditions!!

The UMass Athletics Department will conduct auditions for persons interested in performing the National Anthem at Winter Sporting Events on Thursday, September 28, 2000. The Auditions will be held in the Curry Hicks Cage beginning at 7:30 P.M.

Note: Auditions will also be held for the UMass Minutemen Hoop Band beginning in October at Grinnell Arena. The following instruments are needed: trumpet, saxophone, trombone, tuba, bass and guitar, keyboards and percussion. Call 545-6060 for more information.

SexWars

PLAY THE GAME

Check your local TV listings

www.SexWars.com

OUTSTANDING ADVISOR AWARD

COLLEGE OF FOOD AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Students, faculty and staff invited to submit nomination forms for the 2000-2001 award

Advisors in the following programs are eligible for nomination:

Animal Science • Building Materials and Wood Technology

Apparel Marketing • Entomology • Environmental Design

Environmental Sciences • Family and Consumer Sciences • Food Science

Forestry • Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration

Landscape Architecture • Microbiology • Natural Resource Studies

Plant and Soil Sciences • Resource Economics

Sport Management • Wildlife and Fisheries Conservation

• Forms available in 113 Stockbridge and departmental offices •

baseball

continued from page 9

Those who say that there is any contest over the AL Cy Young award, "SHUT UP!"

There is no contest, although he has six losses this season, Martinez is a no-brainer. He should be 21-2, not 17-6. In this day and age of the five baseball, his 1.79 Earned Run Average is almost two runs lower than anyone else in the American League (Roger Clemens - 3.50 ERA) In his six losses this season, the Sox have scored a grand total of seven runs. He had one bad inning against Kansas City, and has been unbelievable after that.

Although Wells single-handedly carried the Blue Jays pitching staff and Pettitte has been the only consistent pitcher on the Yankees staff this season, Pedro wins the award for being simply put, "The best pitcher in baseball."

NL Cy Young Award: Greg Maddux, Atlanta

Runners-Up: Randy Johnson, Arizona. Robb Nen, San Francisco. Tom Glavine, Atlanta. Al Leiter, New York.

This is by far the toughest one to call. Johnson has a 2.36 ERA and has struck out 342 batters this season. However, his stats have been misleading this year. He has been hit hard in the last couple of months and has been one of the main culprits in the D Backs' downfall.

Nen has 39 saves and a 1.43 ERA and gave up his first earned run in 27 appearances in the division clinching game for the Giants last week. But Mark Davis was the last reliever to win the NL Cy Young in 1989 with San Diego and that stat puts a damper on his chances.

Leiter has been consistent all year and has a 16-7 record with a 3.15 ERA for the playoff bound Mets. However, two pitchers in the same division have overshadowed him.

Glavine has come on strong late and now has 20 wins and a 3.49 ERA and could very easily win his third Cy this year.

However, I have to go with Glavine's teammate on this one. Maddux has been the glue to the staff all year long and has 19 wins this year, and a solid 2.91 ERA. He has also pitched six complete games while garnering three shutouts. In the biggest month of the season, with the Mets nipping at the Braves heals, all Maddux has done is go 5-0 and has 56 1/3 consecutive shutout innings. The control artist and Glavine have proven once again that you do not necessarily need an overpowering fastball to win. It can come from using your brain as well. That is why I feel that either one of these two would be a great choice for the award, but I feel that Maddux will get it.

AL MVP: Frank Thomas, Chicago

Runners-Up: Carlos Delgado, Toronto. Jason Giambi, Oakland. Alex Rodriguez, Seattle.

The last two seasons, Thomas has had sub-par years. The White Sox both years finished 20-plus games behind the Indians. This season the "Big Hurt" has career-highs in homers and RBI and the White Sox have the best record in the American League. Are you seeing a pattern here?

He took up the challenge handed down by his manger during spring training and he has responded with his best season ever. He is batting .330 with 42 jacks and 142 RBI.

He also seems happier in Chicago, although winning does do that to a person.

Delgado's run at a triple crown made for a wonderful story during September, and Giambi's bat is the reason why Oakland is in the lead for the Wild Card. However, when you are having a year like Thomas is having, on the best team in the league, then there is no question about this award.

NL MVP: Jeff Kent, San Francisco

Runners-Up: Mike Piazza, New York. Barry Bonds, San Francisco. Jim Edmonds, St. Louis.

Pressure baseball calls for the big players to step it up. This season, that big player has been Kent. This season, Kent is third in the National League in RBI (125), sixth in average (.335), sixth in runs scored (110), fourth in hits (186) and among the top six in several other offensive categories. He has never gotten the recognition that he deserves, until this year as he has led the Giants to the NL West Title.

He beats out Bonds, who also deserves major consideration for the award after a hot September, has set a career high in homers with 48. Piazza is having another monster season despite taking a greater beating than Mitch "Blood" Green in his altercation with Mike Tyson. Edmonds has been the home run threat in St. Louis ever since McGwire went down with a knee injury.

Those are the players that have made the season of 2000 special. However, only a few will have that extra special feeling at the end - being called World Series Champions.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

Venus is still on top of her game in Sydney

By Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is fifth installment of seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000.

If her summer of unrivaled brilliance on the courts neglected to make the declaration, then surely this refrain is resounding through Sydney - Venus is out of this world.

With 34 consecutive victories and five tournament titles, including Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, the hottest player in tennis covets just one more honor to complete her 2000 trophy collection. Make that two. Becoming an Olympic double gold medallist wouldn't be a bad way to close out the year.

During Monday's women's singles semifinal, second-seeded Williams defeated third-seeded Monica Seles, 6-1, 4-6, 6-3 in an all-American match at the New South Wales Tennis Center to clinch at least a silver medal and advance to the final. Williams dominated the first match, but struggled with her serve in the second set, double-faulting five times. Regaining her composure for the final set, Venus smashed a backhand winner down the line to seal the victory.

Her opponent in the final on Wednesday will be No. 10 Elena Dementieva of Russia, who beat Aussie Jelena Dokic, 2-6, 6-4, 6-4, in the other semifinal. Seles fell to 0-5 against Williams with the defeat, but edged out Dokic for the bronze on Tuesday with a 6-1, 6-4 victory.

Williams has faced Dementieva once, at last year's Fed Cup final in Palo Alto, where she lost to the 18 year-old Russian.

But what a difference a year makes. She is a much stronger player now, both physically and mentally. She is more determined, more experienced and more accustomed to winning.

Undeniably the favorite, it appears the only woman who can defeat Venus now is Venus herself. Her chief rival, No. 1 Lindsay Davenport, withdrew from singles due to a foot injury on Sept. 19, and will not be able to defend her title from Atlanta. The misfortune of Davenport also guaranteed that the U.S. would not sweep the medals, as was speculated.

The most exciting match of these Olympics was contested on Sunday when Williams edged Spanish rival Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario, 5-6, 6-2, 6-4 to reach the semifinals. Before she embarked on her inimitable winning streak, Williams' last defeat came against four-time Olympic medallist Sanchez-Vicario, who beat her at the French Open earlier this year.

Teaming with sister Serena, Williams also looks to contend for the gold in women's doubles competition. The tournament is only the third that they played together this year, but they have won three of the last four Grand Slams together.

On Tuesday, Venus clinched her second medal with a semifinal victory with Serena in doubles. Winning 11 of the final 13 games (and 32 of their last 33 matches), the Williams sisters beat Els Callens and Dominique Van Roost of Belgium 6-4, 6-1. They will face the Dutch duo of Kristie Boogert and Miriam Oremans for the final on Thursday.

With an easy victory in Monday's quarterfinals over the French duo of Julie Halard-Decugis and Amelie Mauresmo, 6-3, 6-2, the two remained the queens of the court. On Saturday, they had advanced to the quarterfinals by knocking off Russia's Elena Likhovtseva and Anastasia Myskina, 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

On the men's side, fifth-seeded Yevgeny Kafelnikov of Russia beat Arnaud Di Pasquale of France 6-4, 6-4, while unseeded Tommy Haas of Germany defeated Roger Federer of Switzerland 6-3, 6-2. Kafelnikov and Haas will meet in the men's final on Thursday, with the Russian bidding for her first Olympic gold, to go with his two Grand Slam titles.

Early round competition saw the top seeds for the men stumble. Nine of the 16 seeded men were eliminated in the first round. US Open champ Marat Safin of Russia, the No. 1 seed, saw a premature departure from Sydney last Wednesday, suffering a surprising defeat to unseeded Frenchman Fabrice Santoro in the opener. As a result, No. 2 French Open winner Gustavo Kuerten of Brazil was left as the favorite. But Kuerten was upset by Kafelnikov, 6-4, 7-5, in the singles quarterfinals on Monday. Kuerten had reached the quarterfinals with a smooth victory over Ivan Ljubicic of Croatia, 7-6 (2), 6-3 in third-round play on Saturday while Kafelnikov had eliminated No. 11 Aussie Mark Philippoussis, 7-6 (4), 6-3.

In the doubles semifinals, Canadians Sebastien Lareau and Daniel Nestor defeated David Adams and John-Laffnie De Jager of South Africa, 6-1, 6-2. And Aussies Todd Woodbridge and Mark Woodforde beat Alex Corretja and Albert Costa of Spain, 6-3, 7-6 (5) to the delight of the home crowd.

You can cover hockey. You can cover football. You can cover hoops. You can cover soccer. What are you waiting for?

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.

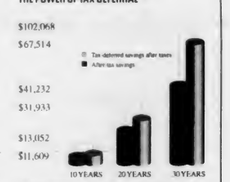
With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.

And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds.* Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid history of investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.

So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

INVEST AS LITTLE AS $25 a month through an automatic payroll plan†

IT'S EASY TO SAVE MORE THROUGH THE POWER OF TAX DEFERRAL



In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.

*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.

TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™ 1.800.842.2776 www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, please call 1.800.842.2733, ext. 5509, to request prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. †You may be able to invest up to the IRS maximum of $10,500 per year. To receive a personalized calculation of your maximum contribution, call TIAA-CREF at 1.800.842.2776. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. distributes the CREF and TIAA Real Estate variable annuities. • Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distributes the Personal Annuities variable annuity component, mutual funds and bullion savings agreements. • TIAA and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed.
© 2000 TIAA-CREF-08/03

Why not... Do Something Cool?

getthatgig.com

Extraordinary jobs and careers - the people who have them and how to get them!

Atlantis

WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL 6 NIGHTS A WEEK

HIP HOP W/ DJ SEMANTIK $2 9/28

GROWROOM RECORDS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/ DJ BON BONS, HUSH, SIMI AND SALTY $2 9/29

HIP HOP WITH DJ TRENDZ $2 9/30

REGGAE WITH DJ U. AND SELECTOR C. FREE 10/01

B-SKI'S BINS UNDERGROUND HIP HOP AND SOUL FREE 10/02

REWIND W/ KID VICIOUS AND SPECIAL GUESTS FREE 10/03

41 BOLTWOOD WALK, AMHERST DOWN THE ALLEY BEHIND ANTONIOS

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?

Bragging rights.

The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.

NBCOLYMPICS.COM

OFFICIAL PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports

We bring good things to life.

www.gecareers.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Ford Taurus Black, 90k, 4dr, cruise, power windows Call 549-5230 $2200

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

1994 VW Passat GLX, 5spd VR 6, dark green, 6 disc, cd, phone, loaded $6200 obo 549 1553

Honda Accord 92 two door, 5-speed, sun roof, 124k, runs great. Asking $4100 665-8616

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gastank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

CHILDCARE

Afterschool child-care needed in Amherst home, 2 children, M, T, Th 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30 - 5:30, or some combination. 545-0258

CHILDCARE

Mothers helper wanted with breakfast & dinner with some overnights. Hourly wage nego. Call Abbey 586-0207 ext. 305

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

The Fine Arts Center is hiring ushers for the 2000-2001 season! For more information, please contact: Cheryl at 545-0190 (after October 1 - 545-0192)

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

EMPLOYMENT

Second Shift 3pm-11pm. Part time Monday, Wednesday and Friday with possibiliy of full time. Duties include maintaining a large recirculating aquaculture & hydroponics greenhouse. Applicant must be responsible, mechanically inclined and able to work alone. Great for students - Earn while you learn. Send resume to Bioshelters, Inc., 500 Sunderland Road, Amherst, MA 01002, fax (413) 549-9945, email bioshelter @aol.com. No calls please.

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

EMPLOYMENT

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

STAGE HANDS WANTED At the Fine Arts Center. $6.75/HR. Applications at Production Services rm 146 F.A.C.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sororities/Fraternities: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

PETS FOR SALE

2 long-haired, female kittens. First set of shots and advance flea control included. $15 fee to cover vaccines. 413-253-2465

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

ROOMMATE WANTED

Roommate needed ASAP Mill Valley. Prefer male, on bus route, washer/dryer 253-7026

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

GO DIRECT! #1 Internet-based company offering WHOLESALE Spring Break packages! Lowest price guarantee! 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 — Sunsplash Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mardi Gras, Florida, Barbados. Best Parties, Hotels, Prices. Organize small group, travel free. 1-800-426-7710

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WANTED!! 30 PEOPLE TO GAIN 30LBS IN 30 DAYS FOR MORE INFORMATION LOG ON TO Mascothumbies.com

Learn Some French

The cat has three kittens.
La chatte a trois chatons.

Buy a kitty... teach it French!

...Le Collegionne

WANT TO WORK AT THE DAILY COLLEGIAN? THEN COME ON DOWN!

Placing Classifieds is easy! Call 545-3500

HSCN 4 Hampshire Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Travel to Travel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
8	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN fn
9	HSCN Movie Ch	26	CNN Sı
10	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
11	Weather Channel	28	BET
12	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
14	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
18	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
19	WOCH & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
34	International	33	TV Land
35	UMass Academic TV	34	C-Span
36	WB/New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
37	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
38	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
39	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 27, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Clint Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Silicon Parkway, Connecticut			Time Frenzy
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor "Long Hard Days"		48 Hours "Never Forget"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor "Long Hard Days"		48 Hours "Never Forget"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Vanished: "A Mother's Search"		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek "True Love"		Felicity (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Real TV	7 Days "The Cure" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	70s Show	70s Show	News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Clint Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Great Performances: Berlin Philharmonic			Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Vanished: "A Mother's Search"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "The Cure" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier	I Love Lucy	Med Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	29	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	45	L.A. Law "Best Jerky		Law & Order		Biography: Jimmy Hoffa		American Justice "Mob Rats		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Fascia's Facial
CNN	23	Wondrwve	Moneyline Newshour (N		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★½ "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" (1985) Pee-wee Herman.				South Park	Battleb'ots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	43	Wild Discovery	Dragons	Wild Discovery	Wonders Asia	On the Inside: Death Zone		Flood of the Millennium		Wrestling the Mississippi		Justice Files	Vigilantes
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)
LIFE	42	Golden Girls	Golden Girls									Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Makeover	Real World	Real World	Fear (In Stereo)			Say What Kcka	Live Through This "Pilot"		Makeover	Say What Kcka
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Caddyy	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	35	Sliders (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	★★★★ "Raiders of the Lost Ark" (1981, Adventure)		Harrison Ford, Karen Allen.			Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	44	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours "Out of Mind"		Extreme Machines (N)	FBI Profiles: Criminal Minds (N)		South Beach (N)			Extreme Machines
TNT	27	ER "Great Expectations"		Pretender "Jumping Landings"		American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis			American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis			★★★ "Moonlighting" (1991)
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Death Watch" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Report"		Cover Me: FBI Family		Huntress "Partners" (In Stereo)		Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	51	(5:00) ★★½ "It There Was You"		★★½ "You've Got Mail" (1998, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Meg				Sex and City	Arliss	Oz "Unnatural Disasters"		The Corner
MAX	53	(5:00) "Antz"		★★★ "Edward Scissorhands" (1990) PG-13		★★½ "The Thirteenth Floor" (1999) Craig Bierko. (In Stereo)			Three & Cons" (2000, Comedy) Larry Miller. (In			Jay Leno On?
SHOW	55	★★★½ "The Truman Show" (1998) Jim Carrey. (In Stereo) PG				"Hamlet" (2000, Drama) Wood Harris, Dorian Harewood.			Soul Food			Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Welcome, Students, to "Intro to Communism."
To clarify some policies — the grade curve is as follows...
All students will receive a 'C.'

Butter Cup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

YESTERDAY AT THE D.C. THEY WERE SERVING PLANARY INDULGENCES, BUT I DIDN'T HAVE MY U-CARD.
WHEN I CAME BACK WITH IT, THEY ONLY HAD RICE.
HEY LOOK! NOW I'M A REPUBLICAN!

Dilbert By Scott Adams

PERFORMANCE REVIEW
LASTLY, WHAT HAVE YOU DONE TO IMPROVE THE MORALE OF YOUR CO-WORKERS?
I DIDN'T GIVE THEM THE BEATINGS THEY SO RICHLY DESERVED.
I'LL SHORTEN THAT TO "TEAM PLAYER."?

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

GOVERNOR, AN N.R.A. OFFICIAL RECENTLY TOLD HIM PEOPLE THEY'D BE WORKING OUT OF A BUSH WHITE HOUSE. ANY COMMENT?
WELL, I THINK IT'S A LITTLE PREMATURE TO BE TALKING ABOUT THAT!
I REALLY HAVEN'T HAD A CHANCE TO SIT DOWN WITH A FLOOR PLAN YET. ANYTHING'S POSSIBLE AT THIS POINT!
GREAT.
N.R.A. — HOW MAY I DIRECT YOUR CALL?
UM, PRESIDENT BUSH, PLEASE.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

TAKE OFF THE HAT, ROB. I'M HEARING WILD RUMORS ABOUT YOUR NEW DO
THE HAT IS STAYING ON. THANK YOU
HOLY COW. YOU ARE BALD! I ASSUME BUCKY IS INVOLVED SOMEHOW, BUT HMMM
I DON'T WANT TO TALK ABOUT IT.
OH. COME ON. HOW COULD A CAT HAVE STRIPPED YOU BALD? NO. DON'T TELL ME. IT'S FUNNIER IMAGINING HOW HE DID IT.
OK. THERE! HAPPY? I GUESS. I WAS CRAZY TO ASSUME THAT PEOPLE WOULD BE MATURE ABOUT THIS.
WHOA. KEEP YOUR LID ON, KOJAK.

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

AFTER TAYLOR'S CAPTURE
HE SPEAKS OUR LANGUAGE. WHAT DO YOU THINK, DR. ZAIUS?
PERHAPS IT'S A MUTATION. A PECULIAR HYBRID FROM THE FORBIDDEN ZONE. IF IT WON'T SPEAK TO US WE'LL HAVE TO LET MUSKETEERS ANOTHER WAY!
ZIRA, GO FETCH THAT ANAL PROBE
TAYLOR'S MY NAME. SPEAKING AND COOPERATING WITHOUT A PROBE IS MY GAME.

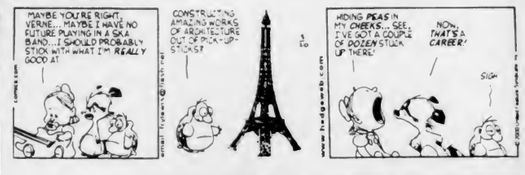
Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

THE TWO OF RJ
CARPE CLICKER! SEIZE THE REMOTE!
THAT'S IT! I'VE HAD ENOUGH OF THIS PSYCHO-SLOPE
THOSE OF YOU WHO ARE REALLY INTERESTED IN PERSONAL GROWTH... FOLLOW ME...
THE TWO OF VERNE
WE HEARD YOU'RE GONNA SHOW YOUR VERY MOST PERSONAL GROWTH...
AH, BETTER BE GROSS

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

MOM, IS IT OK IF I EAT THE LAST POWDERED DOUGHNUT?
SURE.
MOGNCH! CHAWM! SNORPF! GLUMPH! MYUNK! CHEGTH! RLUBGT!
I GAVE YOU PERMISSION TO EAT ONE!
IT WAS A FULL BOX. I HAD TO EAT THE OTHERS TO FIND OUT WHICH ONE.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



MAYBE YOU'RE RIGHT, VERNE... MAYBE I HAVE NO FUTURE PLAYING IN A SKA BAND... I SHOULD PROBABLY STICK WITH WHAT I'M REALLY GOOD AT CONSTRUCTING AMAZING WORKS OF ARCHITECTURE OUT OF PLAIN TOAST HIDING PEAS IN MY CHEEKS... SEE, I'VE GOT A COUPLE OF DOZEN STUCK UP THERE!
NOW, THAT'S A CAREER!
SIGH

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Charbroiled Chicken Sandwich

Broccoli-Rice Casserole (vegetarian)

Falafel pocket Sandwich (vegan) with Falafel Sauce

Dinner

Beef Fajita

Baked Ziti (vegetarian)

Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Tiboro Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermot
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, John Zawislak

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 69 LOW: 58	HIGH: 55 LOW: 41	HIGH: 58 LOW: 28

H

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – To leave or to stay? The question is not likely to be answered in any orthodox manner. You may have to throw caution to the wind today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Take advantage of all the tools accessible to you today and you can increase your rate of progress dramatically – in the course of a single day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can earn more at this time, provided you meet with your Pisces shutter bug.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A romantic situation may demand more from you today than you feel you are able to give at this time. A little more focus could be the answer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – A timely brainstorm enables you to step out in a new direction with confidence today – without leaving behind all that is familiar to you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Risks are few, but those you do encounter are likely to be complex. You don't want to make the mistake of thinking it's all a piece of cake.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care you don't take out your frustrations on someone who doesn't deserve to be on the wrong end of your bad mood. Be fair and circumspect.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Two or three important events must not be ignored today – but you must also pay attention to all that happens in between!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You can count on your good luck to hold throughout the day – but you mustn't push it. Avoid unnecessary dangers if at all possible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may have to assume some sort of ot emotional disguise today in order to make your way safely through a highly personal danger-zone.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Avoid crowds today in order to keep the stress level to a minimum. Be sure you are ready to take on a new responsibility when it comes your way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Someone born under the sign of the crab is in a position to make you an important offer that is in sync with your immediate desires.

Quote of the Day

"Life is but a thoroughfare of woe / We are pilgrims passing to and fro"

-Geoffrey Chaucer

ACROSS

1 Farmer's place
5 Exclamation —
10 "I'm relieved!"
14 Henri's girlfriend
15 Not deserved
16 Start again
17 Cherry variety
18 Ode makers
19 Actor Ken —
20 Ice pellets
22 Try
24 Tipper or Laura
27 Kennel noise
28 Unculthvated flower
32 Pleasant tune
35 Savings-plan ents.
36 Tavern sign
38 Eagle's lair
40 "The Georgia Peach"
42 Absorbent cloth
44 Female sandpipers
45 Bend them!
47 Pigpens
49 Jungfrau, e g
50 Satisfy one's thirst
52 Whiskey drink
54 Feast
56 Civil disturbance
57 Prickly weed
60 Hurt illegally
64 Shout of glee
65 Ran the car without moving
66 Woodwind
69 Paddles' cousins
70 String quartet member
71 Thin
72 Grainy, e g
73 Clean the slate
74 Lampreys

DOWN

1 Pats gently
2 Actor Jannings
3 Border
4 Old story
5 New pet
6 Singer Yoko
7 Thought
8 Zany
9 Analyzed
10 Quicker
11 Assist
12 Work on "Time"
13 Came in first
21 Poi source
23 Director Kazan
25 Western st
26 Senator Kefauver
28 Lantern part
29 Golf clubs
30 Classify
31 Dirt
33 Footstep
34 Traffic sign
37 Earlier
39 Glimpse
41 Most decorated
43 Abominable Snowman
46 Enjoys Aspen
48 Pause
51 Lure
53 T.E. Lawrence portrayer
55 Church official
57 Easter said — done
58 Deli buy
59 Mess Cinders, of the comics
61 Busy as —
62 Ember
63 Coop dwellers
64 Stir-fry pan
66 Overhead trains
67 Female rabbit

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

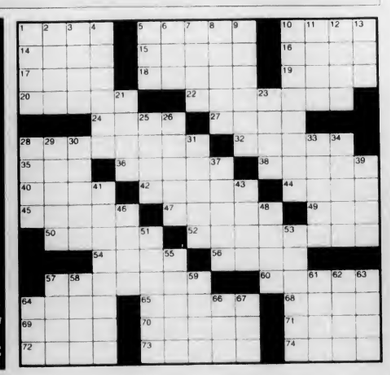
A	R	B	O	R		I	T	C	H		W	A	R	D
W	H	A	L	E		O	H	I	O		A	G	U	A
L	E	N	D	S		W	A	N	D		L	A	I	R
S	A	D		O	R	A	T	E		B	L	I	N	K
	A	P	R	O	N			A	L	O	N	G
D	O	N	A	T	E		S	C	R	A	P
R	A	N	I			D	E	I	G	N		B	O	A
A	H	A	R	D	N	U	T		C	O	C	R	A	C	K
B	U	S		D	A	K	I	E		A	S	S	T	I
		R	I	P	E	N		D	A	C	R	O	N
V	O	I	L	E			P	U	R	E	E
F	I	N	N	Y		B	R	O	N	C		L	O	B
O	T	I	S		J	O	A	N		T	A	I	G	A
P	A	C	E		U	R	G	E		I	N	E	R	T
S	L	E	D		T	E	E	S		C	A	F	E	S

10-10-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

24 GOOD REASONS TO GO TO UNIVERSITY DRIVE (THE WINGS AIN'T BAD EITHER) 24 TAPS AND THE BEST PUB FOOD ANYWHERE

The HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, September 27, 2000 | 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Canada's crown jewel is fading

Economic issues create woes for NHL clubs

By Jake Rabenhymer
Collegian Staff

Kris Wallis

Jedd Crumb

[illegible] Canada'

[illegible] these words mean and [illegible] you that Foster Hewitt and [illegible] broadcasting game eight [illegible] Summit Series Paul Henderson [illegible] with less than a minute [illegible] The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and Russia [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MAUREEN MAHLE/COLLEGIAN

To the Max

While Corey is reading, Max catches some rays in front of the Student Union yesterday.

U Briefs

The radio voice of the University of Massachusetts, WMUA, 91.1FM, is seeking the financial support of its listeners. WMUA will kick off its annual FUND DRIVE Saturday, October 14 at 6:00 p.m. with the traditional 15 hour POLKATHON and end the drive on October 21. This year WMUA will receive almost $50,000 from the Student Government Association, covering only half of its operations budget. The remaining half must be raised through business underwriting and during this week of on-air fundraising. Last year, more than 600 individuals pledged over $21,500, and this year hope to raise $22,000. CD's, gift certificates, T-shirts and other gifts are available at various giving levels. WMUA's Pledge Line is (413) 577-3000.

The Friends of the Belchertown Community Skatepark is holding a parade to raise money for the building and future running of the park. The goal of the committee is to raise over $20,000 for the creation of the park. The parade will take place at Belchertown High School from 8:45-11:30 a.m. For more information, call 323-9730 or 323-7967.

The Hampshire County of the American Red Cross will be on campus Oct. 25 collecting blood from student donors. The blood drive will run from 10:30 – 4:30 p.m. and will take place in room 168 of the Campus Center.

The fifth annual Western Massachusetts Stand-Down event will be held at Westover Air Reserve Base in Chicopee, MA on Sept. 30. The event is open to all veterans interested in learning about some of the benefits and services to which they are entitled. Stand-Down is a grass-roots program which alerts veterans to a wide range of resources available to them including job assistance, medical, dental, vision and mental health services, legal aid, substance abuse counseling and housing assistance.

"Passages," a retreat for creativity in movement leadership, will take place this weekend at the Traprock Peace Center in Deerfield, MA. The retreat is designed to incorporate artistic methods into affecting social change. Some of the speakers at the event include Kate Stevens, Root Cuthbertson, Eveline McaDougall and Michelle Wilde. For more information, please call (413) 773-7427.

Celebrate Rosh Hashana at the Chabad House on 30 North Hadley Rd. in Amherst, MA. Services will take place Friday and Saturday evening Sept. 29 and Sept. 30 at 7 and 8 p.m. respectively. For more information and further service scheduling, please call 549-4094.

—Jessica May and Adam Martignetti

According to doctors, UMass Urgent Care tends not to be

By Katy LoConte
Collegian Correspondent

Ask any person who has been to Urgent Care at the University of Massachusetts Health Services on a Monday afternoon and they will most likely say the same thing: there is always a significant wait.

Patients have complained of waiting for hours to see doctors who were unaware that patients were waiting for them at all.

While dozens of people wait outside to be seen by facility staff, the doctors inside rush around as fast as they can, helping as many people as possible both with appointments and without. Yet, no matter how fast the staff works, there are still a handful of students in the waiting room who sit and wait for hours. Amazingly, one patient who had a 2:30 p.m. appointment did not make it in to see her doctor until 5:30.

The problem is a mixture of two different things. On one hand, Urgent Care is simply understaffed. According to Dr. Pedro Rouzier, the facility is two doctors short compared to last year's staff. One doctor is on leave for the year, and another just left and has not yet been replaced. Rouzier, a sports medicine doctor who has been working at Urgent Care in General Medical Central for four years this January, said that the facility has never been two doctors short since he's been there. He did clarify, however, that Urgent Care is "working on a replacement" and "going through the administration process." Obviously, this has had an effect on the amount of time that people have been waiting to see the doctors.

When asked about why Health Services has been understaffed, Rouzier responded that, "part of it has to do with funding, but it's a complicated issue."

Yet according to Rouzier, the waits in Urgent Care after 1:00 p.m. are almost unavoidable. So what about the times when there is a real emergency? After all, Urgent Care is for urgent situations. It is essentially a walk-in center for people who have serious problems lacking the time to make an appointment.

Rouzier said that it does no good for someone with a severe emergency to be killing time in a chair in the waiting room. He likened that situation to an emergency room in a hospital. "The waits are unpredictable. You can never know when people are going to be seen."

Many times people come in with what seems like an emergency, when in actuality they are waiting hours for information that they may have already know. The staff strongly urges patients to make an appointment ahead of time to cut down on the wait. Timeliness is also a big help in cutting down waiting room time, as "the earlier they arrive, the quicker they are to leave," according to Rouzier.

Although at times people have tended to wait longer, Rouzier contended that the wait in the clinic is not generally more than 15 minutes. But as long as Urgent Care remains two doctors short and patients keep filing in every afternoon, there is seemingly little that can be done. With or without an appointment, Rouzier said people should probably expect at least some wait.

He did, however, offer some advice to potential patients: "Always make an appointment – before 9:30 is the best time if you do have to go to Urgent Care. After 1:00 p.m., bring a book to read or a ton of stuff to study."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the Collegian Special in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sitlawski Assistant Finance Manager
Arify Gargiulo Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

MOTHER EARTH WANTS YOU
(OR UNCLE SAM OR THE MINUTEMAN WANTS YOU)
TO VISIT MOUNT RECYCLE MORE

Pond Side of Student Union
Today and October 4th 10:30-2:30 p.m.

See and Hear of What Students Dispose in One Day
And the Environmental Benefits
Were It Recycled.

Monkey Around with the Minuteman Mascot

Play the "All It Takes Is A Minute" Recycling Game Winners Receive Gift Certificates to Downtown Stores and Restaurants.

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

"What a Great Experience!"

Learning the language. Meeting people. Coming face to face with history, art and architecture, culture, food and fun.

UNIVERSITY STUDIES ABROAD CONSORTIUM...
Small classes. Personal attention. Fully accredited — receive university credit. We provide great classes in intensive, language, history, anthropology, art, business, economics, political science...

University Studies Abroad Consortium
University of Nevada MS/323
Reno, Nevada 89557
(775) 784-6569
E-mail: usac@unr.edu
http://usac.unr.edu

AUSTRALIA • BASQUE COUNTRY • CHILE • CHINA • COSTA RICA • DENMARK • ENGLAND • FRANCE
GERMANY • IRELAND • ISRAEL • ITALY • MALTA• NEW ZEALAND • SCOTLAND • SPAIN • THAILAND

It's Basics Time.

ZANA
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

report

continued from page 1

rooms from 1 a.m. on weeknights and 2 a.m. on weekend nights. According to Essopos, these 40 hours that they are required to be in their room prevents some students from obtaining night jobs or even going home during weekends.

However, written in the contract is the prohibition of a second part-time job without permission and approval by the RD. Even then, Essopos argues against the contracts written constraint stating "it should be clearly understood that the RA job is the primary responsibility and must supersede any other additional employment."

The only example provided by the author was an instance involving himself when he was placed under probation for refusing to work a duty because, "I thought working 22 hours straight was inhumane, and the situation could have been avoided." When he attempted to appeal the decision with Area Director Diana Fordham, he received a letter after the meeting declining his request to have the matter rectified.

In the letter dated December 15, 1999, she states, "I agreed with you that other arrangements could have been worked out for the day shifts but I am concerned for the safety of residents when an RA does not follow through on their duty responsibilities."

When Essopos failed to contact her sooner, the probation period was extended into the following semester.

"The bottom line is that RA's are considered expendable and if one gets fired there won't be any problem finding another one," Essopos stated in the paper.

Essopos solution lies in what he believes is the need for a satisfactory system in place to deal with RA grievance issues. According to him, he believes that if most RA's were faced with an internal problem about the job, they wouldn't feel comfortable voicing it directly to their RD.

However, some RA's have a mixed opinion on the issue, especially considering most have not yet seen Essopos's document. Mersedeh Mehrtash, a senior majoring in history and Spanish, said the RA contract is written in the sense that it leaves room for flexibility for the senior staff to impart extra duties.

"I think there's a huge difference between the different residential areas and between different clusters; as far as the differences between the different living areas, there isn't consistency because there's varying needs," Mehrtash said. "Some RD's might enforce the specific rules of the job more strictly while others are more lax and it depends on the number of people on the staff."

RA Council will be meeting Monday to discuss whether or not they will endorse the idea of an independent RA Union to deal with grievance issues brought forth within the residence halls.

Mount Holyoke Briefs

MHC Council Debate

Changes proposed to the composition of Mount Holyoke College's Council on Student Affairs (CSA) sparked debate as to the council's role. Two faculty members recently questioned its capacity to suggest students be suspended or expelled from the College. The council chair maintains that both students and faculty created the council to hear allegations of "non-academic honor code violations" and that the council's purpose is to uphold College policies and procedures.

Davis Criticizes Prison System

Political activist Angela Davis spoke last Thursday in Chapin Auditorium about the prison system in America. She criticized what she called "the jailing of democracy" as well as a lack of prisoners' rights. Davis also spoke about privately-run jails and how some companies turn a profit from them.

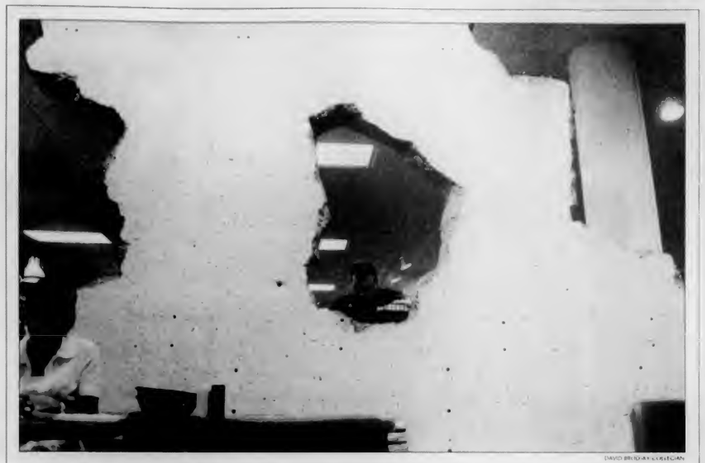
—courtesy Alyssa Dangelis and the Mount Holyoke News

Smith Briefs

Sophia Smith Collection adds new papers

The Sophia Smith Collection held a conference September 22-23 recognizing the opening of eight new collections of papers. "Agents of Social Change: Celebrating Women's Progressive Activism Across the Twentieth Century" celebrated the recently catalogued archives of Dorothy Kenyon, Jessie Lloyd O'Connor, Mary Metlas Kaufman, Constance Baker Motley, Frances Fox Piven, Gloria Steinem, the Women's Action Alliance, and the National Congress of Neighborhood Women. Jan Peterson, founder of the NCNW. Piven and Steinem were among the speakers in various workshops.

—courtesy Ivy Walters and the Smith Sophian



DAVID BRIDGES/COLLEGIAN

Just a hole in the wall...

A UMass police officer gets his coffee in the Blue Wall as students study earlier this week.

Go Wireless
Without Going Penniless.

Bring your College ID to the TSR Wireless booth for Back–to–School Savings! Now through September 30, you can get 250 Anytime Minutes and 250 Night & Weekend Minutes of clear calling for just $29.99 a month when you sign a one year Sprint PCS Advantage Agreement℠.*

See us at tsrwireless.com or call us at 1-800-795-RING for the store nearest you!

Sprint
Sprint PCS®
Dual-Band Sprint PCS Phone™ Samsung® SCH-8500
Sprint PCS Wireless Web

TSR Wireless™
Its where to go wireless.

*$29.99 offer good for new customers only. Some restrictions apply. See printed materials in stores for details. Offer ends September 30, 2000.

Hampshire Mall

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

Sauza Gold Tequila 750	$11.99
Absolute 750	$14.99
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack	$9.99 -Dep
Beck's , Beck's Dark 12 Pack	$9.99 -Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$10.99 -Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack	$9.99 -Dep
Spaten Lager 6 Pack	$5.49 -Dep

Visit the Two for $9.99 International Wine Section

THE FIVE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON

An Emperor's Epiphany
Ratan Thiyam's Chorus Repertory Theatre in Uttar-Priyadarshi

Travel with warrior Uttar-Priyadarshi as he travels to Hell and back and discovers the path of non-violence through Buddhism. This epic tale comes to life in a spectacle of rich imagery, rhythm, and sound. Performed in the Manipuri language with English super titles.
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Co-presented with New WORLD Theater and the Asian Dance & Music Program

Puppet Festival Weekend
Teatro Hugo & Inés

Combining mime, dance, and puppetry, Hugo & Inés play out the moments of everyday life with the help of a parade of characters composed largely of knees, feet, hands, elbows, and bellies. This duo's dexterity and creativity will amaze children and adults alike.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5 AT 7:30PM
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7 AT 3PM AND 8PM
RAND THEATER
Co-presented with the University Theater Department

American Repertory Theater in King Stag

The American Repertory Theater Company brings the 18th century fairy tale of King Stag to life with movement, costumes, masks, and life-size puppetry by Julie Taymor, famous for Disney's Broadway hit The Lion King.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by The Boars
Tickets are only $10 for children 17 and under

Uncommonly Good Chamber
The Berlin Philharmonic Woodwind Quintet with pianist Jon Nakamatsu

Join us for a rare opportunity to experience one of the world's best woodwind quintets joined by Van Cliburn Gold Medal winner Jon Nakamatsu. The program will include Mozart, Poulenc, Jolivet, and Reicha.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12 AT 7:30PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM

Torch with a Twang
Mandy Barnett

You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Dana Kralf's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the country music scene as Barnett and her band deliver an evening of pure Nashville.
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL

Stars, Stripes and the FAC Forever
The Boston Pops
Keith Lockhart, conductor

It's a 25th Anniversary Celebration complete with an all-American program of Copeland, Bernstein, Loesser, Williams, Gershwin, and tributes to Elvis Presley and Paul Simon. Join the fun and catch the Boston Pops right in your own backyard.
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
Sponsored by Healthcommunities.com, Coca-Cola, Peoples Bank and WRNX 100.9FM
Special Event: No Discounts

www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets

TICKETS OVER $10 FOR EVERY CONCERT SERIES

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, September 28, 2000
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Political Standoff?
We all lose

As is typical in Washington during election time, political infighting has led to a budgetary standoff between Republicans and Democrats.

The White House, which announced that the estimated budget surplus will be $230 billion yesterday, is now trying to get spending bills passed in Congress. As usual, opposition forces are trying to get the things they want to see money spend on passed.

So who's suffering?

The American people.

President Clinton warned yesterday against "throwing money away simply because we're close to an election." Republican candidate for President George W. Bush countered, saying he sees" our record surplus as a opportunity to save Social Security, provide families with tax relief, improve public education and extend our prosperity."

Unfortunately, nobody is using the money for much of anything right now. Only two of 13 spending bills that have to be done for the fiscal year 2001, which begins October 1. While legislation is pending for stopgap spending, the fact that politicians have been wasting so much time sniping at one another instead of working to solve problems is indicative of how bad things are.

Clinton claims that Republican spending plans are inappropriate; Republicans claim they are necessary.

Clinton wants to pay down the Federal debt. Republicans want to save problems to get votes.

And all politicians are trying to get home to participate in campaigns, thus creating the possibility that unacceptable legislation will be passed. What has happened that our government has fallen so far? These politicians care more about their own political lives than they do about their constituents and it's downright embarrassing. Money that's desperately needed by families and schools and hospitals and the poor and programs goes sitting in government accounts while our politicians play politics with one another.

We at the Collegian hope a light bulb will click for these politicians and they will realize that they were not sent to Washington for personal reasons, but rather to represent their constituents and the needs of Americans. Our government shouldn't be a playground for politicians but a breeding ground of successful legislation, the kind of legislation that helps get money to the people that needs it.

While that certainly is an idealistic view of Washington and how it should be, is it so unrealistic to hope that our politicians would do good things for all of us, being the voting public?

Or are we really the voting public? If these politicians want to waste our time and our resources, we need to see them removed from office, be them Democrat or Republican. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian absolutely hopes that politicians will face the wrath of voters who want to see changes in a government that is failing.

Militant RAs on parade

SAM WILKINSON

The Resident Assistants on this campus are upset. Hell, they're downright mad.

Greg Essopos wants to tell you about it. He's a former RA with a bone to pick and his pick happens to be a paper he wrote. Thirty pages of sort-of informative and, despite what he'll say, highly opinionated, writing, the paper presents empirical evidence about the mistreatment of Resident Assistants. The empirical evidence doesn't click with what he writes, but he still wants you to know about the plight of the RA.

At least, he did want you to know. When he stopped by our offices and talked with us, he gave us a copy of his oh-so-holy thesis paper that presented, in very uncertain terms, the life of the suffering RA. He promised us that we could use the paper as long we represented his paper in the best possible way. We could, in no way, suggest that anything could even possibly be wrong with it. Beyond that, he told us that we would have to have whatever we wrote read by someone associated with him to ensure that his paper was presented in said best possible light.

And that was the problem.

Ignoring the fact that we have other things we do here other than be the personal bitch of Greg Essopos, we continually got calls about "when are we going to run the article?" Unfortunately, the Collegian bastards that we are, did not write about the story as quickly as he would have liked, and he has since told us that not only does he wants his copy of the paper back, but also that we should never publish anything from it because it is plagiarism.

Ignoring the ridiculous claim that publishing something he wrote in quotes is somehow plagiarism (it isn't), Essopos planned, and he basically said so in his diatribe, to use the newspaper as a weapon against the University and, more importantly, Housing and Residential Life and the Center for Diversity and Development. After all, we're a student newspaper, surely we'll take students' side in everything.

Which is something, unfortunately for Essopos and other Resident Assistants, we aren't in the business of doing. But this newspaper isn't really the issue. That's more of a personal gripe of mine.

That said, his paper, while being decently researched, isn't that good. Instead of focusing on how students are negatively affected by disenfranchised RAs, he makes at least passing mention of his own experience ("Oh boo-hoo. I got in trouble because my RD sucked!"), but continually spins his own "empirical" numbers completely out of context. He buries answers that disproved his theories in thick language that suggested feelings other than the numbers indicated.

For example, a question: Are you aware that the RA Council can only recommend change- thus no power to create change?

Answer: "A majority of the RAs across campus are aware of this face. Although this was a yes or no answer, I received a lot of negative feedback from RAs regarding this issue."

Unfortunately, his own statements totally contradict this. If they knew it was weak, why the negative feedback? If there is negative feedback, where is it? A cynic might think that the lack of actual feedback in the paper suggests that Essopos was blowing it out of proportion. Rather than give specific examples, or more importantly, quote specific incidents or individuals, Essopos chose to rely on his own opinion.

His opinion doesn't matter.

He is one person.

For change to occur, it will take a lot more than Mr. Essopos.

And it isn't just his empirical evidence that runs into problems. His own opinions in the paper run into problems. Check out the following:

Although pay is not a primary concern, part of the issue is the fact that RAs are underpaid.

Well, either it is a "primary concern" or it isn't. Is it part of the issue or isn't it? There isn't a middle ground here, and one would tend to believe that, knowing UMass, the RAs are underpaid. If so, why isn't it a "primary concern" for RAs? Surely they must be furious over their pay if it's part of the issue. Or maybe they aren't furious, but Greg is.

Hell, in blurry graphics, somewhere close to seventy percent of Resident Assistants pound their chests and declare that they have been "frustrated" by their job. As opposed to most Americans who work for a living without complaint, Essopos declares with rage that "this shows that something could be done to make the position better, and hopefully more enjoyable."

Well, of course something could be done.

And Essopos does propose change, a better way, or any way at all, to appeal negative decisions made against RAs, better pay, and a union. And those are good suggestions, clearly. Workers always need to have the right to fight back against potentially oppressive employers, and the ability to unionize isn't, but should be, a God-given right.

Essopos, however, and some of his cronies still on campus, shouldn't be the ones leading the charge. The RA Council, clearly described in the Essopos paper as a complete and utter joke of an organization with no real power, isn't being led by anybody who's truly willing to take a risk.

Combine that with the thought that campus media is some sort of tool for the fight, and one wonders if these people have any plan at all. Chances are, they probably don't. And that lack of plan almost aggressively indicates just how little these people care about the garden variety RA. Their interest is personal, for Essopos especially.

He seems only interested in somehow getting a nick of revenge into the UMass armor, not in doing good for all RAs. He was more concerned with how his own paper looked in our pages than in any sort of cohesive movement. He's waging his personal war, and once he exacts enough flesh, he'll disappear and maybe send a check when it's fund drive time.

That said, for his followers on campus, here's a free hint. Any work done in the RAs best interest should be done in the RAs best interest. Too often movements on campus suffer under the heavy weight of individual ego; for RAs to get what they want, or to even get close to what they want, they have to find leadership that is united and interested in more than just personal grievances.

Greg Essopos isn't the person to lead that charge and his little paper isn't the item to base that charge on. He's too busy being interested in himself and how he's presented on campus to have any role at all. As for the current RA leadership, their ability to affect change is going to depend on how seriously they take Essopos. If they worship at his feet like they seem to be doing now, the attempt to better the life of the RA will burn like the Hindenburg.

And that really isn't going to get anyone anywhere.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

The Whitmore follies

I love fall at UMass! Its hustle and bustle gets my juices running and I feel sappily renewed. However, there is one particular fly in the ointment that gives me a royal seasonal pain in the gluteus maximus and that fly is called Whitmore – more precisely, the office of the Bursar and Registrar.

There seems to be a conspiracy among the employees of those administrative offices to annoy the snot out of students. When you finally make it to the desk at the Bursar's office, and you have nearly fainted from standing for eternity in a slow-moving line that has snaked around dividers and ends down the hall and around the corner, the representative ignores the fact that you are twitching from intense pain in your calves, plugs your personal data into the computer, and, without blinking an eye, announces "You need to see the registration department; we don't have you enrolled."

MARILYN J. CARDANO

It does not matter that you have a valid student ID or that you have a bill that would most certainly not be sent to the unenrolled public. To most intelligent people, this evidence would be a hint that you are indeed telling the truth and something had gone amiss form the administrative end. All the clerk would have to do to verify what you are telling her would be to pick up the phone and call the office of the Registrar, an efficient and merciful act which would take only a minute. However, this does not occur. Perhaps the Bursar's people are not on speaking terms with the Registrar's people. Whatever the reason, no call is made. It does not matter that you are fatigued beyond words and are about to keel over. She instructs you to go to the Registrar's office.

So you find yourself standing in another line and wishing you had a cell phone with you so you could call a pizzeria that delivers. You are weak from hunger as you have missed breakfast and lunch, playing the "line game." When you finally get to the face on the other side of the Registrar's desk, you are told, "Of course you are registered; you must go back to the Bursar's office and pay your bill." It makes you wonder if the University has a "hire a moron" policy at Whitmore. Why can't anyone simply just pick up the phone? I cannot tell you how many times I have had to endure this type of insanity over the past four years, usually because of some error made by some computer 'genius' in the administration building. I once lost my parking lot privileges because some computer guru erroneously entered that I had withdrawn from the University when I switched from night to day school, and it was I who had to move heaven and earth to get it back! May the fleas of a thousand camels crawl up his nose!

I think the student body should protest. We are, after all, consumers. We pay to go to school; our tuition ultimately pays the salaries of these dolts. I dream of rounding up all the smug little people behind those desks and make them stand in an inane line for hours on end and then make then stand in another, then another, until they develop fallen arches and varicose veins. Perhaps they would then be more willing to help the people for whom they are employed to help.

This year the problem lay not in paying my bill, but with not receiving it. A week before classes began, I decided to beat them at their own game. I would call the Bursar's office. No lines for me this year! I picked up the phone, dialed, and got disconnected before any 'hello' even went forth on the line. I redialed and got a busy signal. Several redialings later, I got an unidentified cretin – ever notice that almost never does anyone in that building gives their name when answering the phone? Immediately the cretin pronounces that I am not enrolled for any classes. I told him that I most certainly am registered, and that I had received a blue confirmation schedule of these classes three weeks before. I was advised to call the Registrar's office. Could the Bursar's employee offer to transfer me or call on my behalf? The answer was a resounding 'no!' This person lacked the intelligence to pick up the phone and do anything appropriate with it. He was probably the person who kept disconnecting my calls.

I call the Registrar's office. The person answering the phone was a seemingly-intelligent woman who, after taking my person information, told me to call the Bursar's office. "I have just called them," I wailed, "and they told me to call you." The Registrar's woman then said "Wait a minute," and before I could protest, she had put me into that dead space called 'hold.' After fifteen minutes had elapsed, I realized that I had been duped into believing that I had been speaking to a person who could tell time. Then, without so much as a beep, I was again disconnected as a canned voice said: "The number you have dialed is not in service, hang up and dial again." The voice had that right – the number I had dialed was definitely not in service! No one there seemed to be 'in service.' By now, I have spent more then an hour on the phone playing 'phone relay and disconnect,' I have gotten absolutely nowhere. After several follow-up calls where there was 'nobody home,' I finally reached intelligent life who, within seconds, was able to tell me what I already knew – that I am indeed an enrolled student and she actually addressed the problem which I had initially called for – my bill.

How foolish of me to think that I could beat the system and call from home for such a simple matter. I live an hour away and thought I could save time and gas by using the telephone. I though I could spare myself the mental anguish of having to stand in a ridiculous line for information that took seconds to produce. I had not banked that Whitmore had made and alternative to the 'line game.' Whitmore had won. I had lost precious time with their ridiculous ineptness, and the money I had saved on gas was lost to the long-distance phone bill. As for my sanity, I'd nearly lost that too, having to deal with the witless people who work at Whitmore.

Marilyn J. Cardano is a Collegian staff member.

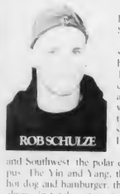
Hill v/s the tower



ROB SCHULZE

There is a big difference between Orchard Hill and Southwest.

Sure, everyone's heard the stereotypes about the various housing areas on campus. There's Sylvian, home of crime, hatred, and unexpressable weirdness. Northeast is where clueless freshman and those who love the sound of silence go to dwell. Central? Hippies. 'Nuff said.

Then there are Orchard Hill and Southwest: the polar opposites of the UMass campus. The Yin and Yang, the Homer and Flanders, the hot dog and hamburger, the penis and vagina, standing always in total contrast to each other. Orchard Hill is home of the honor students, the computer geeks, the sexually frustrated, the Dungeons and Dragons people, the Zima-drinkers. Southwest is where you will find the jocks and Abercrombie girls, the partiers, the sexually promiscuous, the quarters people, the Natty Ice drinkers.

These are both stereotypes, of course. Having lived in both on the Hill and in Southwest, I can now say that, though the above is obviously exaggerated, there are still great differences between the two places.

I prefer Southwest.

The single most striking difference between Orchard Hill and Southwest has nothing to do with alcohol, noise, insanity, geekiness, or anything like that. It has to do with elevators.

In two years on Orchard Hill, in two different buildings, a stranger never once spoke to me in an elevator. Myself and whoever else would get in, press our buttons, stare at the wall, and then get off at our respective floors.

In a month in Southwest, I have had at least a minor conversation about half the time I've been in the elevator. Be it about the weather, the general crappiness of the elevator, the Sox, or any number of other things, people talk in these elevators. Strangers exchange words, greeting, smiles. When you get off at your floor, the other riders will say 'see you later' or something similar. It makes your day a little happier.

Little things like that distinguish Southwest. People are social. They talk to each other.

That didn't happen on Orchard Hill. Now, you could say that I'm just a personally repulsive person and that's why no one ever talked to me, but I base this on observation as well as my personal experience. No one ever talked to anyone. It was a total clique-based system up there – you talked to the people in your little group and pretended the rest of humanity didn't exist.

I lived on Orchard Hill for two years and made a grand total of three friends that I still see. I've lived in Southwest for a month, and there are just so many cool people that I wish I could hang out with more often. The cliques just aren't as pronounced down here, the people that much more open-minded.

Southwest is laid-back. The Hill has a stick up its ass. Also.

The windows in Southwest actually open.

It isn't always a million degrees in the rooms.

Only one RA per floor – let the good times roll.

Count 'em – two DC's without any real walking.

Ample, close-by parking.

Now, to be fair, I will admit that there are things that I really liked about Orchard Hill that are lacking in Southwest. Southwest is ugly. The Hill has things like grass, chipmunks, woods, etc. that are very lacking here in the concrete jungle. There is a men's room on each floor. If you ever need computer help you just have to knock on any random door and ask the person who answers – chances are they know how to fix it. Balconies are lovely on hot days. The hallways are just a lot more welcoming. I think it might have something to do with the width, or the ceiling or something, but they just look a lot less like prison than Southwest does.

Know what, though? All that physical stuff means nothing next to the fact that the atmosphere of Southwest is simply great. This is how college is supposed to feel – fun. Even though about a million more people live here, more people know each other – and that fact cannot be overestimated. Life in Southwest is a lot more relaxed, a lot more drunk, a lot more happy.

Sorry, Hill, but you lose. Hey, at least you've still got your computer porn.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian columnist.

You're invited to the Prudential Securities Investment Banking Presentation for Analysts.

Thursday
September 28th,
6:00 pm, Alumni House
Amherst College.

For more information visit our website at:
www.prudentialsecurities.com/investment_banking/careers.htm

Prudential Securities

©9/00 Prudential Securities Incorporated. Member SIPC
Prudential Securities Incorporated is an Equal Opportunity Employer (M/F/D/V)

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

Friday UMass based jam-band Ruby Dune moves to the big time, on stage at the Iron Horse. With an eclectic list of musicals influences that include Phish, Herbie Hancock, Bela Fleck, and Neil Peart, the band has established a name for itself on campus with performances at Fill the Hill and Van Meter.

For an evening of ass shaking and solid performances by truly talented musicians, stop by the Iron Horse. The band hits the stage at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the door.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct. 28;
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Abstract Notions: thru Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Scatterlings: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Paul Stopforth
Opening reception: Sept. 17, 2-5 p.m.
Hampden Gallery, UMass

Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community: thru Oct. 17
Work by various artists
Opening reception Sept. 19, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House, UMass

New Abstraction: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Benjamin Shohan
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Central Gallery, UMass

MUSIC

Party by the Pond
Sept. 30, 5 p.m.
Campus Pond

David Wilcox
plus Jennifer Kimball
Sept. 28, 7 p.m.
Iron Horse

Rane
plus Joint Custody
Sept. 29, 10 p.m.
Iron Horse

Brad Mehldau
Sept. 29, 7 p.m.
Iron Horse

Addison Groove Project & Ruby Dune
Sept. 29, 10 p.m.
Iron Horse

Susan Werner
plus Ruthie Foster
Sept. 30, 7 p.m.
Iron Horse

Josh Rouse
plus Lo-Fine
Sept. 30, 10 p.m.
Iron Horse

THEATRE/DANCE

Ratan Thiyam's Chorus Repertory Theater
Uttar-Priyadarshi: The Final Beautitude
Sept. 28, 7:30 p.m.
Concert Hall

Shakespeare Workshop
By the UMass Theater Guild
Sept. 30, 10:30-5:00 p.m.
Campus Center Room 163

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9133
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8455
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Sept. 28, 9 p.m.
Skybox

Comedian Michael Koleman
Sept. 28, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Mission Improvable
Sept. 30, 8 p.m.
Iron Horse

Campus Center Room 163

Off the Couch: Teens Challenge the Media
Oct. 4, 7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery

ATTENTION!

Hey, you! Yeah, you with the local event you've been thinking about printing up some posters for. The Source is here and ready to give you FREE advertising. So get yourself and detailed information down to the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center. Or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com.

COURTESY KIM MARC KOLEMAN

Comedian Michael Koleman will be at the Campus Center Auditorium tonight at 8:00p.m.

Write for Arts!

Low Student Airfares

Eurailpasses

More Than 100 Departure Cities

Study Abroad

student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT

studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

1 800 CONTACTS®
We deliver. You save.™

Exact same contact lenses, delivered to your dorm, for less than you're paying now.

ORDER OVER THE PHONE
We will walk you through it:
1 800 CONTACTS

ORDER ON THE INTERNET
Free shipping on web orders:
CONTACTS.com

All New. All Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
free T-shirt

No Brainer.
$500 cash
MadAdz.com hooked me up.

Four Seasons
CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS
WINE & LIQUOR

OTTER CREEK Case 24 btls $18.99+ dep	SARANAC Case 24 btls $18.99+ dep	ICEHOUSE 30 pack cans $12.99+ dep	Tailgating Special!! Saturday Only! FREE 10 lbs ICE With every case
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 pack cans $11.99+ dep	PABST Case 24 btls $9.49+ dep	BLUEMOON 12 pack btls $9.99 + dep	FREE 5 lbs ICE With every 12 pack
LOWENBRAU 12 pack btls $9.99 + dep	TWO DOGS 6 pack btls $4.99 + dep	B.B.C. 64 oz growler $4.99 + dep

Subtract 10/3/00

533 Russell St (RTE 9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon - Sat 9am - 11pm
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, MasterCard and Visa accepted
Not Responsible for typographical errors ID's checked by Legal Age Software

■ football

continued from page 5

The Dramas

1. VARSITY BLUES
In Dawson Leary's finest hour, he takes over at quarterback, stops his whining about Joey, puts on a hilarious Southern accent, and turns down a whipcream bikini to lead his high school team to victory. Just an all-out fun film, even if it's not exactly the Schindler's List of high school football movies. Jon Voight is superb as the evil head coach.
Classic Lines: "Ah don't wahnt your life!"
Amount of Football Actually in Film: Average amount.
Quality of Football Scenes: Superb. Among the best ever filmed.

2. JERRY MAGUIRE
Not really a football movie, but also a sports agent movie, a love story, and a comedy. Sure, we've all seen this 100 times, but can you possibly get tired of Jerry Maguire? It's perhaps the all-time greatest rental movie, for its sheer ability to keep absolutely everyone satisfied.
Classic Lines: Something about money, and showing it, or something.
Amount of Football Actually in Film: Very little, but lots of football material.
Quality of Football Scenes: Superb. The closing game with Rod Tidwell being hit looks exactly like watching it on TV.

3. ALL THE RIGHT MOVES
Another Tom Cruise film, this one from way back in 1983 – but it still holds up to the test of time. Think of it as a grittier, more realistic Varsity Blues. Cruise plays a high school cornerback looking to get a scholarship to get out of his small Pennsylvania town, and Lea Thompson of Back to the Future plays his girlfriend. Good stuff.
Classic Lines: "Show me the money!" (Oh, sorry, wrong movie)
Amount of Football Actually in Film: Fair amount.
Quality of Football Scenes: Good for 1983, meaning really, really bad for 2000.

4. ANY GIVEN SUNDAY
Oliver Stone gives the IFK treatment to pro football, meaning it's overdone, overblown and overwritten. But that's perfect for football. Problem is, Stone forgot to write a script for the movie, and his film is largely a collection of set pieces and scenes that have no cohesive whole. The ending, incredibly powerful, digresses into pandering by the credits.
Classic Lines: The whole Willie Beamon rap song.
Amount of Football Actually in Film: Lots.
Quality of Football Scenes: Mixed. Sometimes the camera captures some of the most amazing sports images ever captured on film, and sometimes it looks more jittery and incoherent than The Blair Witch Project.

■ sports

continued from page 5

from the horny kicker, to the bloodthirsty linebacker and the strip club cheerleaders.

Finally, it must just come down to the one big game. This is the same in every movie – the need make it to the play-offs or to win the championship game which will save the player/coach/owner's career. And each movie preaches the same philosophy: It doesn't really matter if they win or lose, but as long as the spirit of the team is exemplified in the last play that is the "hero shot."

Football can be seen as the physical interpretation of the human spirit. The battle of the gridiron utilizes raw emotions and primordial urges. To play must be awesome, but for those of us who can't play, watching is the next best thing. Any movie that successfully recreates or realistically portrays the game of giants gives us mortals the chance to live like titans.

Phoenix releases eclectic treat

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PHOENIX
United
Astralwerks

We all know that feeling when you hear a song that you remember from when you were a kid, and hearing it again when you're older makes you realize it's pretty damn good. You loved the song in the 80s when you were young, but you haven't thought much about it since then, and bam! It's back in your life. In college, this scenario results in you skipping class and downloading the song off Napster, and listening to it over and over again.

Phoenix knows this feeling very well, and they've taken the time to create that feeling ten times for you on their release United. The only difference is you've never heard these songs before. Even though you're suuuure you've heard them, these are all brand-new, big-hearted retro hugs to the 80s.

But Phoenix is a French band, you see, so these hugs come with a little extra squeeze of chic house music, direct from the land of Daft Punk and Air. The French connection is strong: members of Cassius and Daft Punk produce and play keyboards on the album, and in their earlier days the band worked as the backing band for Air. The band, Thomas Mars on vocals, Deck D'Arcy on bass, and guitarist Christian Mazzalai, earned a spot on the Parisian label Source's compilation disc.

Phoenix doesn't try to be cool or hip, and of course by doing so they become inevitably that. Their most endearing quality is catchy songwriting, and the adventurous spirit to let the song take them along for the ride, to let it guide them to whatever music fits, whether it is house, synth pop, or good old-fashioned rock. "Funky Squaredance" is the perfect example of this. A bouncy, twangy country beat accompanies the oddly vocoded voice that opens the nine-minute song, but by the end of it the listener is a long way from home. The boys twist, to memorable effect, a vocal sample of the song title repeatedly, which makes one wonder if just maybe they have heard "Around the World." Of course, Daft Punk tribute and radical genre-shifting mid-song wouldn't work if it wasn't natural, and somehow, by the time the heavy metal solo (!) rolls around, one is more than willing to go anywhere Phoenix may take them.

If "Funky Squaredance" sounds a little too left field for your tastes, don't despair. The majority of the album consists of and first-class rock and pop songs. "School's Rule" is a pretty rocking opener, and "Party Time" is downright punk at two minutes and fourteen seconds. Phoenix may remind you of Ween in that they can shift styles, but in the end, the song is always good, and you can tell that is what is most important to them. "Too Young" and "If I Ever Feel Better" are such great songs, you feel cool just listening to them. You can't help but dig the silky bass of the latter and the wounded vocals of the former. The beautiful sax of "Definitive Breaks" brings the album to its classy, concise close, even if you wish it could go on much longer.

United isn't an album recommended to fans of specific musical genres. It's recommended to music fans in general. This brilliant album has a lot to offer and Phoenix more than earns its place among the heralded French company it keeps.

Boyz II Men and girls II annoyance

MAGIC 12
Dear Diary
Dahlia Records

Magic 12's songs lie somewhere between folk, classical, and rock; it's the sort of coffee shop music you'd get if you found a coffee shop big enough to hold a piano, organ, and drum kit. Neither of those descriptions probably does much to tell you what, precisely, the band sounds like, but their music, once you hear it, is immediately familiar and accessible.

Magic 12 is fronted by Toby Ingalls, who sounds a little too much like James Taylor for his own good, but can't be faulted with failing to match styles with the warm, inviting songwriting. The band's musical centerpiece comes from pianist Beth Heilsberg, who also doubles adequately as backup vocalist, Guitar, bass, and drums complete the lineup.

From the feel-good "Long Walk Home" to the equally feel-good "Sweet Refrain" to the just as feel-good "Fallen Star," the songs on Dear Diary aren't particularly innovative, but they hit the mark for enjoyable music that won't make you think too much. Arrangements are kept simple and organic, with only a few moments of odd effects and studio trickery breaking.

Makes a good gift for Mom or Dad. (David Troupes)

BOYZ II MEN
Nathan, Michael, Shawn, Wanya
Universal Records

In between the sucky New Kids on the Block and the even suckier Backstreet Boys there was Boyz II Men, the most vocally talented boy band ever. Three of the top 5 longest number one songs belong to BIIM.

Now the quartet's back with Nathan, Michael, Shawn, Wanya and want to show the world they're a manband – but after three years will the world care?

The album is almost entirely self-produced with some exceptions, like the obviously produced by She'kspere "Beautiful." BIIM start on a sour note because this track is so much like She'kspere's other joints one feels the urge to sing Pink's "There you Go."

Other uptempo songs have mixed results. She'kspere redeems himself with "Good Guy" and also brings BIIM to the new millennium, but "Dance, Shake, Move, Swing" is awkward in that it sounds like Janet Jackson's "Throb" from 1993. This is one attempt that is outdated and beneath the Men.

"What the Deal" gets Boyz II Men back on track by reminding us these guys have the sone very butta voices. Along with tracks "Never Go Away" and " Do You Remember" is also reminds us that BIIM's previous collaborators, Babyface and Jimmy Iam & Terry Lewis, are absent and sorely missed. In attempting to mature by producing themselves, they fail to utilize their incredible vocal talents to the heights we have heard on previous albums.

"Pass You By" the CD's first single and "Thank You In Advance" the CD's best song, come close. "Know What You Want" is Babyface-esque in its sultry and lush rhythms.

While this Nathan, Michael, Shawn, Wanya will not surpass Cooley High Harmony or II or even the terribly underrated Evolution in quality (or sales), diehard R&B heads are sure to be pleased. But longtime Boyz II Men followers will be left wanting. (Lenny Holston)

INNOSENSE
So Together
RCA Records

Due to the severe lack of teen pop music, RCA Records brings us So Together by Innosense. In the spirited musical tradition of The Spice Girls, Innocence is a group made up of 5 late-teen and twenty-something attractive (hot) girls. Apparently, with the huge success of boy bands like Backstreet Boys, NSync etc, (2gether is not a boy band, but rather has transcended boy bands to become quite possibly the greatest band ever) it was someone's bright idea to make a girl band. I can just picture the board meeting where some 45-year-old overweight record executive came up with the idea for Innosense. "You know, now that we have taken over the world with box bands, what the world needs now is GIRL BANDS! (followed by sinister evil laugh). However, while boy bands follow a rigid mold of the shy one, the young one, the rebel etc. Innocence seems to be only made up of two types of girls, "the hot one", and "the surgically enhanced one".

Speaking of surgically enhanced, Britney Spears was actually offered a role in Innosense, but she turned down the offer. Instead she decided to start a group with her two best friends. Innosense is made up of former Mickey Mouse Club members, and former high school classmates of NSyncers Lance Bass and Joey Fatone. This supports my theory that all of these teen pop icons actually are produced in some lab in Orlando, Florida. Shortly after they hatch they attend school together, join the Mickey Mouse Club, or maybe star in a McDonalds commercial or two before they are unleashed on the world.

Innosense's names are Nikki, Danay, Mandy, Veronica, and Jenny, but who really cares? As an album So Together sounds strikingly like a Spice Girls album. Quite simply, Innocence is the Spice Girls on crack. The press packet for Innosense boasts that all of the songs on the album have a different feel, because "When you listen to the album, you don't want to hear the same song over and over again." Yeah right. Every song this album sounds like the one before it. All of the tracks are basically what one would expect: light R&B, pop, dance beats that are packaged and radio ready.

However these songs are quite simply too boring ever to be hits. It doesn't get much more unoriginal than titles such as "This Is It" or "I Wish," although I will give them a few points for "www.fan-tase.com". The track starts off making the usual young upper modem makes when you connect to the Internet... brilliant. The press packet also states that the girls took a hands-on approach to songwriting and producing on the album" (wink wink). In reality they didn't write or produce any song on the entire album because they have the songwriting talent of a group of chimpanzees. One plus of the album is that all of the tracks are short, so at least they didn't have the audacity to think they could write anything longer than a 4 minute song. If you're not a 8-14 year old girl, I wouldn't recommend this album for you. Also, if you have any taste in music I wouldn't recommend this album to you. They told me that we shouldn't give the albums grades anymore, which means I won't be able to give this album an F. (Kurt Polanski)

DAR WILLIAMS
The Green World
Razor & Tie

Depending on which musical circles you walk in, Dar Williams is either royalty or a no-name. She belongs to the same network of new-folk artists as the Nields and Moxy Fruvous, for which Northampton is a cornerstone of support and enthusiasm. The mainstream music industry, however, has been regrettably blind to these acts, and so whatever success they have achieved has been through grass roots self-promotion, winning fans one concert at a time.

And so, the music. As commercially separated as Dar may be from comparable top 40 artists, on The Green World she's doing her darndest to close the gap musically. The songs are highly polished and produced in classic Lilith Fair style; notwithstanding the texturally beautiful intro, the opening track, "Playing to the Firmament," sounds like any number of Sarah McLachlan sound-alikes. Which isn't to say it's not a good song with excellent vocals, charming lyrics, and fine musicianship, because it is. But there's a thin layer of insincerity visible below the polish, as if liking this album resigns one to buying everything Paula Cole's put out.

Songs like "We Learned the Sea," with little more than soft finger picking and a pleasant string arrangement, help to change things up and return us to the realm of true singer/songwriter fair, and the banjo on "Another Mystery" is another appreciated gesture towards her roots in acoustic music.

There's no doubt that Dar fans will love The Green World. The rest of us, however, might want to start our collection with earlier releases. (David Troupes) significant others

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Plan on visiting our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

Low Student Airfares

Eurailpasses

More Than 100 Departure Cities

Study Abroad

student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT

studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

The PGA Tour Q-School:
The most grueling event in sports

"Twas the night before the sixth day of the final stage of the 2000 PGA Tour Qualifying school and all I could think of was the day before – not a flagstick stood dormant, another round with a haphazard score. I couldn't sleep; the swelling tension – I began to pull out my hair. If only I was back Nicklaus... I wouldn't have been there."

The aforementioned quote is fiction – but only because the event in context has yet to officially begin, therefore making it impossible to extract a statement like this from one of the many infamous non-qualifiers...

So, for all of you fans of sport, this column is long overdue – you know about the Super Bowl. And you know what the World Series is... You might even comprehend the undertakings that encircle the Indianapolis 500. But right now, I'm going to make the assumption that less than half of you have even an inkling of what goes on during the stages of the PGA Tour Qualifying Tournament.

Let's just put it this way: You lose the Super Bowl, you still get paid. You miss a two-footer in qualifying school, you're nose deep in tomorrow's classifieds.

And that's the reality of all this.

The 2000 PGA Tour Qualifying Tournament, which takes place in three stages, will commence in October and run into the month of December. The final stage of Q- School will be played at PGA West in La Quinta, CA, from Nov. 29th to Dec. 4th.

It's this stranglehold that's going to take place in La Quinta that I'm talking about – if you 're eliminated before that – you really shouldn't have quit your day job.

The Q-School is the ticket to the PGA Tour. It's the key to golfing ecstasy and for many – it's what they've been working toward since they sank their first birdie putt.

ERIC SODERSTROM

But, let it be known that it's the toughest, most taxing event in sports. Why? Because it makes grown men cry. And in no way am I making a mockery of it. Sending in your application to the PGA is down right admirable. Last year, forty players surfaced from the PGA's version of 'Survivor' with their playing privileges for 2000. This year, forty more will-and what makes things more interesting is that many of the players who went through last year's torment will be back for more damnation.

So let me lay out the Q-School format:

It consists of three stages in which the number of finalists is narrowed down to around 169 (That's how many made it that far last year).

The low 35 scorers and ties earn their PGA Tour card.

The next 60 finishers gain exempt status on the Buy.com Tour (The Buy.com Tour is the minor leagues of golf).

The remaining players become non-exempt members of the Buy.com Tour.

It's a week that makes the Iditarod seem like a few days on the beach. It's just the individual golfer against 108 holes from hell (I know, I'm beating the "difficult" metaphor to death, so what). But that's the secret – keeping all of the Q-School nightmarish campfire stories out of your head. Because if you can do that, then you're one up on the field. Bogeys are unacceptable. Over par rounds: have a safe flight home.

The story behind this tournament is the one of the actual persona behind the golfer trying to pursue a professional career in golf. Many of these golfers have left financially stable jobs so that they can practice every day of the week – to basically live on the driving range, the putting green, and the golf course. Many of these men have wives and children. And most of them don't make the cut. That's just how it is.

This year, when the Q-School heads to the PGA West (Jack Nicklaus Tournament Course and Private Course), dreams will be shattered. But more significantly, lives will be altered forever. And to think, it's just a game.

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian Columnist.

As NBC folds, Jones shooting for five golds

By Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the sixth installment of a seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000.

Welcome to the main event. NBC is ready to rumble.

The first half of Olympic track and field competition has been filled with all the drama and adversity that the network could hope to pack into a few hours a night. And then some. The Three M's (as in Marion, Mo and Michael, not Musketeers) have arrived as the saviors to boost NBC's mediocre ratings and mercifully perk up the proud peacock's feathers. But can America's Big Three even salvage these games and the lack of national viewership? Can the colossal hype that's reached the moon and back compensate for the detrimental time difference? Or is the mainstream audience just eagerly anticipating the start of all new "Must See TV?" Whatever the outcome may be, Costas and company are down to their last prayer.

This past Sunday, it looked like that prayer could be answered. Superstars Marion Jones, Maurice "Mo" Greene and Michael Johnson have delivered on their promises, and the best is yet to come. In ancient times, the gods who inhabited Mount Olympus would have held these mere mortals in the highest regard. It's not difficult to envision them gazing down from the summit in awe at the athletes defying the laws of physics below them. Humans weren't meant to fly. But these three can.

Four-time Olympic gold medalist Johnson, the man with the Midas touch, will bow out of Sydney in grand fashion, ending his individual Olympic career on the highest note. He'll leave with the distinction of prevailing as Olympic champion, an epithet that no one was able to dethrone him of.

Becoming the first man to successfully defend a 400-meters Olympic title, Johnson raced down to the wire with teammate Alvin Harrison in the final Monday night at Olympic Stadium, finishing in 43.84 seconds and adding another medal to his ever-expanding collection of golds, which includes two from Atlanta, one from Barcelona, and nine world championship medals. Harrison's time of 44.40 earned him the silver, while Jamaica's Gregory Haughton won bronze in 44.70.

Johnson will run his last race on Saturday, when he anchors the American men's 1,600 meters relay team. He will finish in the same race for which he tasted Olympic gold for the first time eight years ago.

Two-time world champion and world record holder in the 100-meters, Greene arrived in Sydney determined to avenge his deplorable performance at the '96 Olympic Trials, where he failed to qualify for Atlanta in any event. Four years later, Greene is indisputably the world's fastest man-his world record stands at 9.79 seconds.

On Saturday, he found the ultimate redemption in the 100 finals, winning his first gold in 9.87 seconds. Greene's training partner, Ato Boldon, of Trinidad and Tobago finished in 9.99 for the silver, improving on the bronze he won in 1996. Obadele Thompson of Barbados took the bronze with a time of 10.04.

Greene will anchor the heavy favored U.S. men's 400 relay later this week. Joining him are Jon Drummond, Bernard Williams, Tim Montgomery, Brian Lawis and Kenny Brokenburr. Drummond was part of the 400 team that won silver in Atlanta, and he ran the lead leg for the relay team that won gold at the 1999 World Championships, which included Greene, Lewis and Montgomery. At the Olympic trials, Lewis was fourth and Brokenburr fifth in the 100, and Williams is the reigning NCAA 100 champion for the University of Florida.

The archetypal modern day female athlete, the 24-year-old Jones has already lived up to the enormous expectancy surrounding her, as well. Anointed America's next golden girl before these games even began, she is audacious in both performance and personality. In fact, she was a large factor in creating the hype when she announced last year her intentions to compete in five events in the games, and win them all. Four track and field gold medals would be the most dominant performance by a woman at the Olympics in more than 50 years, but she's shooting for an unprecedented five. She's looking to be the greatest Olympic sprinter of all time, on par with the likes of Jesse Owens and Carl Lewis. Only she wants to go where no man, nor woman, has ever gone before.

And it's one down, four to go. On Saturday, Jones cruised to an easy win in the 100-meters final, with a time of 10.75 seconds, the second largest margin of victory in Olympic history. Ekaterini Tharou of Greece narrowly edged Tanya Lawrence of Jamaica for the silver, in 11.12 and 11.18 seconds, respectively. She not only won, she proved that she is heads and tails above an outclassed field. The rest of the world is out of her league. Next she'll take on the 200 meters, 400 meter relay (where the U.S. is the favorite), 1,600 meter relay, and the long jump. In the first round of the 200 meters on Wednesday, Jones finished first in her heat, with a time of 22.75 seconds.

However, the biggest test for Jones now is not physical, but emotional. When it was announced Monday night that husband and shot put world champion C. J. Hunter tested positive four times for steroids, it overshadowed the aftermath of her first triumph. Now she must face the prospect of a more daunting task. How she will overcome the inevitable controversy and scandal that has erupted in the wake of the announcement to maintain her focus and pursue the rest of her quest remains to be seen. More importantly, how she will respond in her performances to what is speculated to be betrayal on Hunter's part and evident incognizance on her part is yet to be answered. This untimely news, coupled with the contentious drug testing by the International Olympics Committee (IOC) that have plagued these games, has changed the tide. Jones is still the clear favorite, but if she succeeds in her pursuit, her games will be remembered for her husband's disgrace as well.

Women's Crew put boats in the water

By Michael Ames and Katie Landers
Collegian Correspondents

The leaves are changing but the boats are back in the water. The UMass women's crew team is coming off its fifth straight Bell Atlantic 10 Women's Rowing Title from the 2000 season. With practices having started three weeks ago the Minutewomen are seeing six new faces. UMass has a new assistant coach and five new athletes from far and wide to be apart of the UMass legacy.

Maroon and White alum Wendy Wilbur is the new assistant coach that will help lead the Minutewomen into the 2001 season. Wilbur, a Communications and Sociology major, graduated in 1995. She received her masters in Labor Studies in 1997 while serving as a graduate assistant for women's crew. She was one of the top ten rowers to come out of UMass and was apart of the first varsity program to win a Champion International Regatta (1995). Serving as team captain in 1996, she later joined the '97-'98 U.S. National Team Women's Eight. This past summer she was a finalist for the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia, just missing the cut for the team. Wilbur is a seven time gold medallist at the U.S. National Championship.

The five new recruits include Lauren Cromwell, Kristin Keller, Kate O'Brien, Ekaterina Prokopenko, and Kristen Wakefield.

Cromwell, from Missoula, Montana, excelled in various high school sports and has been recognized for her athletic talent. Keller, a student from Ithaca, NY, rowed for six years as a member of the Cascadilla Boat Club and the Ithaca High School team. Kate O'Brien, from Shrewsbury, served as a four-year member of her high school crew team, and was the captain senior year. Last year she was also MVP and receiver of the 2000 Cliff Fountain Award for dedication and excellence in crew. Prokopenko, hailing from Russia, is a junior transfer from the Lesgalt State Academy of Physical Education. She was a member of the 1996 Russian National Championship boat. Wakefield, a native to Australia, was the youngest woman for the New South Wales State Youth Team in 2000. She was also named 1997 and 1999 Lindesfaine Anglican High School Athlete of the Year.

O'Brien and Wakefield were enthusiastic about the start of the preseason; a race is scheduled for this Sunday.

"I am excited for this weekend's race because I've rowed there before and I know the course well," O'Brien said.

All of the freshmen, who row the novice boat, have been described as varying in levels of experience. Athletes new to the sport are learning the skills quickly to become part of the UMass rowing legacy. The new team members were depicted by Wakefield to be a close-knit group of girls, enjoying a family situation during their training. Hailing all the was from the other side of the world, Wakefield admitted to being nervous, but is enjoying a group environment, as she was a part of a two-man boat in the past.

The upcoming preseason is expected to be as highly competitive as it has been in the past. UMass' first race, The Head of the Textile will take place this Sunday in Lowell.

Sports Meeting Tonight at 6pm In Newsroom

■ Polo

continued from page 12

tournament, where UMass enjoyed its best finish ever after upsetting a trio of ranked opponents. He cited the school's refusal to grant him a full-time position as the main reason for his departure.

UMass Athletic Director Bob Marcum said that Heinel's appointment was more the result of an opportunity to improve the program than anything else.

"In college athletics, additions are more or less based on resources," Marcum said. "Right now, the available resources are being used to build this exciting and growing program. Donna had contributed a great deal already, and so we are pleased to have her filling this position."

A native of Philadelphia, Heinel graduated cum laude from Springfield College in 1987 and will be completing her master's degree in exercise physiology at UMass in December.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6 Special offers on

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

Eye Care Services

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

"I invite you to use the

w w w . d a i l y c o l l e g i a n . c o m

Don't Fall For The Rest ...Our Prices Are The Best!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING

1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB ULTRA, BUD ICE $41.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $34.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER ON ALL PLUGS $82.99 + dep

COORS LIGHT & COORS 30 PACK $16.49 + dep
MILWAUKEE'S BEST 30 PACK $9.99 + dep; 6 PACK ALL TYPES $8.99 + dep
FOSTER'S LAGER 12 PACK $8.99 + dep
HARPOON CASE ALL TYPES $19.49 + dep
CIDER JACK HARD CIDER 6 PACK ALL FLAVORS $4.99 + dep

WINES OF THE MONTH
BUENA VISTA CALIFORNIA WINES $7.99 + dep
PETER VELLA $9.99
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO $9.49
TWIN VALLEY GALLO WINE CELLARS $6.99
GEORGE DUBOEUF BEAUJOLAIS VILLAGES $5.49
CORBETT CANYON WHITE ZINFANDEL $4.99
MANISCHEWITZ WINES $2.99

POPOV VODKA $12.49
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM & PARROT BAY RUM $10.49
FLEISCHMANN'S GIN $11.99
EZRA BROOKS BOURBON 90 PROOF $18.49
CUTTY SARK SCOTCH $25.99
KENNEDY'S BLENDED WHISKEY $10.49

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 9/28/00 THRU WEDS. 10/4/00

PART-TIME POSITIONS

Located on the PVTA bus route, we offer convenient schedules to those looking to do some part-time office work.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE
Duties include gathering materials for mailing, packing boxes, copying papers, and other clerical tasks. Those selected need to be able to work at least 3 consecutive hours between 9 AM and 5 PM on workdays. Hours are available now.

WORD PROCESSING TECHNICIAN
This position requires word processing skills and attention to detail. Experience using Microsoft Word 97 for Windows will be helpful in working with our other word processing staff to complete a document conversion project. Both full-time and part-time temporary positions are available.

Call 413-256-0444 to have an application mailed to you

NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC.
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226

EOE

Styles by Deborah proudly announces
New Spa Services featuring All Natural Skin Care Products

- Luxury Facials
- Spa Pedicures
- Body Waxing
- Manicures

65 University Drive, Amherst • 549-5610

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE

NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST

WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE

THURSDAY - The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENTS featuring DJ Frez spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
FRIDAY & SATURDAY - The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house spun by SVE productions DJ's Frez, Creme, Uneek, & DJ

Now Featuring
Bud + Bud Light Pitchers $6.00
Domestic Beer Bottles $2.25
Red Devil + Vodka $6.00
This week's drink special is Rum + Coke $2.50

Come enjoy our outdoor patio • bar

LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 259-1100

resources
We've got you covered

HUMAN SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES

- FLEXIBILITY
- Competitive Pay
- Temp
- Temp to Perm
- Career Opportunities
- Vacation

Immediate openings for experienced direct care relief staff working with a variety of populations in Western Mass. Days, evenings and overnights.

Car necessary.

'CALL TODAY 1-800-639-5094

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Extended Rush!! Come help domestic violence make care packages with the sisters of Alpha Chi Omega from 6pm to 8pm RSVP 549-9190

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Now leasing 2 bedroom apartments. FREE HEAT/HOT WATER, Fully applianced kitchen, designer bath On PVTA busline. Call 665-3856

AUTO FOR SALE

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

91 Ford Taurus Black, 90k, 4dr, cruise, power windows Call 549-5230 $2200

1994 VW Passat GLX, 5spd VR 6, dark green, 6 disc, cd, phone, loaded $6200 obo 549-1553

Honda Accord 92 two door, 5-speed, sun roof, 124k, runs great. Asking $4100 665-8616

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8), excellant condition, 86K, loaded; power windows-seat-mirrors -locks; a/c, peppy V6 3.8 L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker. $4500 or b/o 508-836-3753

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1988 Honda Beater Looks bad Runs good, $700 firm. Call Todd 545-4066

CHILDCARE

Afterschool childcare needed in Amherst home, 2 children, M, T, Th 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30 - 5:30, or some combination. 545-0258

Mothers helper wanted with breakfast & dinner with some overnights. Hourly wage nego. Call Abbey 586-0207 ext. 305

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Mad Science. Instructors/performers. Part-time to conduct fun afterschool program, birthday parties etc. Experience with groups of children. Must have car. Great experience, good pay. 584-7243

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT

Looking for an upbeat, vivacious personality to market and lease our beautiful apartment homes in Sunderland. This is a part time position, must be able to work Saturdays. Sugarloaf Estates 665-3856

Second Shift 3pm-11pm. Part time Monday, Wednesday and Friday with possibilty of full time. Duties include maintaining a large recirculating aquaculture & hydroponics greenhouse. Applicant must be responsible, mechanically inclined and able to work alone. Great for students - Earn while you learn. Send resume to Bioshelters, Inc., 500 Sunderland Road, Amherst, MA 01002, fax (413) 549-9945, email bioshelter @aol.com. No calls please.

The Fine Arts Center is hiring ushers for the 2000-2001 season! For more information, please contact: Cheryl at 545-0190 (after October 1 - 545-0192)

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

EMPLOYMENT

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups* Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for Inaternational Career? EMDS can help. Emds , an international recruiter is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our web site at www.emdsnet.com or call EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Guitar for Sale Fender Squier Ζ Stratocaster w/hard case excel. condition $250 Call - John 546-4475

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENT

Sororities/Fraternities : SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

INSTRUCTION

INSTRUCTION UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free! Lowest Rates Guaranteed! Group Discounts for 6+. Call for Free Info & Brochure. 1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WCCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 LIVE-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Gospel to Gospel
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 28, 2000

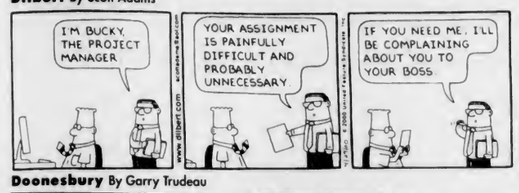
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Over Canada (In Stereo)		Mystery! "Cadfael" "The Potter's Field" (In Stereo) (Part 3 of 3)				Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Death of an Alliance"		48 Hours "Invisible Killers"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Death of an Alliance"		48 Hours "Invisible Killers"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire (In Stereo)			Hopkins 24/7 (N) (Part 6 of 6)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Charmed "Apocalypse, Not"		Charmed (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Real TV	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	16	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	70s Show	70s Show	News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News		Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Mystery! "Cadfael" "The Potter's Field"			Jefferson	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire (In Stereo)			Hopkins 24/7 (N) (Part 6 of 6)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	I Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Major League Baseball Atlanta Braves at New York Mets. (Live)						48 HRS. "(1982, Comedy-Drama) Nick Nolte, Eddie Murphy."
A&E	40	L.A. Law "Becker on the Rox"		Law & Order "Coma"		Biography: Stephen King: Fear		Murder One "Chapter Three"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Paranoia"
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Stein's Money		Stein's Money	Turn Ben	Daily Show		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	63	Wild Discovery: Spinsters		Giants: Spiders and Beers		On the Inside: Titanic		Hospital (Series Premiere) (N)		Would You Believe It		Justice Files "On the Run"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter			Coll. Football	College Football: Florida State at Maryland. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls									Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Makeover	Real World	Real World	"Jailbait" (2000, Drama) Mary Gross, Matt Frewer. (In Stereo)			Cribs	Diary		Makeover	Say What Kriss
NICK	35	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	96	Sliders "Invasion" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 "Soul Hunter"		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	27	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours		Paramedics "Dream World" (N)		Ancient Prophecies				Paramedics "Dream World"
TNT	25	ER "Family Matters" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Jarod's Honor"		★★½ "Above the Law" (1988, Drama)		★★½ "Above the Law" (1988, Drama) Steven Seagal.
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Silent Service" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Sniper"		★★½ "Top Dog" (1995, Adventure) Chuck Norris, Clyde Kusatsu.				Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	43	★★½ "Blue Chips" (1994, Drama)	Nick Nolte. "PG-13"			Inside the NFL (N)		★★½ "The Sting" (1983, Suspense) Denzel Washington. "R"				G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	45	(4:15) "Wolf"	★★★ "Butterfly"	(2000, Comedy-Drama) Warren Beatty. "R"		★★½ "In Too Deep" (1999) Omar Epps. "R"		★★½ "Sugar Town" (1999) Jada Gordon. "R"		★★½ "Cruel Intentions" (1999, Drama) "R"		★½ "Shiloh"
SHOW	50	"Inconceivable" (1998, Comedy)	Corinne Bohrer. (In Stereo) "R"			★★½ "In Too Deep" (1999) Omar Epps. "R"		Filmmaker		Rude Awakan.		★★ "The Wood" (1999, Drama) Omar Epps. "R"

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

THIS IS THE WEIRDEST SOCCER GAME I'VE EVER SEEN. BUT IT'S COOL TO SEE A TEAM CALLED THE "LIONS-KICKIN' BUTT!
IT'S RUDEY, AND FOR THE RECORD, YOU'RE CLOSER TO A DOG THAN TO ANY "LION."
THAT'S THE WORST THING ANYBODY'S EVER SAID TO ME IN MY LIFE
NAH, YOU JUST NEVER LISTEN.

Dilbert By Scott Adams



I'M BUCKY, THE PROJECT MANAGER
YOUR ASSIGNMENT IS PAINFULLY DIFFICULT AND PROBABLY UNNECESSARY.
IF YOU NEED ME, I'LL BE COMPLAINING ABOUT YOU TO YOUR BOSS.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

HEY, DUDE. YOU KNOW WHAT WE NEED?
WHAT'S THAT?
WE NEED A BUSINESS PLAN.
YOU'RE RIGHT. I'VE BEEN THINKING THAT, TOO. MANY
THE PROBLEM IS THAT CREATING A BUSINESS PLAN IS A LOT OF HARD WORK.
COULDN'T WE JUST OUTSOURCE IT TO INDIA?
GOOD THOUGHT! I'LL ADMIT UP SOME SPROUTS.

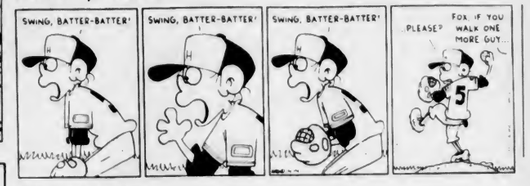
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

HEY, GUESS WHAT I MET THE BEST GUY IN CLASS TODAY
HE LIKES SHOPPING, HE LIKES ALL THE SAME KIND OF MUSIC, AND HE WANTS TO GO TRY ON CLOTHES WITH ME TOMORROW.
IS HE GAY?
NO, BUT HE PLAYS FLUTE IN THE BAND.
DOUBLE CROWN

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

YO WHERE THE MUZAC AT?
IF YOU ARE REFERING TO THE WORD MUSIC, ALL I HAVE IS THE JUDGEDRED SOUNDTRACK AND AN MP3 OF MAMBO NUMBER 5.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

WONDER BOY, YOU'RE SO SMART. WHAT WAS THE LAST THING I REMEMBER? I WAS ON THE STEP-LADDER DOING MY JOHN WAYNE CONVENTION IMPRESSION AND I MISTIME JUMPED ON MY HEAD
THE PLASTIC BAG BROKEN THEY MISTIME JUMPED ON MY HEAD
I WONDER WHY I'M SO TIRED
I'VE BEEN BORN SINCE

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
STAY OFF ROCKS
"WELL THAT'S GOING TO BE HARD TO DO," SAID DIKO. MOMENTS LATER, SHE WAS ARRESTED BY THE BEACH POLICE.
© 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A creative approach to a stubborn problem can prove more beneficial than expected today. You are likely to attract unusual attention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can't afford to be misinterpreted today. Be direct but tactful in all things. You needn't play tough in order to get what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 211 – You may encounter an unexpected obstacle in a new and exciting relationship. It may be time to be more honest than you have been recently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You must be willing to change your attitude toward someone today if you wish to get past a conflict that is holding you back somewhat.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're in no mood to take orders today -but this doesn't mean you must go about giving them to others. Play it cool.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) -Consider the source before overreacting to criticism today. This may actually be a chance for you to clear the air in more ways than one.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Keep yourself closely attuned to the emotional undercurrents at work today. You don't want to end up in the wrong place at the wrong time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) –Pay more attention to the needs of your mind and body today. The time has come for you to listen to the messages your system is sending you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The pressure is on, and you must be willing to face what comes with confidence – lest someone find out you're not all you claim to be.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may be on the verge of making a big mistake – but even if you make it, the benefits, in the long run, are likely to outweigh the hazards.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You should be able to take advantage of a known commodity today – while still keeping your options open. A payoff is on the way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your understanding of more than your own immediate concerns is likely to make the difference today between success and failure. Diversify!

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 57	HIGH: 54	HIGH: 63
LOW: 28	LOW: 35	LOW: 44

Quote of the Day

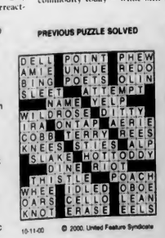
"For a while I know she thought I was having sex with anyone with a heartbeat and something dangling between the legs. Shawn, Adam, Jim, Bob, Eric, Jon, Fil, Dan, Anthony, Ben, Roy, Shai, Josh, Louis, Rob and Dave."

-student ed/op submission

ACROSS
1 Foreshadows
8 Autograph site
10 Huge
14 Not together
15 Job-safety org.
16 Singer Murray
17 Proportion
18 Main role
19 "The — King"
20 National Park sighting, maybe
22 Writerly
23 Has a cold
24 Adjust mathematically
26 TV add-on
29 Void
31 Sail
32 Miss Piggy's affirmative
33 Neutral color
34 Almond confection
36 Out in — field
40 Toupee
42 Smear
43 Great house
46 Carol
49 Mine output
50 Neither's partner
51 Absent
52 Route
53 Torments
57 Burrows
58 Do a CPA's job
60 Train employee
65 Ignore socially
66 Golfer's cry
67 Purple-gray
68 —, dark, and handsome
69 Is obligated to
70 Set
71 Comic Johnson
72 Wings
73 Opposite of save

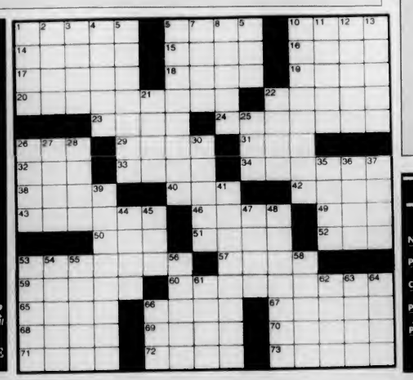
DOWN
1 Cutting remark
2 Gemstone
3 Statistics
4 Novelist Jong
5 Adding fuel to the fire
6 Picnic food
7 On the Adriatic
8 Shrewd
9 Little boy
10 Bold
11 Exberg of films
12 Nose
13 Nervous
21 Make less distinct
22 Company emblem
25 Stimpy's pal
26 Mouse cousin
27 Prompts
28 Crack in the earth
30 Fibonq
35 Soft light
36 Atmosphere
37 Low card
39 Real
41 Benevolence
44 Praise
45 Before, to a bard
47 Lady in King Arthur's court
48 Protein sources
53 Spaghetti, e.g.
54 Of the moon
55 Full-grown
56 Forbidding look
58 Rascal
61 Pitcher Hershiser
62 Inner —: water toy
63 Stove part
64 Actor Foxx
66 Rival

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-11-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

WHERE THE BEER FLOWS LIKE WINE AND WOMEN FLOCK INSTINCTIVELY
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

American
Chop Suey

Tavern
Battered Cod

Tomato, Mac & Lentils (vegan) (Berk & Worc)

Grilled Cheez on Multigrain Bread (Vegeterian)

Dinner

Roast Pork Loin

Chixen Pot π

Veggie Shepards π (vegetarian) (Berk & Worc)

LA Beans & Rice (vegan)

Original Anchor Bar Buffalo Wings

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician — Jaret Barr
Copy Editor — Dave Traupes
Production Supervisor — Alan Basque
Production Staff — Sarah Wingardner

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Thursday, September 28, 2000 | 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass smarter than Harvard

Minutewomen cruise to 2OT win

By Jesse Greenspan and Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — And 110 walls came down. 97 minutes and 54 seconds later.

Unless it was an offensive struggle would be an understatement. Because last night at Jordan Field on the campus of Harvard University, the Crimson and the Massachusetts field hockey team were forced to forget the numbers as they were fielding field hockey sticks in their clutches in the first place. Defense is important reason number two.

The first is December. UMass senior Patty Robinson.

Over an hour and a half after the game's commencement, Robinson wound up and lofted the ball past Harvard goalie Katie Zacarian in the second overtime period to give the Minutewomen (8-1) the 1-0 victory.

It was a fitting individual effort on Patty's part — coach Patty Shea said. She anticipated the play and made things happen."

With the win, the 9th ranked Minutewomen improve to 7-2 on the year, while dropping Harvard to 3-2 for the season. It was UMass' first overtime game of the year.

"We'll take it. It's a great regional win. Harvard is a very good team," Shea said. "However, we have to start improving from game to game, and I don't think we have been really doing t h a t."

Maroon and White goaltender Zowie Tucker recorded her fourth shutout of the 2000 campaign, stopping three Crimson shots to help lower her goals against average to a remarkable 0.77.

Zacarian made 19 saves for Harvard. The freshman attended Amherst Regional High School last year before venturing to the Crimson.

Before the game, both teams knew what they were going up against — net minders in superlative form. And Tucker and Zacarian didn't miss a beat by quickly frustrating their respective opposing offenses.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
One goal in 93 minutes and 54 seconds. And it wasn't scored on UMass' Zowie Tucker.

Zacarian did most of the frustrating in the first half as she made four consecutive diving saves off of UMass penalty corners just ten or so minutes into the contest. However, the shots by Anke Bruemmer were all on target, and it was the fact that the Minutewomen failed to capitalize on the rebounds that cost them the most.

"We executed our corners," Shea said. " Now the next part of our execution is to put the rebounds in. We had four opportunities in the first period. It should have been 4-0. I mean, when the goalie is lung on the ground, we have to convert those rebounds."

Before Robinson was able to whack her unassisted goal into the Harvard cage, both teams had ample scoring opportunities — especially the Minutewomen, who out shot their enemies 21-5 and had a six to five advantage in penalty corners.

At the 30-minute mark of the second half, Bruemmer drilled a penalty corner shot just wide, and with ten minutes left, a Maroon and White goal was discounted when a free hit was drilled into the back of the net without another offensive player touching the ball.

Harvard had its best chance to pick up the win in regulation when Tucker made two spectacular diving stops on a penalty corner with 20 minutes remaining in the second frame. However, when the buzzer sounded, signifying the end of regulation, neither team had been able to net the winning goal.

In overtime, the tiring teams continued to battle it out, as the action intensified when the teams each switched to seven players on a side. Once again, both squads had their chances to score, but neither team was able to crack open the scoreless tie until Robinson finally put things away.

"After the game I asked the team, 'are you afraid to lose?'" Shea said. "The seniors have never been 7-2 at this point in the season, and though it's a good situation to be in, we have to take chances to win and score. This was the most intense game of the season so far."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Lindsay Abbot and the Minutewomen offense were stymied by Harvard goaltender Katie Zacarian...almost. Just one of the 22 UMass shots found the goal, but it was all they needed.

Minutewomen trounce Rams at Cage

DeMarte, Vander Veen lead team effort as UMass cruises to victory

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Searching it's best to come home stretch was the case for the Massachusetts women's field hall team (4-8, 1-2 A-10) as they downed URI (1-11, 0-4 A-10) east on fist at Curry Hicks Cage in straight sets (30-13, 15-5).

After two hard fought, yet disappointing losses in their first two games at Atlantic 10 conference matches, the Minutewomen found the sweet nectar of triumph when they needed it most.

"I think it was great to be at home," coach Bonnie Kenny said. "I thought as the match went on we got better attack wise, which how it's made to see. We've had trouble with our offense and I thought tonight we did a nice job defensively."

In the first game, the Maroon and White jumped out to a 7-2 lead on the play of Janeen DeMarte, who had four kills and served for three points over that span. But the Rams proved tough and quickly closed the gap to 9-8. Then, a DeMarte kill and the serve back for the Minutewomen, who immediately put two points off sophomore Clare Baxter's serve, capitalizing on two Rhode miscakes. Rivers Enos put game one away by making a nice kill from the right side to give the Minutewomen the game, 15-10.

Game two saw the Rams take their first lead of the match at 2-1 early, but the Maroon and White quickly slammed the door as it picked up four straight points on co-captain Lenarie Lloyet's serve, two by virtue of kills by fellow co-captain Rebecca Hasson.

URI would tighten the score at 6-4 on a tricky serve by Morgan Spaulding that caught DeMarte off guard, but from then on it was all Minutewomen, who gained momentum when junior Lauren Vander Veen came off the bench and tallied three finishing blocks in a span of four plays to spark the team and to damage the confidence of the Rams. The game would end on a missed kill by Rhode's Lindsay Watty, with the final tally of 15-5.

"I thought Lauren Vander Veen did a great job coming off the bench. She gave us a lift, she made a difference every time she went on the court which was nice," Kenny said.

The third and final game of the match saw UMass charging out of the gates again, this time to a 5-1 lead. Then, as URI tried to crawl its way back into the match, senior Jenni Drennan twice saved the Maroon and White; once on a diving dig and once knocking the ball back to a teammate on a ball which ricocheted off the net, and then she set up Hasson for the kill.

The Minutewomen rode on cruise control the rest of the way, en route to a 15-5 win in the game and a 3-0 match victory.

For the match, DeMarte led the team with 10 kills and was second in digs with nine. Drennan led the team by virtue of 31 sets and ten digs. Vander Veen provided the spark off the bench, tallying four kills and three blocks in the game of the match, but the tension was eased when she returned later in the game, an apparent sore ankle being the cause of her discomfort.

The Minutewomen are in action again tomorrow night at George Washington, where they will take on the Colonials (10-3, 2-1 A-10) at 7 pm.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Janeen Demarte records one of her 10 kills. The El Paso, Texas native is one of the Minutewomen's top defenders.

Minutewomen dropped hard by visiting Terriers

By Alison Sciamanna
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's tennis team dropped a tough match to Boston University, 6-3, at the Upper Boyden tennis courts yesterday afternoon. The Minutewomen's only wins came from freshman Francesca Mancini in singles play and the duos of Helena Horak and Susan Hyams and Mancini and Jalra Depontes in doubles play. They now stand at 1-1 in dual match play.

Recent UMass/WHMP Athlete of the week, freshman Francesca Mancini of Milan, Italy, the lone singles winner for the Minutewomen, defeated the Terrier's Christina Causeway in straight sets (6-2, 6-3). Mancini was dominant throughout the match, consistently beating Causeway from all over the court. Yesterday's match marked her sixth win in six matches.

Junior Annie Hamilton and junior Lindsay Gilkody both worked their opponents to a hard fought third set, but eventually dropped their matches. Hamilton took the first set against BU's Alana Marcu, but Marcu came back in the last two sets to take the match (2-6, 6-2, 6-4). Gilkody lost the first set, battled back in the second set, but the fell in the third set, losing to Hannah Bartell (6-1, 4-6, 6-3).

Junior Helena Horak and freshman Susan Hyams were both downed in straight sets. Horak was beaten by Lindsey Dynof (6-4, 6-3), while Hyams was beaten by Elena deMendoza (6-4, 6-2).

"I think we fought hard, but the other team just fought harder," Depontes said. The freshman out of Hawaii dropped her match to BU's Carrie Rose, but bounced back in doubles with partner Mancini to defeat the Terrier team of Marcu and deMendoza (8-5). "I really enjoyed playing doubles today," Depontes said. UMass' Horak and Hyams also came out victorious in doubles matches. They defeated the team of Dynof and Glas (8-5). The doubles team of Hamilton and Gilkody were defeated by BU's Causeway and Rose (8-5).

The Minutewomen will now prepare for the Colgate Invitational in Hamilton, NY this weekend. They return to dual match play on the road at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire on October 11th.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Milan, Italy product Francesca Mancini won her singles match in straight sets to improve to a perfect 6-0 on the season.

Heinel to pilot women's water polo

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

One of the most successful sports programs at the University of Massachusetts got a tremendous shot in the arm last week, as Donna Heinel was named the first full-time head coach in the seven-year history of UMass women's water polo team.

Heinel served as an assistant on last year's team, which finished 31-8 on the season and captured fifth place at the national tournament in Indiana. She will also fill the position of assistant coach for the women's swimming team under Head Coach Russ Yarworth.

"I am very excited about the opportunity to assume this full time position," Heinel said. "I am grateful to Russ Yarworth for his invaluable knowledge and for what he has taught me concerning the game of water polo."

This past summer, Heinel assisted Yarworth and Philip Exeter Academy coach Roger Nekton at the Fast Break Water Polo Camp. Her past duties for the Minutewomen included recruiting, skill development, conditioning and dryland training, specialties that should help make the squad even stronger now that she stands at its helm.

"Donna is definitely more experienced with the strength and conditioning aspects of the game than any coach before her," said Marci Hupp, one of the cornerstones of last year's team who now coaches her former high school team in Upper Arlington, Ohio. "She already has the team in the weight room and running outside a lot more than it has in the past."

Former coach Dan McOsker gave up the position immediately following last year's national

Turn to polo, page 9

Check out our review of last weekend's Matchbox Twenty show. Our Ryan Benharris was there and he gives you the scoop.
ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 9 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, September 29, 2000

Checkout our weekend football preview as UMass takes on the Flying Dutchmen of Hofstra. (The Flying what?)
SPORTS p. 8

A University education from afar?

Bulger addresses UM

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Amid controversy, the University of Massachusetts President William Bulger spoke to a group of concerned faculty and students about the impact of distance learning on the Amherst campus.

Chancellor David K. Scott was also on hand during the discussion to explain the importance of distance learning for the campus. He gave statistics that explained that in the future double the number of students would require college education, and that UMass wanted to be on the cutting edge of that technology.

"The prediction is that every person in the work force will require 30 credits every seven years," Scott said. "I believe that UMass needs to be a player in that, not to replace professors with television screens, but to give students a chance who would never have the opportunity to set foot on this campus. We feel that we have something very special to offer."

Also expressing similar sentiments was Bulger himself. He explained that the University needs to deepen its involvement with distance learning and that he wants both students and faculty to support the plan. He attempted to dispel concerns from the very beginning by explaining that the funds for the distance learning project would not be taken from anywhere on campus.

"As a continuing education unit, UMass online will be financed through reserves and will not effect the budget," he said. "The University is prepared to make an investment of 10-15 million dollars."

He went on to explain that the University system expected to make the invested amount back from the project.

"We call this an investment because we are confident that it will be made back," Bulger said.

Chris Masterjohn, a junior economics major, questioned where the funds were coming from that allowed the University to make this investment since the campus was already low on both professors and class availability.

Bulger skirted the question and later answered that the resources were coming from "a cash reserve."

He assured students, "There is no desire to jeopardize the good name of the University."

James Shaw president of the Graduate Employee Organization posed another question about the expenditures of the University. Shaw inquired about the amount of money spent upon union busting tactics on campus. He explained that some students attempting to form a union were prevented due to "union busting" attorneys. Shaw explained that it was a prevalent issue in regards to distance learning.

"If this is going to happen through the continuing education department, then I think that it is important to distance learning," Shaw explained.

Scott fielded the question, commenting that it was a waste of Bulger's time to present issues that were not related to distance learning.

"I am the Chancellor and I will deal with those issues on our campus, as I have in the past," Scott said.

Faculty members also expressed concerns as to how the distance learning classes would be taught, and how that would effect their positions as class-

Turn to BULGER, page 2

SCOTT LEHRER/COLLEGIAN
UMass President William Bulger spoke about distance learning in the Campus Center yesterday.

Brother, where art thou?

While University of Massachusetts President William Bulger was speaking about distance learning, his brother James "Whitey" Bulger was being indicted for his involvement in 18 murders.

The new federal indictment included 14 other charges against Bulger and his associate Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi. Both had been free from prosecution for years while they acted as FBI informants. Charges against the two range from the murders to racketeering, extortion and money laundering.

Both Bulger and Flemmi were members of the "Winter Hill" gang. Flemmi, awaiting trial while in prison, will face multiple life sentences if convicted. Bulger hasn't been seen since 1995.

A member of the FBI's Most Wanted list, it was the first time that Bulger had been described as playing a direct role in murder. Previously it was believed that he did only headed an organization that took part in murder.

As for his role in the FBI, Bulger had originally only helped to get information about the Mafia. His involvement in the "Winter Hill Gang," now know as "The Bulger Group" are now the main focus of investigation.

Digging continues in the Boston area for Bulger victims after five were turned up over the past year. The amount of killings possibly involving Bulger however, wasn't totally unexpected. A hit man from the gang, John Martorano, has admitted to taking part in at least 20 murders. He has cooperated with prosecutors in exchange for a light sentencing, perhaps as little as 12.7 years.

—Sam Wilkinson

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this article.

Students unimpressed with President

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's visit by University of Massachusetts President William Bulger to discuss distance learning left many students with unanswered questions.

Students asking President Bulger why finances were allocated from the University cash reserve to fund distance learning when programs such as English as a Second Language (ESL) continue to be scaled back were repeatedly rebuffed by Chancellor Scott, who promised to "deal with those issues later."

"I won't say 'trust me,'" Scott said "but the funds in the cash reserve are not fungible. ESL is an internal allocation issue – it is my responsibility as Chancellor. I will be happy to sit down and discuss these issues at a later time."

Student Trustee Seth Avakian supported Scott's claim, saying, "People do not understand the nature or purpose of the cash reserves. Although I think funding ESL and other academic programs is vital, these cash reserves would not be the funds used for that purpose."

But according to Graduate Student Senate President Peter Hammas, the University cash reserve was built through channeling funds away from University budgets. "The allegation is that the funds are not fungible, which is true. But Scott has previously spoken with pride regarding

Turn to RESPONSE page 2

> "At one point, a visibly agitated Bulger responded to a heckler, remarking, "You have a lot to say don't you boy wonder?"

Birdine encourages 225 listeners

SHALINI MARTIN - COLLEGIAN
Steve Birdine spoke in the Campus Center Wednesday night.

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

Laughter and realization filled the Campus Center Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts, as motivational speaker and diversity educator, Steve Birdine, gave the animated performance, "What Have We Done For Us Lately."

Tuesday, Sept. 27, 225 mainly ALANA (Asain, Latino, African, Native American) freshman students, called out, "Affirmation, Action!" at the direction of Birdine to remind themselves why they chose to attend college. Birdine himself remembers coming from the inner city of Chicago to the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Because of his experiences growing up, he wants to stimulate young people to take control of their lives.

"I'll never forget being a student, and I know that I owe a debt to the younger people after me," said Birdine. "I'll never give up on them. As long as they know that there is someone that will stand up for them, then everyone stays hopeful."

A senior, who likes to go by the name of Big Ant, said that the manner in which Birdine used to excite students, stirred thoughts he had when he was a freshman.

"Common sense is the best education," said Big Ant.

Birdine has been teaching his word all of his life, and is currently the president of Affirmations In Action and the National Vice President of Iota Phi Theta Fraternity, Inc., where both incorporate Diversity Education, Leadership Development, and Motivational Speaking. He previously hosted a radio show called, "Happenin'," and said that he has always been an aggressive advocate for justice.

"In life you have to make a choice for your occupation," said Birdine. "You simply need to know what is in your heart."

Birdine said that many of the problems that confront youth of color start in the amount of support they receive in grade school, and within the family atmosphere.

"K-12 plays a major role for people of color," said Birdine. "If they would teach a little about a lot, we'd be twice as good to get twice as far."

Something that Birdine feels gets in the way of progress, is youths attitude towards materialism. He feels that students need to focus their lives towards finding the true sense of themselves, not what anyone else tells them to be (referring to media and peers) "Too many of us have lost sight of how great we truly are," said Birdine. "We have become very material which comes out of not knowing our history."

Birdine suggested that the best way to create social change doesn't come from books and videos, (although it is helpful), but experience and risk taking. "Talk to and interact with your classmates. People of color are segregating themselves because we assume the worst," said Birdine. "Take some risks with difference. We all fear the unknown, and this perpetuates racism."

The ALANA community here and

Turn to BIRDINE, page 2

Napster to remain on Boston U. network

By Dave D'Onofrio
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - Boston University will not ban Napster, according to Vice President and General Council Todd Klipp, who represents the university in the Napster matter.

Howard King, the attorney for Metallica and Dr. Dre, who are suing Napster for copyright infringement, asked BU to ban the popular music- sharing program for "ethical" reasons and imposed a Sept. 22 response deadline.

"We understand and respect your clients' concerns about Napster and the effect that its technology may have upon their intellectual property rights," Klipp wrote to the firm. "But Boston University has no legal or other obligation to block its students' access to Napster through the University's computing system."

Klipp also explained that the University was "extremely reluctant" to filter the Internet. Banning Napster wouldn't stop students from file sharing; it would only lead them to "alternative technologies that may be more insidious than Napster," he said.

"Looking to Boston University and the other universities to which you sent virtually identical letters is not the answer to this situation," Klipp said in the letter.

In April, Metallica and Dr. Dre filed suit against Napster, the file sharing software that allegedly facilitates copyright infringement. After a federal court judge ruled that the site be shut down, Napster appealed the decision and was granted a temporary injunction to keep operating. The case is now before the U.S. Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.

In his letter, Klipp questioned the timeliness of King's request, citing the impending court decision.

"As you may recognize, the resolution of that litigation may very well determine Napster's fate," said Klipp's statement. "If, as most experts think likely, the Ninth Circuit affirms the district court's injunction, Napster will be forced either to shut down or to enter the licensing agreements with the copyright owners. Should Napster prevail, the recording industry (including your clients) will have to address possible copyright infringement through other means."

Klipp continued his statement, saying that if Napster is not found liable for infringement, it appears unlikely that another Internet service provider, such as a university, would be. However, should legal difficulties arise, BU is flexible.

"Of course, we may modify our position in light of future legal developments," Klipp concluded his statement.

King's office did not return phone calls Wednesday.

■ Bulger

continued from page 1

room professors. A professor in the English department asked whether or not professors would be required to teach additional online classes and whether or not that would cut down their other classes.

"If I am teaching the same amount of classes but I am teaching them online, then what is going to happen to students on this campus?" he asked. "Where will they take classes?"

Bill Hogan, the Chancellor at the University of Massachusetts-Dartmouth campus, explained that when they implemented distance learning, they chose to ask professors to participate on a voluntary basis and that the same would be done on the Amherst campus.

The question was also asked regarding whether or not the University would proceed with the distance learning initiative if the students were against it. Bulger explained that he felt that students would realize that it was important.

"I'm very confident that people will want this University to be up to date on this kind of technology. I very much empathize with people in right now, I think that we have to be up to it," he said. "I urge everyone to have some confidence that people are working very hard to reach these points."

Susan Pescetti contributed to this article.

Hazra speaks to Yoga club

By Virginia Avedisian
Collegian Staff

Tuesday night, "An Evening of Celebration with Music and Meditation," was put on by the UMass Yoga and Meditation Club in room 163 of the Campus Center. The event was an introduction talk for the course, "The Art of Living," that will be offered in Room 1634 Lederle Graduate Tower Friday, September 29 through Wednesday, October 4.

The introductory talk was given by Vikram Hazra, a young and vibrant spiritual teacher from India with the Art of Living Foundation. He led an informal evening of song, meditation, shared spiritual knowledge and a question and answer session as well.

The Art of Living basic course is a six session experiential workshop based on ancient yoga techniques and the knowledge of the subtle laws that govern the mind-body complex. It is also designed to eliminate stress, increase awareness and develop the full potential of life. During the workshop one learns to live more fully in the present moment.

The course is being conducted by the Art of Living Foundation, in association with the Umass Yoga and Meditation Club. The Art of Living Foundation is a non-profit, educational and charitable organization recognized by the United Nations. Its activities are managed by volunteers from diverse backgrounds, who are freely dedicating their time, energy and resources.

The contents of the course include: Yoga, to relax the body and improve circulation; Pranayama (breathing techniques), to increase and balance the flow of energy in the body; Sudarshan Kriya (healing breath), to cleanse and vitalize the body cells which brings harmony to the whole system; Meditation, to calm and rejuvenate the mind; and interactive group processes that bring this ancient knowledge into sharp focus.

Many course participants experience better sleep, a great reduction in stress and negative emotions, an increase in energy and confidence, improved memory and concentration and greater harmony in their relationships.

Participants also report better efficiency at work and improved performance in school. The techniques taught in the course can be practiced at home as well. In many controlled scientific studies, numerous psychological and health benefits from these practices have also been documented.

The course is open to people of all ages, backgrounds and traditions. People of all faiths have been reported to enjoy the Art of Living course.

The course is based on simple secular practices, human values and spiritual principles such as love, kindness, friendliness and service to others.

No previous experience in yoga and meditation is necessary. However, for their own benefit, it is essential for the participants to attend all sessions of the workshop.

The course is informal and includes some simple hatha yoga. It is recommended that one wear loose comfortable clothing, bring a blanket and a pillow and arrive as well rested as possible on a light stomach.

After attending the introductory talk, many people seemed to be "inspired" by the events and were interested in coming back to attend the actual course. Vikram Hazra, the guest speaker, has taught this course all over the world in many different countries to many different people as well.

After teaching this course in a prison in Southern Africa, one illiterate, female prisoner told him, "I know now, today, that freedom does not mean being inside or outside these four walls."

Heather Ellingren, an undeclared freshman stated, "It was a very relaxing experience. I enjoyed it thoroughly."

U Briefs

The Pioneer Valley Therapeutic Riding Association is holding the 16th Annual Candace E. Dixon Memorial Ride-a-thon. The ride will take place at the Swift's River Sportsman's Club on Moore Road in Belchertown on October 8. Swift's River Sportsman's Club on Moore Road in Belchertown on October 8, a minimum of $35 in pledges, which will support non-profit horseback riding lessons for students of all ages and disabilities. Participants may choose either the 15 mile or three mile trail. For more information, call Patricia Barry at 283-9912.

The American Red Cross is offering an emergency assistance course designed to provide the skills and knowledge to provide emergency service. The course will be held at the Hampshire County Chapter, 125 State Street, Northampton, on Saturday, November 4 from 9am to 5pm. For more information or to sign up, call Mary Snyders at 584-6054.

—Jessica May

■ Birdine

continued from page 1

across the globe deal with different issues among oppression and effects of colonialism in their lives. Birdine suggests that all people of color work together to combat issues collectively.

"We need to create co-alitions. Its not enough to individually fight," said Birdine. "Groups should meet regularly and discuss what we need, prioritize and fight for everyone's issues. What is most important, is to spend time together and learn from each other."

Carolyn Meadows, a UMass graduate student said that a lot of what Birdine has brought to light is inspiring. "What he is saying is very important because you have to live life," said Meadows." He makes you evaluate what you have done and where you go from here.

Birdine expresses that a helpful motto he lives by every day is to stay strong and stay positive. "People of color have a lot to deal with," said Birdine. "Jesse Jackson once said, 'Keep hope alive,' and that is what I try to do."

College-geared Web sites entice students

By Brittany Anas
Campus Press (U Colorado)

(U-WIRE) BOULDER, Colo. — Although the proverbial saying warns that there is no such thing as a "free lunch," a multitude of Web sites are soliciting college students to try out their free services and products.

Representatives from www.CollegeClub.com visited the Boulder campus last fall, snapping pictures of the University of Colorado's student life, and then urging students to view their picture on their official Web site.

"Some guy on campus took my picture and gave me a card showing me where to find it online," said Rachael Mitchem-Hanigan, a sophomore English major. "At first I just signed up to CollegeClub to see the picture."

Mitchem-Hanigan, who goes by the CollegeClub screen name of Cozmicutie, takes advantage of one of the many free Web sites available to college students.

The CollegeClub offers message boards in a wide variety of subjects ranging from personal stories about one-night stands to religious points of view. A selection of articles relating to the college scene changes daily.

"I would definitely recommend CollegeClub to other college students because it has very good articles and services that are aimed specifically at college students," Cozmicutie said. Free from cost or obligation, CollegeClub offers services to assist students in finding a roommate, tutor or carpool on campus. CU students can also rate their favorite classes and professors.

"CollegeClub is one of the most resourceful college Web sites out there," said Tyrese Johnson, a freshman engineering major. "It stands out because of its unique features such as free e-mail, nationwide as well as local college information and an opportunity to interact with peers."

At the CollegeClub, e-mail is free along with instant messaging among fellow subscribers.

"I started using CollegeClub this summer because I had a really boring job that could get online and talk to my friends without downloading an instant messenger to my work's computer or using their telephone for personal calls," said Charlotte Bockstahler, a sophomore open-option major.

As if being free weren't enough, CollegeClub rewards student users with "C-points" that can be auctioned for prizes such as CDs or cameras. C-points can be collected simply by joining, by creating a profile or by participating in polls and other CollegeClub services. CollegeClub.com will soon merge with Student Advantage, which will together reach out to nearly 5 million students.

Correction:

Yesterday's Quote of the Day was run in poor taste. We sincerely apologize for the mistake.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating entirely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as vol. I, no. 1 of the Weekly Collegian and Graduate Signal in 1901. the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a five-publication publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Position Vacant Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanne Corkoski Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobslanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiulo Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

ARE YOU THE FUNNIEST STUDENT ON CAMPUS?

PROVE IT AT

PERFORM YOUR BEST:
• STAND UP
• JOKES
• SKETCH

ENTER & WIN!
You could win a chance to go on tour with
JEANEANE GAROFALO & FRIENDS!

FREE

HOSTED BY ANDY DICK
as seen on NewsRadio

FEATURING THE COMEDY OF
RALPH HARRIS
as seen on Seinfeld, The Tonight Show & The Jon Stewart Show

UMASS AMHERST
FINE ARTS CENTER
CONCERT HALL
8:00PM
TUESDAY, OCT. 3RD

TO REGISTER: CALL WENDY ZHU AT 413-545-1278 OR 1-800-843-2536 TO COMPETE IN THE BAKE OFF OR STOP BY THE iCAST TENT AT THE UNIVERSITY LAWN OCT. 3RD
CHECK OUT ALL THE ACTION INCLUDING THE ONLINE COMIC STRIP, ANIMATION & SHORT FILM CONTESTS AT COMEDY.iCAST.COM

VOTE FOR YOUR FAVORITE AT I-CAST.COM

Cool Mint LISTERINE POCKETPAKS
salonselectives see it. do it.
HYUNDAI

Autumn is here and so are the geese...
View of the Pond from the Fine Arts Center.

Knight's lawyer replies to Brand letter, 'misinformation'

By David Uchiyama
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — The storytelling and name calling between the Indiana University administration and former basketball coach Bob Knight's camp continues.

Russell Yates, Knight's attorney, sent out two letters Wednesday. One was sent to the Indiana Daily Student, calling for IU to "immediately discontinue their campaign of misinformation that is apparently intended to publicly justify the University's firing of Coach Knight without true cause."

He also sent a letter to University Counsel Dorothy Frapwell suggesting the two sides meet and come to an agreement over items related to Knight's contract. Frapwell said it was a very cordial letter but had not replied as of late Wednesday night.

"I want to get his deferred compensation resolved, then I want to talk about the noncompete clause," Yates said. "I hope we can have an amicable meeting, and then everybody can go their own way."

The University has deposited $1.3 million in the compensation fund, and it has grown to more than $4.5 million thanks to interest. It is to be paid out over a 10-year span, but the start date is in question.

The noncompete clause states Knight will forfeit the deferred compensation if he joins a Division I program in Kentucky, Indiana or in the Big Ten.

Yates wrote the IDS in response to a letter written by President Myles Brand on Sept. 13 that was addressed, "Dear Friends," and distributed to alumni. Brand recapped and reaffirmed his decision to release Coach Knight from his contract.

"Unfortunately, as weeks passed, I received more and more reports of hostile, difficult and uncooperative behavior by Coach Knight toward fellow IU employees and toward the University," Brand wrote. "This continuing series of events over several months left us with no real alternative. With the support of a strong majority of the board of trustees, I decided to relieve Coach Knight of his duties as basketball coach.

Included among these incidents was a meeting in which Coach Knight verbally abused a female IU administrator with others present; his continued refusal to work through the chain of command ... angry and inflammatory remarks he made in public and private ... and his refusal to appear at previously scheduled preseason Varsity Club events ..."

Yates said most of Brand's comments are "misleading, incomplete and wrong."

"Suffice it to say, President Brand, as well as (Christopher) Simpson, based on our review of the facts and our investigation, have twisted the facts to suit the result they have long desired," Yates wrote at the conclusion of his letter.

Simpson, vice president for public affairs and government relations, spoke for himself and Brand, who was out of town. "I see nothing to be gained by going back over those issues," Simpson said. "The last time I talked with a person of the media was 10 days ago, so I'm not sure I understand this campaign of misinformation."

Yates was upset by Brand's comments, "The overriding issue here is that no person — no president, coach, faculty member, student or trustee — is bigger than Indiana University," and that, "Coach Knight wrote the final chapter to his career here."

E-mail tells LSU students how to access crime statistics

By Kristen Meyer
The Reveille (Louisiana State U.)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. — Many universities present incoming students with information about Greek activities, classes and dormitories, but most are now required to present crime information as well.

Louisiana State University provost Daniel Engel sent a broadcast e-mail to all students, notifying them of the Student Right-To-Know Act, which tells students how to get information about crime statistics and campus security policies, said LSUPD Capt. Mark Shaw.

This e-mail is part of a federal act. The Student Right-To-Know Act that Congress passed in 1991 requiring any institution receiving federal funding to disclose its criminal statistics, Shaw said.

The act is also called the Clery Act, named for student Jeanne Clery, who was murdered by another student while attending Lehigh University in 1986, Shaw said.

Clery's parents began a movement petitioning colleges to disclose their crime statistics to students, saying Lehigh University's failure to provide crime statistics inadvertently contributed to their daughter's death, Shaw said.

After Clery's death, her parents formed "Security on Campus," a national organization that lobbies for legislation requiring colleges to divulge their crime information, including the Student Right-To-Know Act, he said.

Legislators revised the act in 1998, requiring institutions to notify every student and employee about campus policies, he said.

The law allows universities to send the message through e-mail if every student has e-mail, Shaw said.

"The University provides every student with e-mail and the facilities to check their e-mail," he said.

Employees without e-mail will receive their notice in the mail, Shaw said.

The University used other methods to contact students in the past, but this is the first year authorities notified students by e-mail, he said.

Also, this is the first year the U.S. Department of Education will post campus crime information statistics for colleges nationwide online, Shaw said.

College campuses across the country send their crime information to the Department of Education, and the department will post this information on its Web site, said Tom Lyon, a Department of Education employee.

"It's a better way for students and parents to get a better idea of safety statistics on campus," Lyon said.

The new Web site will help make the information more accessible, said Howard Clery, treasurer of Safety on Campus and Jeanne Clery's brother.

"That's the reason for the amendment, to provide more information and get everyone on the same page," he said.

■ response

continued from page 1

building up our financial reserves," said Hammas. "The only way distance learning can be funded is by squeezing University operating budgets to grow cash reserves."

At many points during the question and answer period, students were openly booed Bulger, who was flustered by the student discontent.

At one point, a visibly agitated Bulger responded to a heckler, remarking, "You have a lot to say, don't you big wonder?"

Kristen Hermann, a senior history and political science major, asked, "You suggested in your opening remarks that you needed the support of UMass students to go forward with Distance Learning. If it becomes clear that the student do not support Distance Learning, will you then end the program?"

"I think a question can be posed to the students," Bulger answered. "But I don't believe that the University should be governed by those who are just passing through."

Herrmann later remarked, "Bulger skirted the issues. No matter how much lip service is paid to the students and faculty's input, the President and the trustees are too committed to corporate interests to provide a quality education."

TIME IS RUNNING OUT!
Come down to the collegian TODAY and join the insanity!
Come talk to:
Adam Martignetti about writing for News
Ryan Benharris about writing for Arts
Rob Schulze about writing for Ed/Op
Bryan Smith about writing for Sports
Jaret Barr if you want to take photos
THE SOONER THE BETTER...
(never know when the end is coming)

It's Boot Time.

Spin by Steve Madden
ZANNA
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on! Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
A G.O. PRODUCTION OF NBCOLYMPICS | Quokkasports
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A debate begun?

FDA approves RU-486

After a nearly twelve-year battle, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has finally approved the abortion pill RU-486.

Chemically known as mifepristone and sold under the brand name Mifeprex, RU-486 allows pregnant women to abort fetuses without having a surgical operation. The drug, which first became prominent in France in 1988, has been considered safe by the FDA for four years now, but has been denied full approval because of manufacturing problems and other external pressures.

Basically, RU-486 blocks a woman's production of progesterone, a key hormone needed for maintaining pregnancy, and when combined with something called a prostaglandin (usually misoprostol), induces abortion.

The Collegian feels that the FDA was completely justified in approving the new abortion drug and that, in fact, the drug should have been approved much earlier.

Although RU-486 is a viable abortive choice only for the first seven weeks of a pregnancy, the Collegian believes that the drug will completely overhaul the politics surrounding the abortion issue.

One of the main reasons for the delayed approval of the drug by the FDA was the United States' high pro-life sentiment. Certain abortion pressure groups have gone to extreme lengths in the past to demonstrate their political opposition to abortion. These measures have included bombing abortion clinics and harassing both doctors and clinic workers.

By approving RU-486, the FDA has allowed doctors the opportunity to administer the drug in the privacy of their offices instead of protestor-targeted abortion clinics. Women will no longer need to leave their own home to have surgical abortions in fear of harassment.

In addition, the FDA has made an unprecedented decision not to reveal the drug's manufacturer, reportedly located somewhere in China. This is a further step, and we believe a necessary one, to prevent extremists from specifically targeting abortion facilitating groups or companies. Provided the drugs are safe and the facilities are clean (they passed FDA inspection), there is absolutely no need for the drug manufacturer's whereabouts to be released to the general public.

Originally, because of aforementioned pro-life lobbyists, the FDA had proposed severe restrictions to the use of RU-486, including a published list of both doctors administering the drug and women using it. Such restrictions would have completely upended the purpose of RU-486. That is, the procedure would no longer have been a private one, and its participants would have become easy targets for pro-life extremists. Fortunately, these restrictions were dropped in yesterday's FDA approval.

Here's the bottom line. RU-486 successfully induces abortion in 92 to 95 percent of test cases with complications (mostly serious bleeding) occurring in only about one percent of women. The FDA has given women wanting an early abortion a long overdue choice. A choice that is viable, safe and, most importantly, private.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial

Why I'm Voting For Nader

CHRIS MASTERJOHN

"Could anyone answer me a couple of questions about this guy? If Al Gore is such a big supporter of our public schools, why did he send his kids to a private school?"

As I stare into the steady media deluge of images of Bush and Gore – or Gush and Bore, as some call them – as my two choices in this year's Presidential election, I'll be maintaining my ground against the grain and voting for Ralph Nader.

I'll be throwing my vote away to a spoiler, many will say. But a close look at the alternative choices reveals them as more the same than different, as I see it. And though there are a handful of significant differences between the two major party candidates, I believe Ralph Nader is a legitimate candidate, and the benefits of voting for him – even if he doesn't win – far outweigh having the lesser of two evils in the White House.

Let's take a look at the two corporate candidates. Bush and Gore are both sons of powerful Washington insiders. They are both part of the country's wealthiest five percent. They both went to Ivy League schools. In other words, they are both part of an elite class of American citizens who have lived under extensive tutelage in the art of being a politician – that is, the art of advancing their own political success by means of manipulation rhetoric to pander to the majority, while maintaining subservience to the powerful.

In most cases, their positions differ very little, and in many cases, they are the same. While Gore supports an increase in the minimum wage of a dollar an hour (that's right, a whole dollar and hour!) over two years, Bush supports raising the minimum wage a dollar over three years, while giving states the option of opting out. Now I recognize that giving the states the option of opting out is a rather serious difference, but when you realize that a one dollar raise is so pathetic in the first place – leaving the minimum wage still less than it was in the sixties in real wages – you can see how the difference becomes significant.

While Gore's health care plan would expand health care, it leaves the fundamentals of a for-profit, inefficient, health care system in which millions have no insurance. While Bush supports a really expensive missile defense system, Gore supports a less expensive missile system.

Both candidates agree on the death penalty. Gore, the minority-friendly, fighting-for-the-poor "progressive" guy, has not even called for a moratorium on the death penalty to examine its racist and classist application yet. Both agree on so-called "free" trade. Neither supports very meaningful campaign finance reforms, let alone the complete overhaul of the campaign finance system that is needed. Both support the Drug War, despite their own histories (Gore) and alleged histories (Bush) of drug use. Both support the embargo against Cuba, and both support imposing malnutrition and starvation on Iraqis, particularly children, or "sanctions" as some call it.

So, they're both corporate candidates who have served and will continue to serve the interests of the rich and powerful. As Ralph Nader has said, while one may get a D+ and the other a D-, they both still flunk. Since Gore is a Democrat, and Democrats are supposed to be progressive, and since Gore's been using quite a bit of stand-up-to-the-powerful rhetoric, let's zero in on Gore a bit.

Gore is supposed to be pro-labor. Yet any modest promises he offers to labor are undermined by his support for so-called "free" trade. The trade policies he supports literally prevent the promises he makes to labor from taking hold, and drive down labor's bargaining power, along with wages, labor standards, and environmental standards. He can't possibly know this. The AFL-CIO endorsed the protests against the WTO, the IMF, and the World Bank. If he doesn't know this, he's been turning an extraordinarily deaf ear to the largest labor organization in the country.

Gore is supposed to be against "Big Oil." Newsflash: Al gore is Big Oil. Gore owns over a million dollars in stock of Occidental Petroleum. That's right, the same Occidental who is displacing indigenous Columbians right now against their will to destroy their homes for some oil-soaked dollars, while Al "stand-up-for-the-powerless" Gore has refused to lift a finger.

Could anyone answer me a couple of questions about this guy? If Al Gore is such a big supporter of our public schools, why did he send his kids to a private school? If Al Gore is against big drug companies, why has he saturated his campaign staff with guys from the big drug companies? And for the big question this all leads to: if Al Gore is such a lying, deceptive, corrupt, politics-as-usual Big Business candidate, why should I vote for him?

So I'm voting for Ralph Nader. Ralph Nader supports a real increase in the minimum wage – a "living wage" matching the cost of living. Ralph Nader supports a consumer-based single-payer health care system, which is far more efficient than private health insurance and will provide equal and comprehensive health care for all citizens. Ralph Nader is against the embargo on Cuba, against the sanctions on Iraq, and against military aid to the corrupt, abusive, Columbian military.

Ralph Nader supports decriminalization of drugs and a public health-based approach to drug policy, dealing with drug addiction like the public health issue it truly is. Ralph Nader supports the legalization of industrial hemp, an obvious step any real environmentalist would take.

Ralph Nader supports a foreign policy that would "side with the peasants and workers for a change," and would "make a priority of waging peace." Nader is against the WTO, NAFTA, and the current policies of the IMF and the World Bank, and supports transforming the global economy into a bottom-up global economy that truly benefits everyone.

Even if Ralph Nader doesn't win, he will still surely secure permanent ballot access for the Green Party, which needs 5 percent in Massachusetts and varies from state to state, and will surely secure the millions of dollars in federal funding for the Greens, which need 5 percent.

However, I believe Ralph Nader can win. By Gallup's own admission, the pools of "likely voters" disproportionately pool conservatives, and cut out the voices of younger, lower-income, and less educated people.

The Democrat's scare-tactics don't work on me. The New York Times did a study that found that Bush appointed moderates and moderate conservatives to the Texas courts who have struck down measures to encroach on abortion rights. Clinton appointed Steve Bryer, who Orrin Hatch said could have been his first pick. I have no reason to believe Gore will be that much better than Bush in appointing the Supreme Court.

This year, I'll be voting my hopes, not my fears, and I hope you all will do the same. The Nader campaign is active on campus, and meets weekly on Tuesday's at seven, and actively tables in the Campus Center. Join us in our effort to continue building a powerful grassroots movement that works on all fronts – electoral and non-electoral – to build a freer, more just, more democratic future.

Chris Masterjohn is a U Mass student

Rob says,
come to the Collegian and write for Ed/Op.

Red means stop

EMILY VACANTI

Green, yellow, red. What do you do when you see this procession of traffic signals? If you are like the majority of UMass idiots, you proceed, even excel, as you see this. You proceed to the point where the two cars in front of you should have stopped, but chose not to. My question for all of you who seem to be better than the traffic laws (you know who you are; the ones who don't think that any laws apply to you), if you keep going and the people with the green light decide to go, which is their right, what do you think is going to happen? As you probably have noticed, there are a ton of accidents all over campus. These don't just happen because of some man behind a screen pressing buttons. That is the Wizard of Oz, my readers. Everyone who chooses to drive on campus has to take responsibility for the accidents that they cause. For those of you who haven't caused any accidents, thank you. I tip my hat (when I wear one) to you.

A good example of the lack of responsibility that drivers In Amherst exhibit is the stop sign at the exit of the Stop and Shop Plaza. Yes, that is a stop sign. I know that most of you don't see it, or at least claim to not see it, but it is there. It's a red, eight sided sign. Against the red background is huge white lettering that reads "STOP". How the hell can you miss that? Now that we agree that you cannot miss this sign, why do so many arrogant, moronic, poor drivers choose to drive right through this sign? I've had to throw on my brakes because some person decides that it's their right of way to just drive through the damn sign when it's not and they might even end up getting someone killed! Does this ever occur to anyone who decides to just keep on driving? You could easily kill someone because you're an arrogant, hot-shot prick who wants to show off, or who is just plain impatient. Think about it. I know that we're mostly UMass students (non-UMass students read this paper also), but we do have the ability to think. The stop sign is there for a reason. When you come to it, please stop. If not for yourself, do it so you don't end up killing anyone.

On a side note, do most of the pedestrians on campus think that they're invincible, or are they just blind? The reason that I'm asking this is because most pedestrians on campus just walk out into the street, whether onto a crosswalk or not, without looking both ways. I know that this sounds remedial, but you do have to stop and look both ways before you cross the street. Residents from other states know this. Massachusetts state residents (I'm one myself) seem to be the pedestrians who think that they can just walk out into the street without getting hit. Reality check. Yes, the laws state that it's always the pedestrians' right of way, but drivers from other states have a tendency to not acknowledge these laws. So when you step off the curb and onto the street without stopping or looking both ways, then you are going to get hit. So it's the fault of both driver and pedestrian.

Now back to the problems with driving on campus. I'm just wondering why (and drop a note in the Ed/Op box addressed to me if you so decide to attempt to explain this) everyone drives through the stoplights and stop signs. It's a basic question that I'm curious about. It also really pisses me off. I don't want to get killed solely because you can't tell time and therefore you are late to class or work. This is not my problem, but you're making it mine.

Also, when you're driving, put down that damn cellular phone and drive. While you're driving is not the time to go searching through your phone book and calling people just to say "Hi." Cellular phones should be restricted to emergencies when driving. None of this "Hey! What's up?" stuff. When you're on the road, you should be concentrating on the road, not the phone.

That brings me to another problem with cellular phones. You do not need to be on the phone on the way to class and then talk during class. A friend of mine actually saw and heard someone on their way to Franklin D.C. on their cellular phone saying, "Yeah, I'm on my way to Franklin." When you are calling your friends while on the way to their place, you should know that you are a little too dependent on the cellular phone. And don't, under any circumstances, answer the damn phone during class. It is disrespectful to both your teacher and to your fellow classmates. This is one of the reasons for the invention of voice mail. You don't always have to answer the phone. My favorite solution: keep the phone turned off during class and in between classes. Talk when you are sitting down in the campus center for all I care. Just don't use the cellular phone during class. For those of you who have seen me on campus talking on my cellular phone (never in class or in the fifteen minutes in between) it's mainly because I have no long distance at my apartment, only on my cellular phone. See I can't afford long distance on my normal phone and since I pay for my own phone bills, I had to make a choice. My parents did not buy me my phone or my phone case. And they certainly do not pay for any of my phone bills. Now I know that there are a lot of you who do pay your own bills, but there are also a lot of you who don't. I'm also on campus most days from 10:30 a.m. until 1, 2:30, or 3:30 a.m. So my cellular phone is my primary phone. Yet I don't abuse it. I only use it, as well as my apartment phone, as much as I need it. Instead, I make use of other phones on campus that are free. What a shock! I use something that is free!

One more thing that irks the hell out of me: when someone sees a backpack on a chair in their class and pack is there for a reason, like there might be someone sitting there already. This has happened to me several times. I won't find another seat. You have to. Do us both a favor and sit in an unclaimed chair.

Anyways, that ends my rant on sucky drivers and abuse of cellular phones. I promise that my next column will be on a much more positive note and will pertain to something more worldly. Have a great weekend! I know I will. I turn 22 on Monday.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist

Pity me, the Coke man

PAUL RAFELSON

Hello, my name is Paul, and I am a Coke addict. I have been an addict my whole life and although I have tried therapy, hypnotism, voodoo and witchcraft, I still cannot kick this terrible affliction. With the current increase in this Campus Coke prices, my only resource is to cry out about the current increase from a dollar to a dollar and fifty cents in University Soda Machines.

The problem I have with the price increase is the fact that when Coke was a dollar, it was simple. I always thought that a dollar was much for a 20 oz. Bottle, but I realized that I was paying for the convenience. It was an easy amount that was easily available in paper or metal format. However now as we are heading into the end of the year 2000, the land of technology and convenience has taken a step back into the dark ages. Coke not only requires the student to provide a perfectly crisp dollar bill, but also a lot of time, making the price on campus Coke $1.10. At the same time, Dasani prices have increased to $1.25. Obviously capitalizing on the fact that a student is more likely to be loyal as a bottled water drinker, and will not protest the price hike by choosing another beverage. This was a horrible time for the price increase. Many Coke addicts were eagerly awaiting the added convenience of soda machines accepting the new dollar coin as an added failsafe against non-crisp old dollar bills that don't work, and a refreshing alternative. Now with the addition of the dime, all hopes for convenient soda vending have been destroyed.

As I was preparing for my column on the pressing issues in refreshing beverages and costs, I managed to interview a fellow student concerned in this issue. Andrew Connors, Senior Sports Management major had this to say, "I think it's an outrage. I'm no dime advocate either. The dollar was simple and convenient. How did you manage to get into my apartment? Leave now, before I call the cops!"

Many suspect the price increase is a result of lobbyists in Washington who are pushing their congressmen to increase import taxes of sugar from South America, which is causing the price increase. Meanwhile the bureaucrats in Washington are pork barrelling, and passing laws that have increased soft drink and pet taxes. Other possible explanations are the time value of money, that is to say that with the current rise in inflation, that a dolla last semester is worth a dollar ten this semester. That's an interesting theory, but the fact that Dasani bottled water, which was a dollar last semester is now a dollar twenty-five. As if selling water wasn't criminal enough. However, this might also be because water prices have been soaring on the commodities marked as a result of O.P.E.C.'s recent decision to increase oil production. These are all interesting theories, but I have to discredit them since I made these theories up.

Although I have no idea what the real reason to increase these prices is what I have heard from various on campus departments and informed students. The first is that it was Coke's decision to increase the price to create a gradual price increase over time as opposed to just one large increase at a later date. The other reason may be possibly this is a method of increasing the use of the U-Card. That is to say, with this added inconvenience, the only way to regain peace of mind and prevent you from waking up in the middle of the night in a cold sweat after having nightmares about not having the extra dime is to get a U-Card. The fact remains that whatever the reason is, it was to increase profits for someone at, the students', and faculty's expense.

I would like to make a statement to the Student Government Association (S.G.A.). These price increases are a growing concern throughout campus. It is the ultimate insult to us the students, and how we are perceived to be so starving: yet the companies that have advertising tag lines that try to relate to us, such as, "Hey Starving College Kids," are the same companies that make every effort to turn up upside down and shake the loose change out of our pockets.

This is absolutely adding insult to injury, and I urge the S.G.A. to inform the Coca-Cola Company that Coca-Cola is the only supplier of soft drinks at UMass. UMass holds one of the largest contract accounts with Coca-Cola in the Northeast. Therefore, UMass holds power as a customer over the Coca-Cola Company since it is such a large account. UMass has the power to influence the pricing of on campus vending (Management professors/students, you know what I'm talking about). This is a chance for the S.G.A. to shine on as the voice of the students. We can schedule protests and walk-outs. The fleecing of college students needs to end, and it needed to end yesterday. S.G.A., it's time for Coke to realize that UMass is ready to take the Pepsi challenge.

Paul Rafelson is a Collegian staff member

Fall brings Matchbox Twenty to Mullins Center for mid-tour stop

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

MATCHBOX TWENTY
Mullins Center
September 22, 2000

Why do I like Matchbox Twenty? Scratch that. Why do I love Matchbox Twenty? No, it's not because I have some freakish twelve year-old girl-like obsession with lead singer Rob Thomas. It's not because I enjoy hybrid pop-crap, and it's not because I have an infatuation with anyone who's ever collaborated with Santana. I am a Matchbox Twenty fan because they consistently deliver quality music that is more meaningful that anything I've heard in a long time.

Matchbox Twenty rolled trough the Mullins Center in Amherst Friday night, in promotion of their new album Mad Season by Matchbox Twenty. They began the show with "Bent," the first single from that album. The introduction of something familiar set the crowd into an immediate frenzy. The recognizable opening guitar riff of the immensely popular song set a standard for the entire show.

Matchbox Twenty has tons of hits. From their first album, Yourself or Someone Like You, they managed to reach number one on the billboard pop charts four times with "Real World," "Back 2 Good," "3 a.m.," and the song that won them a Grammy for record of the year, "Push." Though sales of the new album have been slower than the first, the opportunity for the same success is evidently possible.

You would think a band like Matchbox Twenty would spend most of the time in the show highlighting the finest tracks from their albums, and leaving the rest of their songs on the back burner. This was truly not the case. They played twenty-three songs, for over two hours, and left only three songs of their compilation off the set list.

The small, but faithful crowd seemed to be as familiar with the parts of the set that were not hits as they were with the radio material. On "Argue," the house lights were turned up several times, and almost everyone on the floor could be seen singing along.

Thomas took time to acknowledge listener response to his songs before they played "Last Beautiful Girl." Thomas said, "You make an album and you hear people talk and speculate what things are about. I think it's funny, because this song really isn't about anyone." The lyrics in the song are: "It won't be the first heart that you break/It won't be the last beautiful girl/ the one that you wrecked/ won't take you back/ if you were the last beautiful girl in the world."

He also recognized the personal investment he actually does have in some of his songs. On "Rest Stop," he said, "I've been meaning to write this song since I was seventeen because it actually happened to me, and it finally ended up on this record." The depressing song tells the story of how a woman left him alone in his car while he was sleeping.

Though the band did play lesser-known songs that are quite tremendous such as "Body," "Crutch" and "The Burn," the highlights of the evening were the familiar pieces. By far, the best song of the night was "Push." It is the band's most known song and just the first note set a feeling of overwhelming excitement.

The reason that so much of Matchbox Twenty's material is so widely accepted, has to have something to do with the significance in the words. This goes back to my original question. Why do I love Matchbox Twenty? I adore the band because the lyrics are about me.

Okay, Thomas doesn't call me and ask what I want him to write about, and consequently every song is about my life. However, the substance that they write has such an awe-inspiring impact on the lives of men all over the world. Thomas writes songs about healthy male aggression against personal problems. This is something that Eminem is tremendously bad at.

When I left the show, a woman said to me, "It feels like I'm the target of all of the songs." She is very right. Thomas is a certainly not anti-woman. Most of his fans are female. He is, however, completely in favor of dealing with personal issues through writing and release of feelings.

I can totally relate to this. Ever since the first day I heard "Push," I was in love with the lyrics. Every time I hear a Matchbox Twenty song, I relate it to someone different from different times in my life. I can tell you whom "Push" is about. I can tell you who "Leave" is about. The irony is that Rob Thomas has never met any of the people that I will claim he is preaching to.

The Mullins Center may have been too big of a venue for the band to play. This still didn't take awas from the wonderfully positive energy that both Matchbox Twenty and opener Jayhawks brought with them.

Matchbox Twenty's Rob Thomas, captured on the band's Mullins Center tour stop.

Bait proves to be sprawling, unfunny mess; world in understandable shock

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

BAIT
Directed by Antoine Fuqua
Starring Jamie Foxx and Doug Hutchinson
Playing at Mr. Forms Cinema

I'm sure everyone would agree that there is no better feeling than to see a high-quality movie, one that's fresh and cutting-edge, chock full of fine performances, with great character depth and development, and a keen sense of direction.

Bait, unfortunately, has none of the above, rewarding characteristics.

In fact, it uses the same cliched, beating-a-dead-horse, buddy-cop formula that so many movies have followed before, from 48 Hrs to Bad Boys. It's an easy process to create this type of movie, which few films have succeeded at in recent years.

Team a grumpy, uptight policeman with a foul-mouthed, street-savvy rookie of a different ethnicity, throw some insults back and forth and send the odd couple on a mission to find a government thief or murderer (or both). Add a love interest and wrap it up with the partners becoming buddies, the guy getting the girl, capturing the villain, and voila, you've just made a movie that people will shell out eight dollars to see.

After his scene-stealing success in last year's Oliver Stone football free-for-all Any Given Sunday, Jamie Foxx stars in Bait as Alvin Sanders, a small-time crook who gets caught stealing prawns (those are large shrimp, to the seafood illiterate). In the slammer, Sanders' cellmate confides in him of a gold heist gone bad that he recently pulled off with another guy, who lucked out and escaped. As he's telling him where the booty is hidden, the cellmate drops dead of a heart attack (surprise, surprise). The cranky cop, who is in hot pursuit of the missing bricks, is played by character actor David Morse (last seen in The Green Mile). He figures that Sanders was told the whereabouts of the gold by the recently deceased, so the fine folks of the N.Y.P.D. set Sanders out as bait to lure the head honcho of the heist out from hiding.

Underrated actor Doug Hutchison, who also starred in The Green Mile as twisted prison guard Percy Wetmore, plays the man in question here. His extreme talent at being a bad boy made him the most watchable and intriguing character on the screen. So much so, in fact, that deep down you're rooting for him to win by the story's end.

When it comes to an action hero, Jamie Foxx is not who most people think of. It's clear in Bait that Foxx's forte is comedy, as demonstrated by his self-titled UPN show and the sketch comedy series "In Living Color" where he began his career. In some instances, the action star does not need to have the bodybuilder physique or cutthroat attitude that audiences have come to expect. Take, for example, Chris Tucker, who succeeded as the crass cop in 1998's Rush Hour, mainly because he had the street-smart edge as well as the nerdy appeal audiences find funny. Foxx, however, comes across as too much of a pretty boy for an action hero, and should stick to comedies like Booty Call that suit him best.

Bait never takes itself seriously. It can't decide whether it's an action film or a comedy, and it's abundantly evident that the actors are aware of this fact too. The film seems rushed, as though the actors are just as eager for it to be over as the audience is. It has great talent at its fingertips but never uses it to full capacity, including the John Woo-esque direction of Antoine Fuqua (The Replacement Killers), who has a great affection for extreme close-ups. Do we need to see what's stuck in Scream star Jamie Kennedy's teeth?

As the film ends, the audience is left to wonder where the gold is that the dead cellmate hid. It's by a very weak, loose, last-minute addition to the plot that we discover its shocker of a location (note the sarcasm). The screenwriter, so wrapped up in writing witty dialogue and sharp one-liners, seems to have forgotten about this key ingredient, tossing it in via a most ridiculous manner.

It will come as no surprise to me if Bait succeeds at the box office (and by succeed I mean break even, because there's always a need for mindless, hackneyed action films). I too occasionally enjoy not having to focus all my concentration on a movie. I like seeing the protagonist get shot at six times and emerge from victory without a scratch while the antagonist gets taken down with one bullet.

Most people who will see Bait will get from it just what they expect: a fast, fun, oftentimes flimsy action movie.

'Total Request Live' deconstructed

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Correspondent

Many countdowns have come and gone on MTV since the network's inception in 1981 but none have become as successful as "Total Request Live." "Total Request Live" better known as TRL, started off as a small, unknown show on MTV back in 1998. Since then, TRL has snowballed into one of the most powerful driving forces in the music industry today. In fact, TRL has become so influential that it serves as a foreshadowing of what will land in each week's top ten Billboard Album charts.

The show first originated in summer of '98 when it debuted as tape delayed Total Request. The show grew in such popularity that producers decided to fuse MTV Live, an unsuccessful celebrity talk show, with the request show. The product became known as "Total Request Live," a live combination of videos and artist interviews.

The concept behind TRL is simple—fans call and e-mail in requests for their favorite current videos, which are then played back on a top ten list.

How this show grew from another MTV experimental project to a musical institution lies in the show's many appealing characteristics. The videos, for example, are broadcast with technical decorations, such as a crawl that scrolls across the bottom of the screen that reads e-mails from voters. A request camera also pops up on the lower part of the screen where fans voice in requests for their favorite video.

Another distinctive trademark of TRL is its Times Square studio located in Manhattan, New York. The studio serves as a signature for the show, where hundreds of fans create mob scenes outside the studio every day. Screaming fans hold up signs and posters all hoping to get invited up to the studio to be a part of the live audience.

Another important component to TRL's success is its host, Carson Daly. Daly's charismatic demeanor has helped him become a star himself. Although his favorite music is rock (he has made the fact quite clear that Kid Rock is one of his favorite artists) he offers other fans to express their joy for kiddie pop, the most requested music genre on TRL.

Superstars are often a main component to the TRL formula. Music, TV and, of course, musical artists stop by almost every day to promote their new projects. Hip artists from Madonna to Jonel Jackson to Eric Clapton all appeared on TRL, which indicates just how big the show has become.

'N Sync and the Backstreet Boys, however, remain the greatest audiences. Proving to all fans, even the critics of 'N Sync, when a group of dudes can still fascinate visits the TRL studio. They only have a few more months to enjoy the top ten position, so cherish them.

Granted TRL is not always an entertaining show but that fact hasn't stopped the show from becoming the highest rated show on MTV. Still MTV has succeeded in creating a show about all kinds of music and gives music a place, including pop and rock. It is certainly not uncommon to see Limp Bizkit at number one one week and down following by Britney Spears, who stays there at number 3 position for the day. Furthermore TRL maintains a large viewership at a hard-to-reach time slot of 5:30 p.m. TRL has become the ultimate after-school show for teens.

Recently, TRL celebrated its 500th birthday, where they counted down the top 50 most popular TRL artists since the show's premiere. That particular show epitomized the fact that TRL has been the main reason many acts have become so popular such as 'N Sync who came out at number one on the artist countdown. 'N Sync's videos are played for 65 consecutive days—a rare achievement for popular artists—and then enter retirement. These videos are watched by millions and offer mass exposure to the public. The exposure that TRL gives to the artists is currently unparalleled by anything in the music industry.

Besides being the American Bandstand of our generation, TRL has breathed new life into MTV and has helped it gain one of it's greatest audiences ever. TRL doesn't seem to be another passing fad—it's here to stay. Even if music changes drastically in a few years TRL has the backbone to follow it wherever it may go.

What's more valuable than bronze, silver or gold?
Bragging rights.
The Collegiate Olympic Medal Race is on!
Follow the tally with the GE College Medal Tracker, only on NBCOlympics.com.
NBCOLYMPICS.COM
We bring good things to life.
www.gecareers.com

PREPARE NOW FOR THE OCTOBER 28 MECT

MASSACHUSETTS EDUCATOR CERTIFICATION TEST PREPARATION

Communication and Literacy Skills (CLS) Preparation Workshops

- Overview Workshop, 7-9 p.m., October 3, 17 or 24
  Essential information, self-assessment of strengths and weaknesses. Review CLS test strategies and sample questions. $45
- Skills Development Intensive Saturday Workshop, 9 a.m.-4 p.m., October 14 or 21
  Intensive preparation; focus on all areas of the CLS test: reading comprehension, vocabulary, five-paragraph essay, persuasive writing, grammar and punctuation, written mechanics (dictation), test-taking strategies. Take a comprehensive mini-test to assess strengths and weaknesses. $125

UMASS
For more information or to register, contact Joan Zabawa, School of Education, 125 Furcolo Hall, 545-2701.

New channels bring joy and pain

As I moved in that late Friday afternoon and began to set up my room for the upcoming scholastic year I was greeted with a pleasant surprise. After I finished unpacking my clothes, including my extensive collection of flannel and began to stock my shelves with real books (not those fake things professors assign to you). After which I plugged in my Y2K compliant television into its surge protector and then attached the cable wire to the correct hookups. It took me a second to find batteries for my remote and then at that moment, when I pushed the oval shaped power button at the top of said remote control, did I begin to officially research for Tuberoses.

I was astonished to find out that not only did we have an extra UMass basic cable movie channel, but we also had acquired TNT, USA, MTV, VH1, MTV2, VH1, Discovery, Nickelodeon, Soggie, Sci-Fi and of course every male college student must have channel ESPN. Not only had the university sprung for one of two extra cable stations but the SGA, to my pleasant surprise, had actually kept a promise and got the student bids the popular stations that we demanded. I could tell this was going to be a good year.

First of all we won't have to suffer through just the College Television Network. I mean it's still there if we wanted to watch it and its constant playing of the same videos, but do we have to succumb to Much Music, a sub-standard Canadian version of MTV. Sorry, now we have the real deal. If we want to watch twelve back to back episodes of the "Real World," we can. If we want to see thousands of NSYNC fans giving themselves a hernia from screaming we can. Also when we get sick of dance shows and game shows on MTV, we can go to channel 42 and nothing but the best in eclectic music television on MTV2. Then to cap off the music endorsed television trio, next, VH1 anchors off for the informational part of the music buzz documenting video fashion and the downfall of some of our favorite artists.

And although the HSCN has yet to provide us with HBO or Cinemax, we have the next best things. For new and more popular movies TNT offers us the "new classics" films like The Shawshank Redemption, Dolores Claiborne and Misery not to mention it's the home to World Championship Wrestling's "Monday Nitro." Plus TNT gives us two whole hours of "ER" in the morning, reminding us that good shows never die, they just go into syndication. And to make up for the soft core pornography that graces the networking of late night Cinemax, contributes to most other decent programming like "Strip Poker," "Silk Stalkings," "Jimmy & Doug's Farm Club.com," and my personal favorite "Up All Night."

At this point I would like to thank all of those other college students who asked for ESPN and ESPN2. Thank God. Now, like real people, we can listen to witty comments like, "Shake your Red Bon Homerun" or the infamous Boosh. Plus we get other great alternative sports besides baseball, football, hockey, and basketball like fox hunting, equestrienne, the lumberjack Olympics, and the world strongest man challenge.

In conclusion, I must say kudos to the HSCN for the excellent programming selection. Not only were they able to keep most of the channels from last year but also added channels that students wanted to see. So the next time that someone is whining about the university doing nothing for the students, speak up and tell them. "Not true, just look at UMass cable."

What to watch:

Unfortunately, nothing is on this next week except for the Olympics which I must say is getting a little boring. If I see one more story about the person who sprained their finger to win a gold medal I'll scream. The only good Olympic moment NBC showed was about the swimmer that couldn't swim; funny, we said. So enjoy these last days of Olympic coverage because it's another two years until the winter games. After the closing ceremonies, the new season of television begins, so hold your breath; we're almost there.

Tube Note
with Nicholas Pizzolato

Rane will be appearing at the Party by the Pond, which has recently been rescheduled to this coming Saturday night indoors at Skybox.

Rane Drops

■ football

continued from page 10

Holstra's penchant for giving up big gains on the ground likely has tailback Marcel Shipp licking his lips heading into Saturday. The senior All-American ran over the Chargers for 147 yards last weekend, running his streak of 100-yard games to seven straight. The 1999 Walter Payton Award runner-up has hit the century mark in 26 of his last 28 games and has amassed 438 yards from scrimmage already in 2000.

The Maroon and White receiving corps is also coming off probably its most solid effort of the season: seven different Minutemen pulled in passes against the Chargers, including five different UMass wideouts celebrating in the UNI endzone. After being locked-in perhaps a bit too much on senior Adrian Zullo in the first half, Lucero widened his field vision and rewarded targets Jimmie Howard, Eric Bross and Jeff Howard for running precise routes and finding space in the Charger secondary.

"I'm excited about our receivers and how five different guys each caught a touchdown pass," Whipple said. "It was not just Adrian Zullo doing it for us."

The visiting team has held the upper hand in the all-time series between the two teams, which Holstra leads 2-1. Last season, the Dutchmen invaded McGuirk and escaped with a 27-14 victory despite allowing 462 yards of total offense to the Minutemen (200 of which came courtesy of Shipp). The '98 clash at Holstra Stadium saw UMass triumph, 40-35, when Zullo grabbed a 15-yard touchdown strike with three ticks remaining in the game to cap a 12-point second-half comeback.

The Dutchmen demolished the Minutemen 51-13 in the first-ever meeting between the two, in November of '97 at McGuirk.

"They will be ready for us," Whipple said. "We beat them in '98, but they came here and knocked us off last season. I think anytime we play Holstra it is going to be a war; look at their record against our conference."

The Flying Dutchmen are 15-0 against A-10 opponents since the start of the '97 season. UMass presents Holstra with the fourth and final A-10 foe on its 2000 slate.

Derek Rhodes and the Maroon and White are prepped to go head to head with Saint Bonaventure and Duquesne this weekend.

Men's tennis dominates Hawks

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Correspondent

Coming into this fall's campaign, one of the main goals of the Massachusetts men's tennis team was to start off the season on a high note. After a strong showing at last weekend's Northeast Intercollegiate Championship, the Minutemen are without a doubt reaching their goal after yesterday afternoon's dominating performance.

The team breezed by non-conference opponent Hartford, winning easily 7-0. In fact, the Maroon and White had so little trouble with the Hawks that they failed to win only two sets over the entire contest. Junior Steve Prisco improved his record to 3-1 on the year by defeating Hartford's #1 singles player, Pedja Zdrakovic, in three sets, 6-3, 1-6, 6-2.

The Minutemen won every other singles match in straight sets. Senior Todd Champeau easily disposed of opponent Namanja Balaj 6-1, 6-4. Freshmen Brent Davis and Aron Gortman stepped up and won both of their matches. Davis eased past Hartford's George Rzepski 6-2, 6-4, and Gortman made quick work of the Hawks' Rob Greece, 6-1, 6-2.

Will Shaw and captain Bill Greener rounded out the team's dominance in singles play as Shaw cruised 6-0, 6-1 and Greener breezed 6-1, 6-1.

In doubles play, Hartford gained their only victory of the day, as Zdrakovic and Bala defeated Prisco and Champeau 8-2. The Minutemen pounded to be too much for the Hawks in the other two doubles matches as the teams of Davis/Shaw and Champeau/Rory Theis came out victorious.

Assistant coach Scott Wilkins described the match as a "good effort" by the team, but he said the team had left their "it would be a match that [they] could handle." Coach Wilkins singled out Steve Prisco as the star of the day, citing that Prisco had a strong showing against Zdrakovic after falling to him last year.

The Maroon and White now prepare for an away match at Boston University on Monday. The Terriers (1-0) will help prepare the team for what Wilkins describes as their "first real test," a Thursday match in Chestnut Hill against the Eagles of Boston College.

Pierce stabbing yet another wound to Celtic pride

MATT DENOBLE

In 1986, the Boston Celtics expected a promising young draft pick named Lenny Bias to become the next in a long line of Celtic stars. Sadly, a drug overdose took away Bias' life and any chance to ever shine on the parquet floor. Less than eight years later, tragedy struck the Celtics' family again with the untimely death of Reggie Lewis. Loved throughout the community for his work on and off the court, Lewis' loss was incredibly difficult to accept.

If there is such a thing as being used to tragedy, the Celtics and their fans may know what it's all about. That's why the news of Paul Pierce's stabbing brought back all too familiar emotions throughout Celtic Land earlier this week.

The stabbing occurred early Monday morning at the Buzz Club in Boston. Pierce and some friends, including teammate Tony Battie, were attending a private party there. Pierce was reportedly stabbed at least seven times in the back, neck and face. He was rushed to the hospital after the altercation and walked in under his own power.

Pierce was listed in fair and stable condition at the New England Medical Center following surgery to repair his damaged lung. The stab wounds he received were described as mostly superficial. Some say that Pierce's leather jacket may have protected him from more severe injuries.

More will be learned in the next few days about Monday's altercation at the Buzz Club. There is no report as of yet to a motive for the stabbing. A police spokeswoman did say that associates of the rap group Made Men were being looked into as suspects, but the group denies any involvement.

As for now, Pierce continues to recover from his hospital bed. Doctors expect a full physical recovery. A statement from his family was released Tuesday, saying, "Paul is in good spirits and looking forward to putting this ordeal behind him and returning to what he does best – playing basketball."

No one is sure when to expect to see Pierce on the court again, but that's not what's important. As Red Auerbach put it, "You do think about all the other stuff, but the main thing now is that the kid is going to be all right."

Information from the Boston Globe contributed to this article.

Matt DeNoble is a Collegian correspondent.

Have a great weekend!

With all the love in the Campus Center Basement,

The Thursday Night Graphics staff

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co
(On bus route)

Attention All New Students:
For your convenience
Meningitis Vaccine Clinic
University Health Services
Tuesday, October 3, 2000
Tuesday, October 10, 2000
Students under the age of 30 who would like to receive the vaccine should call the University Health Services at 577-5101 and ask for an appointment with the Meningitis Clinic. The cost of immunization is $75. Cash, check or credit card accepted. For additional information, call the Public Health Line at 577-5044.

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am
in the Jones Library Conference Room
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org
43 Amity Street
Downtown Amherst
It's a Church!
374-7532

PART-TIME POSITIONS
Located on the PVTA bus route, we offer convenient schedules to those looking to do some part-time office work.
CLERICAL ASSISTANCE
Duties include gathering materials for mailing, packing boxes, copying papers, and other clerical tasks. Those selected need to be able to work at least 3 consecutive hours between 9 AM and 5 PM on workdays. Hours are available now.
WORD PROCESSING TECHNICIAN
This position requires word processing skills and attention to detail. Experience using Microsoft Word 97 for Windows will be helpful in working with our other word processing staff to complete a document conversion project. Both full-time and part-time temporary positions are available.
Call 413-256-0444 to have an application mailed to you.
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
EOE

COMMUNICATIONS
THE FUTURE OF COMMUNICATIONS BEGINS WITH YOU.
CLEAR IDEAS™ FOR YOUR CAREER.
At Tellabs, developing the communications landscape of the future is more than just an ambition. It is something we do every day. Through innovative technologies like dense wavelength division multiplexing, Voice-over-IP and SONET, we keep local, long-distance, wireless, cable and Internet service providers on the cutting edge. If you are majoring in electrical or computer engineering, computer science or a related field, help us shape the future of the new market.
• HARDWARE DEVELOPMENT AND TESTING • SOFTWARE/SYSTEM INTEGRATION TESTING • VLSI DESIGN
• SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT • FIRMWARE DEVELOPMENT • RESEARCH
Tellabs was recently ranked among FORTUNE magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work for in America."
We will be on your campus for the Engineering Career Fair at the Engineering Student Center in Marcus Hall on October 5, 2000
Tellabs
EOE M/F/D/V

NFL Week 5 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	8-6-0 (25-16-2)	6-8-0 (20-21-2)	7-7-0 (19-22-2)	7-7-0 (19-22-2)	4-10-0 (18-23-2)
Indianapolis @ Buffalo	Buffalo by 1	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Buffalo
Dallas @ Carolina	Carolina by 6	Carolina	Dallas	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina
Baltimore @ Cleveland	Baltimore by 8 1/2	Baltimore	Cleveland	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore
Minnesota @ Detroit	Detroit by 1	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
NY Giants @ Tennessee	Tennessee by 5	NY Giants	NY Giants	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee
San Diego @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 17	San Diego	St. Louis	St. Louis	San Diego	St. Louis
Pittsburgh @ Jacksonville	Jacksonville by 10 1/2	Jacksonville	Pittsburgh	Jacksonville	Pittsburgh	Jacksonville
New England @ Denver	Denver by 8 1/2	Denver	New England	New England	Denver	New England
Miami @ Cincinnati	Miami by 7	Miami	Cincinnati	Miami	Miami	Cincinnati
Chicago @ Green Bay	Green Bay by 5 1/2	Green Bay	Chicago	Chicago	Green Bay	Green Bay
Arizona @ San Francisco	San Fran by 3 1/2	Arizona	Arizona	San Francisco	Arizona	San Fran
Tampa Bay @ Washington	Washington by 1	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Washington	Tampa Bay	Washington
Atlanta @ Philadelphia	Philadelphia by 3	Philadelphia	Atlanta	Atlanta	Philadelphia	Philadelphia
Seattle @ Kansas City	Kansas City by 4	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Seattle	Kansas City

TRASH TALK

Right off the bat, I've got to give my boy Benson some seriously belated props. The guy finally gets his sh*t together and puts up a winning week, only to have his Trash Talk column mysteriously overlooked in last week's paper. Then, to add insult to injury, the kid goes 4-10 last weekend to tumble into sole possession of last place. BA, all I can say is study up; your roomie didn't plunk down all that cash on DirecTV so you could embarrass your household every other weekend...

Granted, my 8-6 week wasn't the greatest either, but it was good enough for first among our sorry prognosticators. As the only guy on the chart with a winning record, I am now officially empowered to sprint to the center of the chart and raise my arms to the sky a la Terrell Owens. So LET'S GO, GUYS. Somebody pull a George Teague and knock me out, I DARE ya.

Biggie, tough luck going 6-8 after such a promising start. Maybe it's time to quit ranting about politics and start paying more attention to the important things in life. And I never thought I'd get to say this, but GET A HAIRCUT!

Smitty and Scarecrow Man, 7-7 is OK for such a tough week so I can't really rip on ya too bad. Ah, screw that.... You guys wouldn't know a winner if picked your scrawny butts up and body-slammed you. Especially you, roomie... it's time to get serious with your knowledge.

As far as last week's picks go, Green Bay was a lock as predicted and the Mutts of the Midway finally fell back to earth, right on schedule. Miami covered as well, cementing my philosophy that the Pat-thetics will NEVER beat the spread this year. If you're the betting kind, and you have ANY money at all, you will have a lot more if you pay attention to this trend.

If last week was tough, this week is BRUTAL. No less than eight games could literally go either way, so I wouldn't be surprised if I'm the trasher and not the trashee in next week's TT. Martignetti, it's time to step up and wreck somebody's day, kid. You've waited long enough.

First off, I LOVE Miami giving only seven in Cincy. After watching Bruce Coslet BEG Corey Dillon to go back into Sunday's debacle against Baltimore and having Dillon flat out refuse, I have concluded that this team is the definition of football Hell and that it is Coslet who should be applauded for quitting. How bad are the Bengals? See prior comment about the Pats.

Tampa Bay will CRUSH the Skins in D.C., even as one-point dogs. You can bet (once again, if you're that guy than Tony Dungy tore his team a new you-know-what after last week's collapse against the I-E-TS, and there is nothing more dangerous than a humbled monster like the Bucs.

Finally, my parting shot must go to the one team I just can't kick enough when it's down. There is NO WAY the Pats are coming within eight and a half of the Broncos at Mile High. Griese is back, TD is supposedly A-OK and the Pats are, well, the Pats. It's not quite the pick to mortgage the family farm on, but any of you jokers who want action on the girls in Blue and Silver can come on down to the Campus Center Basement and talk to the boss.

On second thought, just save your money for beer. At least that way you can be a drunk loser on Sunday.

-Adam White

UM preps for A-10 openers

Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

It will be more than a three-hour tour for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, as they will enter the hostile waters of the Atlantic 10 for the first time this season against two of the stronger teams in the division.

Hoping to leave their opponents Saint Bonaventure and Duquesne in their wake, the Minutemen enter this weekend with a 4-3-1 record. A surging UMass squad has won three out of their last four games and will be a tough opponent for any visiting team to beat.

The Maroon and White has turned it on lately with the help of sophomores Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales. Deren, who scored four goals in three games last week, leads the Minutemen with five goals, and was recently named Atlantic 10 Men's Soccer Co-player of the Week and the WHMP/UMass athlete of the week, while teammate Morales had the tying goal against Fresno State in the UMass Classic last weekend. He also currently ranks second on the team in points with two goals and four assists.

"Yuri has played great," Koch said, adding that other standout Jeff Deren "has come on like gangbusters. He is quick and explosive when he has the ball at his feet. He is certainly a handful for any defense."

However, St. Bonaventure and Duquesne will not fall easily to the Minutemen. The Bonnies will arrive at Totman Field 3-5, with one win in the A-10 this season. Duquesne also enters the weekend at 3-5, but with only a loss in the A-10 to St. Bonaventure.

"We've got our work cut out for us," said Massachusetts coach Sam Koch.

Saint Bonaventure is currently on a two game winning streak, shutting out Canisius University in their last game 3-0. Leading the charge for the Bonnies is senior Sean Kelty who has netted two goals this season and tallied four assists as well.

"Saint Bonaventure won their last two games and they are coming in a positive frame mind," Koch said. "They beat Duquesne in their Atlantic 10 opener so they're actually in first place. They have a good midfield and are going to give us trouble."

Despite already having a loss in the A-10, Duquesne is still a dangerous team and the Minutemen cannot overlook them. They are just coming off a 3-0 loss to Navy, but will push to get back on track this weekend. With a powerful defensive line, all of Duquesne's wins this season have come by shutout. The Red and Blue are fronted by sophomore goalie Terry McNelis, who has dominated the net, his one goal allowed per game on average leaving him second in the Atlantic 10. On the other end of the field for the Dukes, sophomore David Gingrish and freshman Dan Hartung have been the major point men for Duquesne. Each has scored two goals apiece and both have an assist as well.

"Duquesne has improved over last year so they are going to be better," Koch said. "They have a very creative player up front [in] Hartung. They are going to be tough on Sunday, they are well organized, they are fit, it is going to be a battle."

This weekend will not only be the start of A-10 conference play for the Minutemen, but it will be two out of only four games the Minutemen will play at home for the rest of the season.

"Two have our first conference games at home are a plus," Koch said. "We have got to play well and do what we have been doing, and make sure we are mentally prepared for this weekend. No more non-conference games, these are the games that matter as far as getting us to the Atlantic 10 tournament and the NCAA tournament."

The Minutemen will take the field this weekend against Saint Bonaventure at 3:30 p.m. on Friday and again at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday.

UMass looks to impress at N/S Invitational

Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

The No. 10 Massachusetts men's water polo team will travel to Princeton, New Jersey this weekend looking to extend their eight game winning streak at the North/South Invitational.

The Minutemen will take on some of the toughest competition of their season with games against No. 15 Navy and No. 16 Princeton included in the four-game tournament. Rounding out the weekend for the Maroon and White will be George Washington and Bucknell.

While the Minutemen have not faced off against first Princeton, George Washington, or Bucknell so far this season, they did take to the waters against Navy back on September 3 in the Navy Labor Day Tournament.

The Midshipmen (10-5) handed UMass one of their two losses of the season in that contest by a score of 5-2. With that victory, Navy took the lead in the all-time series, 11-10.

However, the Maroon and White have been dominating of late and are looking to get some revenge to even the series back up. Navy is led by Sean Foster, who has 29 goals and 8 assists to date. UMass counters with their high scoring duo of Adam Moore and Chad Arnold who are tied for the team lead with 20 goals.

Moore and Arnold, combined with Carlos Ramos (51 total points) and Mike Foley's emergence after returning from injury, make this offensive force seem indefensible. The defense has been solid as well for the Minutemen anchored by J.R. VanderWall's 76 saves in 32 quarters in the net and Justin Houck's contribution of 18 steals.

Another big weekend awaits the Maroon and White. With some key victories on this trip to New Jersey, our Minutemen can continue to open the eyes of those in the national water polo community and continue their climb up the national polls. Who knows how much they can achieve?

Check it out soon:
www.dailycollegian.com

meet shop savor indulge
THORNES MARKETPLACE
150 Main Street • Downtown Northampton

SOUPerBOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St (Next to CVS) 253-1855

LIVE MUSIC
McMURPHY'S Welcomes
THE FLYING CANTILINIS
Every Sunday 10-1am
Positive ID Required

Allow Us to Be the First to Drain Your Disposable Income. College Student.

Treat yourself to some fine Onion products. Besides, it's Daddy's money anyway.
At Bookstores Everywhere
www.theonion.com Three Rivers Press www.randomhouse.com
Listen to The Onion's Finest News Reporting, Volume I, available on audio cassette and CD from Random House AudioBooks.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1988 Honda Beater looks bad runs good. $700 Firm call Todd 545-4066

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8!), excellent condition, 86k loaded: power windows-seat-mirrors-locks, a/c, peppy V6 3.8L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker $4500 or b.o., 508-836-3753

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

91 Ford Taurus Black, 90k, 4dr, cruise, power windows Call 549-5230 $2200

1994 VW Passat GLX, 5spd VR 6, dark green, 6 disc, cd, phone, loaded $6200 obo 549-1553

Honda Accord 92 two door, 5-speed, sun roof, 124k, runs great. Asking $4100 665-8616

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

CHILDCARE

Afterschool childcare needed in Amherst home, 2 children, M, T, Th 3:15-5:15 Wed 1:30 - 5:30, or some combination. 545-0258

Mothers helper wanted with breakfast & dinner with some overnights. Hourly wage nego. Call Abbey 586-0207 ext. 305

EMPLOYMENT

Cook-Day Care Center, Rt. 63, Leverett 9-1 M-F $7.50/hr Call Susan 548-9674

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr. Call Susan, 548-9674

Mail Boxers Etc. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Ctr., Amherst)

Data Processing Typist needed. High incount potential with flexible hours. Basic computer skills required. 1-800-773-4339 or 941-351-5514 or visit www.thelaw-club.com

Mad Science. Instructors/performers. Part-time to conduct fun afterschool program, birthday parties etc. Experience with groups of children. Must have car. Great experience, good pay. 584-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emd-snet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

EMPLOYMENT

Second Shift 3pm-11pm. Part time Monday, Wednesday and Friday with possibiliy of full time. Duties include maintaining a large recirculating aquaculture & hydroponics greenhouse. Applicant must be responsible, mechanically inclined and able to work alone. Great for students - Earn while you learn. Send resume to Bioshelters, Inc., 500 Sunderland Road, Amherst, MA 01002, fax (413) 549-9945, email bioshelter @aol.com. No calls please.

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups * Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

EMPLOYMENT

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ FOR HIRE: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking for Fall 2000. Call Tim at 537-8527

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Guitar for sale Fender Squier 2 stratocaster w/hard case excel. condition $250 call John 546-4475

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENT

Sororities/Fraternities: SYB Productions & DJ Fooz are now booking your next date party, house party, or after-hours event. Call Tim @ 537-8527

MISCELLANEOUS

Students - Garage Sale tomorrow on Amherst Town Common. Help support ARHS gymnastics

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun,

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sell Trips, Earn Cash, Go Free! Call for FREE info. Spring Break Travel. 1-800-838-7710

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

Need to Advertise? The Daily Collegian Classifieds has everything you could want and more! Call us to Advertise for you! 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

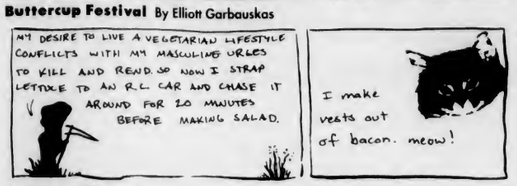
2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 ABC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Govet to Govet
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN SI
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 29, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	12	Clifford Red	Business Rpt	Newshour With Jim Lehrer R		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Mastery Test Forum		The Grand (In Stereo)		World of National Geographic
WFSB (3)	3	News R	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother (N) R		Survivor (In Stereo) R				News R	Late Show R
WBZ (4)	4	News R	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother (N) R		Survivor (In Stereo) R				News R	Nightline R
WCVB (5)	5	News R	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle R	Two Guys-Girl	Two Guys-Girl	Norm R	Norm R	20/20 R		News R	Change-Heart
WLVI (6)		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless R	Friends R	Nanny R	Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular Baby Don't Do It R		News R		Friends R
WHDH (7)		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) R
WTXX	8	7th Heavan (In Stereo) R		Major League Baseball Boston Red Sox at Tampa Bay Devil Rays (Live)						News	Real TV R	Blind Date	Change-Haart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) R								Friends R	Fraser R
WTIC (8)	11	Simpsons R	Frasier R	Seinfald R	Friends R	Simpsons R	Malcolm-Mid.	70s Show	70s Show	News		News R	Nightline R
WWLP (9)	22	News R	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) R		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	The Games	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) R
WGBY (11)	6	World News	Business Rpt	Newshour With Jim Lehrer R		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	70s Show	70s Show	20/20 R		News R	Nightline R
WGGB (12)	20	News R	ABC News	Seinfald R	Fraser R	Two Guys-Girl	Two Guys-Girl	Norm R	Norm R	Fraser	I Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WSBK (13)		Judge Judy R	Judge Judy R	Seinfald R	Fraser R	Source Hip-Hop Music Awards (In Stereo) R					★★★ "Honeymoon in Vegas" (1992) James Caan
WTBS (22)		Roseanne R	Roseanne R	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball Colorado Rockies at Atlanta Braves (Live) R					Investigative Reports R		Law & Order Old Friends R
A&E (41)		L.A. Law		Law & Order House Counsel		Biography The Gambinos: First Family of Crime R				Newsstand R		Sports	Moneyline R
CNN (20)	23	Worldview R	Moneyline Newshour (N) R		Crossfire R	World Today R		Larry King Live R				Saturday Night Live R
COM (35)	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show R	Stein's Money	Pulp Comics	Pulp Comics	Pulp Comics V	Pulp Comics	Com. Presents	Premium	Justice Files
DISC (24)		Wild Discovery Tarantulas		Wild Discovery Scorpions R		On the Inside Wreck Finder		News	Explore Our	Storm Warning! (N)		Sportscenter R
ESPN (31)		Sportscenter R		Up Close Special (N)		Major League Soccer Conference Semifinal - Teams TBA				Baseball Tonight (N)		Once and Again Mediation R
LIFE (32)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	★★★ "I Know My First Name Is Steven" (1989, Drama) Cindy Pickett, John Ashton R								Celebrity	Celebrity
MTV (33)		Direct Effect	TBA	Tom Green R	Tom Green R	Tom Green R	Tom Green R	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	Celebrity	All in Family	Jeffersons R
NICK (34)		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! R	Rugrats R	U Pick Nicktoons (In Stereo) R				I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	Invisible Man Cateyar R
SCIFI (15)		Sliders As Time Goes By R		Babylon 5 Born to the Purple		Invisible Man Cateyar R		★ "Species II" (1998, Science Fiction) Michael Madsen R		Human Journey The		Thrill Rides Designing Fear
TLC (27)	28	How'd They Do That? R		48 Hours Animal ER R		Thrill Rides Designing Fear		Human Journey Tale		Com. Presents	Premium	Invisible Man Cateyar R
TNT (25)		ER The Domino Heart R		Pretender Baby Love R		Nash Bridges Revelations R		"My Stepson, My Lover" (1997, Drama) Rachel Ward R		Baseball Tonight (N)		Strip Poker	Manhattan, AZ
USA (29)		Walker, Texas Ranger R		JAG Wilderness of Mirrors R
HBO (30)		(5:00) "Deep End-Ocn"		Inside the NFL R		★ "Cobra" (1986, Drama) Sylvester Stallone R		Sex and-City		"A Better Way to Die" (2000, Drama) Andre Braugher R
MAX (40)		(5:30) "The Suburbans" (1999)		★'s "Showdown in Little Tokyo" (1991) R		★'s "Devil in the Flesh" (1997) Rose McGowan				Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits Glitch (In Stereo)	Beggars
SHOW (55)		★★★ "Beetlejuice" (1988, Comedy) Michael Keaton PG				★★★ "eXistenZ" (1999) Jennifer Jason Leigh R		Filmmaker

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

Buttercup Festival By Elliott Garbauskas



MY DESIRE TO LIVE A VEGETARIAN LIFESTYLE CONFLICTS WITH MY MASCULINE URGES TO KILL AND REND. SO NOW I STRAP LETTUCE TO AN R.C. CAR AND CHASE IT AROUND FOR 20 MINUTES BEFORE MAKING SALAD.
I make vests out of bacon. meow!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

PETER, PAIGE NEEDS YOU TO MOVE THE CAR SO SHE CAN GET TO HER BIKE.
I PARKED IN THE SAME SPOT IN THE GARAGE THAT I ALWAYS DO.
THERE'S PLENTY OF ROOM TO GET TO THE BIKE RACK. WHAT'S THE PROBLEM? HER BIKE WASN'T IN THE BIKE RACK.
SO THAT'S WHAT THAT CRUNCHING SOUND WAS
I TRIED TO EXPLAIN TO HER THE EFFECT RELATIVISTIC SPEEDS HAVE ON YOUR EYESIGHT.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Robotman By Jim Meddick

YOU SEE JOAN WAINE?
HE'S SITTING RIGHT RIGHT NEXT TO ME
WE ATE YOU. I'M STILL SUFFERED BRAIN DAMAGE YOU NEED TO SEE A DOCTOR
YEAH I KNOW I AIN'T GOT NUTTIN' A SWISS OF MY BODY CAN'T CURE HERE!
WELL THEN STOP YER YAPPIN' AND TAKE ANOTHER SWIG

Robotman By Jim Meddick

AND THIS GETS SCRAPED OFF, HERE AND THAT AREA, SEE?
SO, HOW DO YOU FEEL?
I FEEL PRETTY GOOD! THANKS, MONTY!
I WONDER WHAT IT DOES
GOOD LORD I'VE LOST THE SENSATION TO MY LEGS!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THERE'S A LADY WHO'S DRIVE-UN-NOTY. THERE'S A LADY IN HER THERE'S A THERE'S A LADY WHO'S SURE ALL THAT
WITH A GUY, YEAH
MY PAL FRANKIE ASKED ME TO FILL IN FOR THE LEAD SINGER IN HIS LED ZEPPELIN TRIBUTE BAND
I'M A LADY WHO'S SURE ALL THAT SEEMS JUST PLEASE TELL ME THE BAND ISN'T CALLED "LED ZEPPELIN"
DID YOU SEE THE MISTERS?

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

SCOTT HAS BEEN TRAINING TO BECOME A KARATE MASTER.
乾酪
HE HAS BEEN WATCHING A LOT OF BRUCE LEE MOVIES
KARATE MASTERS DO THIS THING WHERE THEY JUMP UP AND KICK TWO NINJAMEN AT ONCE.
SCOTT HAS BEEN PRACTICING THIS MOVE
UNFORTUNATELY, WHEN HE PRACTICES IT IN HIS ROOMMATES HE FALLS FLAT ON HIS HEINY
THEN PINBALL AND CHRIS BEAT HIM WITH STICKS.

Horoscopes

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Tomorrow isn't your birthday or Christmas. But that doesn't mean you aren't getting some. It just means there is no wrapping paper to tear off first. You know what I mean? Seek out nudity.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Take time to smell the flowers today. But watch out for the bees. They can sting. Also, watch out for crrraaazzzy metaphors. (Hint: we're not really talking about flowers or bees.)

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You need to stop spending so much time in the basement of the Campus Center. You're getting paler everyday. You're looking malnutritioned. And what's up with that haircut?

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Some important guy once said "to be great is to be misunderstood." But when you think about it, to be misunderstood is just a big pain in the ass. People are always asking you, "what did you mean by that?" And you have to try to explain yourself over and over again.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) Hey, Vanilla Ice. You were never cool. And your music sucked. Sincerely, MC Hammer.

Aries (March 21-April 19) Hey, MC Hammer. I heard you went bankrupt after you tried to buy a house made of gold. Pretty smart guy. Yours, Vanilla Ice.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) Listen to your roommate when he says, "I slept with your girlfriend." Chances are he's a big fat liar and you don't even have a girlfriend.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) Expected things will happen today which you had no idea would happen. And when they do, you will realize that although you had no idea they would happen, secretly you had hoped they would.

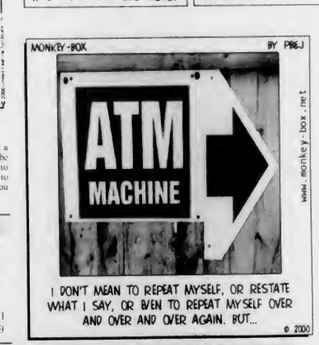
Cancer (June 21-July 22) Don't you ever feel bad that your sign is Cancer? I mean, Cancer is kind of a bad thing, right? It's like Grapenuts. No grapes. No nuts. What's the deal? Sincerely, Jerry Seinfeld.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) Today you should attempt to live your life like a student comic strip. Make your gender really imperceptible. Say lots of unfunny things about campus life. And attempt to reach a clever punchline entirely unrelated to anything you've said before it.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You will find a sweater today at Old Navy. But it will be too expensive for you. So you decide to either get a job or raise sheep, in order to replicate the sweater with the wool you will shear from your sheep.

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 62	HIGH: 67	HIGH: 71
LOW: 50	LOW: 54	LOW: 59



MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
ATM MACHINE
I DON'T MEAN TO REPEAT MYSELF, OR RESTATE WHAT I SAY, OR BEEN TO REPEAT MYSELF OVER AND OVER AND OVER AGAIN. BUT...
© 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"Will you punch me?"

–Emily Vacanti

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Worcester Breakfast Sandwich

Chicken Tetrazzini

Spanikopita (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Sweet and Sour Tofu (vegan) (Berkshire and Worcester)

Garden Burger (vegetarian) (Franklin)

Dinner

Pepperoni Calzones

Chicken Nuggets

Cheese Calzones (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Black Eyed Peas (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

SAT. $2.75 26 OZ BUD AFTER THE GAME
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

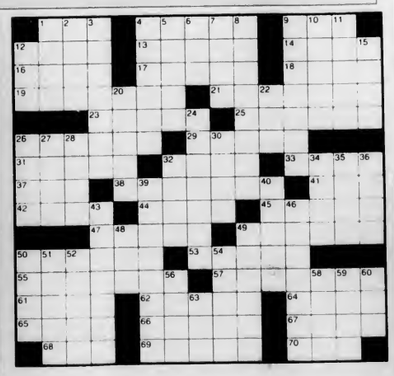
ACROSS
1 Baby-clothing protector
4 Happen
9 The woman
12 Senor's coin
13 Get in touch with
14 Mothers
16 Flag down
17 Shinbone
18 Writer Wiesel
19 Boring
21 Sewing-machine pedal
23 Windmill parts
25 Skilled
26 Trail activity
29 Like a house —
31 Ike's opponent
32 "Understood"
33 Evening
37 Work a row
38 Some nuts
41 Map abbr.
42 Pub drinks
44 Thoroughfare
45 Ore test
47 Like Kansas in August?
49 Tobacco pipes
50 Honda rival
53 Slow mover
55 Shellfish
57 Core
61 Norse trickster god
62 Airport exits
64 It could be proper
65 Neck-and-neck
66 Dodge
67 Camp beds
68 Unit of energy
69 Grinch creator
70 — out: use thinhly

DOWN
1 Vanilla source
2 Osiris, wife
3 Suzie's place
4 Choosing
5 Reprimand
6 Male swan
7 Platoon
8 Type of mirror
9 Blurred
10 Cargo areas
11 Novelist Zola
12 — Beta Kappa
15 Farmer's buy
20 Take fright
22 "Ballad" end
24 Struts
26 Merry sounds
27 Statue of a goddess
28 Swiss painter Paul
30 Nourish
32 "This one — me!"
34 Celestial bear
35 Headliner
36 Clues
39 Fixes the flowers
40 Rain's garments
43 Surmounting heights
46 Silliness
48 Expression of surprise
49 Low voices
50 Ivy League school
51 Superior to
52 Inventor
54 Requires
56 Roof part
58 Cranny companion
59 Adorable
60 Nav. rank
63 Greek letter

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	O	D	E	S		C	A	S	T		V	A	S	T
A	P	A	R	T		O	S	H	A		A	N	N	E
R	A	T	I	O		L	E	A	D		L	I	O	N
B	L	A	C	K	B	E	A	R		L	O	T	U	S
		A	I	L	S		P	R	O	R	A	T	E
V	C	R		N	U	L	L		E	G	O
O	U	I		G	R	A	Y		N	O	U	G	A	T
L	E	F	T		W	I	G		S	L	U	R
E	S	T	A	T	E		N	O	E	L		O	R	E
		N	O	R		G	O	N	E		W	A	Y
P	L	A	G	U	E	S		D	I	G	S
A	U	D	I	T		C	O	N	D	U	C	T	O	R
S	N	U	B		P	O	R	E		M	A	U	V	E
T	A	L	L		O	W	E	S		E	M	B	E	D
A	R	T	E		E	L	L	S		S	P	E	N	D

10-12-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor — Kristi Cacciatore
Photo Technician — Sarah Bray
Copy Editor — Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor — Roberto Delgado
Production Staff — Elana Premack, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

One-hour war looms for Minutemen

Home streak on line in high noon showdown with Dutchmen

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts football coach Mark Whipple isn't asking his players for much against Hofstra at home this weekend. As a matter of fact, all he would like on Saturday is one hour of their time.

According to Whipple, that is what it will take for the Minutemen to defeat rival Hofstra in their noon showdown. Today, each and every player in maroon and white must play 100 percent for a full 60 minutes. That may seem like a simple plan, but it is one that UMass (2-1, 1-1 A-10) hasn't been able to live up to yet this season.

"We have to play our best game to win," said Whipple, whose team will look to stay undefeated at McGuirk Alumni Stadium in 2000. "We have to play four quarters, which I have not been able to get this team to do yet. We will have to do that to defeat Hofstra."

Last weekend's battle with New Haven left the Maroon and White with a mixed bag of emotions, as UMass looked like two different teams depending which side of the ball it was on. The Chargers managed a meager eight rushing yards and surrendered 10 sacks over the course of the contest, but the Minutemen had their own troubles on offense with five turnovers.

"I thought it was our best defensive performance in a long time," Whipple said. "We had more touchdowns than they had first downs going into the fourth quarter. Unfortunately, they had a couple of gift wrapped interception returns for touchdowns that made our guys concentrate."

The Flying Dutchmen (3-1) should provide an even tougher puzzle for Whipple's troops to solve. After squeaking out a 10-9 win at Montana in week one of this season, Hofstra put up an astonishing 51 points against Maine on the Black Bears' own Morse Field in Week Two. That was followed by a 44-14 home loss to Delaware and a 30-12 romp over visiting Rhode Island.

QB Rocky Butler has knocked out opposing defenses with a deft combination of pounding the ball on the ground (4.4 yards per carry, five touchdowns) and airing it out (835 yards, four TDs). Five different Hofstra receivers have hauled in scoring strikes thus far in 2000, making it impossible for the Maroon and White D to key on one or two individual weapons in stopping the Dutchman attack.

"They are bigger and faster than New Haven, but they play similar styles of offense and defense," Whipple said. "I hope that game prepared us."

The renewed sense of confidence that Whipple's defense took away from the New Haven game could very well spell the difference on Saturday. Sophomore defensive back Anton McKenzie racked up a hat trick of sacks on the bewildered Chargers, and the 142 yards of total offense allowed by UMass were the lowest since it limited Northeastern to a mere 72 last season.

Conversely, the Dutchman D hasn't exactly passed with flying colors when it comes to stopping its opposition. Hofstra has allowed an average of 444.3 yards per game this year, including a mind-boggling 696 yards to Delaware in week three. Even winless URI managed to grind out 236 ground yards against the porous HU front.

Those stats should equal a big day for the Maroon and White offense, which has steadily hit its stride with transfer Richard Lucero calling the shots. The 6-foot-1 Juco phenom rebounded from a rough beginning in the New Haven game (three interceptions, two returned for TD's in the first three quarters) to mastermind three straight touchdown drives and lock up the win.

"[Lucero] makes some throws that a lot of my quarterbacks in the past could not make, so I think his potential is unlimited," Whipple said. "After he watched the tape Sunday night, he admitted that sometimes he wasn't sure what he was doing. It comes down to how much he can handle, and I think he will be able to handle it."

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 6

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Shawn Murray, Kole Ayi and Lance Overby celebrate following a sack in last week's 39-29 victory over New Haven. The Minutemen hope to continue the celebration this week as they face Hofstra at 12 p.m. on Saturday.

Bonnies, Dukes up next for Minutewomen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The road to the NCAA tournament lies through the Atlantic 10 for the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

After posting a mediocre 4-4 mark in non-conference games in the first month of the season, the Minutewomen must now post a good showing to earn a high seed in the post-season tournament.

This weekend, UMass jumps back into conference play with road games at St. Bonaventure and Duquesne. In its only other A-10 action thus far, Rhode Island defeated the Minutewomen 3-0 on Sept. 17.

Nevertheless, UMass is coming off a solid weekend at Arizona State. The Minutewomen lost to No. 17 ASU and defeated San Diego State last weekend. In its most recent game against the Sun Devils, UMass battled the home team tough before coming out on the short end of a 2-0 decision.

"We would have liked to get a tie with a nationally ranked team, but we showed that we could play with them," said Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy following the game. "The key thing that we have to take from this weekend is that our intensity has to be at least as high as it was tonight. It can't be any lower than that."

Today's matchup pits the Minutewomen against 3-4-1 St. Bonaventure in Olean, NY. The last time the two teams met, in the final regular season game of 1999, the Bonnies earned a 1-0 win to clinch a berth in the A-10 tournament. However, when the Minutewomen last played in Olean, in the final regular season game of the 1998 season, UMass took a 3-1 decision to qualify for the A-10 tournament.

This time around, neither team will be playing for an A-10 bid. Nevertheless, it is still a very important matchup at this point in the season. In fact, the Bonnies can go two games up on UMass with a win.

"Both of those teams [SBU also plays URI at home on Sunday] will have a little revenge on their minds, and so it will be a very difficult weekend," said SBU women's soccer coach Geoff Bennett in a release on the Bonnies' web page. "Our girls are excited to be playing at home. Hopefully we can rise to the occasion and get a couple of good results."

Duquesne has been struggling offensively this season, as evidenced by the fact that it only has seven goals in its first eight games of the year. The Dukes are 1-7 in that stretch.

However, UMass will have to deal with the artificial turf at Rooney Field. The Minutewomen have not played on that surface this season. In fact, the last time the Maroon and White were in Pittsburgh, the Dukes squeezed out a 1-0 victory.

On the UMass side of things, junior Brooke Bartlett and senior Kara Giocca are tied for the team lead in points with nine. Freshman Erin Lills has chipped in seven points, while three other players are tied with six apiece.

Goaltending has been one of the strengths of the Minutewomen as of late. Both junior Julie Podhrasky and freshman Kelly Nigh played outstanding last weekend. Podhrasky made nine saves in the loss to ASU, while Nigh made several great stops to preserve a one-goal win over San Diego State.

V-Ball heads to GW, Fordham for A-10 contests

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

After their first home game of the season, it's time to hit the road again for the Massachusetts women's volleyball team. Coming off the electricity of their first Atlantic-10 win of the season, the Minutewomen look to continue their in-conference win streak on the road against George Washington on Friday night and Fordham on Sunday afternoon.

Heading south to our nation's Capital, the Colonials are feared to put up more of a battle than the Rams could muster Wednesday night. GW (10-3 overall) holds a 2-1 A-10 record, which features sweeps over both Fordham and most recently, LaSalle. Their only in-conference loss so far has been at the hands of Temple, which was nothing less than a 5 game two and a half hour spectacle. Highlighting the marathon for Colonials were a couple of seniors who put up double figure kills: Tracee Brown (19) and Julie Jahnke (17). Scoring, which seems to be least of GW's problems, poses a defensive issue for the Minutewomen.

"We need to contain at the net," said Head Coach Bonnie Kenny. "We expect GW to be a very good physical team. They're big and they're playing pretty darn good."

UMass heads into the Bronx to oppose Fordham on Sunday at 2pm. A week ago, the Lady Rams succumbed to the wrath of GW, who beat them in straight sets. A couple days later, St. John's gave Fordham their second straight loss. Obviously, the Bronx natives are looking for a big win.

The Lady Rams, who also don the maroon and white, pose an interesting match-up for the Minutewomen. Both teams have been playing tough pre-season and both are getting better as the season progresses. And each is looking to up their A-10 win total this weekend.

"They're a much improved team," said Kenny. "They handled URI as easily as we did. Their record isn't indicative of their talent. They played a tough pre-season like we did. [Coach] Gamble brought in a lot of good talent."

The Minutewomen look to bring the excitement and results of their first home win on the road with them. Leading Wednesday's attack in the Cage was Texas native Janeen DeMarte, who led the team with 10 kills. Junior Lymarie Llovet pulled off 10 digs while her co-captain Rebecca Hasson added 8 kills of her own.

Lauren Vanderveen came off the bench to give the Minutewomen an emotional shot in the arm, giving the home team four kills and three blocks. The defense stepped up their play and only surrendered 20 points, with half of them coming in the first match.

"They think they worked hard enough to deserve the win, and I do too," said the head coach.

The Minutewomen, still trying to find a starting formula that will prove to be the team's backbone, hope this weekend will result in a couple of dependable pieces to that puzzle.

"We need to be prepared for both games," said Kenny.

UConn next in line for UMass field hockey

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The thought of it makes any Massachusetts alum recoil into a grotto of anguish. That notion: losing to the University of Connecticut.

And it was only about 11 months ago when the Massachusetts field hockey team was eliminated from the quarterfinals of the NCAA Tournament by the Huskies, 2-1. In the teams' first match up last season, UConn won 4-1.

"One the biggest things is that [UConn] was the roadblock for us going to the Final Four last year – and knowing that we were right with them," coach Patty Shea said. "You don't have worry about emotions in this game. It's UMass/UConn. It's there."

The top ten battle takes place tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Richard A. Garber field. No. 9 UMass goes into the duel with a record of 7-2, its most recent victory coming Wednesday in a double overtime, 1-0 win over Harvard. UConn also pulled out a triumph on Wednesday, beating Brown University, 2-1. The win upped the No. 7 ranked Huskies record to 9-2.

Although UConn lost seven seniors from last season's record-breaking 23-victory squad, its offense remains intact. Senior All-Americans Laura Klein, Amy Herz and Katie Stephens pilot the Husky offense. Klein and Herz, who play on the front line, combined for 79 points a year ago and were essential components of the NCAA Semifinal team. Thus far this season, the pair have combined for 35 points (11 goals, 13 assists). Stephens has scored five times in the 2000 campaign.

"They're really strong within their forward line and their midfield line," Shea said. "We just need to go around those areas and work from there. I think we just have to play our game and play relaxed."

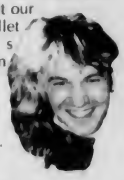
For the Minutewomen, the Harvard win was vital. It was a regional game, two days before this upcoming encounter with UConn – a sure confidence injection. But, as always, there are lessons to learn from it.

"We didn't have really good vision yesterday," Shea said. "We weren't making the passes soon enough and we were carrying the ball very close to our feet. And when you get the ball in close to your feet the only thing you can really do is look down at the ball to control it. It doesn't let us see the passes that are upfield." The most promising upshot from the Crimson game was the all-around defensive performance put in by the Maroon and White. And the leader of the defensive stand was, of course, goalie Zowie Tucker who secured her fourth shutout of the season.

"I thought that Zowie played well," Shea said. "Harvard didn't capitalize on some of the opportunities that they did have. They bailed us out during some critical times and other times Zowie made some good saves and other times we recovered at the last minute." "Our deep defense has been fairly strong – it's our defense in other areas of the game that we really have to get better."

OCTOBER

Def Leppard rocked the Big E this weekend. Check out our chief mullet head's review in Arts.



The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Zowie Tucker and the Minutewomen brought down the big dogs of New England field hockey with a 2-1 win over the UConn Huskies Saturday.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 19 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, October 2, 2000

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

Rough landing...

Vermonters Collin Parliman, boarding, and Ryan Williams, filming, take part in some extreme sports near the Campus Center yesterday.

Pride Zone hits three-year mark

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Pride Zone, a youth center that supports gay, lesbian, and transgender students, celebrated its third anniversary this past weekend.

The organization itself is located in Northampton, and opened its doors to students and the Massachusetts community alike in September of 1997. The group was founded by Heather King and KJ Nichols upon the realization that there was no support for gay, lesbian, bisexual or transsexual high school students, beyond the gay/straight alliances sometimes offered in local schools.

The group began under the name of "Queer Teens" meeting two Thursdays a month in a party room at Kidsports in Hadley. Attendance at meetings was at an all-time high at the beginning of the group's history, but waned as time progressed.

Realizing that it was time for a change, the group moved their organization from Hadley to Northampton and housed the group in the Unitarian Society. Meetings became more frequent at once every Thursday, and the name of the group was changed to Pride Zone.

With the help of a new location and renewed interest, attendance at the meetings flourished as meetings began to overflow with students. Many voiced their opinions about forming an actual youth center in Northampton, and the group was moved once again to a space in downtown Northampton.

Now located on 34 Maplewood Shops, the group is open five days a week to students in need. The center sponsors three support groups for students, one that is the Youth Alliance, catering to the needs of GLBT teens under the age of 21.

Another support group that is open to students in need is called COLAGE (Children of Lesbian and Gays Everywhere), which is a group that supports children who have GLBT parents. The group is part of a nationwide network, and is open to youth that are aged 13-19.

The third support group that is offered to community youth is a Transgender specific support group. This group is open to adolescents under 23 years of age, and discusses issues that relate to coming out transgender.

According to Heather King, as part of their celebration the Pride Zone offered interested members of the community a view of the center with an open house. During the festivities, the group had two youth members of the group speak on behalf of the organization, as well as the parent of a member of the group. There was about 30-40 college students, and community members that attended the event.

"It was fabulous," King said. "It was a time for the people from the community to see what the center is all about."

The open house also served as a kick-off for a fundraising campaign for the center, which relies solely on private donations and grants to keep the doors of the organization open. The group aims to raise 10,000 dollars through events such as silent auctions and fund raising.

For more information about the Pride Zone, interested students can call 584-1116.

HC panel takes on toxins

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Today, Hampshire College will be hosting a panel on "Taking Action Against Toxics: Organizing for Environmental Justice."

The event will hold a panel of four top ranked U.S. environmental activists who will discuss issues involving various communities that pose environmental risks or are subject to risk as well as focus on specific areas of the U.S. that are environmentally questionable.

The panel will include environmental activists Penny Newman, who is the Executive Director of the Center for Community Action and Environmental Justice. The CCAEJ serves as an environmental resource center for community groups who are working on environmental justice issues.

Florence Robinson, a professor of biology at Southern University in Baton Rouge has been dedicated for the past 12 years in the struggle for environmental justice. She has documented environmental racism, helped communities to organize programs to fight environmental injustice and has also testified on many accounts of environmental issues.

Vernice Miller-Travis is the Program Officer for Environmental Justice at the Ford Foundation. She co-founded the West Harlem Environmental Action and has served as the regional facilitator for the First National People of Color Environmental Leadership Summit.

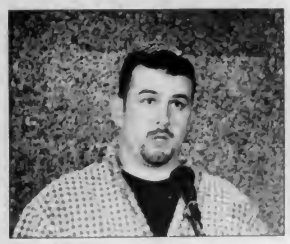
Rachel Morello-Frosch is an epidemiologist and environmental health scientist at the Department of Health Education at San Francisco State University. Her main focus has been on research involving air toxics, reproductive health hazards within places of business, as well as overall conflicts over science and risks in environmental policy-making.

These top four U.S. environmental justices will be discussing topics such as: organizing successful environmental justice campaigns in poor communities, the struggle for environmental justice in Louisiana, toxic clean-up and gentrification and Southern California's environmental "riskscape."

This event is sponsored by the Population and Development Program at Hampshire College, the Political Economy Research Institute Program on Development and the by the Environment at the University of Massachusetts.

The panel will be taking place tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the main lecture hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. This even is free and open to the public.

SGA Elections Threatened



Name: Jeff Howe
Occupation: President of Student Government Association
Accusations Made: improper elections
Accused of: attempting to doctor elections, contacting lawyers about legality of elections, delaying a meeting to verify elections, using SGA money for a trip to Cape Cod and alcohol

By Michal Lumsden and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

With its first meeting this week, the Student Government Association is like a horse about to enter the gates at the Kentucky Derby with a broken leg: hobbling towards the start.

It's not that it's uncommon for infighting within the SGA to be happening; it's that it's happening this early and this viciously.

Accusations have flown from all sides. Members of the SGA administration have argued that recent elections were held unfairly. Members of fraternities and sororities dominated commuter elections but voter guides and final vote counts have suggested possible improprieties. Members of the SGA have alleged that the administration took trips and bought alcohol using Senate money.

All of this, and they still haven't had their first meeting.

Of immediate worry to the SGA is the ratification of last Tuesday's elections. Without their ratification, this Wednesday's meeting will lack the representation of all commuter senators and, as such, will probably not make quorum.

Greek Debate

All seemed to be business as usual with the Senate elections until the polls closed last Tuesday at 7 p.m. It was then that questions began to be raised. Voter guides were discovered next to ballot boxes and a memo was found written by Student Trustee Seth Avakian (at left) before voting stations even opened predicting the failure of the elections.

Avakian and the Greeks have been in outright opposition to one another. He has maintained that a Greek-loaded Senate is a group that won't work for all students and that there were significant improprieties within the election. Greeks have maintained that it is their right to participate, that they weren't cheating when they made the voter guides and that they've been given a hard time throughout the entire election process.

"People looked back and had differing opinions about whether it [the voter guides] was okay," said Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate. He has maintained that the Greek participation in elections was an unplanned event.

"I don't think [the list] was generated by the people who were running. I don't know who made the list. It was a bunch of candidates who were running because they had an interest," Eltringham said.

Casting doubt on that assertion is the presence of Eltringham's girlfriend, Jen Teixeira, on the voter guides who was thanked for "helping to organize this."

Jeff Bazydlo, a former secretary of finance for the SGA, said that "nobody said 'go vote for people.' We wanted to fill all the seats. We ran 34 people because 34 seats were open."

Eltringham's assertion has been further refuted by T.J. Roy, a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, who said that they "wanted members elected as a group." He also said that they "simply asked people to vote. We didn't require people to vote Greek, but we are organized and we are strong."

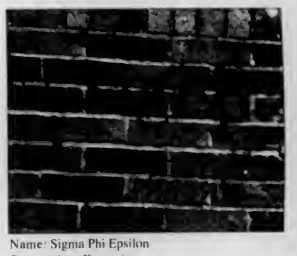
Thirty-four of the 46 on the commuter ballot belong to fraternities and sororities. And 33 of the commuters elected are involved in Greek life. Sigma Phi Epsilon alone had 24 members elected and is home to Bazydlo, who retired his previous post within the SGA for personal reasons.

While there have been complaints, many have praised those in Greek life for organizing.

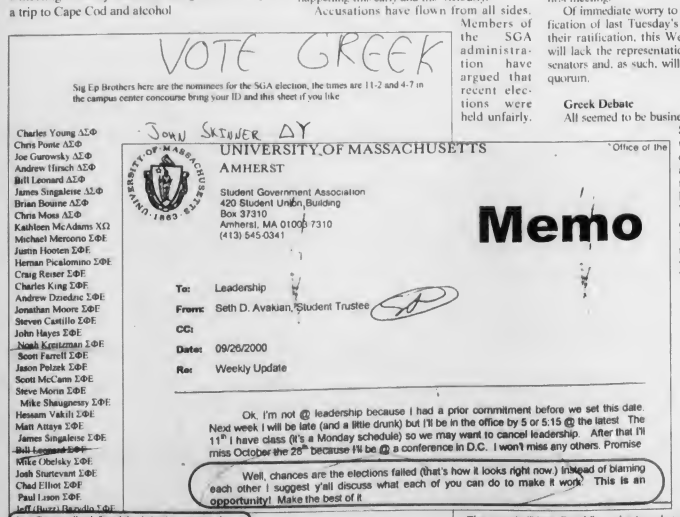
Central Area Governor Ken Campbell said, "I congratulate them for getting involved."

But others have questioned the integrity of

Turn to SGA page 2



Name: Sigma Phi Epsilon
Occupation: Fraternity
Accusations Made: being kept from participation
Accused Of: being in Senate only to pass Title V, creating voter guides



VOTE GREEK
Sig Ep Brothers here are the nominees for the SGA election, the times are 11-2 and 4-7 in the campus center concourse bring your ID and this sheet if you like
Charles Young ΔΣΦ
Chris Ponte ΔΣΦ
Joe Gurowsky ΔΣΦ
Andrew Hirsch ΔΣΦ
Bill Leonard ΔΣΦ
James Singalerse ΔΣΦ
Brian Bourne ΔΣΦ
Chris Moss ΔΣΦ
Kathleen McAdams ΧΩ
Michael Mercorio ΣΦΕ
Justin Horsten ΣΦΕ
Heman Picalomino ΣΦΕ
Craig Reiser ΣΦΕ
Charles King ΣΦΕ
Andrew Dziedzic ΣΦΕ
Jonathan Moore ΣΦΕ
Steven Castillo ΣΦΕ
John Hayes ΣΦΕ
Noah Kreitzman ΣΦΕ
Scott Farrell ΣΦΕ
Jason Polzek ΣΦΕ
Scott McCann ΣΦΕ
Steve Morin ΣΦΕ
Mike Shaugnessy ΣΦΕ
Hesaam Vakili ΣΦΕ
Matt Attaya ΣΦΕ
James Singalerse ΣΦΕ
Bill Leonard ΣΦΕ
Mike Oberlaky ΣΦΕ
Josh Sturtevant ΣΦΕ
Chad Elliot ΣΦΕ
Paul Lyon ΣΦΕ
Jeff (Buzz) Bazydlo ΣΦΕ
Jenn Teixeira Greek friend that helped to organize this
JOHN SKINNER DY
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
AMHERST
Office of the Student Government Association
420 Student Union Building
Box 37310
Amherst, MA 01003-7310
(413) 545-0341
Memo
To: Leadership
From: Seth D. Avakian, Student Trustee
CC:
Date: 09/26/2000
Re: Weekly Update
Ok, I'm not @ leadership because I had a prior commitment before we set this date. Next week I will be late (and a little drunk) but I'll be in the office by 5 or 5:15 @ the latest. The 11th I have class (it's a Monday schedule) so we may want to cancel leadership. After that I'll miss October the 26th because I'll be @ a conference in D.C. I won't miss any others. Promise
Well, chances are the elections failed (that's how it looks right now.) Instead of blaming each other I suggest y'all discuss what each of you can do to make it work. This is an opportunity! Make the best of it

The words "Vote Greek" on the top document above, found beside ballot boxes, led to some complaints from members of the Student Government Association. Circled is the name of Jenn Teixeira, Senate Speaker Jim Eltringham's girlfriend. Circled on Seth Avakian's memo is the following "This is an opportunity! Make the best of it." Other groups within the SGA have maintained that this is proof that he's trying to doctor the elections for his own benefit.

Name: Jim Eltringham
Occupation: Speaker of the Student Senate
Accusations Made: none.
Accused of: possible role in convincing Greek students to pursue seats in the Senate

Name: Seth Avakian
Occupation: Student Trustee
Accusations Made: improper elections
Accused Of: attempting to doctor elections, contacting lawyers, delaying a meeting to verify elections, using SGA money for a trip to Cape Cod and alcohol, being on the SGA payroll

Dismembered African youths tell story

By Sylvia Moreno
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Children left limbless by the rebel warfare in Sierra Leone came last Tuesday to America's seat of power. Congress to tell their stories of mutilation.

Six of them sat before the House subcommittee on Africa, some of their chins barely clearing the table top.

"My name is Binta Amara," said the 9-year-old girl with the missing left leg.

"My name Damba Koroma," said the 8-year-old whose arm is gone below the elbow.

"Mariama Conteh," was all the frail thin and painfully shy 13-year-old said. She is missing her left hand and bears a wide scar above her right wrist where rebels tried, but failed, to chop it off with their axe.

Tuesday they were far away from the terror. It was their fifth day in the Washington area, where they have been hosted by local families and honored at a Sunday lunch service by hundreds of their countrymen who live in the region.

They had had a few days of eating American burgers and fries – and of enjoying the simplest of pleasures: an exhilarating ride on a playground swing, a shopping trip to buy a pair of sneakers, a good night's rest.

People sleep here," Damba told her host, Amina Pombort of Alexandria, Va., whom the girl calls "auntie."

Nobody cares if anyone knocks on their door at night," the child said. "Back home people sleep ready to run. They sleep with one eye open."

It was the stories of their maiming that the children and two men – all victims of forced amputations by rebel soldiers in the West African nation – told lawmakers Tuesday, most of them through interpreters.

One of the half-dozen children dismembered by rebels in Sierra Leone shares her story of suffering with a Congressional audience last Tuesday in Washington, D.C.

They are the survivors of what subcommittee Chairman Edward R. Royce, R-CA, called "unparalleled brutality."

Today, there are an estimated 20,000 people who are victims of forced amputations in Sierra Leone, thousands of them children. About 75,000 civilians have died in the war that began in 1990 and has been fueled by the rebels' fight for control of the country's diamond mines.

"The war is not tribal, and it is not religious," said Muctarr Jalloh, 27, president of the amputee camp in Freetown who accompanied the children to the United States. Rebels caught him in April 1998 and cut off his right hand and his right ear with a machete.

"It is simply a war over control of diamonds. Little pieces of rock that people around the world like to wear on their fingers and hang from their ears," he said in English. "As you can see, because of these rocks I no longer have an ear or five of my fingers."

This group later left by bus for New York City, where they will receive medical care and prosthetic fittings. The trip was sponsored by the Washington-based Friends of Sierra Leone, whose members are former Peace Corps volunteers in the West African nation and immigrants from the country. Armed, a prosthetics company in New York City; the Rotary clubs of Staten Island and Brooklyn, N.Y.; and Staten Island University Hospital.

SGA

continued from page 1

a Senate wherein members from a single fraternity hold nearly two-thirds of all the seats. Furthermore, with quorum estimated at 46, and more than 50 Greek Senators, it is possible that at any given time more than half of the voting members of Senate could be involved in Greek life.

Avakian wrote that he hoped "students would (hopefully) revolt against a senate that was 50% from 1 frat. That would be like the US Senate having 50 reps from Alaska."

Roy, for his part, felt that having 34 members of one fraternity in the Senate is preferable to leaving 34 seats empty.

None of the Senate seats have officially been filled, as the results of last week's elections have yet to be ratified.

Last Friday, the Coordinating Council, the body that votes to ratify the election results, failed to meet quorum. Five voting members of the Council need to be in attendance to have quorum. Apparently there were five members present before the meeting started, but one left and the meeting had to be cancelled.

It has been re-scheduled for tonight. If the elections are ratified, Senate meetings will begin, as scheduled, on Wednesday. Should they not be ratified tonight, another meeting will have to be scheduled.

Personal Conflict

However, debate within the SGA isn't based solely on procedural improprieties. Personal conflict has a lot to do with what goes on within the SGA, be it rampant gossip about "the other side" or minor issues between senators and/or members of the administration.

Furthermore, theories about conflict and why things happen the way they do within the senate are prevalent and coincidence is turned into fact.

Bazydlo stepped down from the SGA after being involved in a conflict with current Associate Speaker of the Senate Mike McCarthy. While McCarthy has denied having any problem with Bazydlo, anonymous sources have confirmed that the two had a definite spat last year that led to Bazydlo's resignation.

Bazydlo said that the situation "is very personal" and that the allegations brought against him are "very low."

"I'm not making this a personal issue," continued Bazydlo. "I have no comment [about the allegations]."

Several individuals within the SGA have developed a theory suggesting that Bazydlo, upon his resignation, decided to re-enter the Senate and bring his Greek contingent with him.

Different individuals have alleged that interference within the election by cabinet members is indicative of their fear that they won't be able to control the Senate in the same ways that they have in the past.

Retiring Senator Jen Worcester said that Howe and Avakian, among others, had no problem getting legislation passed in last year's Senate because there was no opposition.

Worcester said that the position had become too stressful for her.

"I was disappointed in Title V getting passed," Worcester said.

Title V is a document that spells out Area Governments. Under the amendment, that was passed last spring, Greek Area Government was grouped under the broader category of Commuter Government. The redistricting was the pet project of Sheila Tunney, who Worcester said screamed at her when she dared to oppose the legislation.

"I couldn't ask her questions because she was so angry," Worcester said. "She had Jeff and Seth's support, and the motion almost slipped by without being noticed. She did a lot of research supposedly, and didn't want to see it opposed."

She said, "the way Jeff and Seth ran the Senate defeated the purpose of checks and balances within the Senate."

Tunney was unavailable for comment at press time.

The current SGA leadership is waiting for the results of tonight's meeting. Either decision on the elections, their ratification or otherwise, will drastically change the face of this year's Senate.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Massachusetts Collegian in 1914, and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Voices Editor
Rob Schulte Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlewsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kozlyanski Co-Sports Editor
Brian Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Simawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Boith Assistant Advertising Manager

ARE YOU THE FUNNIEST STUDENT ON CAMPUS?

PROVE IT AT

Cool Mint LISTERINE POCKETPAKS presents iCAST

COLLEGE COMEDY BAKE-OFF

Flaky crust, funny filling

PERFORM YOUR BEST:
• STAND UP
• JOKES
• SKETCH

ENTER & WIN!
You could win a chance to go on tour with
JEANEANE GAROFALO & FRIENDS!

FREE

HOSTED BY ANDY DICK
as seen on NewsRadio

FEATURING THE COMEDY OF
RALPH HARRIS
as seen on Seinfeld, The Tonight Show & The Jon Stewart Show

UMASS AMHERST
FINE ARTS CENTER
CONCERT HALL
8:00PM
TUESDAY, OCT. 3RD

TO REGISTER: CALL WENDY ZHU AT 413-545-1278 OR 1-800-843-2536 TO COMPETE IN THE BAKE OFF OR STOP BY THE iCAST TENT AT THE UNIVERSITY LAWN OCT. 3RD
CHECK OUT ALL THE ACTION INCLUDING THE ONLINE COMIC STRIP, ANIMATION & SHORT FILM CONTESTS AT COMEDY.iCAST.COM

VOTE FOR YOUR FAVORITE AT I.CAST.COM

Cool Mint LISTERINE POCKETPAKS
salonselectives see it. do it.
HYUNDAI

Voters eagerly await first presidential debate

By Marc J. Ambinder and Kirsten G. Studlien
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE)CAMBRIDGE – Barring the unforeseen, Vice President Al Gore and Texas Governor George W. Bush will head into the campaign season's first presidential debate on Tuesday at parity in the national polls and closely matched in the Electoral College.

For both candidates, September was bruising, energy-draining, and edifying. Coming out of the Democratic Convention in August, Gore was buoyed by one of the largest bounces in recent election cycles. His standing among women voters improved significantly, the press coverage of his campaign was less harsh, and Democrats felt optimistic about his chances.

By media standards, Bush began September in a bind. There were the gaffes – his admission that he didn't effectively articulate his tax plan, his decision to spur the debate offer of a bipartisan commission, a series of televised malaprops. But by Labor Day, Bush had evened the Gore convention bounce. The two were tied in the polls. A month later, after 18-hour days of give-and-take, neither side has given an inch.

"It's a dead-even race," says Clyde Wilcox, a political science professor at Georgetown University. "There have been two conventions and two convention bounces."

There are more registered Democrats than registered Republicans, but differences across states tend to smooth over the difference.

About 37 percent of the electorate consider themselves independents. Of them, those likely to vote are hard to pin down. They swing.

Many earn between $25,000 and $50,000 and live in suburbs. With these voters, there is little traction.

According to Alan Crockett, a pollster with John Zogby's firm, no candidate has been elected president since 1972 without winning this group.

So the candidates have tailored their messages appropriately, advancing their reform plans for prescription drug coverage, Social Security and education.

"What will determine who wins those swing voters is exactly the question Ronald Reagan asked, 'Are you better off today than you were four years ago?'" Wilcox says. "Bush has to come out and win this. A draw will go to Gore."

In past weeks, Bush has made education "his top priority," says Ken Lisaius, a campaign spokesperson.

In speeches throughout so-called "battleground" states like Ohio and Michigan, Bush has stuck to a lesson plan – He says he'd make sure states test the reading and math competencies of students in schools that serve poorer areas. If schools didn't improve, he'd make vouchers an option for parents. He also says he'll help states double the number of charter schools in three years. The total cost – about $48 billion. Bush uses poll-tested phrases like "education recession" to describe a schooling, varyingly blamed on bureaucrats, distant teachers' unions and the culture.

Though doctrinaire conservatives aren't thrilled with the prospect of enlarging the federal government's role in education, they see Bush's plan as far preferable to Gore's.

But Gore has an advantage. Partially because of Democrats' continual support for spending monies on schools and teachers, likely voters tell pollsters they are more sympathetic to Gore's proposals.

The vice president would spend part of about $115 billion to boost teacher salaries, provided the instructor is certified. He'd force under-performing schools to shape up. He also promises to triple the number of charter schools. Gore would also allow parents to invest in a tax-free savings account for college tuition.

John Roemer, a professor of political science at Yale who specializes in the economy, says that neither candidate is taking the necessary steps to invest in K-12 education.

"(Investing) is the best-known method we have of redistribution," Roemer says. "That is how we level the playing field."

If the candidates' education proposals strike some as tepid, Bush's plan for Social Security is either very bold or very risky, depending upon whose opinion you ask.

Bush would allow younger workers to invest part of their payroll taxes – about two percent of their income – in personal retirement accounts. He promises not to raise payroll taxes and says he won't cut benefits for current retirees. Since the money paid into Social Security by workers now is paid directly to older beneficiaries, the Gore campaign wonders where Bush will make up the incomes slated for the new personal retirement accounts.

The freshman 15: weight of independence can cause poor eating habits, students to balloon

By Dharshani Dharmawardena
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – For many students attending college for the first time, the "freshman 15," the alleged weight gain during the first year, is not just a myth.

Overeating, binge drinking and different stress factors associated with change can all contribute to the problem.

The pressure of adjusting to a variety of changes in their lives – like trying to make new friends and living away from home for the first time – as well as readily available food from the dining halls can cause first-year students to eat more, said Christina Miller, a clinical psychologist at Student Psychological Services at the University of California-Los Angeles.

"When starting college, their eating behaviors may change," she said. "When students live at home with their parents, they may have more routine, controlled eating patterns. Here they have so many choices that they may over-eat."

Sheri Albert, a dietician at the Arthur Ashe Student Health and Wellness Center, said that while some first-year students gain weight, others can lose weight because they eat less because of time constraints and loss of appetite from stress.

Like Miller, Albert said students gain extra pounds because of the amount of food available at dining halls and weekend parties, but the change can also result from a drop in exercise.

"It costs 3,500 extra calories to gain one pound of fat," Albert said. "Broken down, that's just 145 extra calories a day to gain 15 pounds over one year."

Although some food at the cafeterias may be high in calories, Albert said they offer a variety of healthy food as well.

"The key is choosing well and controlling portions," she said. "It's okay to choose some high-calorie high-fat foods, like cookies, so long as you balance them out with more nutrient-rich foods like fresh fruits throughout the day."

Both Miller and Albert said the "freshman 15" may occur for a variety of emotional reasons. A person attempting to deal with added stress, boredom, loneliness or depression may feel better by holding something like food in their hands, according to Miller.

Weight gain is not the only health issue pressure can trigger. As freshmen enter college, they may also become increasingly focused on their weight.

"They see everyone around them dieting and they start engaging in activities that are really harmful," Miller said.

The pressure of starting college can make some students more vulnerable because it can damage self-esteem, Miller continued. As a result, they may develop eating disorders, like bulimia or anorexia, to lose weight in order to adhere to societal ideals.

Although the desire to be rail-thin can start as early as high school, Albert said many students develop the feeling for the first time in college.

"As many as 10 percent of college students have some form of serious eating disorder," she said. "But many more students find their lives restricted by negative body image, food or weight preoccupations, crazy dieting and stress eating."

But binging, purging and skipping meals are not the only ways through which many freshman students try to fit in. Traditionally, the issue of alcohol consumption in college campuses has been at the forefront of media attention for the last decade, said Pam Viele, director of Student Health Education in the Ashe Center.

Despite popular images of college, the statistics at UCLA are less bleak.

"The rates of high-risk alcohol use at UCLA has steadily declined where we're at less than half the national average," she said.

Viele said experts define binge drinking as having more than four drinks in one sitting. One drink can consist of four ounces of wine, one can of beer or one shot of hard liquor.

From a study of UCLA students conducted in 1998, only 21 percent of those surveyed said they took more than four drinks per sitting.

"The number is important because above that number you see negative consequences increasing," Viele added.

But Viele said she disagreed with some of the researchers' standardization because she sees little connection with it and students' definition of binge drinking.

"I find that when I go out and talk to students, what is conjured up in their minds when you talk about binge drinking is very different from what researchers are referring to," she said.

Lisa

You've filled our hearts
And touched our souls.
You've made us laugh
And helped us grow.
Always listened and cared about what we had to share.
You spread your energy through your wild red hair.
You had time for everyone
And no matter what, you always made it fun.
You always spoke the words we needed to hear
Which made us smile and dried up our tears.
You taught us so much about life and who we are.
Without you we could never have come this far.
Although you're not here in the same way,
We'll hold you in our hearts each day

Lisa, we love you and miss you.

There will be a memorial service for Lisa Manita (left) on Tuesday Oct. 3 at 4:30 p.m. at the Pond side of the Student Union.

READ

The Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies
Presents:
Adam Isacson
Senior Associate, Center for International Policy
Colombia: Our New Latin American War
7:30 PM Monday, October 2
Herter 227, University of Massachusetts
PAWSS
This event is free, open to the public, and wheelchair accessible.
For more information please call PAWSS at 559-5367 or visit http://paws.hampshire.edu

Israel the trip is free
the experience is priceless

If you are a Jewish college student who has never been to Israel on a group trip, we would like to invite you to visit Israel as our guest during this winter break.

The free, ten-day trip is a gift from Birthright Israel, your Jewish Community and Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life.

Travel with students from your campus:
*Explore Jerusalem *Hike through the Galilee region
*Check out Tel Aviv *Swim in the Dead Sea
*Enjoy free time

Your Birthright Israel gift includes airfare to Israel from gateway cities and land accommodations. Participants will be responsible for some meals as well as gratuities for drivers and guides.

A $250 deposit, fully refundable upon completion of the trip is required. Contact your local Hillel for more information.

It's fun. It's free. It's Israel.
WWW.HILLEL.ORG

Ben & Jerry's
BUILD A FUTURE
A Partnership with Habitat for Humanity Campus Chapters

Free Ice Cream
"Pint-athlon" Ice Cream Eating Contest
University of Massachusetts - Amherst
Haiges Mall
October 5th • 1pm-4pm

Habitat for Humanity®
www.habitat.org

BEN & JERRY'S HOMEMADE

© Ben & Jerry's Homemade Holdings, Inc. 2000

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Apathy and the elections:

"Know" before "No"

Finally, the long-avoided Al Gore/George W. Bush debates are going to take place.

Not only that, but they are taking place at one of this University's campuses – the Boston campus, to be exact.

This simple fact should be just enough to catch the attention of the UMass student body long enough to make it think, at least momentarily, about the debates and possibly even come to realize how important they really are.

Students everywhere are tuned out about this particular Presidential race, and with some understandable reasons. People either look at this race as a choice between two identical men, or between two men who are not identical but still both evil, or they feel the cause of Ralph Nader, who is, of course, not involved in these debates.

This is not how it has to be.

The reason many people think that Gore and Bush are the same man in two different bodies is because they read it somewhere (they can't remember exactly where) and they haven't bothered to check it out for themselves. They are just taking what the media (including, to some extent, the Daily Collegian) is telling them and taking it as truth, without any verification whatsoever.

These debates could change that.

Now, here in Massachusetts, on a campus of our very own UMass, the men who are the object of all this media hype, scorn, and total apathy will finally meet and interact for all to see.

This is everyone's chance to decide for themselves, once and for all, what exactly these white guys in suits have to offer to this nation. Really, let's face it – we're going to get one of these people whether we like it or not, so the choice might as well be an educated one.

You will see how Bush and Gore interact, how they react to each other, how they think on their feet, how their real feelings come out when you least expect it, how mean or merciful they are – how they would probably act if they were to be elected to lead this nation.

You, yourself, the apathetic beer-swilling Simpsons-watching college low-life could actually decide that you have a preference about who should lead this country for the next four years of your life.

Imagine that.

That is why this is these debates are the best opportunity for you to be a citizen and become educated about your political choices. While you watch these debates, there will be no spin. There will be no commentating, no mocking, no snide columnist putting his agenda forward. There will be no corruption, soft money, or Buddhist nuns interfering with the whole process. There will simply be Al Gore and George W. Bush, striving to impress you, court you, and, yes, earn your vote.

Take advantage of this chance to become, in however a minor way, involved in the political process. This may be the last time that you have the opportunity to make a decision based on pure, unfiltered evidence brought into your home. Do not waste it.

It may not ever come again.

Ed/Op wants to hear what you have to say!

To sleep with anger

(1.) The revolution is at hand! The corrupt Administration, corporate interests and the Capitalist States of Amerikkka have ("ing oppressed us long enough! Corporate Imperialism has robbed Third World nations of their humanities, reducing them to slaves. The U. S. throws innocents and dissidents into concentration camps, where all rights are stripped. It is time to rise up against these ("ing capitalist bastards and take what is rightfully ours! Then, and only then, we will have our utopia of peace and harmony.

(2.) There is a need for change. Corporate America has used its huge monetary resources to limit our potential as citizens. Popular culture endorses and justifies this intellectual block, where buying into the latest craze is more important that voting for elected officials. In the name of seeking profits, corporations have lobbied the U.S. Government to allow them access to poorer nations. In the process, mass produced American interests have undermined individual cultures. Without sufficient human rights laws, workers face horrible working conditions, and even less pay. With high living conditions and low wages, people in urban centers, many of them Blacks and Latino, resort to crime and are incarcerated for less severe crimes than their white counterparts. The system does little to provide the education strapped, economically poor, and the popular culture obsessed with genuine opportunity to participate in the American Dream. We need to question the morality of the institutions we take for granted, and to work together in order to resolve the inequalities that plague today's society.

Both speak to change in a world that largely resists such. In fact, both address more or less the same issues, only separated by language and intent. The first is aggressive, blatantly attacking the institutions we take for granted. The second is moderate, designed to inform, and suggests action. Both come from a perspective that recognizes that we need to change our world. However, the message is only as successful as the people receiving it.

Imagine a person walking home from work happens to pick up a copy of extremist rhetoric. Now how this person, decked out in Sketchers, an Abercrombie and Fitch shirt, and Levi's with a pack of Kools in the pocket, gearing up for an alcoholic orgy later that evening, going to react to what is written?

If this person is a self-proclaimed activist who denounces capitalism in the name of a groovy utopia, the fact that name brand clothing, cigarettes, and future of drinking mass-produced beer strongly suggests severe hypocrisy. If this person believes in the American dream, goes to church every week, and is a shining example of middle class America, then offense might be taken. If this person is a free-floating college student who could care less about anyone else, then everybody gets a good laugh. In other words, extremist rhetoric hinders as much as informs.

This leaves independent thinkers with a Catch-22. A formulaic method of catching a reader's attention is to present things in an extremely proactive manner, often sounding extremist. However, at the same time, that reader may be turned off at what looks like an adult temper tantrum. Facts that have been buried by our current society are often charged with this angry, almost violently pro-active stance that makes them as scary as the institutions they are criticizing. It matters little if all the facts are the complete truth. If God himself validated every fact presented, it would take a miracle in order for people to see past the anger and rage presented. And if it were claimed that God did validate what was written, then that would be categorized as extreme right thinking, thus a threat to the status quo. While it is easier to jump into a social or political process with explosive force, it takes time and large numbers in order for any progress. History speaks time and time again to the suffering caused by drastically extreme measures. History smiles on those who change the world through patience and peace.

> "Extreme capitalism created corporate dogma, a plutocracy where money buys rights and freedom. Extreme nationalism created the Nazis, the most infamous government in recent history."

Change is

Moderation is key for change. Moderation is not necessarily what mainstream culture tells us, as such a word can have countless definitions within various contexts. We are told that moderation is somewhere between the "Extreme" Conservatives (Republicans), and Liberals (Democrats). But the issues of this year's election seem to be on a conservative angle, and in many cases, Gore and Bush are not that much different. Thus are both moderates within a system that tend to be very conservative. So, thinking outside of the system, we need to be moderate to our needs as people, not our needs as peons of the mainstream machine. In today's progressive world, where everything presented in black or white, extreme right or left, moderation is the strongest method of positive change. And that line of thought seems to be quite radical, don't you think?

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist

UMPD: who's protecting who?

I hate cops.

Well, I don't hate all cops, just the UMass police. I mean seriously, they don't even deserve to be called police. The police are supposed to serve and protect, and to be totally honest, they don't seem to be protecting much of anything. They do, however, do a great job of serving the University.

Through what I've seen, the UMPD only seems interested in busting college students with booze and drugs. While this might be a worthwhile pursuit, it seems like it is the only thing they concentrate on when there are more important things they should be taking care of. They just installed a security camera in Southwest, which probably will be used to identify those who participate in those infamous riots that happen every once in a while. Why not put a camera in the parking lots where a whole load of vandalism occurs? Cars get broken into and get ripped off all the time down there, and there isn't anything new yet I see the UMPD doing to stop this.

Hell, I hate to bring up, but did those always-catch-any-rapists-last-year? When the campus was buzzing about all those sexual assaults did the UMPD catch anybody? Did they apprehend any criminals and bring them to justice? I don't know about you but I don't see any headlines in The Daily Collegian saying "Rapist Caught by Fine UMPD." And for that matter, I've never seen a headline that even comes close to that.

By now you might be asking what my beef is with the UMPD. So let me tell you a story that takes place one year ago during Midnight Madness. I was hanging out with my roommate and his friends from his hometown in this basement room in that ghetto building Pierpont. Anyway we're all chillin' and everything when the cops came responding to the smell of marijuana. The dudes whose room we were in left, leaving six of us just sitting, not even smoking. The door was open, so the UMPD waltzed in, and took a quick look around, saw me sitting at a desk and told me to stand up. I looked at the cluttered desk and saw a bag of STI.MS. I yelled, "Holy st, that's not mine," but they cuffed me anyway. A few things are very fishy about my account people. According to my lawyer, 99.9 percent of the time, when weed is found in a dorm room, the owners are arrested. The owners weren't there, so why was I the only one arrested? I have a pretty good idea why I was the only one arrested: I am Puerto Rican.

EDMUND FELICIANO

Man, talking about this foul injustice just gets me pissed. I mean, the UMPD is a goddamn joke. You know who's a real cop, not these chumps, but my father (you know he kicked my sorry ass when he found out I was arrested.). When he first started his police career, do you know what his first beat was? Bed-Stuy, Brooklyn. Bedford - Stuyvesant is one of the roughest neighborhoods in Brooklyn, and he did that his first year. Following that, he worked all over New York putting up with flack from morons on the street, punks throwing crap at his squad car and other random crazies. And the man has a commendation, as he's a real cop. Real cops know about a little something called professional courtesy, although I bet the UMPD doesn't even know what that means.

One thing I learned about getting arrested up here at UMass is that more often than not, you get pinched with something very small, a cup of beer, or in my case, some lousy stems. A real cop wouldn't even want to deal with filling out the paperwork for petty stuff like that (In my police report, the weight of the class D was 0.00 grams).

You know what else really stinks up here at UMass? Student Legal Services can't represent you in court if you were arrested by the UMPD. Why? It's a conflict of interest, but it's really kind of messed up. You see, because both the UMPD and Legal Services get their money from the University, Legal Services can't speak for you in court. They'll refer you to a real pricey lawyer though, and I wonder how much the lawyers give Legal Services for that honor. What sucks even more is that even though the constitution guarantees everyone to representation in court, I learned that in a Northampton courtroom that you cannot get a public defender in a court case where you probably won't get a jail sentence. Hey, if I ignore the summons, and wait for a warrant to come out for me, I might get a jail sentence. Then maybe I'll get my constitutional right to an attorney.

Don't trust the UMPD. All they do is go through your part of campus on those damn horses and just let them take a dump wherever they want, stinking up the damn place. When they're not doing that, they trick you and put you in cuffs. People, if you're partying and there is a knock at the door, and if somebody is covering the peephole it's the cops, so don't answer it, and just hang tight. If they somehow get in your room, don't sign anything, and don't let them go through your room without a warrant. Trust me, I have some experience in these types of things. When the UMPD are going to arrest you, they're going to arrest you regardless of you say, and how gracious you are. Don't tell them anything they can use later. Never tell them where the rest of your booze/stash is.

Keep quiet, that is your right.

Edmund Feliciano is a UMass student

...ion or write a letter to the ...blished. Your time is now.

The empty can rattles the most

I recently finished speaking with a friend of mine about how splendid it would be to become religious overlords when it happened.

Lydia Jenner and I were out for a late breakfast one morning in North Amherst, peacefully sipping on our coffees and orange juices, nibbling on our toast and discussing the benefits of ultimate spiritual power over the universe. A normal way to begin any day, really, and the conversation shifted to something of a journalistic nature when another friend of mine, Matt Vautour, came to join us.

You see, Matt's a reporter at The Daily Hampshire Gazette. I'm a reporter at The Recorder in Greenfield, and Lydia's just plain intelligent in many facets of life, so journalism was a natural jump in the conversation from taking over the religious world as we know it.

After the three of us finally finished going back and forth about the newspaper industry and, well, eating, we figured that it would be a good idea to get up and leave. For the complete and utter idiots out there, leaving a restaurant is the natural progression after the food is gone.

> "I'd never proclaim to be an expert on some stranger's life, and therefor, unless one approached me and specifically asked me to comment on a certain subject, I don't talk to them."

I am deeply sorry if I offended any complete and utter idiots out there. If you're an idiot and you are angry because you do know when to leave a restaurant, please write an angry letter to the editor here at the Daily Collegian like everybody else.

Regardless, on our way through the parking lot, heading peacefully toward our cars, we were approached.

A woman who was under the horribly misinformed impression that we were interested in what she had to say, came over and began to speak.

It is important to note that at no point in time did any of the three of us beckon her, or say helpful things that might lead her to believe that we cared what her opinion was, such as, "Hey, random stranger, what's your view on the subject of religion?"

Despite these lacks of attempts to get her attention, she came right up and began talking – apparently, she had overheard our conversation about becoming grand overlords: "Jesus is the Lord. You know that, right? I just wanted to let you know that Jesus is the Lord."

Right. It's not that I necessarily disagree with her on the subject – I think that it's downright peachy that this lady is down with the fact that Jesus is the Lord, and that she feels so strongly about it that she speaks openly about it to everyone within earshot. I just don't want to be in earshot.

The fact of the matter is, even if she was lecturing me on the benefits of Hawaiian shirts as a means of subliminal moral pickup in the wintertime, I couldn't have cared less what she had to say. I didn't know her and, being that I am a self-centered jerk, I didn't care what she thought about anything, much less Jesus.

Which brings me to my point – yes, I do have one; what makes people think that other people are interested in listening to their thoughts and beliefs? [Editor's note: YOU do, Seth, by writing for this page.] They say the empty can rattles the most, I suppose.

Earlier in the summer, I was sitting peacefully at a coffee joint in Portland, Maine, called Java Joe's with a couple friends, Ben Alamed and Teydin Erkkinen. Again, the three of us were peacefully discussing something at our table, peacefully sipping on peaceful coffees. If I'm not mistaken, we were talking about the World Trade Organization – Teydin was pro, I was con and Ben was somewhere in between. None of us had a particular stance on, say, humans flying U.F.O's over Saigon. Still, the ratty man at the table next to us figured it would be a good idea to give us a peace of his mind on just that subject.

No, I'm not kidding. Not only did this gentleman fly U.F.O's over Saigon back in his glory days, he also professed that all the taxis in Portland were government spies.

Why, exactly, the government would send a troop of spies to Portland, Maine, to patrol the streets in taxis, I'm not entirely sure. Regardless, I promised not to tell a soul what I had learned, because my life would be in danger if I did. You folks won't tell, right? Good.

I guess that means I'm safe. Regardless, in both of the aforementioned situations, I was engaging in good, clean conversation with the people in close proximity to me. I was not telling the other folks at either establishment what I felt about anything in particular because, well, their lives are none of my damn business.

I'd never proclaim to be an expert on some stranger's life, and therefore, unless one approached me and specifically asked me to comment on a certain subject, I don't talk to them. This practice of leaving people alone is socially accepted around here, and I'm cool with that. I'm not so self-righteous that I think everyone should know about my belief system or any other detailed part of my life.

Apparently, these last two people don't agree. Readers, I urge you: Don't make that same mistake! If you notice someone walking the other way talking about something ludicrous, such as the high moral standards in the University of Nebraska athletic department or why he or she likes to eat cotton on Fridays, just leave that person alone. That person doesn't care what you think, and most likely, that person will then return to their cozy collegiate newspaper and make a fool out of you to 25,000 readers.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Literally two days of live Pearl Jam

PEARL JAM
Collection of European Live Albums
Epic Records

By Matthew Despres
Collegian Staff

It's evolution, baby.

On Tuesday, Seattle legends Pearl Jam dropped 25 double-live albums onto record store shelves, an exhaustive set that chronicles nearly every moment of their 2000 European tour.

The discs, which first became available online September 5th through the band's fan club, are an unprecedented attempt to provide fans with consistently good live recordings. Packaged in simple brown cardboard reminiscent of The Who's Live at Leeds, the albums illustrate what is at the heart of any Pearl Jam venture: the music.

Although no band has ever attempted something of this nature, it should come as no surprise that Pearl Jam – singer Eddie Vedder, guitarists Stone Gossard and Mike McCready, bassist Jeff Ament and drummer Matt Cameron – would be the first. As the Seattle "grunge" phenomenon of the early 1990's crept out of the west and rapidly made its way world-wide, the band shunned the fame that came with being an international success. Fronted by the enigmatic Vedder, Pearl Jam ignored the commercial machine and concentrated their efforts into making good music. 10 years and six albums later, the band continues to wade into uncharted territory.

"Our expectations were low," said Vedder, in an interview with USA Today. "It's [the bootlegs] not for everybody. But a lot of people out there buy bootlegs, and it's risky, because you can spend a lot of money and get very poor quality."

Longtime Pearl Jam engineer Brett Eliason ensured that the quality of these bootlegs was second to none. Recorded digitally in a mobile unit outside the concert venues, Eliason has delivered a mostly superb mix, allowing in ample crowd noise without sacrificing the sound of the band. The muddy sound usually associated with bootlegs is nowhere to be found.

The release is cathartic in a way for the band, which has undergone a troublesome year. There was the release of Binaural, a superb album in which the band ventured further down creative paths first forged on No Code and Yield. Then came Roskilde, the music festival in Denmark at which nine fans were killed during Pearl Jam's abbreviated set. The tragedy, which is the only show not represented in this week's release, nearly split the band. By releasing the shows, allowing fans to see the good and the bad, Pearl Jam has opened itself up and continued forward.

The standout disc of the series is arguably the 23rd installment: Hamburg, Germany. At 26 songs, the show delves equally into the band's catalog, mixing up concert staples with a few choice covers.

A hard version of "Breakerfall" opens the set, a powerful and well-come deviation from the band's usual choice of a slow opener. The band pushes the momentum further with "Corduroy," a fiery version of the Vitalogy hit enhanced by Vedder's urgent vocals and the impeccable guitar work of McCready.

A spirited "MFC" is followed by "Go," in which Cameron and Ament are able to flex their muscle and truly drive the song. The band again returns to Binaural on the Gossard-penned "Rival," a pleasantly disjointed song that was written in the wake of the Columbine murders. Things are slowed down briefly after a beautiful "Given to Fly" is followed by "Elderly Woman Behind the Counter in a Small Town" and "Light Years," the second single from the new album.

The band responds to those questioning their intensity by offering up "Evacuation" and "Grievance," two of the hardest songs from Binaural that absolutely thrive in a live setting before a crowd of thousands. "Evacuation," however, is one of the few times where the sound suffers. The vocals of Vedder dominate while the guitars behind him become smothered in the process. The first disc closes with powerful renditions of "Porch" and "Black," two of the more musically - and emotionally - profound songs in the band's repertoire.

If this set is indeed one of the better shows, than the second disc is clearly the reason why. Each of its 10 songs are smartly chosen and executed to near perfection.

"Insignificance" again proves the stability of Binaural, while McCready and Gossard take "Rearviewmirror" for a ride. The band digs in and gives a searing of rendition of "Do the Evolution," and then close the show with the tandem of "Baba O'Riley" and "Yellow Ledbetter."

The highlight of the disc is "Crazy Mary," a touching version of the Victoria Williams song. The track may come to represent Pearl Jam at its very best: quietly intense and fully in control.

On "Elderly Woman," Vedder says "I changed by not changing at all / Small town predicts my fate / Perhaps that's what no one wants to see."

Pearl Jam has changed in many ways, and in many they've stayed the same. The bootlegs offer those fans that do want to see an intimate look inside.

Denzel recalls true tale of Titan style football

Remember the Titans
Directed by Boaz Yakin
with Denzel Washington, Will Patton, Donald Adeosun Faison

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Remember the Titans is saccharine, a much Hollywoodized version of high school football's racial integration in the early 1970s. That said, it also has enough winning energy and heart to make it a very good film.

"In Greek mythology, the Titans were greater than even the gods," says TC Williams' Coach Boone (Denzel Washington). And that is exactly what Boone demands of his team. He demands that they are greater than gods, he demands perfection.

Based on a true story, Remember the Titans follows Coach Boone, a black coach assigned the unenviable task of coaching the first racially integrated high school football team in Alexandria, Virginia. To make things worse, the small town is on the verge of exploding from racial tension. Coach Boone's players hate each other and he is replacing a Hall of Fame candidate, Coach Yoast (Will Patton).

The movie is eager to push all these conflicts in the face of the audience as often as possible. Not to make light of racial conflict, but at every point the movie seems ready to alleviate the racial problem, a new conflict arises to spur it onward. Once the Titans gel as a team, then the town will not allow harmony. Then, the two coaches (Yoast stays on as an assistant) have different coaching styles. Then, their families cannot interact. There's fighting at school. Girlfriends and families disapprove of racial others. The school board becomes apprehensive of the black head coach. And on and on.

Remember the Titans is in no way discreet about the message that it is trying to send. Even the epilogue about how the town "makes black and white work even today" seems somewhat over the top.

Still, the movie is not a one-trick pony. For a number of reasons, it makes us care about this team, these players and this moment. Not the least of these reasons is that Denzel Washington could play the Tin Man and still be poetic and compassionate and powerful. This performance will not likely earn Washington any more Oscar nods, but just his presence gives the movie a focus that it sometime lacks.

Much credit also should be given to director Boaz Yakin, who takes enough time off the football field and outside the racial tension to let us know these characters. There are certain intimate moments, like when the team's defensive star meets his teammate's apprehensive mother for the first time, that you can't help but laugh at and cheer for.

Remember the Titans is most aptly described as a "feel-good" movie. It will pull a few heart strings along the way (including the major plot turning point, which even if true-seems way too convenient and out of place), but in the end everything works out as it should.

Perhaps things are made too easy for the team and the town – perhaps problems are created and resolved in very short time frames and perhaps the emotional plays are a bit heavy-handed at times, but I can't help thinking that even the most cynical person will stand up and cheer for Remember the Titans. For a conventional Hollywood film, it's definitely worthwhile.

It's not too early to get started on wintersession, spring and summer co-ops and internships!

Take the first step, go to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

It's 40 minutes that could change your life!!!

Monday's
1:30-2:10 pm 114 Stockbridge
3:00-3:40 pm 103 South College

Tuesdays
10:00-10:40 am 1334 Lederle GRT
1:00-1:40 pm 114 Stockbridge
2:00-2:40 pm 8 Isenberg SOM
3:00-3:40 pm 103 South College

Wednesdays
2:00-2:40 pm 1322 Lederle GRT
3:00-3:40 pm 13 Isenberg SOM
3:35- 4:15 pm 274 Bartlett

Thursdays
11:15-11:55 am 274 Bartlett
3:00-3:40 pm 103 South College
3:35- 4:15 pm 211 Marston

For more information, call the Field Experience Office
545-6265 or see our web site www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

...ing and laughing and crying ri...

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH
D.J. MATT
Filmore
DRINK SPECIALS
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

Hey, listen...I heard there was a chick fight this weekend after a Beirut tournament at some frat. It all started when this group of catty girls thought they had pull. Little did they know.

PART-TIME POSITIONS
Located on the PVTA bus route, we offer convenient schedules to those looking to do some part-time office work.
CLERICAL ASSISTANCE
Duties include gathering materials for mailing, packing boxes, copying papers, and other clerical tasks. Those selected need to be able to work at least 3 consecutive hours between 9 A.M and 5 P.M on workdays. Hours are available now.
WORD PROCESSING TECHNICIAN
This position requires word processing skills and attention to detail. Experience using Microsoft Word 97 for Windows will be helpful in working with our other word processing staff to complete a document conversion project. Both full-time and part-time temporary positions are available.
Call 413-256-0444 to have an application mailed to you.
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC.
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
EOE

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
Class Begins
Fri. Oct. 13th 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Making a difference has always been a matter of applying yourself. Here's where to apply.
PEACE CORPS
Attention Seniors!
Apply Now for positions overseas after graduation. All majors welcome.
Contact the 5-College Peace Corps office @ 112 Stockbridge, 545-2105

Do you wanna get rocked?

Metal legends Def Leppard torch Big E with monster set of classics

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Joe Elliott

COURTESY PAMELA SPRINGSTEEN

Rick Savage

COURTESY PAMELA SPRINGSTEEN

Rick Allen

COURTESY PAMELA SPRINGSTEEN

Phil Collen

COURTESY PAMELA SPRINGSTEEN

DEF LEPPARD
The Eastern States Exposition
Last Springfield
Sept. 30

"ANYTHING GOES, THAT'S RIGHT," was the war cry belted out by frontman Joe Elliott as metal legends Def Leppard exploded onto the main stage at the Big E on Saturday night. And as the last show on the group's marathon 15-month world tour, this evening would indeed prove to be a no-holds barred sonic assault on which the band pulled no punches and took no prisoners.

Right from the opening crunch of "Rock, Rock (Till You Drop)," the Leppard proved that age and the changing face of popular music have done nothing to tarnish their guitar-power sheen. Elliott and company still sport the same flowing locks and taunt leather pants that categorized their ascent to hair-metal superstardom in the late eighties-early nineties, and their trademark power-chord sound rings as true now as it ever did then.

Even the passing of guitarist Steve Clark from a lethal booze-drugs cocktail in 1991 did little to hamper the Leppard's charge, as former Dio and Whitesnake axeman Vix Campbell leapt into the lineup without missing a beat. The chemistry between Campbell and lead plucker Phil Collen was nothing short of amazing on Saturday, as the two took turns pummeling the crowd through favorites such as "Make Love Like a Man," "Foolin" and the title track from the 1996 effort Slang.

Elliott warmed the crowd to "be ready for anything" during the early goings of the show, specifically blatant displays of nudity which were promised but never delivered. What the thousands on hand did get was a rock-solid set of scorching cuts from throughout the group's 20-year odyssey, which has spanned nine studio releases.

"Promises" from last year's Euphoria had the crowd pumping its fists and howling along with Elliott, though the loudest applause of the night came for the five selections from 1987's Hysteria. The album spawned seven hit singles and cemented the group's domination of the hair-metal genre, and Saturday's performances of "Animal," "Rocket," "Armageddon It," "Pour Some Sugar On Me" and "Hysteria" left the audience in a trance of rock-n-roll ecstasy.

The Leppard recognized the need to slow it down in mid-set, as the mullet-headed masses had become dizzy from having their worlds rocked perhaps a little too hard. Elliott strapped on an acoustic guitar and announced that the evening was being taped for possible future release on the band's website, defleppard.com. He then led the audience in a rousing sing-along of the power ballad "Two Steps Behind," which appeared on the group's 1993 release Retro Active (in two different versions) as well as the soundtrack to The Last Action Hero.

The band then launched immediately into the bittersweet unplugged croon of "Bringin' On The Heartbreak," during which the audience shifted nervously in anticipation of the song's gut-wrenching electric climax. And climax is exactly what the Leppard did, as the rhythm section of bassist Rick Savage and drummer Rick Allen reached detonation level just as Elliott tore into a blood-curdling scream of "NO-O-O-O-O!"

The blank stares and ringing ears of the dazed masses stumbling out after the show left little doubt as to the pure power that Def Leppard still wields. After two decades, this band is still pumping out the definitive "Rock of Ages."

D'errico speaks about "Battlebots;" Nye visibly cooler than Hasslehoff

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

If you're looking for hardcore fighting, tune in to the WWF. If you want to see attractive women, check out "Baywatch." If it's robotics you're into, join a science club on campus. What if you want to see hardcore fighting matches involving robots kicking each other's "asses," while being interviewed by attractive women? You could only find aesthetic entertainment such as this on Comedy Central of course.

"Battlebots" is a brand new show on the most popular comedy network on television. The series is just another example of how Comedy Central continues to expand barriers to find humor. Contestants compete in challenges where they build fighting robots to beat the crap out of each other until one is declared the winner. The show has commentary from the likes of Bill Nye the Science guy, and Baywatch's Donna D'errico. Recently, I had the chance to speak to D'errico in a round table discussion, about "Battlebots" and the future of Comedy Central. The conversation went as follows:

Who's cooler? Bill Nye or David Hasslehoff?
(Laughing) Definitely Bill Nye!

Do you think that they would let Bill Nye compete or would he make the ultimate death machine?
I'd love to see his robot, and I'm sure he's considered it.

What's your favorite thing about "Battlebots?"
Seeing one thing get demolished. It's like watching the Indy 500 just to see someone crash.

What do you think it was about your resume that attracted Comedy Central to host the show?
The two main things were "Baywatch" and the "Summer Show" at MTV. Both a little bit comical, a little bit PC, and a lot of fun!

What did the show's producers tell you they were looking for when they hired you?
Someone who doesn't take herself too seriously.

The robot owners take tournaments seriously. Is it difficult to have conversations with them?
No. Any questions I had, they're more than happy to answer. A lot of them have a really good sense of humor.

Did you try to learn anything about robots and how they're built?
I watched people work on robots so I knew a little bit of how they worked.

If you could be a robot, what would it be like and what would you call it?
I'm not sure what I'd call it, but it would be like the fembots in Austin powers.

Describe the appeal to you and the audience for battlebots.
To me, I never get to be around anything like it. It's like a big testosterone bust that's not human. For everybody else, it's just the destruction. To watch all this time and energy into building a robot, and see it completely destroyed.

Do you think that with our society becoming more technologically advanced, this is why the show has done so well?
Yeah. Who knew how far the Internet would go? Instead of tuning in to watch boxers or wrestlers that are humans, we're tuning into things fighting that are completely not human.

If you could change one aspect of the show, what would it be?
They set the show up perfectly, but if I could change anything at all, it'd be the rules of weaponry. I'd allow other things like projectiles. We want more of them on there.

Imagine that we're in a "Brave New World" place, and robots run things. What would you have to do to fit yourself into a world that you were fighting and robots were commentating on your fighting?
I guess I'd survive by finding the robot's sweet spot and think about how I could suck up to it.

What's your impression of the show's success?
It's a lot different than I'd have imagined. They're young, funny and fun. They took the sport a lot more seriously that I had original ly thought.

Did you ever feel threatened by a robot?
No

What's the biggest difference in working with robots and cast of "Baywatch?"
There are so many things I'd like to say. There seems to be a lot more camaraderie among the robots. More personality in the robots.

What do you think makes the show funny?
The announcer, the ring guy, (is really funny. Me, I'm funny. A lot of those factors make it really funny.

How big can this get?
Big! I would hope it would stay on Comedy Central. I think something could be lost on another channel. If this is the day of technology, then this could be a big thing.

How do you like working with Comedy Central?
They're so great. I can't say enough good things about them. The whole team is so great.

From what you've seen, what do you think it takes to win a robot battle?
The prettier looking robots move better. The weapons that have the ability to not flip over helps too.

How do you think it could be appealing to the female demographic?
If the robot operators hit the gym, started getting buff, and wearing skimpy stuff. That could drive the women wild. Any women like me who like to see things destroyed, they'll like it too. The demographics is most ly men and children.

What was the first thing that went through your mind when you went to the show?
It sounded crazy, but when I got there, I was completely blown away. You can't describe what it's like to see it.

Do you think they're going to give you the opportunity to compete with a robot?
That'd be cool. There's a whole pit crew team and I would probably lose, but it'd be fun.

What's the first thing that pops into your mind when you hear "rum-rah?"
A lot of the names of the robots are phallic.

What's your favorite show?
I don't watch a lot of TV, but nothing beats the original "Spirit of Christmas" South Park.

Were you ever so upset at a match that you wanted to cry?
No. Except when a little girl lost. You're thinking of "Baywatch."

How does "Battlebots" fit into the new trend of reality TV?
I guess it fits into it because it's not a show with lines and a script. What sets it apart is the non-human factor.

What do you think the response is of watching robots fight as opposed to humans?
Crowd response is more because you can actually demolish things that you can't in wrestling.

I am one surprised woman! I just can't get over how great the Collegian is! It gets better and better every day!

(And there are s-o-o-o-o-o-o-o many cute guys down there!)

A reading of artist's cases

ARTIST CASE STUDIES
A Performance Meditation on the Life and Music of Thelonius Monk
Sept. 27

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Correspondent

Intersections packs in performances, artist case studies, discussions and workshops in only four days of intense focus on the performing arts. Because of the tight schedule, the artist case studies (in which artists discuss their works and their creative processes) were kept short.

In that brief space, Thomas DeFrantz captured his inspiration and ideas which five years ago started him on the creation of the performance piece today entitled Monk's Mood.

DeFrantz, a tap dancer, choreographer and an assistant professor at MIT, used both video of a taped performance and live dance as illustration. As an artist, he focused on the synthesis of different fields of African American art forms, whether they are dance, literature, theater, visual art or diverse types of music. In this particular piece, tap dancing was pushed beyond its familiar boundaries and used as a narrative form to express feeling, thought and actual events in the life of Thelonious Monk.

Monk was a part of the creation of bebop, jazz and one of its most famous composers and performers. Bebop broke free of the swing style, its precursor, and reshaped standard tunes and created an entirely new style of jazz; a style whose reverberations can still be heard in contemporary music. Monk's Mood uses both marionettes and common objects as stand-ins for important subjects in Monk's life, such as a red wagon to represent monk's children, a flower which symbolizes Billie Holiday, and baby grand piano that acts as a dancing surface. Thelonious' passions are recreated on the stage, and his life story as well as his musical story, is told in tap and movement.

DeFrantz and his artistic team have done to typical tap dancing what Monk and his colleagues did to jazz: reshaped it into something new, while retaining traces and inspirations of older styles. This piece was not only about the dancing for its own sake, but dancing as a powerful narrative, in conjunction with music.

What results is an incredibly beautiful, expressive performance. DeFrantz's tap style doesn't always follow the rhythm of the music, or go in the direction one would expect. But, the creation of this new style inspired by Monk's own revolutionary musical style and combined with new performance elements, made for astonishing performance.

Phish check into Bittersweet Motel

Bittersweet Motel
Produced/Directed by Todd Phillips
Starring members of Phish
Playing at Academy of Music in Northampton until Oct. 5

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

Making a rockumentary about the most popular band on earth is no easy feat, but producer/ director Todd Phillips pulls it off with a candid yet refreshingly real perspective. Phillips and his small crew followed Phish during their Fall 1996 Northeast tour and then their European tour from 1997. Bittersweet Motel is a very well made and photographed documentary, however I did find that much of the editing was choppy and rough especially during some of the interviews.

Phish is the most famous of jam bands, comprised of guitarist and lead singer Trey Anastasio, bassist Mike Gordon, Page McConnell on keyboards and the wacky Jon Fishman on drums. Footage for this film was taken from all of the types of venue utilized by the band: indoor arenas, outside festival sites and small intimate European clubs. Much of the film is very lighthearted, not simply because the music is not taken seriously but because these guys are just fun people. Numerous parts will make you laugh out loud.

Todd Phillips wisely decided to focus on the band rather than the fans, who usually take the attention away from the actual band. Most of the sparse media coverage, especially the most recent Entertainment Weekly spread, has focused on the fans and how they will flock to wherever Phish is playing. This very point is discussed in the movie during a scene where Phillips asks Anastastio to read a review of the band. The frontman goes on to read a nasty review where the writer says something along the lines of Phish urinating in the ears of their listeners with the fans just lapping it up. Obviously, this kind of negative publicity has not affected the band one bit. They have been one of the highest grossing touring acts for the last five years.

One of the only complaints that I have with this movie is that too much of the emphasis is put on Anastastio. Granted he is the most flamboyant and outgoing member of the band, but I do not think I heard more than a peep come out of Gordon's mouth. I would have liked to see more of the other members, especially the wild, wacky antics of Fishman.

To a fan such as myself, this film was almost perfect as it gave people an up-close look at the band while also showing what makes them tick. The underlying theme throughout Bittersweet Motel is that these guys truly love what they are doing, despite all of the money they are making. This film is not in town much longer, so check it out at its 9:05 showing every night at the Academy of Music in Northampton through next Thursday October 5.

Jam band Phish stars in the new documentary Bittersweet Motel.

COURTESY DANNY CLINCH

Ptah Myers and the UMass men's soccer team extended their unbeaten streak with an overtime win and an extra frame tie.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

UMass extends unbeaten streak

Hoffman hero in OT win over Bonnies; Minutemen lock up Dukes

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The marks of a good team include the ability to win games under adverse circumstances and to consistently improve over the course of a season.

The Massachusetts soccer team has been able to achieve success in both ventures this year, specifically over the past two weeks. UMass finished this weekend's matches with a 2-1 win over St. Bonaventure and a scoreless tie with Duquesne, both Atlantic 10 opponents.

The first test for the Maroon and White came on Friday afternoon against St. Bonaventure. The Bonnies defeated UMass last year 1-0, so the Minutemen came into this game looking for some revenge as well as a win to open the A-10 regular season.

The UMass offense opened the first half with an onslaught directed at the Bonnie defense. Leading scorer Jeff Deren (5G-10P) opened up the UMass attack with two chances in the game's opening minutes. Deren dribbled his way into the penalty area before firing a shot on goal, putting the rebound over the crossbar.

Deren's partner in crime, Yuri Morales (4A-8P), found himself on the end of a beautiful thru-ball from senior Fred Kinateder. Morales fired a 10-yard shot that was deflected over the end line by the keeper.

The Maroon and White pressure slowed down half way through the period forcing the UMass defensive core to step up and stave off the St. Bonaventure counter. Captains J.R. Pouncey and Patrik Beattie had their work cut out for them at the end of the second half as the Bonnies raised their level of play, putting a lot of pressure on the back line.

The onslaught began with 27 minutes left to play in the first stanza when Pouncey and sweeper Shawn Green found themselves alone at midfield against three SBU strikers. Green managed to intercept a thru-ball that would have broken the back of the defense. Pouncey then came over to clear the ball out of danger.

The barrage continued though as the fullbacks and goalie Bryan O'Quinn had to step up and make strong, aggressive challenges for the rest of the half. First, O'Quinn had to come off his line to intercept a killer pass, then fullback John Lytton had to go horizontal in order to head the ball away, hindering another scoring bid.

The first half ended in a scoreless tie but, following the theme of this campaign, the second frame provided a whole new storyline.

Coach Sam Koch employed a strategy that worked well in the Fresno State game by substituting Ohie Gravely. Ptah Myers and Max Wolf into the lineup so he could have Morales, Deren and Kinateder fresh halfway through the period.

Two minutes into the second half Koch's strategy paid off. UMass threw the ball in toward freshman sniper Ohie Gravely, who chested it down toward his feet while shielding off a SBU defender. He then stepped over the ball, faking to his left then spinning to his right across the 18-yard box. The Bonnie goalie moved with Gravely following the play and that's where the freshman beat him. He fired a shot against the grain so the keeper could not extend his dive enough to make the save.

The Gravely masterpiece gave UMass a 1-0 lead but it seemed to energize SBU more than the Minutemen. Less than two minutes later, the Bonnies sent a corner long and outside the box to a streaking Said Ali. Ali bent a ball across the penalty area to Nathan Sellers who used his head to deflect the ball in. O'Quinn had no chance on the play as he was forced to watch the visitors celebrate.

UMass and SBU traded chances for the rest of the half in an open run- and-gun style game. Eventually, though, regulation time ended with the score knotted at one, sending the Minutemen to overtime.

The Bonnies had the first scoring chance of the extra period when they fired a 30-yard shot just wide of the goal. UMass countered though, earning a free kick from 25 yards on the ensuing play. Specialist Benny Hoffman stepped behind the ball to line up the shot. Hoffman struck the ball perfectly, bending it around the SBU defenders and away from the keeper into the upper corner of the net. The crowd erupted, as did the Massachusetts bench, rushing Hoffman who had just secured a victory in the A-10 opener.

"Every game in the conference is important." Coach Koch said after the game. "We can't afford to lose the first one."

UMass faced the Dukes from Duquesne on Sunday as they attempted to knock off another conference opponent. The Minutemen dominated the first half of play as they had 10 free kicks, eight corners and five shots. The key stat, however: zero goals.

Duquesne managed to escape the first half with a 0-0 tie, giving its offense a chance to mount an attack of its own in the second frame. The Dukes offense did little to respond as stellar play from fullback Patrik Beattie as well as the always consistent and physical J.R. Pouncey thwarted any scoring bids. Fellow fullback Shawn Green bolstered the defense by returning from a first half injury, which required five stitches.

The Minutemen attacked the Duquesne goal repeatedly and without mercy led by outstanding performances from senior middy Seth Lilburn, freshman super-sub Myers and midfielder Derek Rhodes. Regulation ended in a 0-0 tie with UMass holding a heavy advantage in all offensive statistics.

The only outstanding scoring chance came with 10 minutes left in the second overtime. Gravely flashed his brilliant ball handling skills once again leaving two defenders in his wake before firing a shot toward the upper corner of the net. The Duquesne keeper made a magnificent save deflecting the ball over the bar and preserving the 0-0 tie.

Coach Sam Koch said after the draw that they knew coming in that Duquesne was a "better defending team." About the effort he stated, "You can't complain but we have to finish our chances." UMass, now 3-3-2, 1-0-1 in the A-10, starts a long road trip next weekend against conference opponents St. Joseph's and Temple. Coach Koch, on the other hand, looks to jumpstart his offense after a physically draining turf war with the Dukes.

Minutewomen pitch shutout

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

OLEAN, NY - The Massachusetts women's soccer team did its best imitation of The Little Engine That Could on Friday afternoon against host St. Bonaventure.

UMass	2
St. Bonaventure	0

For the first 60 minutes of play, the Minutewomen squandered a host of scoring opportunities. They hit the post. They hit the crossbar. Even shots directed at an empty net ended up being cleared out by SBU defenders.

But finally, midway through the second half, UMass [6-5, 2-1 in the Atlantic 10] broke through against the Bonnies. Junior Brooke Bartlett chased a ball down on the right flank and crossed a ball into the box, where St. Bonaventure keeper Karen Cunningham seemed ready to pounce on it.

However, before the goalie could secure a handle on it, UMass forward Kara Ciocca knocked the ball out of her hands and into the net.

In the end, that goal would turn out to be all that the Minutewomen would need in a 2-0 win over St. Bonaventure. The victory was the first of the season for the Maroon and White inside the Atlantic 10 conference.

"She [Cunningham] was fumbling it," said Ciocca of the play. "But it was a very close call. That's why I sort of hesitated on the celebration. She didn't have a good grasp on it, and it wasn't clearly in her possession."

Said UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy: "It took us a while to adjust to this field today. We had some opportunities, two posts and a sitter for a header that they cleared out. But we hung in there."

Bartlett would then add an insurance goal late with 8:33 remaining to close out the two-goal win. Martha Conover started the play with a beautiful through ball from the midfield that Bartlett chased down and tucked past Cunningham.

The first half was more of an even affair, with both teams enjoying their share of chances. However, the Minutewomen dominated the action in the second half and chipped in the goals that they needed to win the match.

"I thought that we played a real good first half," St. Bonaventure coach Geoff Bennett said. "UMass had a couple of good chances, but we had some good opportunities off of corner kicks. You have to give UMass credit. They are a very well-coached team with great players."

UMass goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky made two saves in net to earn her second shutout of the season.

The Minutewomen were a mere one second short of a perfect weekend on the defensive end, but Duquesne's Danielle McGovern scored with :01 left in Sunday afternoon's game between UMass and the Dukes.

Nevertheless, Ciocca scored a pair of goals against the Pittsburgh school to lead the visitors to a 2-1 win over Duquesne.

The win put the Minutewomen back over the .500 mark for the first time since they were 3-2 back on Sept. 10.

Martha Conover (2) and Kara Green (7) helped the Minutewomen roll over A-10 foe St. Bonaventure on Friday.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

■ football

continued from page 10

his team 66 yards off the opening kickoff and hitting wideout Charlie Adams with an 18-yard touchdown strike after Adams had beaten UMass corner Rob Green a full three strides to the inside.

After going three-and-out on its first possession, UMass got the ball back after a solid defensive series. But facing third-and-11, quarterback Richard Lucero sent an off-balance heave straight into the hands of Pride safety Doug Shanahan, who would have gone the other way for six had Lucero himself not knocked him out at the UMass 1. Butler covered the last yard himself, sneaking in on a straight keeper to put his squad up by two TDs early.

The Maroon and White rushing attack took a big hit early, when All-American tailback Marcel Shipp left the game with an ankle injury. He would not return until the third quarter, leaving Malden Catholic product Kevin Quinlan to handle the lion's share of the load for UMass on the ground. The junior responded with poise and power on the team's third possession, carving five times for 24 yards and hauling in a screen pass for eight more. But as well as Quinlan filled Shipp's shoes, the UMass offense just wasn't clicking without its workhorse.

"It's a big deal. Marcel getting hurt, he's the best player we've got," Whipple said. "Kevin did a great job, but we can't lose what I call one of our generals."

The Minutemen finally got on the board via a 31-yard Doug White field goal to start the second quarter, and things finally started going the home team's way when the UMass D stopped the Pride cold on its next possession. But Minuteman DeShon Hards fumbled the ensuing punt right back into the hands of Hofstra, which responded with a 48-yard drive that ended in another Butler-to-Adams TD connection. This one came in the form of a 9-yard slant, something the Pride had reportedly practiced all week in preparation for attacking UMass' young corners.

"In certain coverages, [they] started to bail out pretty hard," HU wideout Kahmal Roy said. "We took advantage by throwing quick slants and seeing what we could do after the catch."

The home offense bounced back with an answering TD a mere 59 seconds later, as Quinlan bounced off tackle left and cut back wickedly for a 28-yard score. The play was set up by a 28-yard Zullo catch-and-run.

The UMass D then stepped up and stymied the Pride on three straight plays to force a punt, only to once again have their special teams counterparts hand Hofstra back the ball courtesy of a Troy Lockman fumble on the return.

"My expectations might be a little too high for this football team," Whipple said. "I just take for granted that we're going to catch punts."

The Pride again made UMass pay for its sloppiness, as Roy pulled down a 20-yard rainbow from Butler in the left corner of the endzone to stake Hofstra to a 27-10 lead. Although he appeared to match Roy step-for-step on the play, UMass' Green ended up behind the lanky receiver and was again forced to watch the visitors celebrate.

UMass' afternoon turned even worse on the ensuing kickoff as wideout Jimmie Howard needed to be helped off the field after suffering a knee injury. Whipple clarified the injury later as a ligament tear, but would not speculate on how long the receiver would be out.

The Minutemen closed to within 11 points at halftime, 28-17, behind another strong TD run from Quinlan. But Lucero's first pass of the third quarter was again thrown to the wrong team and Hofstra capitalized behind a Butler-to-Jason Maxwell 15-yard TD pass over the top. The Pride jumped out to an even bigger lead, 41-17, after Steve Jackson turned an 8-yard route into a 40-yard score with some devastating open-field running.

Lucero atoned for his early inconsistency with a 44-yard TD toss to close out third quarter scoring, on which he sidestepped a wicked Pride blitz and hung the ball up to a wide-open Jeff Howard. The fourth quarter started in much the same fashion for Hofstra, which responded with a 48-yard drive that ended in another Butler-to-Adams TD connection. This one came in the form of a 9-yard slant, something the Pride had reportedly practiced all week in preparation for attacking UMass' young corners.

"In certain coverages, [they] started to bail out pretty hard," HU wideout Kahmal Roy said. "We took advantage by throwing quick slants and seeing what we could do after the catch."

The home offense bounced back with an answering TD a mere 59 seconds later, as Quinlan bounced off tackle left and cut back wickedly for a 28-yard score. The play was set up by a 28-yard Zullo catch-and-run.

The UMass D then stepped up and stymied the Pride on three straight plays to force a punt.

But that's as close as the Minutemen would get, as Hofstra's Shanahan followed up a 32-yard field goal by teammate Chad Johnson by taking Lucero's third interception 46 yards for the team's seventh TD. Zullo would tack on for a magnificent 30-yard score with 4:01 remaining, but it wasn't enough to close the gap for UMass.

The Minutemen return to action next Saturday, when they invade Northeastern's Parsons Field and attempt to get back on the winning track. Last season, UMass followed up its week four loss to Hofstra by bumbling the Huskies 77-0 at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

Head Coach Mark Whipple and Richard Lucero try to pinpoint the reason for the QB's shaky play (three interceptions) in Saturday's loss to Hofstra.

■ Butler

continued from page 10

zone.

"It wasn't some much [Green]," Whipple said. "Shawn [Murray] got beat. They beat us on a some slants."

Butler, believing that his receivers could beat any corner, built an aura of confidence and exposed the Minuteman secondary. No. 12 was virtually perfect, going 22-of-32 for 324 yards.

"We did a great job with our quick posts," Nardi said. "The gameplan was fantastic. My coaches did a great job."

The signal caller also did it on the ground, Butler picked up a rushing touchdown as well as several key first downs to extend drives.

"They made a bunch of third down plays," Whipple said. "Their guys caught the ball. The first third-and-10 they completed the ball and they seemed to get some confidence that way."

Converting on key third downs allowed the Pride offense to amass an overwhelming time of possession advantage. Hofstra held the ball for 37:22 to the Maroon and White's 22:38.

Butler's awareness of where the ball needed to be to pick up the first downs was obvious in his quarterback keepers as well as when he scrambled. The native of Allentown, PA did what he had to do in order for his team to win the ballgame, a feat that the Pride accomplished.

Although Butler's statistics looked as though he was close to perfect on the afternoon, the QB needed a little help from his supporting cast. He spread the ball around very well, with four different receivers catching touchdown passes.

"I was nothing different than what we do in practice," Butler said. "Every game it could be a different receiver having a big game. Today was Kahmal's day. Next week it might be Jason Maxwell. Everybody goes hard and I try to give each receiver enough catches."

Roy led the way with eight catches for 124 yards and a touchdown, while Maxwell and Steve Jackson added TD receptions. Charlie Adams grabbed four balls for 46 yards and two touchdowns.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 Buick Century V6, cassett, AC, power, $1399 413-533-9082

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8!), excellent condition, 86k, loaded: power windows-seat-mirrors-locks; a/c, peppy V6 3.8L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker $4500 or b.o., 508-836-3753

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

91 Ford Taurus Black, 90k, 4dr, cruise, power windows. Call 549-5230 $2200

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

EMPLOYMENT

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Cook-Day Care Center, Rt. 63, Leverett 9-1 M-F $7.50/hr Call Susan 548-9674

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr. Call Susan, 548-9674

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Mail Boxers Etc. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Ctr. , Amherst)

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

Mad Science. Instructors/performers. Part-time to conduct fun afterschool program, birthday parties etc. Experience with groups of children. Must have car. Great experience, good pay 584-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emd-snet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

EMPLOYMENT

Second Shift 3pm-11pm. Part time Monday, Wednesday and Friday with possibiliy of full time. Duties include maintaining a large recirculating aquaculture & hydroponics greenhouse. Applicant must be responsible, mechanically inclined and able to work alone. Great for students - Earn while you learn. Send resume to Bioshelters, Inc., 500 Sunderland Road, Amherst, MA 01002, fax (413) 549-9945, email bioshelter @aol.com. No calls please.

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

EMPLOYMENT

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Dorm size refrigerator $100 obo 6mos old, only used for 2! Call 253-2455

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLY-WHEELS.NETUsed

FOR SALE

Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MISCELLANEOUS

Have fun - Raising funds for your clubs, teams, and group. Earn up to $500 or more. Put our 25 years of fundraising experience to work for you. Call now for details 800-592-2121 ext 725

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommate to share house w/3 guys. $375/mo inclusive. Call Steve @ 253-3220

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspringbreak.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

Call to Advertise!

The Daily Collegian Classifieds has everything you could want and more!

Call us to Advertise Today!

413-545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Coval to Coval
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	EDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		Lost Treasures-Ancient World		Force More Powerful-Nonviolent Conflict		Religion
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Old and New Bonds"		Family Law (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother	Raymond	Survivor "Old and New Bonds"		Family Law (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	20/20 Downtown		NFL Football: Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts. (In Stereo Live)				Friends	Change-Heart
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Love Stinks"		Roswell "Destiny" (In Stereo)		News
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	20	7th Heaven "Saturday"		Blind Date	Real TV	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	News	Real TV	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Friends	Frasier
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	'70s Show	'70s Show	News
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Friends	Frasier
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		Force More Powerful-Nonviolent Conflict
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	20/20 Downtown		NFL Football: Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts. (In Stereo Live)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier	I Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"The Devil's Advocate" (1997, Horror) Keanu Reeves, Al Pacino						"The Devil's Advocate" (1997)
A&E	69	L.A. Law "Dogpas Fur Ball"		Law & Order "Rebels"		Biography: George Reeves		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Volunteers"
CNN	20	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)	Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	23	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	League-Gentle	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	62	Wild Discovery: Creatures		Wild Discovery: Crocodile		On the Inside: S.W.A.T.		Cave of the Glowing Skulls (N)		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files "Psycho Killers"
ESPN	43	Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)			Great Outdoor Games		Great Outdoor Games		Baseball Tonight (N)
LIFE	52	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	"Protect Me And Not Mine: The Lavenia G. Bernbenet Story" (1993, Drama) Tatum O'Neal, Ralph Waite								Changing Face of Beauty
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Makeover	To Be Announced		TRL (In Stereo)			Road Rules	Road Rules	Making-Video	Fear (In Stereo)
NICK	59	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Blue's Clues	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	All In Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	60	Sliders "Obsession" (In Stereo)		"Babylon 5: The Gathering"		Outer Limits "Origin of Species"		Outer Limits "Phobos Rising"		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	24	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours "In the Danger Zone"		Code Blue: Sweet Charity (N)		Police Force: Day Watch		Secret World		Code Blue: Sweet Charity
TNT	26	ER "The Peace of Wild Things"		Pretender "Under the Reds"		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)				Bull		Pretender (In Stereo)
USA	57	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Deja Vu" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		Breaking the Magician's Code: Magic Revealed				Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	30	★★½ "We're No Angels" (1989, Comedy) Robert De Niro, Bruce Willis				★★★ "Sense and Sensibility" (1995, Drama) Emma Thompson, Kate Winslet						"Dogma" (1999)
MAX	65	(5:15) ★★½ "The Muse" (1999)		Princess Diana's Dresses		★★½ "I Think Something About Mary" (1998) Cameron Diaz, Ben Stiller						"Dogma" (1999)
SHOW	65	"The Sandy Bottom Orchestra" (2000, Drama) Dianne Reeves				★★ "The Wood" (1999, Drama) Omar Epps, Taye Diggs (In Stereo)				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		"A Simple Plan" (1998)

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

YOU GUYS GOING TO PLAY BASKETBALL?
ACTUALLY, WE ARE GOING TO TRY OUT FOR THE TEAM
YOU'RE KIDDING, RIGHT?
NOPE
HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA
I THINK YOU GUYS GOT A GREAT CHANCE

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

OK BOB, IF I SEE ANY CANNED CHICKEN SOUP NEAR YOU I'LL HIT IT WITH THIS MALLET.
- THANKS SLOT.
HMM, THE BIRD SEEKS HELP IN ORDER TO THWART MY EVIL POWERS. I MUST CONJURE UP MY OWN MINIONS..
ELSE EVIL BANANA MINIONS AND DESTROY THE BIRD.
YES MASTER.

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskus

Dilbert By Scott Adams

NOW SIGN THIS AND THIS AND THIS
THIS IS A MURDER CONFESSION
IT'S FOR THE FILE
SOMEDAY I'M GOING TO TAKE A GOOD LOOK AT THAT FILE.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HELLO, CALLER. DO YOU HAVE AN INTERIOR DECORATING PROBLEM I CAN HELP YOU WITH?
UH... YEAH. I HAVE A SPARE CABINET DOOR THAT I CAN'T USE, BUT I DON'T WANT TO THROW IT AWAY.
MM-HM. MM-HM. I WOULD PAINT IT GOLD, HAMMER SOME LEGS ON IT, AND CALL IT A COFFEE TABLE.
WELL... I GUESS I COULD DO THAT. IT'S GOT A BUSTED HINGE ON IT, THOUGH.
OH. BROKEN HINGES ARE VERY TOUCHTURE. PLEASE NOW. PAINT IT GOLD, HANG IT ON THE WALL, AND TELL PEOPLE HOW GREAT IT IS BEFORE THEY CAN FORM THEIR OWN OPINION ON IT.
UNH.

Robotman and Monty By Jim Meddick

MY, MY THIS IS HIGHLY IMPROBABLE
A ROBOT A SYNTHETIC BEING DEMONSTRATING A DESIRE FOR AUTONOMY
INDEED THIS DEGREE OF WILLFULNESS IS RARE EVEN AMONG ORGANIC SPECIES
THERE IS BUT ONE OTHER EXAMPLE OF THIS REMARKABLE DESIRE FOR ESCAPE IN ALL OUR RECORD LIBRARIES
CAPTAIN, WERE IN THE DUNGEONS OF LIMBO!
NO, LEONARD NIMOY AT THE 74 FAYETTE VILLE STAR TREK CONVENTION.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO EVEN THOUGH YOU GREW YOUR FUR OUT, THAT PERSIAN WOULDN'T DATE YOU?
SHE SAID I LOOKED LIKE A CHIHUAHUA.
AND ROB YELLED AT YOU WHEN HE SAW IT? HOW ARE YOU GOING TO CUT IT?
HE ONLY YELLED 'CAUSE THE ROGAINE... COST $80, AND MY ANNUAL BATH IS COMING UP. SO I JUST PUT SOME NO-HAIR CREAM IN THE SHAMPOO.
MEANWHILE

Robotman By Jim Meddick

UM, YOU LOOK LIKE YOU'RE BROODING.
YEAH WELL, I KINDA GOTTA LOTTA THINGS ON MY MIND
MAN, THIS WHOLE "SEAN PEAN" PERSONA THING IS WORKING ALL I HAVE TO DO IS THINK AND ACT LIKE SEAN PENN AND NO FLASH BULBS! NO FLASH BULBS!!
YOU WANT ME TO PERRAZZ CAN ALL GO TO HOOKAH!!
YOU JUST RUINED THE LITTLE GIRL'S BIRTHDAY PARTY
OK MAYBE EAGE OF THE SEAN PEAN A LITTLE BIT

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

SAMMY, IN THE INTEREST OF SCIENCE, I'M GOING TO SAY A WORD, AND I WANT YOU TO SAY THE FIRST THING THAT POPS INTO YOUR HEAD...
FUNGAL INFECTION!
I HAVEN'T SAID THE WORD...
MOTOR OIL? NO, LIEBERMAN! A GIANT SQUID!
I'VE DECIDED TO USE A LIFELINE AND ASK THE AUDIENCE.
A GIANT SQUID!
IN THE INTEREST OF SCIENCE...
I PUT UP WITH A LOT..
MY FINAL ANSWER IS D) A GIANT SQUID!

Horoscopes

Libra (Sept. 23- Oct. 22) You need to avoid anyone who claims to be a friend of an old friend from out of town. Trust me on this one; serial killer psychopaths always love to use that line

Scorpio (Oct. 23- Nov. 21) You are shrewd in business, but cannot be trusted. You will achieve the pinnacle of success because of your total lack of ethics. But beware: most Scorpios are murdered.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22- Dec. 21) You have an inventive mind and are inclined to be progressive. You also lie a great deal. On the other hand, you are inclined to be careless and impractical, causing you to make the same mistakes over and over again. People think you are stupid.

Capricorn (Dec. 22- Jan. 19) You need to try to be gracious in victory. You never know if those you defeat today will be crafitier than you tomorrow. Also, you have a tendency to play with yourself when you think no one is looking, but THEY ARE.

Aquarius (Jan. 20- Feb. 18) Sesquipedalian. Learn what it means. Become one with it. You're probably already halfway there anyways, knowing you Aquarians.

Pisces (Feb. 19- March 20) Today you will suddenly and quite unexpectedly become fascinated with fishing. You'll spend all of your spare time looking through lures and will videotape all the fishing shows. Don't lose hope, though — while there is no known cure for your condition, there's a team working on it at MIT.

Aries (March 21- April 19) You are the pioneer type and bold most people in contempt. You are quick tempered, impatient, and scornful of advice. In short, you are a pain on the neck. But you look damn good in buckskin.

Taurus (April 20- May 20) You will discover that you can raise one eyebrow by itself, but not the other. This will aggravate you, and you'll spend the majority of the day in front of the bathroom mirror, trying to correct the situation. You should just relax, John Black from Days of Our Lives has made a career out of this trick.

Gemini (May 21- June 20) The world will be dim and gray, and cold. Carrion crows will caw at you from the edges of the world, and deep cold water will rush by in rivers without names. Ahead, on the peak of a mountain, is a glimmering golden light. Either that, or you'll get gum stuck to your shoe. (Sometimes these things are hard to read.)

Cancer (June 21- July 22) A rare form of management disease will strike you today, where you can only speak in metaphors. Still, you'll open the kimono and hit the ground running. That, and you should definitely shampoo someone's crotch today.

Leo (July 23- Aug. 22) You consider yourself a born leader. Others think you are just pushy. Most Leos are bullies. You are vain and dislike honest criticism. Your arrogance is disgusting. Leo people are often thieves, too. Go you.

Virgo (Aug.- Sept. 22) What you are about to do is wrong. Of course, you will only find that out much later. For now, enjoy yourself. As a matter of fact, forget you ever read this at all. Remain blissfully ignorant.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 73 LOW: 52	HIGH: 76 LOW: 55	HIGH: 77 LOW: 50

Quote of the Day

"I'm not white trash, I'm from Jersey and my parents are fin' loaded."

–Overheard

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Tator Tot Meat Casserole

Kielbasa Grinder

Tator Tot Casserole (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Dinner

BBQ Sluggers

Pineapple Ham Steak

Casablanca Stew (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Breaded Vegan Cutlet (vegan) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

MONDAY NITE WINGS AND ALL YOU CAN EAT FOOTBALL
The HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

ACROSS
1 Summarize
6 Clay pots
11 Dawn goddess
14 Love, in Paris
15 Arrive at
16 Resinous deposit
17 Zodiac sign
18 Bewitch
20 Antlered animal
21 "Misery" star
23 Devoured
24 Burpee products
26 Highest
28 Made fun of
30 Wedding star
31 Went wrong
32 Ship bottoms
33 Kitchen pest
36 Actress Donna
37 Small quantities
38 Take apart
39 Oath
40 Perch
41 Dairy product
42 Ungainly
43 Huts
44 Far East samples
47 Interest
48 Ike's opponent
49 The best
50 Not a ghost — chance
53 Groundhog
56 Lustrous material
58 Recede
59 Eagle's nest
60 Revise
61 "Gidget" actress
62 Tennis great Ivan
63 Peri

DOWN
1 "*" review
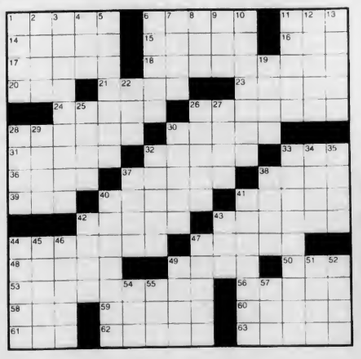
2 Jannings of film
3 Bar tool
4 Summer mo
5 Carry on
6 Killer whales
7 Tilt
8 Baby's seat
9 Emulate Brad Pitt
10 Sheriffs badges
11 Make happy
12 Singers Hall and —
13 Aroma
19 Lowland
22 Do a math task
25 — out: made do with
26 Bone, for Fido
27 Fees II
28 Media mogul Ginn
29 Sandwich cookie
30 Golfer King
32 Oddballs
33 Entertaining accounts
34 Bismarck's st.
35 Selleck and Jones
37 Des Moines locale
38 Russian river
50 Extreme
51 Brie and Stilton
52 Prod
53 Type of tax
54 Handled roughly
55 Sundried brick
56 Geography-class "must"
57 Rube
58 Tart
61 Fivers
62 Actor Devine
64 "— Haw!"
65 Coffee holder
66 Physicians' org

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

T	R	A	I	N		S	P	A	S		T	Y	R	O
H	I	N	D	U		T	R	U	E		O	E	L	L
A	T	T	I	C		M	O	D	A		M	A	L	S
N	E	E	D	S		I	N	V	I	T	A	T	E	S
			E	L	F		L	O	O	T	S	Y
S	C	A	M	P	A		A	R	D
W	A	L	L		L	U	C	R	E		T	R	K
A	W	A	Y		A	S	K	E	D		O	R	A	L
P	I	S		B	R	E	E	D		S	H	O	R	E
			K	A	T		A	L	U	M	N	E
P	E	S	T	E	R		S	U	N
S	P	O	O	N	F	U	L		G	L	A	D	E	S
T	E	L	L		D	O	N		E	M	I	L	E
A	R	E	A		C	A	R	A		S	O	N	I	C
B	A	S	I	S		E	N	D	S		S	K	E	E

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zakashansky, Soren Nash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Monday, October 2, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass tightens leash on Huskies

Field hockey tops rival UConn for first time in seven years

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Junior Jill Fantasia challenges the UConn offense while senior Lucy Koch and sophomore Sarah Bohonowicz look on in Saturday's 2-1 victory over the Huskies.

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It had been a long time.

So long, in fact, that the last time the Massachusetts field hockey team had beaten its archrival, the University of Connecticut, the majority of the current UMass players were most likely playing dodge ball out at recess.

UMass	2
UConn	1

But luckily for the No. 9 Minutewomen, that streak of losses dating back to 1993 is finally over, after the Maroon and White pulled off a 2-1 upset of No. 7 UConn Saturday at Richard F. Garber Field.

"It's a big monkey off our back, and a great win for us," Head Coach Patty Shea said after the game. "UConn is a Final Four team, and they have worked hard to get where they are. It's been a while since we competed against a top team and actually won. It's a critical step we had to take."

For most of the first half, the teams battled it out evenly, with both squads garnering scoring chances but with neither team finishing up on its opportunities. All of that changed 30 minutes into the game when forward Erika Whiston intercepted a pass, dribbled into the box and shot the ball off a Husky player's foot for a penalty corner.

Anke Bruemmer, the penalty corner specialist for the Minutewomen, then drilled a shot that was barely deflected wide of the net by UConn goalie Alana Linick. However, on the ensuing out of bounds play, Lindsay Abbott was able to scoop up a loose ball in front of the net and fire it into the cage for the first score of the contest.

"My position is to hold the post on that play," Abbott said. "So I held it, the ball came across to me, and I put it in."

It looked like the Maroon and White would be able to head into half time with a one goal advantage, but a few seconds before the buzzer sounded, the UMass defense got careless and allowed the Huskies to dribble into the box and draw a penalty corner on a questionable call. Leading UConn scorer Laura Klein then put in the rebound off of the initial corner shot with no time on the clock, to tie up the game.

"It wasn't a goal they should have scored," Abbott said. "They didn't deserve it."

In the second half, both teams continued to slug it out, although neither could gain the upper hand. With 12 minutes left, it looked like the Huskies would finally pull into the lead when they drew a series of penalty corners for the second time in as many halves, but Zowie Tucker and the rest of the UMass defense held strong.

"We have a very solid corner defense," Shea said. "But corners are like cracks in a dam. If you keep testing the cracks, eventually they will break."

Luckily for the Minutewomen, their defense never surrendered to the constant Husky pressure, despite the fact that UConn was able to draw 12 penalty corners throughout the game to only three for the Maroon and White.

Ironically, it was its only penalty corner of the half that won the game for UMass, when Bruemmer crushed one of her patented slap shots by the Husky goalie at the 8:41 mark to give her squad the one goal lead. It was Bruemmer's seventh score of the season, and moved her one goal ahead of Kristen Schmidt for the team lead.

For the remaining eight minutes, UConn threatened, but would fail to score. However, the Huskies did make it interesting by drawing yet another penalty corner with 29 seconds remaining. This time, Tucker made sure that the second half would end in different fashion than the first by making a miraculous kick save that iced the game for the Minutewomen.

Minutewomen finally swing rivalry's momentum to their own side

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It all started in the first ever National Championship game, when the University of Connecticut defeated the Massachusetts field hockey team to claim its prize as the greatest group of players in the nation.

Since then, not all that much has changed. Over the last few seasons, UConn has continued to dominate UMass, winning every game, the two teams have played since 1993 including last year's NCAA tournament quarterfinal match that ended the Maroon and White's season.

When these regional rivals square off something just always seems to happen that denies UMass the win.

That is, until yesterday, when the Minutewomen finally managed to gain some measure of revenge for all the times they have fallen just short against their most hated opponents. They pulled out a dramatic 2-1 win thanks to Anke Bruemmer's successful penalty corner with 8:41 remaining to giver her team the lead and the game.

Even goalie Zowie Tucker, a native of Neath, South Wales, has gotten caught up in the magnitude of the rivalry, and understands what this victory meant for her team.

"The rivalry has rubbed off from my teammates," Tucker said. "This was one of the biggest games of the season for us, and I'm glad we did it."

The win also all but guaranteed that the Minutewomen will move up in the rankings from their already lofty perch of No. 9 in the nation.

There were many reasons why the outcome of this contest was different from the previous meetings between the two teams, but most notable among those reasons, was the ability of the Maroon and White to bounce back when things seemed to be going the other way.

For instance, the Huskies were able to score a goal off a penalty corner with no time remaining in the first half when they drew a penalty call that was very unfavorable to the many fans in attendance at Richard F. Garber field.

"The way they scored that goal at the end of the first half was kind of reminiscent of the ways that UConn has been beating us over the last years," head coach Patty Shea said. "But this time, we gave them the gift...and worked to get the momentum back in our favor."

Two other points in the game, when the Huskies ran off six straight penalty corners in the first half between the 12 and eight minute marks, and five straight penalty corners in the second half between the 12 and ten minute marks, seemed to switch the momentum in favor of the Huskies, but the UMass defense held strong both times and denied UConn the goal.

"We have played UConn a number of times and we know one of their strengths is penalty corners," said Tucker. "We have a good defense back there, though, and when the shot gets off we know that we have to clear them."

The Minutewomen return to action on Oct. 4 against BU.

PRIDE AND PUNISHMENT

UMass wounded, whipped at hands of rival Hofstra

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Hofstra University is in the process of changing its nickname from the Flying Dutchmen to the Pride. But after Saturday's 51-36 dismantling of host Massachusetts, the men in blue are still flying high and pride may be all their opponents in maroon have left.

The 51 points allowed was the highest ever by a Whipple led team, and the loss snapped UMass' unbeaten home streak on the year.

It is fairly safe to say that anything that could go wrong for UMass (2-2, 1-1 Atlantic 10) did in its noon showdown at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The Minutemen spotted Hofstra (4-1) a 14-0 lead in the game's first 7:45 and never recovered amidst a rash of turnovers (three interceptions, two lost fumbles) and injuries.

UMass	51
Hofstra	36

"I'm very surprised and disappointed by how we played," UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "They flat-out played better than us but when you hand them some things as well, it makes for an uphill climb that we just couldn't overcome."

Pride quarterback Rocky Butler looked sharp from the get-go, marching

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

UMass cornerback Rob Green watches as Hofstra's Kahmal Roy hauls in a TD.

'Rocky' road for home team as Butler shines

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

It was a 'Rocky' start for the Massachusetts football team in its matchup with visiting Hofstra.

The start would not get any better for the Minutemen as Pride quarterback Ian 'Rocky' Butler mesmerized the UMass defense to the tune of a school record-tying five touchdown passes.

The junior picked apart the Maroon and White secondary, with the primary target being transfer corner Rob Green. Pride Head Coach Joe Nardi saw that Green was "bailing out early" on his coverages, which made him susceptible to attack; his players were ready and willing to notch an all-out assault on No. 3.

"We watched film on him pretty much all of this week," Butler said. "We realized what his technique was to bail out kind of hard. That left him one-on-one with our wideouts. I feel our wideouts can beat any corners that we play against."

"[Green] did not practice this week. He had a bad ankle. He probably should not have played," UMass Coach Mark Whipple said. "He looked good in pregame. We made the change and we probably shouldn't have let him come out there, but we played him a little more

Turn to BUTLER, page 7

The Collegian takes a look at VH1 vs. MTV
ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The UMass volleyball team split a pair of A-10 matches this weekend.
SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 20 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 3, 2000

Preparing to speak

NADER

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

Ralph Nader, the Green Party presidential candidate, will begin a stomp across the state today at the University of Massachusetts – Amherst, to protest his exclusion from the presidential debates in Boston.

Nader will speak at the Fine Arts Center concert hall at 11:00 a.m., free of charge.

While the Republican and Democrat presidential nominees face off on national T.V. tonight, Nader supporters and activist groups will converge outside the debates on the UMass Boston campus in protest of third party exclusion from the debates.

The Nader campaign focused its attention on the upcoming presidential debates this week, beginning with a rally at the Fleet Center in Boston on Sunday, Oct. 1, drawing about 10,000 supporters.

At the rally, Nader and running mate Winona LaDuke called for sweeping changes in national and foreign policy, including drastically cutting military budgets and shifting the tax burden from taxpayers onto corporations. Nader and LaDuke outlined a broad platform of initiatives, including the immediate establishment of universal healthcare, an overhaul of the public education system, the end of corporate welfare and increased legislation and programs protecting consumers, labor and the environment from corporate abuse.

LaDuke is a mother of three and a member of the Mississippi Anishinaabeg tribe. A Harvard graduate, LaDuke is the Program Director of Honor the Earth Fund and author of 'Last Standing Woman, and All Our Relations: Native Struggles for Land and Life.'

In her speech at the rally, LaDuke said her goals for the new millennium are to reconcile our relationship with the environment and with each other. LaDuke said a Nader and LaDuke presidency would phase out nuclear power and purchase alternative energy sources like solar power. Environmental policy would be guided by conservation and reduced consumption, said LaDuke. LaDuke spoke against genetically engineered crops and endorsed industrial hemp, a crop she said has 25,000 uses.

Corporate interest and abuse was frequently mentioned at the rally, as the core of the Nader/LaDuke platform. LaDuke called for a transformation of the tax structure, placing the burden of taxes on corporations.

"In the 1940s, you and I paid about 40 percent of the tax burden. 50 percent was paid by corporations," said LaDuke. "Today you and I pay 73 percent. Fifteen percent is paid by corporations."

"We will transform the tax structure so corporations will pay their fair share," said LaDuke.

Nader called for demilitarization, criticizing current spending levels that exceed cold war spending at its peak. To pay for hundreds of new teachers and rebuild damaged schools, Nader said he would cut the budgets of military programs and reduce corporate contracts for faulty and pointless weapons systems like the national missile defense system.

The two-party political system came under attack at the Nader rally, culminating around Nader's exclusion from the presidential debates. Nader accused the Republican and Democrat parties of putting corporate interests above human needs, and allowing corporate financed campaigns to hijack American democracy.

"Subject matters that will be avoided by Bush and Gore include," said Nader, "corporate welfare giveaways that could be better

Turn to NADER page 3

Pearson assumes new position as Associate Provost

By Lindsey Knox
Collegian Correspondent

After spending nine years in the Chancellors Office, Susan Pearson has returned 'home' after being named the Associate Provost for Development and Faculty Relations.

"[It] feels in many ways like I am coming home," Pearson said about her new position in the Provosts office. She was named on Sept. 22nd, and had her first official day yesterday.

Pearson, who is originally from New Jersey, graduated from Smith College with a degree in English. She began her career at UMass working in the Isenberg School of Management as a staff assistant doing editorial and statistical work for four years.

Pearson then moved to the Provost Office in 1976, as the assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost – a position that she held for seven years. She then became the Director of Academic Administration for eight years until she moved the Chancellor's Office in 1990 and was named Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

In 1991, she was named the Associate Chancellor, and was responsible for academic collective bargaining and for administering the union contracts for faculty and graduate student employees. She will continue to maintain these responsibilities in her new position at the Provost office.

"That piece was transferred over to here," Pearson said. "It made more organizational sense."

According to Pearson, there are two different aspects to her job. The developmental aspect, and faculty relations.

"The faculty relations piece is essentially maintaining the campus relationship with the Faculty Union, and the Graduation Student Employment Union. We bargain their contracts with them," Pearson said.

According to Pearson, every three years the contracts for these two unions are up for bargaining, and she serves as their spokesperson. Pearson is also responsible for making sure these two unions uphold their agreements and terms of their contracts. If contracts are not upheld, then a grievance procedure would take place. Pearson hears these grievances and makes a decision on them. Then, if the contract holders are not happy with Pearson's decision, they can have the option of a binding arbitration, or a neutral individual, who would make the final decision.

"The American Arbitration Association mails us a list and we agree on a person from that list to be the binding arbitrator," Pearson said.

The developmental part of her job is a new experience for Pearson and is based more on fundraising.

"The developmental piece is helping identify the developmental priorities of academic affairs," Pearson said. "I work with the different schools, colleges and deans to articulate priorities and identify developmental prospects. I am excited about the developmental part because it is new to me."

This is part of the Academic Affairs aspect of Campaign UMass, which is a comprehensive campaign to raise $125 million, enlist advocates and enhance the image of the University.

"What pleases me most about my job is that we have and extremely positive working relationship with the faculty at UMass," Pearson said.

Princeton to increase use of e-mail to target prospective students

By Darlyn Pirakitikulr
The Daily Princetonian (Princeton U.)

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. – As admissions officers at Princeton University and at schools throughout the country prepare for another wave of applications, changes are being made that may transform the way colleges contact students.

Since the early 1970s, colleges have purchased lists of the names of students who recently have taken the SAT from the College Board – a non-profit association that oversees the widely used standardized test.

From these lists, admissions officials send out brochures and viewbooks to prospective students.

But last summer, the College Board began including the e-mail addresses of students on those lists. Currently the board only has the e-mail addresses of students who register for the SAT online. But College Board officials say that this will change in the future.

"Colleges have been asking us for students' e-mail addresses for some time now," said Brad Quin, executive director of the College Board's Admission, Enrollment and Information Service Group. "Colleges have told us that when they have collected student e-mail addresses by themselves, it has been an important factor in developing the relationship that the college initiates with the student," Quin said. "Now that e-mail is a data element in sufficient number, we feel that it is time to make that information available."

Stephen Le Menager, Princeton's acting dean of admissions, said he agrees that the release of e-mail addresses will improve communication between colleges and applicants.

"The addition of e-mail addresses to the College Board database is simply a recognition on their part that e-mail is probably the best and quickest way to communicate with prospective students," he said. "Princeton's Part One of the application asks for students' e-mail addresses. I think that colleges and the College Board are just trying to keep pace with what's really happening out there, and e-mail is the preferred way of communicating for high schoolers and most others, for that matter."

By sending students information via e-mail, admissions officers hope to reach a broader range of students. E-mail is more efficient from a financial standpoint. Brochures may cost each up to $1.50 excluding postage, while colleges could reach a greater number of students using e-mail at a negligible cost.

"Colleges will be able to contact a large number of students and then weed out those who are really interested," Quin said. "They can then send those students the expensive mail instead of sending expensive mail to everyone."

E-mail also would be a good way to send students information more tailored to their interests, Le Menager said. For example, a student interested in chemistry could be sent an e-mail with a link to the chemistry department Webpage.

But using e-mail as a tool for recruiting prospective students is not without its downside.

Though admissions officers will be able to reach a larger number of students, some fear that they could end up wasting their time with students who are not really

Turn to PRINCETON, page 3

World renown dirt Geotechnical site attracts national praise

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

As you drive by the football field and alongside the Amherst Waste Water Treatment facility, you may notice a chain-linked area. Although it may appear as a messy nothing, it is not as it seems. It is one of six National Geotechnical Experimental Sites across the nation.

Ten years ago, civil engineering department head Alan Lutenegger discovered a piece of land. This land now beckons scientists, engineers and students, who come from around the world to see it and work on the sight.

"We have a lot of students who come from other schools and it's tough to compete with names such as MIT, but when they visit the UMass and see the sight and talk with our graduate students, they almost always except an offer into the graduate program," said professor of civil engineering Don DeGroot.

Funding for this project is provided by The Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) and the National Science Foundation, who utilize the sight in order to test soil samples, ground water quality and the general foundations for building construction.

"It's great because we're not restricted to teach in a classroom situation that takes little effort; instead, we get to go out onto the sight and give hands on experience," said DeGroot.

Within the sight, there are a punctured series of three-foot-diameter concrete drilled piles. These are made identically alike those that would be placed to support skyscrapers and bridges. They are reinforced with steel rods, which extend into the ground for 50 feet. By inserting these rods, it allows the engineers to test the responses of these devices and collect data on how different soils and foundations affect the rods.

"One thing that is good is that engineers will come to this sight and we can tell them what kind of soil it is, and give them our data versus them having to do the testing themselves. We've received excellent feedback from businesses that have employed graduates of the program. Initially when you get on the job, the first thing you do is go out onto the sight and learn how to do these tests, but our students already know how to do it because of our program," said DeGroot.

The test sight is also being used to test a rail bed, which lies within the property. Civil Engineering Professor Carlton Ho is conducting experiments involving the rail bed by using ground-penetrating radars in order to test weaknesses within the ground as well as soil spots.

The test sight is also made available to engineers and scientists within the Five College academic area as well as local industries. The sight will also be hosting fourteen groups from around the country who will have the opportunity to test a wide range of projects throughout the year.

The program is open to graduate and undergraduate students; however, graduate students have the ability to run their own analysis and tests at the sight.

"I have to give so much credit to our graduate students, they deserve a lot of credit for this operation," said DeGroot. "I think what makes this project work so well is the fact that we treat them as peers, and that's what makes the difference."

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Pretty Waterfall
A waterfall in western Mass.

Police Log

Annoying Behavior
Oct. 1
A large group mooned passing motorists on Fearing St.

Arrests
Sept. 27
Jeffery Schoman, 22, of Sharon was arrested and charged with driving under the influence and speeding.
Sept. 29
Erin Murphy, 19, of Bradford was arrested in lot 55 and charged with transporting alcohol as a minor.
Linsey Molesso, 19, of Haverhill was arrested in lot 55 and charged with possession of alcohol as a minor.
Robert Slack, 19, of Blackstone, Paul McNair, 18, of Millville, and Masaaxo Chirwa, 18, of Westborough were arrested in lot 44 and charged with possession of alcohol as a minor.
Sept. 30
Kyle Benner, 18, of Friendship, Maine was arrested in Grayson residence hall and charged with possession of alcohol as a minor.
Michael McCarthy, 18, of Haverhill and Jonathan Frizzell, 18, of Bradford were arrested in Baker residence hall and charged with possession of alcohol as a minor.

Fire
Sept. 26
Steam was venting from a roof in Morrill Science Center 3.
Sept. 30
Hot coals were found in a trash barrel in lot 11.
Oct. 1
A small electrical fire broke out in Hasbrouck Laboratory.

Larceny
Sept. 25
A wallet was stolen from John Quincy Adams residence hall.
Sept. 26
A digital camera was stolen from an office in Machmer Hall valued at $650.
Sept. 28
Illegal purchases were made on a lost U-Card in Washington residence hall.
Sept. 29
A wallet was stolen from Crabtree residence hall, and illegal charges were made on a credit card from the stolen wallet.
A tire was stolen from a vehicle in lot 22.
Oct. 1
A large number of compact disks were stolen from a room in McNamara residence hall valued at over $250.

Vandalism
Sept. 26
A towel was set on fire in a mens room in Cance residence hall.
Sept. 28
Damage was done to a car in lot 43.
Damage was done to several outside doors at Hills house on infirmary way.
Sept. 29
Homophobic graffiti was found in Pierpont residence hall.
Window was smashed on a vehicle in lot 31.
Mirror was smashed on a vehicle in lot 43.
Mirror was smashed on a vehicle in lot 49.
Sept. 30
Window was smashed on a vehicle in lot 13 on authority way.
Damage was done to a vending machine in Hamlin residence hall.
In Cashin residence dorm a paper attached to a wall was set on fire.
Oct. 1
Paint was sprayed on Mahar Auditorium.
BB hole was found in a window in Prince residence hall.
Lawn furniture was thrown on Chancellor's Drive.
A Mirror on a vehicle was smashed in the Melville lot near Kennedy Dorm.

Parties agree vast overhaul necessary for school system

By Karen Matsuoka
Daily Bruin (U. California-Los Angeles)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES – Earlier this month an ABC/Washington Post Poll rated it as the single most important issue to voters in the November election and both major party candidates can't stop talking about it.
With George W. Bush's now well known tag line, "leave no child behind," and Al Gore's signature education Blue Book, which outlines his opinions, the candidates have been hard at work developing their policies for education reform.
Though Bush and Gore may differ in the actual measures they are proposing, both are emphasizing greater accountability and choice. Some of their proposals are raising concern among school administrators and education policy analysts.
"Gore and Bush are similar because each imagines greater testing at the state level and, to some extent at the national level, as being a prime engine for reform," said John Rogers, Director of Research at Center X, a branch of the University of California Los Angeles Graduate School of Education focusing on teacher training and education policy that promotes equity.
As for his proposals, Bush has called on states to annually test students in the third through eighth grades.
Gore supports voluntary testing in fourth grade reading and eighth grade math. He proposes to increase funding to failing schools and then shut them down and reopen them with a new principal and faculty if they continue to perform under expectations.
"Where we find failure we need to take immediate action to increase accountability and put in place strong remedies to ensure failing students are not left behind, improve or remove failing teachers, and turn around failing schools," Gore wrote in a statement in his education Blue Book.
Both candidates want to provide schools with financial incentives to boost performance. Bush proposes to set aside $500 million to reward states with improved test scores.
But Jo Ann Isken, a Principal at Mollett Elementary School in Los Angeles and a faculty advisor at UCLA's Center X, said testing is, at best, an imperfect measure of school, teacher and student performance.
"When a student arrives at school who's been abused since he was two years old, there are serious issues to be dealt with prior to teaching him how to read," Isken said.
"He may not start reading with the other kids, but with counseling for his abuse, he will start to read eventually. But all that the test scores will show is this kid is not reading, which prompt questions like 'What's wrong with the school' or 'Why isn't the teacher trying hard enough?' she continued.
Despite their shared emphasis on accountability and choice, Gore and Bush differ when it comes to how they propose to increase choice.
While Gore supports greater public school choice and increasing the number of charter schools, Bush supports providing vouchers to students from low-performing schools which can be used to transfer out.
The voucher issue will surface this election season in California, when voters will decide on Proposition 38 – the school voucher initiative.
Rogers claims there is a crisis in public education, a big part of which is caused by external factors, beginning with insufficient resources.
"A Congressional Budget study said that $100 billion is needed just for infrastructure – like building new schools," Rogers said. "Without that funding, you have a situation where you have year-round schools in California that disadvantage poor communities with dense populations.
Rogers also said that neither candidate is talking enough about equity in education.
"Both candidates have catchy mottos but neither is discussing the funding gap between students who live in poor and wealthy neighborhoods," he said.
Bush has received some praise for his education policies in Texas by a recent RAND study which ranked that state number one in closing the achievement gap between minorities and whites as well as improving test scores overall.
In one of his education position papers, Bush addressed the issue of educational inequalities among certain groups.
"We are a nation ... where the achievement gap between rich and poor, Anglo and minority is wide – and in some cases growing wider still," Bush wrote in the paper. "My administration will do things differently."
No matter how many reform policies or positions papers the candidates produce, Rogers said it is important for the future president to remember that there is more to education than testing, accountability and vouchers.
"Both candidates more or less look at education as a discrete policy area, but it's essential to see it as embedded in a whole host of other social policy issues related to addressing the needs of the working poor," Rogers said.
Still, Isken said she is optimistic that politicians are beginning to see the importance of a more holistic approach to education policy.
"People are beginning to understand the family and conditions at home and how they relate to academic performance," she said. "At least the Clinton-Gore administration has increased funding for after-school programs and neighborhood- and school-based school clinics."

Work for the Daily Collegian!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Berbarris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Hobson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Ivanic Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Mangineri Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brett Simawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuna Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beth Assistant Advertising Manager

ARE YOU THE FUNNIEST STUDENT ON CAMPUS?

PROVE IT AT

PERFORM YOUR BEST:
• STAND UP
• JOKES
• SKETCH

ENTER & WIN!
You could win a chance to go on tour with
JEANEANE GAROFALO & FRIENDS!

FREE

HOSTED BY COLIN QUINN
as seen on Saturday Night Live
FEATURING THE COMEDY OF
RALPH HARRIS
as seen on Seinfeld, The Tonight Show & The Jon Stewart Show

UMASS AMHERST
FINE ARTS CENTER
CONCERT HALL
8:00PM
TUESDAY, OCT. 3RD

TO REGISTER: CALL WENDY ZHU AT 413-545-1278 OR 1-800-843-2536 TO COMPETE IN THE BAKE OFF OR STOP BY THE iCAST TENT AT THE UNIVERSITY LAWN OCT. 3RD
CHECK OUT ALL THE ACTION INCLUDING THE ONLINE COMIC STRIP, ANIMATION & SHORT FILM CONTESTS AT COMEDY.iCAST.COM

VOTE FOR YOUR FAVORITE AT iCAST.COM
Cool Mint LISTERINE POCKETPAKS
salonselectives see it. do it.
HYUNDAI

■ Nader

continued from page 1

enforcement against corporate crime, fraud and abuse."
"Instead," said Nader, "viewers will be watching a ritualistic debate by two hereditary politicians financed by corporate cash."
The Nader/LaDuke campaign swore off soft money and political action committee contributions, and refuses donations from all corporations and unions. Nader supports full public financing of political campaigns.
The Commission on Presidential Debates, the bipartisan sponsor of the debates, restricts admission to candidates who receive at least 15 percent approval rating on five national polls. Nader has reached as much as 17 percent in Alaska, 11 percent in Connecticut, and 6 percent in Massachusetts, averaging nearly 5 percent nationwide, according to the Zogby International tracking poll. Nader contends he would easily threaten Gore and Bush at the election, if he could gain national exposure through the debates.
"It is little surprise that the Commission on Presidential Debates, created and controlled by the Democratic and Republican parties, has chosen to lock significant third-party candidates out of the debates and a national television audience," Nader said.
Nader cited the election of third party candidate Jesse Ventura in Minnesota as an example of how TV coverage can boost a candidate.
"Anyone who discounts the value of debates in gaining public support has only to look at Minnesota," said Nader. "There, Jesse Ventura, a former professional wrestler was mired in third place in the gubernatorial race with poll numbers in single digits. But he was given a place in the debates, and that exposure vaulted him into the governor's chair."
Despite his exclusion from the Presidential Debates, Nader hopes his campaign will revitalize an ailing democracy and energize new voters.
"American democracy does not belong to the decayed Democratic and Republican parties," said Nader. "It belongs to the people, and they should reclaim and rebuild it for themselves and for future generations."

Study Break
A UMass student reads inbetween classes.

For Asian Americans, Lee case raises spectre of racism at U.S. labs

By Sophia Hollander
The Daily Princetonian (Princeton U.)

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. – After hearing the federal government's allegations of espionage against Wen Ho Lee last year, Princeton University student Chris Wu felt angry for his nation.
Then Wu read the government officials' recantations. He learned that the government had misrepresented the strength of its case, keeping Lee in solitary confinement for seven months.
He saw the government reduce a 59-count indictment – swelled with accusations of espionage and smuggling of nuclear secrets – to a single felony count of downloading material onto an unsecure computer.
Lee – a Chinese-American scientist at Los Alamos laboratory in New Mexico – was accused by the Justice Department in March 1999 of downloading nuclear secrets and sneaking them to the Chinese.
The New York Times – the paper that first broke the story and that Wu, a computer science major in the engineering school, followed closely – ran an unprecedented page two explanation last week acknowledging faults in its coverage. It admitted to accepting the government's story too easily and subtly assuming Lee's guilt.
Wu watched as the case against Lee collapsed, and he felt angry at his nation.
"I was born in the U.S.," Wu said. "I'm an American and I'm patriotic. But it hurts. I would stand up for my country. If there was a war, I would fight proudly, but here's where this thing. Here are these people who are supposed to look out for us and here they are making things up to make him look guilty."
"And as a Taiwanese-American, how am I supposed to feel about this?" Wu asked. "If I go out into the field, I might be targeted, too. Even though I'm an American, it makes me feel like an outsider. I think this says."
Before you might be suspicious, but here's some proof that we really don't accept you."
Wu is not the only one who is angry. Last month, the Association for Asian-American Studies, a national organization of Asian-American scholars, voted unanimously to pass a resolution to urge Asian-American scientists to boycott U.S. national laboratories like Los Alamos.
Asian Americans on Princeton's campus were divided over the association's decision. N.P. Ong, a University physics professor who specializes in superconductivity, hailed the move as an appropriate step to fight ethnic targeting.
"Boycotting would be an effective way to get the message out," Ong said. "What the Wen Ho Lee case has done is to inject a sense of urgency into the current debates on ethnic profiling in these cases. Most Asian scientists feel Wen Ho Lee has been badly treated."
"If this serves to galvanize the Asian community this could be a good thing in the long run," Ong added. "This may not help Wen Ho and his current situation, but in helping to give the larger Asian community a voice in political affairs it could be a very significant event."
But others, like Wu, said they see the move as counterproductive, despite feelings that Lee was a victim of racial profiling.
"I'm angry about the treatment that Wen Ho Lee received, and I definitely think there is something underhanded going on," Wu said. "But I don't think boycotting U.S. labs is the answer. That would just lead to lower representation for Asian Americans in U.S. labs. A better way would be to have organized protests."
Politics professor Robert George, a constitutional expert, said he understands Asian-American concerns over the case. "If it's not racism, it's injustice," he said. "The government should take responsibility for two reasons: one, because that's what is right. Two, because that's the only way to overcome people's legitimate suspicions that race played a role in the case."
Ben Grossman contributed to this report.

Write for News

■ Princeton

continued from page 1

interested in their schools.
Students who have access to e-mail also would have a certain advantage over those who do not.
"We realize that there is a digital divide in America," Quin said. "However, colleges will have no way of contacting only those students with e-mail and not those without. Colleges send information to students based on interests and test scores. E-mail is just another medium through which this can happen."
Nevertheless, e-mail potentially does represent a valuable mechanism for attracting applicants.
According to Embark.com, a Web site for students, 10 to 17 percent of students respond to colleges' e-mail messages – a significantly greater response rate than that elicited by direct mail campaigns. Even so, Quin said he is skeptical about how successful e-mail campaigns can be.
"E-mail is a new way of communicating and we are not sure how it will pan out," he said. "Personally I have a teenage son who will be applying to college next year and he receives so much e-mail that unless a college is very crafty in the way they approach this medium it will be difficult to stand out."

For the Advertisements call our Bussines office at: 545-3500.

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
PREGNANCY?
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Israel the trip is free
the experience is priceless
If you are a Jewish college student who has never been to Israel on a group trip, we would like to invite you to visit Israel as our guest during this winter break.
The free, ten-day trip is a gift from Birthright Israel, your Jewish Community and Hillel: The Foundation for Jewish Campus Life.
Travel with students from your campus:
*Explore Jerusalem *Hike through the Galilee region
*Check out Tel Aviv *Swim in the Dead Sea
*Enjoy free time
Your Birthright Israel gift includes airfare to Israel from gateway cities and land accommodations. Participants will be responsible for some meals as well as gratuities for drivers and guides.
A $250 deposit, fully refundable upon completion of the trip is required. Contact your local Hillel for more information.
It's fun. It's free. It's Israel.
WWW.HILLEL.ORG

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 14 74

Everyone speaks English. Especially Russians.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from people like John Leguizamo (actor, Summer of Sam), Doug Liman (director, Swingers and Go!, and Amy Heckerling (director, Clueless). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment cliches, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it.
nibblebox.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Blowing smoke:
Answers, not angst

It is not exactly a new concept that UMass students like to complain. On this page alone, dozens of voices have arisen this semester airing grievances toward practically every facet of university life, with very few answers being provided in the process. Everything from Parking and Housing Services to the Campus Police to the lines at Whitmore to interpersonal relationships has come under fire from various members of the UMass population, with very few solutions or even suggestions for improvement being made in the process.

Oh yeah, the upcoming elections too. How could we possibly forget the proverbial landslide of bitching that has been done about those?

Well, we at the Collegian feel that it's time to stop complaining for the sake of hearing our own voices and start channeling some of that energy into making things right. Instead of just hurling random angst at issues such as privatization and corruption, why not take half your breath and brainpower and come up with some answers?

Too tough? Here are the four most common complaints of UMass students, and a possible solution for each:

1.) Parking Services and the parking shortage – This one is so easy it's frightening. The answer is certainly not going to be popular with the youngsters, but it'll work, no underclassmen are allowed to have cars on campus. This is the policy at scores of institutions across the country, but UMass has decided instead to instill the most freedom possible on its younger students. Well, guess what kids: you don't need or deserve cars on campus, especially when there just plain isn't room for them.

2.) Housing Services and the annual lounge-living debacle – Once again, the answer is simple: We are giving students here WAY too much privilege and hurting them in the process. From now on, ALL seniors MUST live off campus. Hopefully, most graduates strike out on their own instead of moving back in with their parents, so why not help them out now and give them a taste of the responsibilities of independent living?

3.) Whitmore and administrative red tape – We live in the electronic age, people. Why are we still standing in lines to negotiate with impatient and overworked human beings to conduct relatively simple processes? We could, in theory, conduct 90-percent of this business online. Naysayers will point to the possibility of an overloaded network crashing and crippling the system, but where would that leave us? Back in line. So basically, we have nothing to lose by further Infusing technology into the administrative process.

4.) Privatization – The fact that people are even still debating this one is nothing short of ludicrous. Why not privatize? Afraid of eliminating jobs for students? Impose a regulation concerning hiring practices. Fear of escalating costs of products and services? Competition drives prices down, not up. Apprehension about the quality of those products and services? Obviously, you've never eaten it a DC.

Only so much can be accomplished by mere complaints. Without a little effort to push things in the right direction, all that the students on this campus are doing is blowing smoke.

Nader for Pres? No

SAM WILKINSON

I was talking to my mother the other day, and being a worried Democrat, she asked me, jokingly, if I could promise that Al Gore would win in a month. I told her I couldn't, although I predict Gore taking Florida and the election.

Predictions? Absolutely, but I can't promise anything.

"What about up there? What's the feeling you get from people up there?"

I then went cold, as I always do, when the vision of Ralph Nader pops into my noggin.

Stay in this valley long enough, around the bearded hippies and psychotically left-leaning graduate students and the interested voters only interested in not voting for Gore or Bush and it's almost possible to believe that Nader might be a decent candidate for president. And today, somewhere on this campus of ours, Nader is going to tell us that he's not just decent, he's a legitimately good candidate for president.

That's when my blood runs cold because Nader isn't a good candidate for president. He's barely worth listening to, much less voting for, yet his rabidly blind followers are going to pile into an auditorium somewhere, listen to him complain bitterly about how unfair the world is, and cheer him like crazy.

They'll cheer him because what he's offering sounds so good. Hell, who wouldn't want fair banking, fair testing, fair pay, fair fair fair fair fair. Use the word fair enough and yeah, what Nader's offering sounds brilliant. His other proposals are equally appealing: allow anybody into debates with five percent of the vote. End corporate welfare. Offer universal health care. Create "fair" (that word again) trade policies. Decrease the military budget. Fund public transportation, decrease use of fossil fuels. Abolish the federal death penalty. Key locks for all guns. Respect for cultural diversity.

Flowers for all. Happiness is enforced.

All will be well.

Nader's an idealist, through and through, and for no other reason than that he shouldn't be elected president. Idealists live in a happy fairy land where cute little sprites spread wishes and merriment. Unfortunately, happy fairy land isn't anywhere near the United States, a serious nation whose political problems aren't going to be solved by a political outsider lacking subtlety.

It takes subtlety to realize that cutting drastically back on the military is more than just cutting back on big guns and missiles; it's cutting back on working Americans who have made careers of serving our nation.

Subtlety is also required to realize that corporate welfare sounds like a really nasty thing and in some cases it is, in some cases it isn't, and it's the only way for smaller or more rural areas to attract business.

Subtlety needed to realize that universal health care is never going to get passed by our Congress; it has to happen in gradual steps. Sure, it'd be great if Congress would just pass universal health care, but they won't, and pretending like they will simply because there's a new sheriff in town is absolute lunacy.

To realize that nobody has been executed under the law of the federal death penalty in decades and that no President, without the support of both Congress and the Courts (which Nader doesn't have) can end the more lethal state's death penalty – this takes subtlety.

Subtlety enough to realize that allowing anybody with a percent support of the population to participate in elections is fine; it still keeps the Nader's, Buchanan's and Browne's out of this election and future elections.

Subtlety to realize that Nader's strong desire to participate in the debates extends only as far as himself; nowhere, near as I can find out or get from his supporters, has Nader come out and suggested that Harry Browne and Pat Buchanan have any right to be involved in debates, probably because he doesn't think they should. He only wants to be involved in the debates because it increases the possibility that the Green Party will qualify for matching Federal funds in the next election.

And, finally, subtlety to make any number of other realizations which Nader hasn't. His supporters haven't either, instead choosing to blindly follow Nader simply because he isn't Bush and Gore. They can claim otherwise, and some of his more self-righteous supporters clearly believe that an elected Nader is a changed and bettered America, but his soft supporters aren't in this because of Nader. They're in it because of who he isn't.

As for his true supporters, the kind that continually pop their heads into the Collegian to ask indignantly about where our coverage of Nader is, they're ignoring one truly great tidbit about Nader. Should he get elected, should hell itself freeze over and the Pope suddenly starts welcoming women into the Catholic Church, Nader wouldn't get a single goal of his accomplished. Everything passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate would be vetoed by a president who would demand ever more from his legislation. Congress would likely overturn vetoes, thus reducing the once glorious Ralph Nader to a worthless, sniveling occupant of the White House.

Nader's campaign for president is being supported by people who are simply desperate for some sort of change from what we've come to expect, and there's nothing wrong with desiring that sort of change. But change can't just be for change's sake. The presidency of the United States is far more important than Naderites actually seem to realize. Nader's policies are far-flung and barely applicable to the majority of Americans.

Rather, they are the sort of programs tailored exactly to left-leaning individuals who think that a magic wand will fix American problems. Unfortunately, no magic wand exists.

The reason not to support Ralph Nader isn't because he's a left leaner, it's because his left leaning policies will absolutely fail. The reason not to vote for Ralph Nader isn't because he's practically said that he doesn't mind winning the election for George W. Bush, it's that he's so bitter that he's willing to communicate the desire to win the election for Bush. His bitterness isn't a reason for support.

The reason to support a candidate is because he or she truly cares about Americans and has the ability to understand that compromise is the most necessary part of political wrangling. If individuals are unwilling to compromise, as Nader is, then they're only running to serve their own purposes, not the purposes of supporters or anybody else.

Nader's involvement is false and detrimental to the elections. He doesn't have a magic wand, regardless of what he'll tell you.

And even if he did, it wouldn't work. It's going to take something far more serious than that.

And someone far more serious than that.

And that isn't Ralph Nader.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

A guilty pleasure

LAURA SICILIANO

I have a confession to make. I like boy bands. I own their CDs. I have been to a Backstreet Boys concert, and, in my opinion, the catchiest song of the year so far has been "Bye, Bye, Bye". Sometimes, when I tell people that I like boy bands, they look surprised at me... or sometimes disgusted. For some reason, liking "the boys" is apparently something that I should be ashamed of. I'm not ashamed at all, though. I would be ashamed if I stole things, or cheated on tests, or still listened to Milli Vanilli. Liking the boy bands is nothing to hide in the dark. In fact, I propose that we start a "Boy Band Fan" RSO, dedicated to the appreciation of the great genre of boy band music, starting with the Monkees leading to New Edition, New Kids on the Block, and finally the golden era of boy bands, Backstreet Boys, 'NSYNC, '98 Degrees and the lesser bands such as BBMak.

The first order of business for the Boy Band Fan RSO would be to set up a table in the Campus Center Concourse to encourage membership and invite people to learn about boy bands. When people would ask why I like boy bands, I would answer that they provide good, clean, fun music. I know that boy bands usually do not write their own music (with the exception of 98 Degrees' new album "Revelation") and that sometimes the band members are chosen for their looks rather than their voices. I know that boy bands do not provide the highest quality of music that can be found; nobody is comparing Justin Timberlake to Bob Dylan. However, boy bands provide good, fun pop music, which is exactly what they set out to do. Furthermore, boy bands provide better role models for younger listeners than other musicians, such as Eminem, who talks of killing his wife and stuffing her in the trunk. The Backstreet Boys, on the other hand, sing about "You are my fire, the one desire, believe me when I say, I want it that way." Slightly more lighthearted, you might say. Best of all, most boy bands have at least one really cute member.

The Boy Band Fan Club would have to sponsor appreciation nights for the music. Possible activities might include a dance where only boy band music would be played and sponsoring Lance Bass's mother to come to campus to speak on the topic of "Being the Mother of a Member of 'NSYNC". We could also sponsor trips to TRL so that we could scream outside for our favorite songs. Another possibility would be to hold a challenge/contest to choose the best boy band of all time. Setting the contest up like the Olympics, we could have events in lyrics, choreography, photogenics, most weeks spent on the Billboard charts, and best concerts.

As an R.S.O., we would need to set up a constitution, and this document would establish the priorities and rules of our club. The first order of business might be establishing who qualifies as a boy band and who does not. A possible rule of thumb would be that boy bands cannot play their own instruments. After all, boy bands are not musicians; boy bands are eye candy. This would eliminate The Beatles, for example, and would make it clear that we are in no way comparing 'NSYNC to The Fab Four. Boy bands are their own category of music, and should be treated as such. The constitution might also establish that you must have a minimum degree of boy band knowledge to join the club. For example, a Boy Band Fan club member might have to answer the question, "Which two members of 98 Degrees are brothers: Nick, Drew, Jeff, or Justin?" (Answer: Nick and Drew). We would, however, offer classes in boy band knowledge to assist novice fans in acquiring boy band knowledge.

Earlier this year, 'NSYNC sold more records in a single week than anyone else in history. Obviously, Boy Bands are immensely popular. Some of us UMass students had to be among the millions that purchased "No Strings Attached". Fellow boy band fans unite! Let our guilty pleasure make us feel guilty no more! I know that boy bands are not the most talented musicians to walk the face of the earth...heck I know that they are not even musicians! But they are fun and happy and stupid and some of them are cute... and what is wrong with that?!?!

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Secret to success

"Good beer and liquor is key. The sacred trinity, Jameson, Jack Daniels and Jim Bean, should always be present."

RYAN J. O'MARA

Throughout the eastern seaboard, and in isolated pockets of the Pacific northwest, an O'Mara party is synonymous with a social work of art. For years now, I have been throwing some of the most talked about get-togethers my generation has ever known. This birthright has allowed me to move within the circles to which I would know how funny this was.

have grown accustomed. I have, up until this point, kept the family secrets of successful partying to myself, but today, in a freak occurrence of goodwill toward my fellow man, I have decided to reveal my cache of party tips so that others may spread joy amongst their peers.

Tip #1: Location, location, location

The site of a party is almost as important as the people that attend. The ideal grounds for a party is, of course, a house. This must be your own house, and it must have the full consent of all those who live beneath that roof. A yard or porch is nice during the summer. I used to throw my first parties out in a grove of trees I had in my backyard. Some hammocks, a campfire, and a dilapidated tree-house served as the backdrop for some of the greatest Grove parties my hometown had ever known.

Tip #2: Guy/girl ratio

This is, by far, the most critical requirement of a successful party. For every three guys, you must have at least one girl. The more the merrier, but any fewer than five girls at a party and you're doomed to belching contests and arm-wrestling. This is probably the hardest goal to achieve when organizing a get-together, but, bottom line, it is key. If you have too many guys and not enough girls, or vice versa, your party is doomed for failure.

Tip #3: Loud friends

You don't necessarily have to have a large amount of people to have a good bash. With a handful of loudmouths, a party with fifteen people suddenly feels like it has thirty. All of my friends are loud. I had a couple of my friends over one Friday night, and a party started instantaneously. People kept walking in to my house, saying that they could hear the party from outside, when all they were hearing was our reactions to my friend Josh telling us about his days as a camp counselor. If you knew Josh, you

Tip #4: Beverages

Always have a fully stocked fridge. You don't want your cheap friends bringing in bargain-bin beer and dropping the status of your party to that of a sixteen-year-old's when his parents leave for the weekend. Good beer and liquor is key. The sacred trinity, Jameson, Jack Daniels, and Jim Bean, should always be present. Pucker goes down great with the lightweights. Never allow anything less than Bud Light to enter your fridge, and always have plenty of Cider Jack for the non-beer drinkers. Also, always have some non-alcoholic drinks on hand for the designated drivers in the crowd.

Tip #5: Food

Don't bother with it. Chips and dip are a waste of money and a mess to clean up in the morning. Food just eliminates space in the stomach that could be used to hold liquor. Plus, there is the horrible risk you run of seeing that food again later in the evening. Trust me, you're saving yourself time and trouble if you just skip the whole food scene. In general, I never have food in my house anyways. I don't believe in it.

Tip #6: Music

This is a tough one. Music depends entirely upon the crowd you're having over. Barring a few stellar exceptions, the majority of my friends are small-town hicks. This makes selecting music quite the task. But I usually find that setting the radio to Rock 102 tends to make everyone happy. CD's are great, but you have to make sure that the music can be heard everywhere, and I don't own that many CD players. Make sure you have some music that suites everyone. Dance music is never all that good of any idea unless you a have a ton of girls. A bunch of guys sitting around listening to dance music is just wrong. If you do have the ability to go the route of CD's, let the people play what they want. Don't be a DJ despot.

Tip#7: Bedtime

I think my saving grace has always been that I own a thousand and one couches. You never have a better time at a party than when you know you're staying over for the night, and at my parties, everyone stays over. Not only does it eliminate the problem of people trying to drive home drunk, it also allows the party to go straight through the wee morning hours smack into breakfast. I had a party just this past Friday that ended in a great breakfast at Miss Florence's Diner, after which we all went back to my place and slept until it was time to go to the next party. When people know they are able to sleep over, they inevitably have the time of their lives. Plus, your life becomes a lot simpler when you have all your friends still around to help you clean up come morning.

Tip #8: The morning after

Although many may think otherwise, the party does not end when everyone goes to bed. Come morning, a whole new type of party ensues. This is when you get to see who cuddled with who when the lights went out. This is when pacts are made never again to speak of the events that occurred the night before. This is when you find out that your roommate didn't go to his girlfriend's house, he just passed out in the tub. This is when everyone raises their weary heads and drags themselves to their feet in hopes of finding that holy grail of the party-goers, a cup of coffee.

By following these simple tips, you will be well on your way to gaining fame and fortune, political power and wealth beyond your imagination. Or, if nothing else, a well-earned hangover you can be proud of.

Ryan J. O'Mara is a UMass student.

Write for ED-OP

GLBT AFFAIRS
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Pride Alliance Begins New Year

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Like many universities, UMass has a great variety of student groups. These groups exist for many different purposes. Some, such as the Science Fiction Club, are to promote certain hobbies or interests of students on this campus. Others, such as the Radical Student Union, unite people around political or social issues. Still others, such as the African Students' Association, are organized to provide support and a meeting place for different minority groups on campus. The UMass Pride Alliance is one of these organizations.

Pride Alliance is a registered student organization for gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered (GLBT) and allied undergraduate students at UMass. The main purpose of Pride Alliance is to provide a community for GLBT students on campus and their allies. One of major functions of the weekly group meeting is to give a place for GLBT students to receive support from their peers about issues that may be affecting them, such as homophobic roommates or problems with a same-sex partner. Pride Alliance is a place where students can discuss issues like these that they may not be able to discuss with others outside of the group. One of Pride Alliance's organizers, Dave Lambert, explained that it was important to him to keep Pride Alliance running because he wanted to have a way to help other GLBT students at UMass have a "safe place" to go. Another function of the group's meetings is for student to be able to meet other GLBT students on campus and form a network of acquaintances and friends. Pride Alliance tries to do a lot of fun social activities throughout the year, both at meetings and also at other times. For example, the group's members have gone together to places such as Rao's coffeehouse in Amherst. Members of the Pride Alliance also went to march at the Northampton Youth Pride March during the spring of 2000.

One of the big events that Pride Alliance traditionally puts on at UMass is Queerfest, which is a day-long festival of pride for GLBT students and their allies on campus. Last year's Queerfest took place on April 27th at the Student Union Ballroom. During the day, there were many exciting performers, such as Sister Spit, and all performances were free and open to the public. There were also tables staffed by members of other student organizations on campus, as well as stores and groups from Amherst and Northampton. At night, there was a fabulous Drag Ball in the Student Union, along with a drag show in which several amateur drag performers from UMass and the other Five Colleges participated.

So far this year, the Pride Alliance has already had several meetings. At the last meeting, on September 26th, the members elected the officers that will comprise the Pride Alliance Board for this school year. Edward Kammerer, Jr. was elected as the Facilitator of the Pride Alliance. The facilitator is responsible for conducting the weekly meetings and being in charge of Pride Alliance business in general. The other people elected were Kate Ternullo as Financial Chair, Bethany Kimball as Political Chair, and Jeanie Gorlovsky as Social Chair. Jezebel Jethra was picked as the Five-College Coordinator to foster coalitions with other college GLBT groups, and Patty Reed is the new office manager of the Pride Alliance Office in the Student Union. This year, the Pride Alliance is planning many exciting events, including events for National Coming Out Day on October 11th.

The Pride Alliance meets at 7 p.m. every Tuesday night in the Campus Center, and all are welcome to come to the meetings. Meeting places and times are posted in the Stonewall Center as well as in the Campus Center by the elevators. For more information, people can stop by the Pride Alliance office, which is located upstairs in the Student Union in room 413B, or call the office at 545-0154.

Workplace Discrimination Discussed

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Troy Arnold, a UMass graduate student in the Labor Studies Department, presented a lecture entitled "GLBT Workplace and Employment Issues" on September 21st in the Campus Center. Arnold's lecture was a part of the LBGT Studies Lecture Series sponsored by the Stonewall Center. In the hour-and-a-half long lecture, Arnold talked about the history of GLBT people in the workplace as well as his own history as a gay man who has had many different jobs.

Arnold began his lecture by reading selections from several books regarding GLBT issues. One of these books was Temple Slave by Robert Patrick, a novel about gay culture in New York City in the 1960's. At that time, according to the selection from the book, people at work were oblivious of their gay coworkers. Many gays and lesbians dated people of the opposite gender to keep up a veneer of heterosexuality at work. A selection from another book, Unspeakable: The Rise of the Gay and Lesbian Press in America by Rodger Streitmatter, talked about a woman who used a pseudonym, Lisa Ben (which is an acronym for "lesbian"), to create at work a typewritten magazine on being a lesbian in the 40's.

Arnold spent some time talking about gay and lesbian athletes in sports work arena. The first professional male athlete to come out of the closet in the United States was football player David Kopay. Arnold commented that "football is teeming with homoerotic undertones," although many football players are homophobic. Arnold quoted Kopay as saying, "By the time I spoke out about being gay, I had nothing left to lose." This was because there were many rumors in the football world about Kopay's sexuality, and therefore he was unable to get a job coaching football. Arnold also talked about gays and lesbians in journalism, citing the book Straight News by Edward Alwood. He spoke of a man named Griffin who worked for the Minneapolis Tribune in the 70's and who became the first openly gay reporter to write about gay topics at a "mainstream" newspaper.

Arnold spent a good part of the lecture speaking about his own experiences as a gay man. He was harassed from around age eight with taunts of "fag" and "queer." This made him so miserable that he went to a small college in Rhode Island just to get away from the people in his hometown. Even though Arnold later transferred to UMass, where he was a STPEC major, he didn't feel comfortable coming out until 1992. At that time, he was studying at SUNY-Binghampton, where it was "a culturally acceptable place to be a gay man."

After finishing his education at Binghampton, Arnold moved to San Francisco, where he volunteered with the Names Project, which is the group that organizes the AIDS Quilt. He later got a job with the United Way. The environment at United Way seems comfortable for its GLBT employees, Arnold explained, because they have a domestic partnership agreement and a GLBT employees' group. However, while working there, he also got an unspoken message from his superiors that he should "conform to the expected manner of a white, straight man" and not be out in his dealings with the United Way's clients or contributors. This made Arnold somewhat uncomfortable. He said that the standard at most workplaces is that "sexuality is not something we bring into the workplace... We're not at a place where we are totally comfortable" with gay people in the work world.

However, even though "people get fired quite often in today's business climate for being gay," although this is illegal in many states, including Massachusetts, Arnold also mentioned that things are getting better for gays in the US workforce. For example, two businesses a day establish policies of non-discrimination or of domestic partner benefits. This practice started in 1991, when Lotus employees lobbied for domestic partnership benefits. Many of the new high-tech firms have a large population of GLBT employees, so many of these firms are leading the way with GLBT-friendly policies. Many states are also passing anti-discrimination laws that include GLBT people. In some cases, straight people also help stop anti-GLBT discrimination in the workplace. Arnold mentioned that people should lobby for more anti-discrimination laws and also should join in collective action with other GLBT employees to get treated fairly in their place of work.

As for himself, Arnold has been out at all of his workplaces since 1992. He says that, so far, it's been pretty good. "I'm out to anyone who cares to know – (but) I do worry about being harassed on this campus."

Labels, Labels, Everywhere

By Bethany-Faith Kimball
Collegian Correspondent

Before the Pride Alliance was called the Pride Alliance, I understand that it was the LBGA, which stood for the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance. Then some more acronyms were added, and it was a bit too much, so it morphed into the Pride Alliance. Right now, if we went back to the acronym system, it would probably be something like the LBGTQQQSAA. I'm not kidding! The Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay, Transgendered, Queer, Queer-Questioning, Straight Ally Alliance. Quite a mouthful. Everyone has to have his or her own specific label. I think it's a good thing, to define who and what you are precisely and concisely. Then again, I am an English major, and I do like words. Most people just get confused.

So many labels are steeped in nastiness these days, however. "Queer" is the word one gets taunted with in junior high. Now it's become an academic discipline: Queer Studies. There are people who can't stand the term lesbian. I've had conversations with many gay women about labels, and some of them have said, literally, "Call me a dyke instead." That's another typical junior high taunt. Even as much as I don't like the term "lesbian," I only use the word "dyke" with a very few close friends. "Gay" is a taunt. "bisexual" is a taunt, every word that defines the homoerotic experience has been used as a taunt by some homo- or bi-phobic bully at one point or another. I hesitate to use pretty much any word because someone will be offended. I understand using words that were once used to hurt in normal conversation. As Bruce Coville wrote in his fabulous short story, "Am I Blue?", we use those kinds of once-derogatory terms, "to take the words away from the people who want to use them to hurt us." Each word has its own negative connotation. Anyone who's heard the word "gay" sneered at them, or sneered at something in general, knows the true power of a word that Webster's Dictionary defines as "merry." And I'm one of those people who love the word "gay."

Bisexuals, I think, have the worst term. They need to push for some new term that doesn't have the word "sex" in it. Too many right-wingers already associate "nontraditional sexualities" (that's a bad term as well), with sex and sex only. Homosexuals had that problem too, until they started using "gay," "lesbian," and every other term under the sun. It was even better back in the "old days" when UMASS had its own homophile movement. If "homophile" isn't a cool word, I don't know what is.

There are so many words for queer people that we can literally be awash in words. Unfortunately, there are so many terms that acronyms are now out of the question. I mean, who really wants to be in a LBGTQQQSAA anyway?

Write For GLBT!

Brandon Teena at the Movies

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

On Sept. 28, Chris Straayer, an Associate Professor of Cinema Studies at NYU, presented a lecture entitled "Will the Real Brandon Teena Please Stand Up?" as part of the Stonewall Center's LBGT Studies Lecture Series. In her lecture, Chris discussed the movie Boys Don't Cry about the rape and murder of Brandon Teena, a female-bodied person who lived as a man in Nebraska and was murdered there in 1993. Throughout the lecture, Straayer showed numerous clips from Boys Don't Cry and from the documentary The Brandon Teena Story to illustrate her points.

Straayer talked about the film's strategies as "fiction based on and consumed by reality." She talked about the ways in which the movie's director, Kimberly Peirce, tried to humanize Brandon Teena to the audience. Brandon seems "magically vulnerable and very charismatic" in the movie. There are many close-ups of him smiling, which makes the audience members like him despite their personal views on transgenderism.

Straayer explained that she found three perspectives from which to look at this movie: the trauma of sexual abuse, transgenderism, and lesbianism. Some people say that Brandon Teena was abused in the past, and this is reflected in the movie. For example, in the scene where his two would-be murderers rip off his pants to see "what" he is, Brandon has an out-of-body experience, which is common to survivors of past sexual abuse. Brandon also sometimes refers to himself in the third person in the movie, which adds to the sexual abuse trauma point-of-view for looking at the movie.

In looking at the film from a lesbian point-of-view, Straayer points out that the film perpetuates a Hollywood myth of romantic monogamy by concentrating on Brandon's "short-lived Romeo and Juliet romance" with a girl named Lana and ignores his many seduction of other women. Straayer explained that by seducing many women, Brandon enhanced his own sense of masculinity, and this was sacrificed to Peirce's monogamous portrayal of Brandon. Peirce also portrayed the feminist lesbian romantic ideal of sexual reciprocity in the movie. While at first Brandon's lovemaking to Lana is one-sided, at the end of the movie the lovemaking becomes reciprocal. Pierce says that she created this scene so that Brandon in the movie could experience pleasure before he died, but according to the stone butch culture, Brandon already experienced pleasure by satisfying Lana. Some transgender activists actually argue that showing Brandon in a lesbian light in the last lovemaking scene is a huge violation of his persona because through the transgender lens, it is not easy to expose the body like Brandon exposes his body to Lana in that scene. Straayer said that "Peirce's film poses Lana as a lesbian hero" who seems to turn Brandon into a woman and a lesbian, which is not necessarily what happened in real life. However, some GLBT activists argue that Brandon's identity crisis was not necessarily a case of transgenderism but perhaps a case of repressed lesbianism.

While Peirce followed a lesbian reading of the Brandon Teena story in the movie, Straayer says that the movie's star, Hilary Swank, sustained the transgender reading of the movie. In fact, Swank has said that in having to act a man's role and in living mostly as a man while filming Boys Don't Cry, she almost experienced the same type of gender identity crisis that Teena himself went through. "This must be the greatest challenge that an actor could ever face," Swank has said. Her embodiment of Brandon amazed the media when the movie was released. Straayer says that there was much media "praise of (Swank's) acting as extraordinary." In fact, many people feel that Swank resurrected Brandon when she won an Academy Award for Best Actress for her role in the movie. Straayer explained that the media focus on Swank parallels the media focus on the Brandon Teena murder case, and that this allowed the film to piggyback on the mass media for an audience.

Straayer finished her lecture by saying that she feels that unnecessary compromises were made in the film. She says it could have been more complex, especially since people would have gone to see it (regardless of complexity) because of all the interest surrounding the Brandon Teena case.

GLBT Events Calendar

Tuesday, October 3
Pride Alliance Weekly meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Wednesday, October 4
Conversation with gay presidential candidate Dave McReynolds at 7 p.m. in Herter Hall, room 217.

Thursday, October 5
Stonewall Center LBGT Studies Lecture Series – Kevin Moss, Chair of the Russian Department at Middlebury College, will present "Who's Renting These Boys?: Pornography, Prostitution, and the Straight Male Gaze in Eastern Europe" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center, room 903.

Tuesday, October 10
Pride Alliance Weekly meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Wednesday, October 11
Happy National Coming Out Day! Watch for Pride Alliance events on this day!

Thursday, October 12
Stonewall Center LBGT Studies Lecture Series – Selena Wahng, managing editor of "GLQ: Journal of Gay and Lesbian Studies," will present "Annabel Chong: Transmasculine Porn, Penetration, and Capitalism" at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 903.

Transmasculine Film Festival with Selena Wahng from 7-9 p.m. in SOM 120.

Antigona wakes sense of duty

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Correspondent

ANTIGONA
Bowker Auditorium
Sept. 26

I don't remember much from high school Spanish. Basically, I can ask where the bathroom is located, say "good and healthy" and tengo muchas pecas. Other than that, I'm pretty much at a loss. So, when it was announced at the start of the performance of Antigona that the entire show was in Spanish, I was a bit apprehensive about staying. The audience was told to "think of it as an opera." So, now I was seriously considering running up the aisle and out the door. But, I stayed. For art's sake. And besides, my left leg had fallen asleep. And thank goodness for that.

Antigona is minimalist in its elements: in the set, the costuming, the music, and, ultimately, as a one-woman show. Thusly stripped of ostentation, performer Teresa Ralli's challenge lies in not only capturing the attention of a mainly English-speaking audience, but also recreating and reshaping the world of Sophocles' Antigone, here adapted by Peruvian poet Jose Watanabe. She uses the lone wooden chair as if it was an elaborate set and shapes her body so that the very wooden components seem as liquid as her movements. The simple costume she wears consists of, most importantly a long cloak, through which she demarcates each of the characters she portrays.

Indeed the most striking aspect of Ralli's performance was the intense character shifts. Simply because this is a one-person show does not make it a monologue or a one-character study, nor does it preclude the representation and development of numerous, rich personas. For each character she would alter her movements, and the muscles themselves seemed to take the form of the character they were employed in staging. She changed the very quality of her voice, and portrayed each with equal pity and passion. In particular, the opposing forces of Creon and Antigone exuded conflict, strength and fierce determination. Antigone has never been so pitiably human, but so nobly endowed with the godly courage to knowingly sacrifice her life for familial love and for what she believes to be right.

Unfamiliar language becomes music, and so Antigona did become a sort of opera. My initial misgivings melted inside of ten minutes. Not only does Ralli offer an extraor-

Turn to ANTIGONA, page 8

COURTESY: NEW WORLD THEATER

Teresa Ralli brings new life to Sophocles' Antigona in her one-woman, all Spanish performance of Antigona.

Who should decide what we read?

By Kristina Nies
Collegian Correspondent

One day last week, I was checking my email and one of those annoying news bulletins popped up, as I went to delete it, the headline caught my eye: "Banned books — a '90's phenomenon." Beside the quote was pictured the cover of the latest J.K. Rowlings book, Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire. Intrigued I clicked on the article and read further. What I discovered shocked and appalled me.

Included in the list of the top 100 banned books of the 90's were some of my most favorite and cherished children's books. Including the Goosebumps series by R.L. Stine, Lois Lowry's The Giver, as well as classics like, Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird. Upon further reading I came across the following top ten banned books:

1. Scary Story series by Alvin Schwartz.
2. Daddy's Roommate by Michael Willhoite.
3. I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings by Maya Angelou.
4. The Chocolate War by Robert Cormier.
5. The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn by Mark Twain.
6. Of Mice and Men by John Steinbeck.
7. Forever by Judy Blume.
8. Bridge to Terabithia by Katherine Paterson.
9. Heather Has Two Mommies by Lesléa Newton.
10. The Catcher in the Rye by J.D. Salinger.

Working in a bookstore for over three years, I have seen many of the titles on junior high and high school summer reading lists; including The Bridge to Terabithia which has been awarded the Newbury for excellence in children's literature, a book that I have recommended to people of all ages. If books that have won such prestigious awards were banned how could any be safe from censorship?

Although not reaching the top ten, one of the most talked about is the Harry Potter series by J.K. Rowlings, which reached #48. Content aside, Harry Potter is not only a monetary success; it has the ability to get children, and adults to read! Its popularity is similar to that of the Dav Pilkey's Captain Underpants books, for beginning readers. Both series have the ability to engage children who normally find difficulty or distaste in reading. These books should be celebrated not banned. How often do you see a ten-year-old picking up a 700+ page book?

The banning of the Harry Potter has caused quite a stir; so much that an organization has formed, "Muggles for Harry Potter." For those of you who are not familiar with the Harry Potter lingo, a muggle it a non-magical person residing in a world filled with witches and wizards. This organization of self-proclaimed "muggles" are working against all forms of censorship of the series. The group became largely involved after the books were banned in Zeeland, Michigan public schools.

This single incident in Michigan has attracted more than just media attention. On Sept. 25 four individuals were honored for their work against the banning of the Harry Potter serious at the Library of Congress in Washington, DC. Mary Dana of Grand Haven, MI; Nancy Zeenie of Zeeland, MI, along with thirteen year old Julia Mayersohn of Union City, NJ and eleven year-old Billy Smith of Santa Ana, CA who spent his entire summer vacation reading the first volume of the Harry Potter series aloud to low-income children; all received gold medals from the Association of

Turn to BOOKS, page 8

COURTESY: UMASS MUSIC AND DANCE DEPARTMENT

Students from the UMass Jazz Ensemble 1 and Chapel Jazz Ensemble will perform in Bowker Auditorium this Turday at 8 p.m. Jeffrey Holmes and David Sporny will conduct. The program will feature student soloists.

The Real World of UMass Students

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Do you ever feel like someone is watching you? Well if you were one of the three women on campus who recently set up a Massilve camera in their off campus apartment, then your suspicions would be right on target.

Deanna, Ruth and Laura are a trio of UMass seniors who have valiantly given up their American right to privacy for a chance to be seen by the world.

On Tuesday September 26, masslive.com kicked off a web-based camera set to monitor activity in the house for the rest of the school year. The camera is located at www.masslive.com/offcampus.

This is not the first time that masslive.com has invaded the UMass scene. They have had a camera at Antonio's Pizza for the past few years. The camera updates photos every minute, but does not show live, streaming video.

With the off campus camera, they took technology a step further. The camera does not only scrutinize the action in the house, but it presents this by sending a live video feed without any interruption. The site is also planning to introduce sound to the picture to enhance the experience.

If your computer is not equipped to watch streaming videos on the Internet, it is made easy for you right at the site. You can download "Real Video" directly from the location.

The women who are the Truman Show like subjects don't seem to have any qualms with the idea at all. When asked what the purpose of the camera is they responded enthusiastically with, "So everyone can see us!"

Everyone seeing them is not a new concept for the three. They said that the Antonio's camera has a lot of people checking it out all the time. When they auditioned for the chance to be on the Internet, in front of the Antonio's camera, they claim that more than 300 people saw them.

The women insist that the camera is only there to show what happens in everyday life. Not to display a show for a viewing public.

"Everything you see is what normally happens," they said. They do not plan to do anything out of the ordinary. They do, however, plan on using the camera for things such as cooking shows. The idea stemmed from the fact that Laura and Ruth like to cook a lot.

When asked about the eeriness of being a center of voyeurism, the three didn't seem to have much of a problem with it. They said that almost everyone asks something like "Are you going to get naked," or something that relates to an abnormal act. "What you see is what you get," they said. "People are watching us, and we don't know about it. We just have to always assume that people are watching the camera. We're used to it though, because we've had it in the apartment for about two weeks (prior to the on-air release) already."

They also said that they might possibly have "confessionals," like the one in the film The Blair Witch Project.

So what are people saying about the camera? Well the women claim that the overwhelming response has been driven by curiosity. "Random people say, 'that's crazy.' Friends always want to come over now and check it out."

Though you would think the idea would create the greatest pick-up line in the history of men, (Hey, haven't I seen you somewhere?) the women insist that they have not been hit on that much as a result of the camera's implementation. They declared that intense amount of promotion for the page has put them out in the public so much that it becomes confusing. They promoted it at Antonios with fliers, and said, "Half the time guys won't even realize that we ARE the people on the web."

With all of the promotion for the page, they still insist that they are planning to finish their school work, and graduate. They said that their schedules have conflicted with a lot of the job. If they could get everything that they want done by the end of the year, Laura and Ruth would be skydiving, and going to a rodeo.

Despite all of the "Survivor" references, and the inevitable offer to be on Howard Stern approaching fast, they are very happy with everything surrounding the camera. It is something that they wanted to do, and they all feel that the public will respond positively to it as well. "We really think that people on campus will be interested."

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits, including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

TOMORROW

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Office
presents

SOM
CAREER DAY
2000

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!

Date: Wed[illegible] October 4, 2000
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at [illegible] Ends at 5:00 P.M.

WHO WILL BE THERE?

•You (we hope)
Acousta Sales and Marketing
ADP (Automatic Data Processing)
Aerotek
Alexander, Aronson & Finning & Co., PC
American Express Financial Advisors
Ames Department Stores
Andersen Consulting
Arch Communications
Arthur Andersen
Aspen Square Management
BDO Seidman, LLP
Black & Decker
Canby & Maloney & Co., Inc.
Carlin, Charron & Rosen, LLP
Chubb & Son
Cigna Corporation
Cintas Corporation
CSC Consulting
DataViz, Inc.
Deloitte & Touche
EDS
EMC Corporation
Energizer Battery Company
Enterprise Rent-A-Car
Ernst & Young
Feeley &Driscoll
Ferguson Enterprises, Inc.
Filene's
Fidelity Investments
Frito-Lay
GCC Printers

•About 1400 students
General Electric
Great West Life
Hannaford Brothers Co.
Harpell
Hershey Foods
Hertz
IBM
Incentive Systems
Investors Bank & Trust
Internal Revenue Service
J.Baker, Inc.
JWG Associate, Inc.
KPMG LLP
Liberty Mutual Group
Marsh USA, Inc.
Massachusetts Financial
MassMutual Financial Group
MBNA New England
MFS Investment Management
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack
Needel, Welch & Stone PC, CPA's
New England Financial
Nortel Networks
Northeast Utilities
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
O'Connor & Drew PC
Offtech
Olde Discount Corporation (now H&R Block Financial Advisors)
100X.com
Onsite Companies

•Ninety or more firms
Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceuticals
Osco Drug
Oxford Global Resources, Inc.
PAN Communications,Inc.
Pearson Education
Pepsi Bottling Company
PFPC, Inc.
Pratt & Whitney
Polaroid Corporation
Pricewaterhouse Coopers
Procter & Gamble
Putnam Investments
Raytheon Company
Reed Exhibition Companies
Reznick, Fedder & Silverman
Robert Ercolini & Company LLP
Sentry Insurance
Sherwin-Williams
Solutia
Staples
State Street Corporation
State Street Corporation Process Engineering
Stop & Shop Co.
Sun Life Financial
TEKSystems
Teradyne
TJX Companies
TJ Maxx Distribution Center
Toys "R" Us
Travelers Property Casualty
Walgreens
Wallace, Inc.

There will be a free shuttle leaving Haigis Mall for the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from Noon to 5:00 P.M.

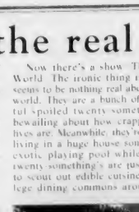
Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men; dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available

Is VH1 the real music TV?

By Jennifer Chasen
Collegian Correspondent

I will be cha- the streets of flat forward, but MTV. I mean I get it [illegible] that's not the [illegible] I honestly [illegible] 340 mil- [illegible] territories [illegible] its station [illegible] programming [illegible] more" a poor [illegible] and that [illegible] had dancers [illegible] Thing [illegible] bodies with [illegible] How does [illegible] a form [illegible] popular [illegible] world's most [illegible] television net- [illegible] with all this [illegible] executives [illegible] come up with [illegible] something than [illegible] that features the [illegible] television in a late [illegible] You might [illegible] that the Home [illegible] with all the [illegible] provides [illegible] Melrose Place [illegible] a show like this [illegible] named Music [illegible] The Weather Channel [illegible] Big Comic Show [illegible] that game [illegible] channel called [illegible] might expect [illegible] getting a show that [illegible] more room to [illegible] these all would [illegible] Whatever or the [illegible] Word.

Now there's a show. The Real World. The ironic thing is, there seems to be nothing real about their world. They are a bunch of beautiful spoiled twenty-something's, bewailing about how crappy their lives are. Meanwhile, they're always living in a huge house somewhere exotic, playing pool while actual twenty-somethings are just trying to scrape out edible cuisine in college dining commons around the country. I once read somewhere that for every person who applies to be in the Peace Corps, there are three who try out for the "Real World." I mean, I love TV, but it frightens me that this so-called realistic program means more to the general population than world peace. Who cares about children starving in third world countries when you, too, could play pool with Teck and the kid with the funny hair on his chin?



Carson Daly, savior of teenyboppers, remains the one hope for MTV's dedication to music videos.

Don't get me wrong, I love watching screaming fourteen-year-old children waiting to see Brittany Spears as much as the next person, but I just wonder whether MTV could amend their line-up to include more actual music videos.

VH1, or Video Hits One, is also owned by Viacom but contains--brace yourselves--music. While its 98 million viewers are a mere pittance to those who keep MTV running all day, its lineup includes shows like "Behind the Music", "Pop-up Video", and "Movies that Rock". I actually find these shows compelling (yes, including "Pop-Up Video", which proves to be as addictive as potato chips) and they actually showcase people with musical talent.

"Behind the Music" sports lots of shutless pictures of a broken down David Cassidy whining that what he really wanted to sing was rock-and-roll. Let's ignore the fact that I own a copy of "Hey, I think I Love You" and admit that this 70's tell-all is was more compelling than NSYNC Live! on MTV. Not only does VH1 play the occasional "What A Girl Wants," but you can also see some A-Ha's, "Take On Me" or Fleetwood Mac's "Landslide." I've even seen programs on everything from The Bangles to Dirty Dancing.

I admit MTV has "TRL", but how can that compare to "Storyteller's" which features artists like Billy Joel and Steely Dan singing live versions of their songs and telling stories about them? MTV might have been cool in the 80's, but no more. Video may have killed the radio star, but MTV's "no music" policy has succeeded in killing all interest I may have had in their channel.

Ruby Dune jams the Horse

By Kristina Nies
Collegian Correspondent

RUBY DUNE
Iron Horse
Sept. 29

Despite the chilly temperatures, and a long wait outside, a warm crowd filled the Iron Horse this past Friday. After a lengthy sound check, the patient audience was caught up in the smooth sounds of Ruby Dune. Their mix of different music genres including folk, jazz and rock provided a welcomed change from the all too common jam band sound. Slowly more joined the diverse mix of folks dancing down in front. By the third song, a Phish-like sound of one of one of the bands older tunes, followed by the quick transition and fast keyboarding style of the Charlie Brown theme song, won over most of the crowd.

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

The King Stag as performed by the American Repertory Theater comes to UMass Oct. 5 at 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall. Julie Taymor of Lion King lame designed costumes for the production.

Mid-performance there was a minor technical difficulty, which was easily remedied by and eager audience member, who jumped on stage to come to the band's aid. The mishap created an awkward situation where one of the drums could not be remounted. Yet throughout the duration of the song, none of the members missed a beat.

Following the brief pause began an interlude of Billy Idol's "White Wedding" before breaking into "Take on Me." The 80's craze known as Ah-ha was brought back to life. Apparently the crowd was in need for a nostalgic flashback, with a Ruby Dune twist, for nearly everyone was dancing and singing along.

The one unfortunate aspect of the Ironhorse's intimate setting is the small stage. During "Take on Me," the keyboardist, who was singing lead, did so with his back to the crowd. This greatly took away from the visual aspect of the performance. But all was not lost for hall way through, he spun around, changing boards, and finishing facing the audience.

This strong cover helped carry them through a seemingly forced improve intro into one of their own songs. The bands originals were a mix of older and newer songs that included a few with the guitarist on lead vocals requiring one to strain to make out the soft-spoken lyrics.

The night ended with cover of the Grateful Dead's "Deal." Closing out the set with an upbeat song that pleased the audience. The hour seemed to fly by and although the crowd cheered for more, the band graciously left the stage.

Ruby Dune's diverse style within their music make it an interesting sound. They have hurdled the rut many jam bands fall into, that of similarly styled songs; and have created a sound all their own. And although lacking the stage presence of their following band, Addison Groove Project, Ruby Dune put on an enjoyable, well-received show.

Rane salvages Pond party

By Kristina Nies
Collegian Correspondent

RANE
The Skybox
Sept. 30

As I entered the Skybox Saturday night, I wondered if I was in the right place. I walked into a dimly lit room where surprisingly only about twenty or so people were gathered. The show formally planned outdoors, the Party By the Pond, was moved inside do to weather concerns.

The small crowd was understandable considering the Big Bad Bullets were on. It was unfortunate the drummer could not beat his 5-set a little harder and completely drown out the other band members. Playing a few punk rock classics such as "Ole" and Henry VIII" they humored the ten or so fans, which had congregated in front of the stage. Whether attempting to mimic the success of the 30-something, blue collar, Irish success of the Dropkicks, or just reaching back to their teenage roots, the Bullets lacked the energy and talent for the punk rock scene.

The following band, Seventeen, played a number of songs all sounding alike, until the bassist announced, "we're going to slow it down so you people in the dark places can dry hump." The tactless and tasteless Seventeen, unable to read the crowd who were all seated, and realized that their normal antics were not working. Their cookie cutter sound of early 90's teenage garage bands with their inaudible lyrics quickly became annoying. Granted the crowd was not there to see their metal-like rock, the majority came to see the acts that followed.

Walking upon stage adorning a plaid scarf, harmonica and acoustic guitar, Stephen Kellogg provided a drastic change from the proceeding. Opening with his own twist on the "Jefferson's" theme song, the crowd, still seated, moved to the beat. After playing one of his own tunes Steven announced he had lost his 'g-string.' He received a chuckle from the crowd and a hand from Rane, who came out and lent him a guitar for the remainder of the set.

Beckoning the audience to stand up and come closer, he unplugged and got people moving with his own version of "You Shook Me All Night Long." Above all, Steven portrayed the persona of having fun that slowly but surely rubbed off on the crowd.

The majority of the people, who came, did so to see Rane. They opened strong with a musically choreographed psychedelic light show. Their combinational sound of folk and jam band with a heavy Guster influence, pleased the audience members. The set was similar to a magic trick where new instruments, such as bells, chimes and maracas were added for nearly every song keeping the audience visually interested in seeing what would pop up next.

The bassist informed everyone of the open dance floor and invited him or her up, but few stirred. It appeared as though people had come to relax rather than dance. However docile and unresponsive the band obliged the remaining group with encore song.

It was unfortunate that this free, eclectic show did not turn out a larger crowd. The bar, adjacent to the Skybox being closed, did not help matters. The artists themselves noted Def Leopard's appearance at the "Big E" impacted attendance. This unusual group of artists and small crowd did create a more intimate setting, but it was truly unfortunate more did not show.

COURTESY RANE.COM

Rane picked up the slack Saturday night for an otherwise uneventful Party by the Pond, which actually took place at Skybox. Some party.

Antigona

continued from page 6

...performance, the direction, by Miguel Rubio Zapata, and all technical abilities were elegant and beautiful. Antigona's message rings true for our modern world, and even across such restrictive barriers as language. We, as powerful and prosperous Americans, have never been in a better position to decry injustices and speak for what we believe in, relatively safe from the unforgiving mind of Antigona. This show is a powerful reminder of our responsibility.

■ books

continued from page 6

American Publishers President, and former Congresswoman, Pat Schroeder. The presentation was part of the kick-off of Banned Books Week.

The witch and wizard-filled world that Harry himself resides in is the major reason for the books being removed from public schools and library shelves. Some individuals for do not feel as though the magical content is appropriate for children to read. To an extent, I agree. The books do contain many scenes where it would be easy for younger children to become downright scared (the author herself has stated that the books were not intended for children under eight years of age). But I do not agree that the books should be banned. Removing books from public access through any means is unconstitutional. It is up to the individual or their parent to decide what is appropriate to read. Who am I, or anyone else, to say what another person should or should not read?

The American Library Association reported that in 1999 the Harry Potter books were the most challenged. Efforts to restrict the use of or remove them completely from schools and public libraries have been reported in 19 states. The alleged "harm" done to impressionable young readers has not been made prevalent to me. It's not as if kids are throwing down their copies of Sorcerer's Stone and racing to find brooms and attempting to fly. On the contrary, I commend J.K. Rowlings for creating books with not only intrigue but also substance. The books are much more than hocus-pocus. Her characters deal with real life situations; such as the awkwardness of moving and meeting new people, nonviolent means of dealing with bullies and scheduling time for homework. The roundness of her characters is what draws people to the books. I look forward to reading onward and seeing how Harry, Hermine and Ron grow and change. I will fight so that everyone has that opportunity as well.

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Student Discounts
✓ Professional Bartending Training
✓ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✓ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✓ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Class Begins Fri. Oct. 13th 6:00pm Valentine Hall Amherst College
Call Now, Space is Limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer: $20 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

University Child Care currently has preschool openings in the full day and flexible day programs. Child care tuition rates are based on a sliding fee scale determined by family size and household income. Currently, subsidies or child care vouchers are available through the University and other social service agencies.
For more information about the program call
5 4 5 - 1 5 6 6

PART-TIME POSITIONS
Located on the PVTA bus route, we offer convenient schedules to those looking to do some part-time office work.
CLERICAL ASSISTANCE
Duties include gathering materials for mailing, packing boxes, copying papers, and other clerical tasks. Those selected need to be able to work at least 3 consecutive hours between 9 AM and 5 PM on workdays. Hours are available now.
WORD PROCESSING TECHNICIAN
This position requires word processing skills and attention to detail. Experience using Microsoft Word 97 for Windows will be helpful in working with our other word processing staff to complete a document conversion project. Both full-time and part-time temporary positions are available.
Call 413-256-0444 to have an application mailed to you.
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
E.O.E. MEST

Regular season ends, playoffs begin with new and old faces

That magic month in Major League Baseball has come: October.

The major league regular season has ended and it took all 162 games to finally shape the eight teams that will be battling for the World Series Crown. This season only three of the eight teams that made the playoffs in 1999 are back for seconds. This season, perennial playoff teams such as the Astros, the Red Sox, the Rangers and the Indians will be watching from home. Instead, teams like the White Sox, the A's and the Mariners will be making unexpected trips to the playoffs. Here is the skinny on the first round match-ups.

NL Divisional Playoffs:
Atlanta Braves (95-67) vs. St. Louis Cardinals (95-67)

The last time these two teams met in the postseason was in the 1996 NLCS. The Cards had a 3-1 lead before being blitzed in the last three games to lose the pennant.

Based on winning the season series between the two teams, the Cards will get home field advantage for this series that begins on Tuesday. They will send Rick Ankiel to the mound in game one against 19-game winner Greg Maddux.

For the Braves, Larry Jones error on Sunday cost them home field in the first round. Other than that, Chipper had another stellar season hitting 36 homers and driving in 111 runs. However, in the regular season he hit just .115 against the Cardinals pitching staff, which matched the ratings of the Olympics this past year (thank god they are over). Andruw Jones finally had the consistent season that Braves fans have been waiting for as he had 36 "booyahs" and drove in 104 runs. Rookie of the Year candidate Rafeal Furcal has caused fits for opponents pitching staffs. The 36 year old, I mean 38 year old, I mean, oh damn it. For all we know he could old enough to be Orlando Hernandez's father, but he had 40 steals in 54 attempts.

Maddux and Tom Glavine have led the pitching staff. Glavine gets the nod in game two and led the majors with 21 wins this year. However, both have had some struggles in past post-season play.

For the Cardinals, MVP candidate Jim Edmonds has had to carry the load in place of the injured Mark McGwire. Edmonds hit 42 homers, but was just 5-28 against the Braves this season.

McGwire will not play in the field during this series, but his presence as the most dangerous pinch hitter in baseball will be enough of a threat to alter the plans of pitching coaches and managers in the late innings.

The day catcher Mike Matheny met a swiss army knife was the day that the Cardinals chances faded. He sliced two tendons in his right ring finger and will miss the playoffs. Eli Marrero and Carlos Hernandez will have to fill the void of the Gold-Glove contender.

As for the pitching, Kile won 20 games, but fellow starters Garrett Stephenson and Pat Hentgen have struggled as of late. The Cardinals need to get great pitching from their starters to combat the great pitching of the Braves.

The Cardinals have had a great season, but the losses of McGwire and Matheny, combined with the pitching of the Braves will prove too much for the Cards.

Rose's Prediction: Braves in four.

New York Mets (94-68) vs. San Francisco Giants (97-65)

The Giants had the Major's best record overall and at home (55-26). The Mets also had a 55-26 record at home, which shows the importance of the home field in this series. The Mets will go with Mike Hampton in game one, while the Giants will counter with 1997 NLCS and World Series MVP Livan Hernandez.

These two teams have a history, as they had two bench clearing brawls in the four game series at San Francisco, which has provided a heated rivalry going into this series.

The Giants won the season series 5-3 and they boast two MVP candidates in Jeff Kent (.334 average, 33 Homers, 125 RBI) and Barry Bonds (.306, 49, 106). Kent batted .414 against the Mets this season, while it was night and day for Bonds: .450 in the wins, .091 in the losses. Kent has combined with shortstop Rich Aurilia to become the first second baseman-shortstop combination to each hit 20 home runs in back-to-back years.

As for the Mets, they recovered from a dreadful beginning of September to easily win the wild card and finish just a game back of Atlanta in the NL East. Against the Giants this season, catcher Mike Piazza batted .467 and Rockie of the Year candidate Jay Payton batted .400.

As for the pitching, Hampton was brought over to sure up the pitching staff. Instead, what the Mets have gotten is familiar sight of Kenny Rogers and Andruw Jones in the NLCS last season, batters walking. He walked 99 in 212 innings pitched this season. Al Leiter has been the rock in that staff all season. He has 16 wins and a 3.20 ERA. He struck out 12 in a 2-0 win over the Giants on August 2, and will be the starter in game two. Stopper Armando Benitez saved 41 games this year. He is the most dominant stopper in the game, except for Rob Nen.

The only problem is that Nen pitches for San Francisco. He has not blown a save since June, and he saved 41 games as well. Hernandez led the Giants with 17 wins this season. Russ Ortiz will start game two and he is 4-0 in his career against the Mets, including 2 wins this season.

This could be the best of the first round series. Both teams are solid all the way around, solid pitching and great hitting. However, the big thing for both teams this season has been the home field advantage, and in this series the Giants have got it.

Rose's Prediction: Giants in five.

AL Divisional Playoffs:
Seattle Mariners (91-71) vs. Chicago White Sox (95-67)

No Griffey equals no chance, right? Somebody forgot to tell the Mariners that. They came in as underdogs and went out as winners of the Wild Card. Now the M's and the White Sox, who were both well out of contention last year, will fight for the right (to party), or to play in the American League Championship Series. The Mariners will start Freddy Garcia in game one, while the Sox are scheduled to start Mike Sirotka in the opener at the New Comisky Park.

For the White Sox, Frank Thomas had a career year in homers (43) and RBI (143) and he could win his third MVP award. He has been joined by Paul Konerko as the 1-2 punch in the middle of the lineup.

While the White Sox come with a 1-2 punch, the Mariners can come with a 1-2-3 punch. Alex Rodriguez, Edgar Martinez and Jay Buhner all have played on the other two Mariners playoff teams and would like to finally make their way to the fall classic.

As for the pitching, the White Sox have been shaky over the last two months. All-Star James Baldwin has not done anything in the second half, winning just three games. The rest of the starters are hurting right now, so it will be up to the bullpen led by Keith Foulke to pull through for the Sox. Foulke had 34 saves this season and led the attack out of the pen. They will have to continue during the postseason in order for the Sox to have a chance.

As for the Mariners, they have something this season that they did not have in a long time: a bullpen. Kazuhiro Sasaki, a candidate for AL Rookie of the Year had 37 saves and Arthur Rhodes provided big relief down the stretch.

The Mariners starters played a big role in the playoff push, led by Aaron Sele's 17 wins and John Halama who had 14. Both will see starts in this series although what games they will pitch in will be decided.

The Sox have been the most dominant team all season and have the major's best record on the road. However, the finish to their season has left some question marks, especially in their pitching staff. The Mariners will be able to exploit that weakness. This might be the last go around for this group of Mariners and they want to go out with a bang.

Rose's Prediction: Mariners in four.

New York Yankees (87-75) vs. Oakland A's (91-70)

If you have predicted that the A's would have won more games than the Yankees this season, people would have called you crazy.

This series will start in Oakland on Tuesday as the Yankees will send Roger Clemens to the mound against Gil Heredia.

The A's are led by Jason Giambi and his MVP caliber numbers (.333 average, 43 Home Run's, 137 RBI). He has carried the A's to a 22-7 September and the AL West title. Shortstop Miguel Tejada had a great year hitting 30 homers and driving in 108 runs. The A's have hit 237 homers as a team this season, and they have used the long ball to their advantage over the course of the season.

As for the Yankees, they lost 15 of their last 18 games, but they still are the defending champions. Derek Jeter had another strong year batting .339, while David Justice has provided the power with 20 homers since joining the Yankees, and 41 jacks overall. Bernie Williams was an MVP candidate before he was injured. Still, his 30 homers and 121 RBI's are enough of a presence in the middle of the line-up to cause problems for the A's.

As for the pitching staffs, the A's will bring Kevin Appier in game two, and 20-game winner Tim Hudson in game three. Hudson, know termed as "Little Pedro" went 6-0 in the month of September, including the win on Sunday against Texas to clinch the division title. Closer Jason Isringhausen has become the team's closer, and has left A's fans closer to heart attacks during his appearances in the ninth inning, especially that two pitch debacle against New York in August.

As for the Yankees, they have been led by Andy Pettitte with 19 wins, but the rest of the starters have been shaky. Orlando Hernandez has been inconsistent, and saying that David Cone has been inconsistent would be nice at this moment. Cone was 4-14 this season.

The relief pitching for the Yankees has been solid, yet not as dominant as years past. Middle reliever Jeff Nelson won eight games this year and had an ERA under three for the season. Closer Mariano Rivera has had another strong season, although the aura of invincibility has left him and his New York teammates. However, the Yankees of the 1990's dominated the playoffs winning three world titles.

But this is 2000, and how fitting it will be for New York that both the Mets and the Yankees will start and finish their postseason in the same place, in the Bay area. If it does happen, the shaking in the Bay Area won't be an Earthquake, but a "George" quake.

Rose's Prediction – A's in five.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

■ water polo

continued from page 12

and kept looking to Foley up front," said Arnold. "I think that if we played the way we did in first half in the second half and overtime than we would have won. We just couldn't pull it out."

After a well-earned night of rest, UMass bounced back from Saturday night's setback on Sunday afternoon to defeat the Princeton Tigers. The Minutemen put the game away with four third quarter goals en route to a 10-4 victory. Junior Antonio Maldonado scored two goals and had an assist to lead the Minutemen while Vanderwall added seven more saves taking his four-game total to 28. Ramos, the team's leading scorer with 26 goals and 19 assists for 45 points, scored twice for the Minutemen as did Moore, whose 28 goals and 11 assists for 39 points ranks him second on the team.

The Minutemen have another busy weekend coming up with three games at the CWPA Tournament in Bronx, N.Y. on Saturday and one game at Iona on Sunday.

Collegian Sports, we are mad that Sports Illustrated did not reverse the Curse of the Bambino.

■ Olympics

continued from page 12

won't submit sickeningly sweet schmaltz to wallow in. More like drown in. I'll let NBC do the rest. Actually, I think they already have. We just won't see it until November.

To begin with, these games best represented the strides we've made in technology. Meaning, they were the first that can truly be labeled the "Internet Games" given their unlimited access. And like every aspect of our lives, this falls on both ends of the spectrum. On one hand, we had all the coverage we desired, at any time of day, right at our fingertips. But on the other hand, we were faced with redundancy, especially when it came to NBC, the unfortunate belated beneficiary of the coverage of the games. To compensate for the time delay and falsely presented fresh news, the network took the human interest angle and wrung it dry, cramming sappy segments voiced by cloying commentary down our throats every five minutes before the superfluous amount of commercials took over.

The only positives that I can point out regarding NBC's coverage of these games are minimal. The absence of John Tesh and the decidedly less nationalistic approach. Unlike the blatant, jingoistic spectacle that defined the network's presentation of Atlanta, NBC actually showed the medal ceremonies when American didn't dominate the podium. It showcased the world equally this time, not just "our athletes." And it's in that what the Olympic Games are all about? It's not about just exhibiting the best of the U.S., but also the rest of the world.

Don't get me wrong, I get just as gung-ho as anyone else over national pride. We are, after all, the most powerful nation in the world. And what better way, what higher pedestal is there, than the Olympics in our own country to display this omnipotence in athletic excellence? That's the reason the Atlanta games were so successful – they were contested on home soil and every event, even synchronized swimming, was inundated with endless chants of "U-S-A!" As effervescent patriots, we bled red, white and blue. We identified with our athletes because we felt they demonstrated the utmost qualities that we, as a nation, express. Like thrift, we claim to be the best; the famous, arrogant, ought's best, bravest and flashiest. We wore our stars and stripes with an imperious zeal and embraced unexpected heroes like Kerri Strug. Atlanta was one mammoth Fourth of July party where the whole world was invited to celebrate with the Americans.

It may sound like I'm grasping for straws, but Sydney understandably lacked that spark – that contagious, effusive energy that manifested itself in "Viewers Like You" in '96. Sure, the Australians represented their support, for example, after every Aussie swimmer struck gold, the arena would rock to the sounds of Men At Work's signature '80's hit, "Down Under" (To which the American equivalent would have to be our honorary national anthem, "We Will Rock You.") Yet after Atlanta, coverage as lackluster as that depicted from Sydney is a veritable letdown – it just doesn't compare, because it can't measure up.

The bulk of my criticism, however, lies not with NBC. I can't pin the blame solely on the network. The time difference was clearly the biggest factor in the low ratings. That, and the fact that these games are usually contested during the summer, hence the title, coincided with other major sporting events – the pennant races, for one. And when was the last time the Olympics overlapped with the start of the NHL season?

Then there was the introduction of new, "non-sports" into the schedule. Circus acts like synchronized diving and trampolining made their way to primetime. What's next, synchronized bungee-jumping? Hey, if it helps the ratings. And then there was my personal favorite, the demonstration dance-sport (?), debuting in 2004 as a medal sport. Dance-sport, in case you're wondering, is just a whimsical way of saying ballroom dancing. Yes, that's right Ballroom dancing. Last time I checked, ballroom dancing was NOT a sport. It's an easy way to earn a 3-credit PE here and a frivolous way for the GAP to advertise. The inclusion of these "sports" into an already cluttered schedule only served further to diminish the appeal of these games.

Yet these are minor nuisances in comparison to what I feel was the worst aspect of these games, and unfortunately, what Sydney 2000 will be remembered the most for. The controversial drug testing of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) is numero uno in my book. Faced with harsh disapproval for its former policy of higher leniency, the committee chose this Olympics to crack down hard on all offenders. And this cast a shadow on the games itself.

Of the athletes accused, some, like Mrs. Marion Jones and C. Hunter were obviously guilty. But others, especially diminutive Romanian gymnast and women's all around champion Andreea Raducan, were unfairly penalized. Poor Raducan was stripped of the most prestigious medal in her sport because of a mistake by the team doctor, who prescribed her a pill for cold and flu-like symptoms. It was disheartening to see the IOC deny her appeal and ludicrous that she will go down in history as the first gymnast, male or female, to lose a medal due to a positive drug test for taking something to the equivalent of Tylenol. Now that's a tough pill to swallow.

In my opinion, Raducan's loss was the greatest disgrace in a games beset by scandal. The IOC's hypocritical actions are testament to the waning of the Olympic spirit. There is no disputing that there must be other athletes who have taken illegal substances that have not yet found their way onto the IOC's banned list. Yet the fact that these athletes have found ways to evade the system, and, unlike Raducan, will return home with all their medals, not only poses a serious question to their own credibility but to the future of Olympic Games to come.

Bring it.
Where it matters most.
As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.
But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.
So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.
We have a lot to tell you about Raytheon and the exciting opportunities we have available. Plan on visiting our booth at your college career fair. If you are unable to attend the fair, please e-mail your resume to: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments), or mail to: Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.
Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:
• Computer Science
• Computer Engineering
• Electrical Engineering
• Mechanical Engineering
• Math
• Physics
• Chemical Engineering
• Aeronautical Engineering
• Finance/Accounting
• Human Resources
• Industrial and Labor Relations
• Marketing/Communications
• Management
Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge
Raytheon

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1989 Buick Century V6, cassett, AC, power, $1399 413-533-9082

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8!), excellent condition, 86k, loaded power windows-seat-mirrors-locks, a/c, peppy V6 3.8L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker $4500 or b.o., 508-836-3753

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

EMPLOYMENT

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr. Call Susan, 548-9674

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

House Assistant. $7.00 hr. Laundry, animal care, cleaning, odd jobs. 5-10 hrs a week. Non-smoker, car, 8 miles from Amherst. 259-1227 box #1.

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Mail Boxers Etc. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Ctr., Amherst)

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emd-snet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

EMPLOYMENT

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass 253-3101

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

RECREATION POSITIONS
Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

EMPLOYMENT

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac'he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Cook-Day Care Center, Rt. 63, Leverett 9-1 M-F $7.50/hr Call Susan 548-9674

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Dorm size refrigerator $100 obo 6mos old, only used for 2! Call 253-2455

Used Furniture 12 couches $65-$100 Free delivery 586-2221

Roller and Inline skates & accessories 413-323-5380 WWW.FLYWHEELS.NET

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Congratulations to our newest members: Marisa Axelrad, Leigh Boriskin, Valeries Buscemi, Ali Gerson, Jillian Goldstein, Caroline Goodman, Karen Hansen, Jill Milbury, Jamie Nott, Jackie Pinkow, Orit Reisman, Rachel Rothbard, Erika Solomon, Holly Willett. So happy to have you. Sincerely, Sigma Delta Tau.

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MISCELLANEOUS

Have fun - Raising funds for your clubs, teams, and group. Earn up to $500 or more. Put our 25 years of fundraising experience to work for you. Call now for details 800-592-2121 ext 725

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

ROOM FOR RENT

Looking for roommate to share house w/3 guys. $375/mo inclusive. Call Steve @ 253-3220

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun,

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sales Manager Position Available Call for Information 1-800-426-7710

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

Need to Advertise? The Daily Collegian Classifieds 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gospel to Gospel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 3, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N; (Part 1 of 5)		Political Debate (Live)				Classic TV	Sports Heroes
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Legacy" (N)		Politicel Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Legacy" (N)		Politicel Debate (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Politicel Debate (In Stereo Live)				Friends	Sudden-Susan
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Bully the Vampire Slayer		Angel (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 1 -- Teams to Be Announced		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WTXX	4	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	★★ "Broken Arrow" (1996, Adventure) John Travolta. (In Stereo)				News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 1 -- Teams to Be Announced		News		News	Frasier
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show "Titus (N)"		Dark Angel "Pilot" (Series Premiere) (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WWLP	9	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 1 -- Teams to Be Announced		News		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Building Big (N; (Part 1 of 5)		Political Debate (Live)		News		Nightline
WGGB	40	29 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Politicel Debate (In Stereo Live)				Spin City	Spin City
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	★★ "Broken Arrow" (1996, Adventure) John Travolta. (In Stereo)		Frasier	Mad Abt. You			★★★ "Octopussy" (1983)
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Fox Your Eyes Only" (1981, Adventure) Roger Moore. Carole Bouquet.				Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Confession"
A&E	69	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Point of View"		Biography "Jerry Urbach"		American Justice: Stalker			Newsstand	Sports	Moneyline
CNN	43	23 Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Political Debate (Live)		Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show	Stein's Money
COM	63	30 Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★ "Better Off Dead" (1985, Comedy) John Cusack.				Justice Files		Law & Order "Confession"
DISC	71	Wild Discovery: Rhino		Wild Discovery: Elephant		On the Inside. Con Game		New Detectives		FBI Files (N)		Sportscenter
ESPN	45	Baseball Playoffs		Sportscenter		50 Greatest	Trivia Mania	50 Greatest	Wonderful World of Golf (N)			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Her Hidden Truth" (1995, Drama) Kellie Martin.				Makeover	Sex, What Kike
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Makeover	Real World	Real World	Making-Video	TRL (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	2Gether	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Balmen	Balman	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
SCIFI	65	Sliders "Double Cross"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Balman	Balman	Balman	Balman	Amazing Science of Sports		Traume: Life in the ER
TLC	49	28 Life After Death		Traume -- Life in the ER		Traume: Life in the ER				Amazing Science of Sports		ER "Greene Wth Envy"
TNT	25	ER "Be Still My Heart"		Pretender "The Dragon House"		★★ "Striptease" (1996, Comedy-Drama) Demi Moore.				Bull "Sins of the Father" (N)		Strip Poker	Martin
USA	47	Walker, Texas Ranger "Rodeo"		JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Buntshanft"		"Outlaw" (2000, Action) Stephen Baldwin. (In Stereo)				Sex and City	G-String Divas
HBO	33	(5:30) ★★ "I'll Do Anything" (1994) Nick Nolte				★★★ "Ever After: A Cinderella Story" (1998) Drew Barrymore				★★½ "Lake Placid" (1999) Bill Pullman.		★★ "Nice Guys Sleep Alone" (1999, Comedy)	"Other Men's"
MAX	35	(4:45)		★★½ "Pacific Heights" (1990) Michael Keaton.		★★½ "Sleeping With the Enemy" (1991) Julia Roberts				★★ "Nice Guys Sleep Alone" (1999, Comedy)		★★★ "Regeneration" (1997)
SHOW	95	★★½ "Once a Thief" (1996, Drama) Sandrine Holt. (In Stereo)				★★½ "The Blair Witch Project" (1999 Horror)		Movie News		Beggars and Choosers		★★★ "Regeneration" (1997)

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO, YOU'RE SAYING I CAN HANG A BROKEN DOOR HINGE ON THE WALL AS "ART"? I PUNNO
ARE YOU QUESTIONING ME?! I'M THE HOST OF THIS SHOW, PAL! YOU DON'T-- SETTLE DOWN, BUCKY.
"SETTLE DOWN"? "SETTLE DOWN" IS EASY FOR YOU TO SAY, PINKY. YOU AREN'T DEALING WITH THESE IDIOTS! IF I WEAR ONE MORE STUPID--
CUT. CUT. CUT.
CHANNEL 99 TECHNICAL DIFFICULTIES

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I HID THE EMERGENCY FLASHLIGHTS SO NO ONE CAN PLAY WITH THEM.
WHO PLAYS WITH FLASHLIGHTS? THAT'S THE DUMBEST THING I'VE EVER HEARD.
THE SHORT JEDI WILL DIE FIRST.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ, DO YOU EVER WONDER WHAT MAKES US AND WE ARE?
AND BY "ARE" YOU MEAN...?
SAMMY.
VERNE, THERE ARE SOME THINGS WE JUST WEREN'T MEANT TO UNDERSTAND.)
PARK PLACE!.. PARK PLACE!.. CAN'T YOU GNOMES READY?

Robotman By Jim Meddick

YOU HAVE BEEN BROUGHT BEFORE THE TRIBUNAL OF GAMMA-QUADRA--IS BECAUSE YOUR UNIQUE APPETITE FOR FREEDOM INTERESTS US...
OUR TASK IS TO DETERMINE IF YOU SHALL BE RETURNED TO CAPTIVITY IN OUR ZOO OR BE OFFERED A CHANCE TO WIN FREEDOM IN OUR GLADIATORIAL ARENA.
IN THE MEANTIME, YOU WILL BE FITTED WITH A MIND PROBE THAT WILL TORTURE YOU.
WAIT? WHY THE MIND PROBE?
BECAUSE WE WANT TO SEE HOW MANY SOAP CLICHÉS WE CAN CRAM INTO ONE CARTOON.
TO BE CONT

Robot and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

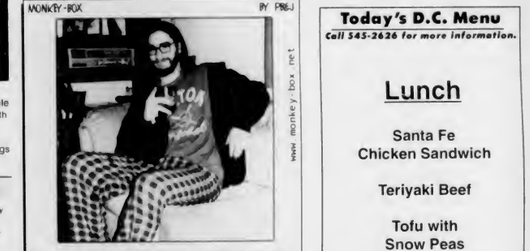
Robotman By Jim Meddick

YOU FEAR YOUR LOVE LIFE IS "UNHEALTHY" OR "ABNORMAL"
LET ME ASSURE YOU, THROUGH MY PRACTICE I'VE ENCOUNTERED MORE EXTREME PECULIARITIES.
THERE IS ONE INDIVIDUAL WHO WILL REMAIN NAMELESS. A HIGHLY RESPECTED, POWERFUL MAN, YET HE TAKES PLEASURE IN APPLYING YOGURT TO HIS NAKED TORSO, THEN PARADING AROUND HIS OFFICE ON A HOBBY HORSE
CLICK TUMBLE TUMBLE TUMBLE

Dilbert By Scott Adams

HELEN, I'M TRANSFERRING YOU TO THE TEMPORARY ZOMBIE DIVISION.
YOU WILL BE WITH OTHER PEOPLE WHO ARE PLANNING WEDDINGS, RAISING BABIES AND DIVORCING.
SHE TOOK MY DOG.
ALL THE GOOD PLACES ARE BOOKED

MONKEY-BOX BY PABLO



DURING A MORE RELAXED SESSION AT THE NORTH POLE, SANTA INVITED ME OVER TO SIT ON HIS LAP. © 2000

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may have a tendency to be long-winded and otherwise overly indulgent today when others give you the floor. Keep it simple!
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You can best assert yourself today by letting go of the past, disposing of prejudices, and moving ahead with a renewed perspective.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be called upon to be unbiased and impartial when it comes to a decision affecting many others around you today.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You needn't be harsh and critical today, even when you tell it like it is. There are times when a little tact goes a long way!
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You should be able to provide a friend or loved-one with precisely what he or she wants at this time
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You'll be recognized for your ability to change course on the spot and to improvise your way out of tricky, potentially hazardous situations.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You'll find yourself getting along much better with rivals and competitors today. This is a phase during which you have much in common.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your interests are turning to those things that can bring you far greater rewards than you have been used to in the past. Shift gears; go for it!
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Money matters are not to be overlooked today, even though any financial juggling you've planned may not be able to be concluded at this time.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Some may mistake your independence for arrogance today – but others will recognize you as the leader you are. It's time to share the wealth
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Use your imagination today and you'll satisfy someone who is making unusual demands. In the end, what pleases you will please him or her, too!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – While it is accepted that there is strength in numbers, today you may find that you stand the best possible chance for success by doing things on your own.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 77 LOW: 50	HIGH: 74 LOW: 52	HIGH: 70 LOW: 48

Quote of the Day

"I hate going to class; it takes up too much of my time."
–Matt Sacco

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch
Santa Fe Chicken Sandwich
Teriyaki Beef
Tofu with Snow Peas
Vegetable Pot Pie (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

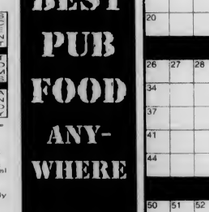
Dinner
Roast Turkey
Fried Shrimp
Ratatouille Polenta Pie (vegan)
Cheese Ravioli (vegan) (Worcester)

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

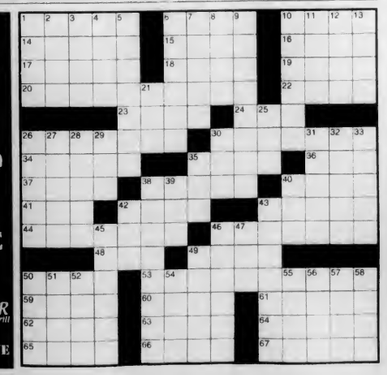
ACROSS
1 Nosh break
6 Holiday preparers
10 Astronaut Armstrong
14 Luau welcome
15 Bellow
16 Movie lioness
17 Scott
18 Communist Bonnbeck
19 Nursery color
20 Wrestling hold
22 Detest
23 New York canal
24 Forest mother
26 Improperly
30 Slant tree
34 Mine entrances
35 Ace or king
36 Shade
37 Markdown
38 Black-tongued dogs
40 Animation
41 Expression of surprise
42 Senator Cranston
43 Kitchen tool
44 Bunch of flowers
46 Junctions
48 — cheese
Nesting
49 Daddy
50 "Do — others"
53 Saloon job
58 Harvest
59 All excited
61 Maria and Liesl
62 Not at risk
63 African antelope
64 Law
65 — and crafts
66 Toward sunrise
67 Students' tables

DOWN
1 Mascara target
2 Armada
3 Carol
4 Restaurant employee
5 Bit of lace
6 KJM target
7 Stanza
8 Tickled Muppet
9 Defames
10 Dewey —
Donald Duck
11 Director Kazan
12 Gets a jolly
13 Geese or Tahoe
21 Before, to a poet
25 Unusual
26 Stonewaller
27 Western state
28 Pierces to shore
29 Colorado
30 Uncooked
31 Chicago airport
32 Exterior
33 Sweetie pies
34 Beach picnic
36 Beach picnic
39 It's for horses!
40 Newscaster Rather
42 Turkish title
43 Stepped lively
45 Marries, secretly
46 Wire warning
47 Unctuous, to a priest
48 Urges
50 Bear Cat
51 At hand
52 Roosevelt's successor
54 Water, to Pedro
55 Kind of ranch
56 Pupil's site
57 Scratch
58 Fetches

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10 10 00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



BEST PUB FOOD ANY-WHERE
The HANGAR Pub and grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryon Smith
Photo Technician	Brian McDermott
Copy Editor	Matt Depres
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak, Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff	Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, October 3, 2000 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass splits weekend pair;
Homestand to start on Saturday

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Unlike the well-known song, the Massachusetts volleyball team is certainly happy that it will be a little while before they have to be on the road again.

The Minutewomen finished their final road trip of the first two months of the season this weekend with a 1-1 record, falling in straight games to George Washington on Friday night but defeating Fordham on Sunday afternoon in just three games.

UMass finished its grueling first month of the season with an overall record of 5-9 with a 2-3 record in Atlantic 10 conference matches for the year.

After a month in which the Maroon and White played 13 of 14 matches in venues away from Curry Hicks Cage, any matches played at home would be a relief. Accentuating that fact is that the Minutewomen will play their next six contests and eight of their next nine in friendly territory here in Amherst.

"[Being home] feels wonderful," Head Coach Bonnie Kenny stated. "It's a great place to be, we won the one time we played here. We're looking forward to it. Nobody really complained about traveling, but we're really happy to be home."

GEORGE WASHINGTON (15-10, 15-2, 16-14)

The first match of this weekend pitted the Minutewomen against the Colonials, a team who stood at 10-3 before they faced the Maroon and White, and UMass fell to GW in straight sets. Rebecca Hasson led the Minutewomen, supplying them with 12 kills, seven blocks, and six digs in the three game match, but it was far from enough to stop Tracee Brown and the high-powered Colonials.

"George Washington is a pretty experienced team. I give them a lot of credit, they're a pretty nice team," said Kenny.

Brown, who just yesterday was named A-10 volleyball's player of the week, led GW with 25 kills for the contest, and posted a .590 hitting percentage in her 39 attempts.

Other contributors for UMass included Jen Davis, who downed six kills, and Ismarie Lluvet, who pulled up nine digs in the three-game match.

UMASS (15-10, 15-12, 15-8)

The second match of this weekend proved more prosperous for the Minutewomen, as they downed the Rams in straight sets. Lauren Vander Veen played a huge role in leading the Maroon and White as she posted 10 kills in 13 attacks with just two errors, a career-high .615 hitting percentage.

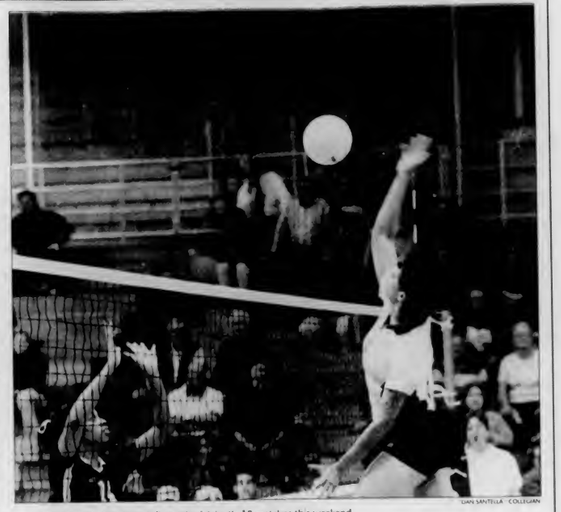
"Fordham is a much improved team, we had to play well to beat them and we did," Kenny commented. "I think we played better as the match went on, and Lauren Vander Veen came in well for us. She's doing a lot more than just hitting. She had some good blocks against GW, she recovered some nice defensive hits versus Fordham."

Both co-captains played pivotal roles in the Maroon and White's triumph, as Hasson had a team leading 22 kills for UMass, and Lluvet chipped in with 14 digs of her own. Also stepping up for the Minutewomen was senior Jenni Drennan, who led the Minutewomen with 52 assists and 15 digs.

Also standing out for the Minutewomen was freshman Lindsay Bailey. "She's a physical player that is coming into her own. She was effective attacking balls for us," Kenny said. "She presented a good block for our opponent, which from our outside front was good to see. It's a little sporadic at times, but she's learning what she needs to do."

Next up for the Minutewomen is Duquesne on Saturday night at Curry Hicks Cage at 7 p.m., the first game of the long-awaited homestand.

"We can concentrate on us for the next few days instead of our opponent. We can't waste any opportunities at home."



DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN

The UMass volleyball team split a pair of Atlantic 10 matches this weekend.

UMass fares well at North/South

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's water polo team headed to Princeton, NJ this past weekend looking to extend its season high eight game-winning streak to twelve at the North/South Invitational.

This was easier said than done, however, especially with a game against Navy waiting in the balance. Things started off well enough for 10th ranked UMass as they easily brushed aside George Washington 17-3 before squeaking by Bucknell 15-11, setting up the much awaited grudge match with Navy.

On Sept. 3, the Midshipmen edged the Minutemen 3-2 despite six saves from junior goalie J.R. Vanderwall.

"We're looking to beat them this time," said sophomore Chad Arnold before Saturday's game. "We're more established now, especially offensively. It was one of the first times we played together and we were still getting established as a team."

Sadly, UMass could not reverse the result on Saturday night as they dropped an 8-6 decision in double overtime.

Despite the setback, UMass rebounded on Sunday to beat tournament hosts, No. 16 Princeton 10-4 and improve its record of 13-3.

"We played really well as a team all weekend. Nobody really stood out in any one game, it was a total team effort," said Arnold.

UMass started the tournament strongly by defeating the Colonials of George Washington 17-3. Sophomore Ricardo Puig led the way for the Minutemen with a hat trick while juniors Greg Trayer, Mike Foley, Adam Moore and Carlos Ramos each added a pair of goals in the romp. Goalie J.R. Vanderwall also contributed to the attack with an assist as well as making five saves in net. Freshman Rodrigo Gonzalez also made five saves in relief of Vanderwall in the Minuteman goal.

There was no resting for Coach Russ Yarworth's men, as they were right back into the pool to take on the Bucknell Bison. Despite giving up four goals to senior Tate Greditzer and a hat trick to junior Ryan McCarthy, the Minutemen held on for a 15-11 victory.

Once again Vanderwall led the way for UMass, making seven saves as well as picking up his second assist in as many games. Carlos Ramos carried the load at the other end of the pool for the Minutemen, collecting four of his team high nine goals over the weekend. Moore, Foley, and sophomore Justin Houck each added a pair of goals as the Minutemen added their winning streak to a season high ten games.

"We did what we had to do to win the first game (against GW) but we didn't play strong defense against Bucknell and we let them back into the game. Luckily we were able to hold on," said Arnold who had three goals and three assists over the weekend.

Now the stage was set and revenge was on the mind of each and every UMass player as they headed back to the pool for their third and final game of the night against No. 15 Navy. However, the Midshipmen sunk UMass with a pair of goals in the second overtime giving them an 8-6 victory.

Greg Trayer tied the game at six with just four-teen seconds left in regulation but it was not enough as junior Jason Duffie scored four times and senior captain Sean Foster added three for the Midshipmen. For the third straight game Foley scored two goals and Vanderwall once again put forward a strong performance in goal making nine saves. His counterpart Nick Hill made six saves for the Midshipmen.

Despite not allowing Navy a man-up situation throughout the game and scoring three key goals in the fourth quarter, the Minutemen were not able to even the all-time series with Navy.

"In the first half we played a good set offense but in the second half and overtime we became stagnant

Turn to WATER POLO, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Adam Moore and the UMass men's water polo team fared well at the North/South Invitational this weekend.

UMass takes bite out of Terriers in 7-0 sweep

By Elena Panesis and Andy Vogt
Collegian Correspondents

Coming off an impressive showing against the University of Hartford, the Massachusetts men's tennis team looked towards Boston University as a tune-up for their Thursday showdown against Boston College. After yesterday's performance by the Minutemen, the Eagles are definitely going to have their hands full.

The Maroon and White proved that they are a force to be reckoned with after a 7-0 trouncing of the Terriers, the team's second consecutive shutout. The Minutemen again disposed of their opposition with little difficulty, as junior Steve Prisco needed only three sets to take care of his opponent. Prisco defeated the Terriers' Adam Siegal 6-7, 6-2, 6-1.

In other action, junior captain Todd Champeau improved his record to 4-1 by disposing of BU's John Debbiak 6-0, 7-6. Freshman Brent Davis continued his streak of success by breezing by Geoff Wagner, 6-2, 6-1. Aron Gortman, another new edition to this year's team, cruised 6-1, 6-1, in his match against the Terriers' Jason Vinoles. Sophomore Will Shaw and senior captain Bill Greener also came out victorious in their respective matches.

Head coach Judy Dixon was especially pleased with Prisco's performance, considering he had to come back from a one-set deficit to win his match. She commented that this was really beneficial to the team as the Minutemen were able to watch Prisco "fight to win."

In doubles matches, the teams of Prisco/Davis and Gortman/Rory Theis dominated their opponents, as both tandems won 8-0. The Terriers won their only match of the day as Siegal and Dan Weinstein held off Shaw/Champeau, 8-3.

It was another dominating performance by the Maroon and White, who so far are pleased with their play during the young season. Greener spoke highly of the impressive play by the freshmen in doubles matches, saying "they're all holding their own and we'll need them in the big matches down the road."

Champeau agrees that the young players have been outstanding. "They're not playing like freshmen. They don't show any nervousness and seem adjusted."

Thursday's match against the Eagles in Chestnut Hill will be no cakewalk, however. Boston College is 2-0 on the season as well, with wins against these same Terriers and the University of New Hampshire. The Maroon and White realize that their opposition this time will be a step up from their prior competition. The Eagles, led by freshman Justin Slattery, won't be brought down easily.

"We're not heavily favored going into this match. It's definitely going to be a tight one," said Champeau. "It's not like playing the University of Hartford or even Boston University. We felt more confident going into those matches."

"We have to be prepared for this one," said Greener. "They're a formidable opponent and we're going to have to work tough in practice [to beat them]. They're a solid team right down the line. They have a great deal of depth. This will definitely be our first test for the more difficult matches to come."

"It might even come down to who wins the doubles point," Dixon said, implying that the singles matches are going to be closely contested. Nevertheless, she is pleased with the season so far, saying she is impressed with the development and maturity levels of her young team. "Now the schedule will start to pick up, but so far I'm pleased with what we've put together."

NBC does wrong with Sydney 2000

Tehani Schneider
Collegian Staff

This is the final installment of a seven-part commentary on Sydney 2000

The Olympics are finally over.

What's that you say? The Olympics? Didn't they end two weeks ago? Oh, you mean, the SUMMER Olympics?? Hey, weren't they this summer? How did we (Americans) do again? We got the most gold medals, right?

And that, in a nutshell, best describes these games. Not from the vantage point of the athletes, of course, but for the greater part of America, and I'm sure, the majority of you, my fellow students, on campus. Quick, I'll give ten bucks to the first person who can tell me who Lenny Krayzelburg is.

I don't blame any of you for not watching. The main thrill of watching sporting events originates from viewing them live, and not knowing the outcome beforehand. It creates tension, drama, suspense and surprise – all the factors that we demand to be entertained. So, it's no wonder that these games received the lowest ratings in 32 years. Lucky me. I was obligated to tune in every night when all I really wanted was to tune out. Who wants to watch events at night that occurred fifteen hours before, when the details were sketched out in broad detail all day long in every news medium? Sure, it would have been different to have actually been there, but since I couldn't make it to kangaroo country, I had to make do with the brief updated news flashes from Sydney on ESPN every morning before I could look forward to seeing Bob Costas preen for the cameras every night.

For this last installment, I'm going to offer a strict commentary on what I personally thought of these games. I will focus mostly on NBC's coverage as best as I can without having to make a mad dash for the nearest toilet. This will not be a summary of the immense accomplishments of the world's best, as I'm sure you've already heard countless times before. Or maybe you haven't. I wouldn't be surprised. No, I'm not going to waste my time, or yours, getting nostalgic over events that you have no recollection of, or even care to read about where some of you are concerned. Besides, didn't I already do that in my previous installments?

Quite frankly, I have several gripes about these games and to express them, it also just won't do to revel in the glory past. So, unlike before, I won't give belated results – two days after an athlete's tremendous accomplishment when they've already boarded a plane back home – and I

Turn to OLYMPICS, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily

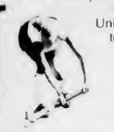
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 21 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, October 4, 2000

The ever-changing Madonna tanks on her latest album, Music. Read our review of the Material Girl in today's Arts.

ARTS p. 6

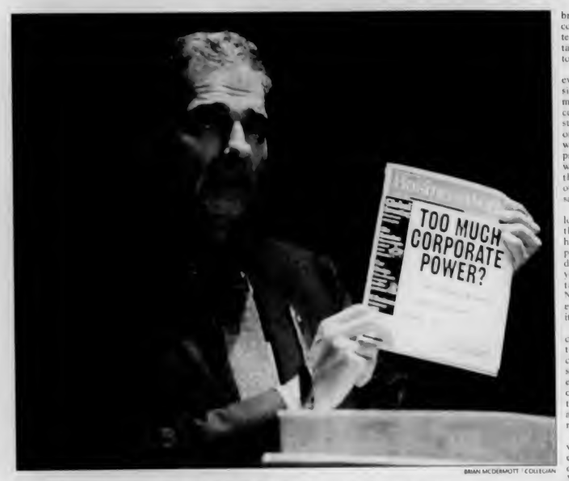
Anke Bruemmer and the Massachusetts field hockey team host Boston University tonight.



SPORTS p. 16

Nader denounces corporate power...

A call for student action



BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN

Green Party presidential candidate Ralph Nader spoke at the Fine Arts Center yesterday at 11 a.m.

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

Students need to develop critical minds to understand how the concentration of power in American politics is affecting their lives, Ralph Nader, Green Party Presidential candidate, said yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

Speaking to a mostly student audience, Nader denounced the corportization of the democratic process and accused corporate greed of invading every aspect of life. Nader called on students to retake their country from corporate interests.

"It's extremism for corporations to ruin your country, contaminate your environment, commercialize your childhoods," said Nader. "It's extremism for corporations to deny you health care, to rip you off, to defraud you, to sell you dangerous products."

"It's not extremism to build a political party to put a stop to this," Nader said.

Student's low expectations keep them from participating in the democratic process and fulfilling their civic responsibilities, Nader said. This apathy is at an all time high, Nader said.

"You can't believe how low the expectations of college students has become. I've never seen it lower," said Nader. "That's how they control you, by your low expectation level."

Students lose serious discussion on campus issues, Nader said, because they lack access to broad channels of communication like television and don't take the initiative to demand it.

"Have you ever had a discussion as to why 15 million college and community college students don't have one thirty minute weekly television program discussing what's going on in their campuses other than sports?" said Nader.

"I look at UMass, lots of interesting things going on here but not one program. What does that say for your level of expectations?" said Nader. "You aren't even demanding it."

Nader called for students to recognize their civic duties, and said the principal education platform of his party centered education around civic responsibilities.

"We are not working hard enough for our democracy," said Nader, "we have to make time in our lives for our civic duties, or we lose our democracy, our country, and our consciousness."

The consequence of not participating in democracy, Nader said, is that you allow the two ruling political parties to become indentured to the same pot of corporate money. Instead of looking after people's interests, Nader said, politicians are beholden to corporate interests.

The only way to take back control of the government, Nader said, is for people to look at their own issues and not compromise them by voting for the politician who least compromises them. Instead, said Nader, take the initiative to fight for those issues yourself.

"This campaign is really about a shift in power," Nader said, "historically, only when people in their respective roles as voters, consumers, and workers, only when they got more power did they get justice. Only when they took power away from the few who have most of the power and make the decisions for the many for the benefit of themselves, only when that happens has change occurred."

UMass Students for Nader organized the event and addressed the audience before Nader spoke. Frank Borgers, UMass professor and labor activist, and Lea Stapleton, UMass undergraduate and Nader campaigner, spoke on the power of the student activist movement.

"By ignoring the politics of disillusionment, the politics of apathy and cynicism, we can achieve unthinkable and unimaginable goals," said Borgers.

Nader and the Green Party represent the goals of student activists said Borger. To achieve these goals people need representatives who will bring real issues to the forefront of politics.

"We need to bring the political discussions back to the issues people care about: health care, a living wage, the environment, educational reform. we need to give this democracy back to the people," said Stapleton.

The media and many democrats argue that voting for Nader is a vote for Bush, Borgers said. But the difference between Bush and Gore on important social and trade issues is so minimal, a vote for Gore might as well be a vote for Bush, Borger said.

"If you look at economic issues, consumer, environmental, trade, labor, civil liberties, and social service issues facing this country, it barely matters whether you vote for Bush or Gore, they agree on the substance of most of these issues," said Borger, "check their voting records, check their political platforms."

Rene Gonzalez, UMass undergraduate in legal studies, and member of UMass for Nader, outlined the ideals the Green Party stood on.

"We want a women's right to choose," said Gonzalez, "We want to abolish the death penalty. We want to end corporate dominance of our lives. We want to abolish racism, sexism, homophobia and all other racist practices forever. We want economic justice for us and others in the world. We want living wages and health care for all regardless of income. We also want a safe and healthy environment. We want peace, no more war. We want more social and economic spending and less spending on military products. And most of all we want a true democracy and equality in this country. And if the two political parties are not willing to give this to us, the hell with them."

Brian Sandberg, UMass undergraduate, and

Turn to NADER, page 2

Visitors towed during speech

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

At 11 a.m. on Oct. 3, Green Party Presidential Candidate Ralph Nader graced the campus of the University of Massachusetts, yet he was not alone. The UMass Campus Parking Services also decided to make an appearance as numerous cars were ticketed and towed.

"All of the metered spaces, lots and the parking garage were filled with citizens and students from the community who came to here Nader speak, and yet at least 17 cars were ticketed and towed," said UMass graduate student Bill Hesse.

Overall frustration was voiced by students and community members when Hesse made an announcement about the parking problem during the question and answer session that followed Nader's speech.

"I was moved to the front of the line, and when I made comment of what had occurred I was encourage to press the issue further," said Hesse.

As a result of what transpired with the parking situation, Hesse moved that this issue should be addressed.

"People started cheering when we started talking about taking action. And so tomorrow night at the organization at UMass for Nader, we're going to meet and discuss or appeal towards Parking Services," said Hesse.

"We've encouraged people to make phone calls and write letters in order to appeal these tickets as a group and we're also contacting the press as well as the President of the School [President William Bulger]," he added.

Parking tickets and towing were just a small part of the topics discussed yesterday morning. There was also an overall sense of frustration amongst Nader supporters. As Nader spoke to UMass students, Republican Presidential nominee George W. Bush and Democratic Presidential nominee Al Gore were preparing for their debates, which were scheduled to take yesterday at UMass – Boston. However one general difference between the two schools was made apparent: UMass Boston had two

Turn to PARKING, page 2

Homophobic graffitti, Alcohol, top cop log

By Melissa Hammel and Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department saw an increase in arrests this week with a great deal of alcohol related crimes reported on campus.

On September 26, Jeffery Schoman a 22-year-old resident of Sharon was arrested for speeding and driving while under the influence of alcohol. Jim Lyons, the spokesman for the UMPD, explained that at 1:00 a.m. a police officer was passed by a motor vehicle going "well over the speed limit."

He explained that, the police officer tried to stop the vehicle but was unable to do so until the car finally stopped for a red light. When the officer issued a field sobriety test, he found the driver to be intoxicated. Schoman was arrested for speeding and for driving while intoxicated.

There was a second arrest for driving under the influence on Friday the 29th. Aaron Bristol, a 19-year-old Bristol resident, was spotted by an officer in a marked car going the wrong way down a one-way street around the Southwest circle.

According to Lyons, when the officer stopped the vehicle, he noticed that the driver had slurred speech and he was not aware that he was driving illegally. The officer gave him a field sobriety test that included reciting the alphabet and standing on one leg.

"He basically flunked the field sobriety test, so he was taken to the station and charged," Lyons said. "He refused to take a Breathalyzer."

There was also an increased number of underage drinking arrests this week. On the 29th, at 8:30 p.m. a police officer observed two individuals removing two thirty packs of beer from the trunk of a Ford. The officer felt that the individuals seemed to be underage and upon checking their identification found them to be in possession of alcohol as minors. Erin Murphy, 19 of Bradford and Linsey Molesso, 19 of Haverhill were both arrested.

Also on the 29th at 9:50 p.m., police arrested David Slack, 19 of Blackstone, Paul McNair, 18 of Millville, and Masuzyo Chirwa, also 18 of Westborough on charges of possession of alcohol as minors. Police observed the three men in a gray vehicle while they were on patrol in lot 44. Upon turning the spotlight on the suspects they found them to be in possession of an open case of beer.

"The officer observed an open case of Bud Light beer, they [the minors] were in the process of transferring cans into a dark backpack," Lyons said.

In addition, the UMPD also arrested two students in Lot 29 for possession of alcohol by minors. Michael S. McCarthy, 18, of Haverhill and Jonathan Frizzell, 18, of Bradford were observed putting beer into knapsacks.

In Grayson dormitory, police responding to a noise complaint on the 30th at 1:00 a.m. observed a Kyle Benner, 18, of Friendship, ME with a can of beer in his left pocket. The officers asked for identification, and although Benner did not have it he admitted that he was underage. The police verified his identification and he was arrested.

Police also made an arrest on 28th, dealing with a warrant to search a dormitory room in

Turn to POLICE, page 2

Donate uneaten DC meals for hunger

By Sasha Senderovich
Collegian Staff

If you are one of the many students who is going home this weekend, it is not likely that you will eat your meals at the dining commons on Columbus Day. Then, you have a chance to help the hungry – and all you will have to do, is to donate a meal that you would not eat anyway.

This coming Columbus Day coincides with the single holiest day in the Jewish calendar – Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. On Yom Kippur, Jewish people around the world dedicate the day to prayer and fasting as an act of asking for forgiveness of sins.

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, making a reference to the Biblical book of Isaiah, which is read on Yom Kippur, explained, "A reason we fast is to encourage us to share our bread with the hungry. Fasting itself is not enough. Only when our fasting leads us to take action about hunger, poverty, homelessness and oppression does it truly fulfill its purpose."

This year, through collaboration of Tzedek Hillel, Oxfam America and UMass Dining Services, it is possible that these uneaten meals be donated for the causes of hunger relief. Of course, one needs not be Jewish to donate their meal – the problem of hunger does not operate solely on racial, ethnic or religious boundaries. It affects 1.3 billion people in this world – 24,000 of whom die daily from hunger and other preventable causes. If nothing else, the problem of hunger is very much a universal concern.

Tzedek Hillel, part of UMass Hillel, is a program committed to making initiatives involving community partnerships, advocacy, service and education in the area concerning poverty. UMass Amherst is one of the 17 campuses nation-wide to be involved in the Tzedek Hillel initiative. Oxfam America, part of Oxfam International, provides aid to fight poverty and injustice, and respond to humanitarian causes in 115 countries around the world.

This year's collaboration is also made possible by the University's Dining Services, thus allowing for many of the student's meals to be donated for the causes of hunger relief.

Dan Yagudin, a UMass junior who initiated the drive for meal donation, commented, "I knew that this was being done in other universities. I thought that doing it here would be a great act of 'repairing the world.'"

If you are on a UMass meal plan, you can participate in this hunger relief initiative by signing your name on the sign up sheets available at the Jewish Life table in the Campus Center on Wednesday, Oct. 4 and Thursday, Oct. 5. Only one meal per student can be donated. Please call 548-6842 for more information.

KELLY TYRRELL COLLEGIAN

Students gather to remember a friend

Students gathered yesterday near the campus pond for a memorial service in honor of UMass student Lisa Mantia. Mantia was killed last week in a motorcycle accident.

U Briefs

MASSPIRG to call President

Along with other PIRG chapters across the state, Five College area students and members of UMass MASSPIRG will be calling the Clinton Administration to voice concern about the protection of the Wild Forests. The call in will be taking place on October 5, 6 the Campus Center from 11 AM to 4 P.M. For more information, call Jason at 549-6844.

Professor to Speak at Food For Thought

Food For Thought Books announces the appearance of Professor Minisha Sinha of the University of Massachusetts. In her new book, The Counter-Revolution of Slavery, Sinha discusses the politics during the Southern Civil War era. She will appear on October 5, from 5-7 P.M. at Food For Thought Books. For more information, call Joan at 253-3452.

Four Gender Speakers Announced

The Five College Women's Studies Research Center announces the appearance of four speakers. On Monday, October 23 at 4:30 P.M., Karen Offen, a Senior Scholar at Stanford University's Institute for Research on Women and Gender, will give a talk titled "Thoughts on Writing a Comparative History of European Feminisms." On Tuesday, October 24 at 7:30 P.M., Chantal Zabus, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the University Catholique de Louvain, Belgium, will give a Colloquium entitled "Between Rites and Rights: Excision in Women's Postcolonial Experiential Texts." On Monday, October 30 at 4:30 P.M., Becky Wai-Ling Packard, an assistant professor of educational psychology at Mount Holyoke College, will give a talk titled "Different Career Patterns: Seminal Motives from Cultural Background Influences on Women's Visions of Helping Others." Finally, on Tuesday, October 31 at 7:30 P.M., Lillian Corti, a Five College Women's Studies Research Associate from the University of Alaska Fairbanks, will give a Colloquium titled "Interracial Medeas: 20th-Century Fragments of an Ancient Myth." All talk will take place at 79/85 Green Street at the Five College Women's Research Center on the Mount Holyoke College campus. For further information, call Claire Chang at 538-2022.

Jessica May

Stretching Slinkies for Smiles

By Crystal Hoobs
The Utah Statesman (Utah State U.)

LOGAN, Utah - Tyson Kellis and Jeff Griffin, two freshmen at Utah State University, had their Slinkies that they needed to stretch 1.4 miles around campus Saturday morning. They met their goal to earn more than $1,500 in business pledges to donate to Operation Smile.

"We were so over prepared for this," Kellis said.

Kellis and Griffin had collected almost 800 Slinkies.

When I measured the distance we would have to cover, I came to about 7,184 feet, but we ended up having enough Slinkies to overlap a bit," Kellis said.

"I think it was would have had a straight away - we could have stretched the Slinky about three miles," Griffin said.

The path that they chose to stretch the Slinky on started at the QUAD in front of Old Main, went north between the Taylor Conference Center and the Geology building, turned east on 700 North until the Golden Toaster on 1200 East, turned south to 400 North, and then headed west back to the QUAD.

Kellis and Griffin decided to turn this idea of stretching duct-taped Slinkies into a service project when they thought of earning money for a charity organization.

"These boys started out wanting to hang a couple attached Slinkies out the window to see if it would touch the ground. The next thing I know they wanted to make a service project out of it," said Jasmin Charles, Kellis's resident assistant.

Local businesses such as Jilly Tube, Smithfield Chevron, Little Caesar's Pizza and Al's Sporting Goods have pledged money for each foot of Slinky that was stretched. A few other businesses outside of Cache County also pledged some money.

"Our business pledges total over 20 cents per foot," Kellis said.

These donations will be given to Operation Smile, a national organization that provides reconstructive surgery for people in third-world countries who have cleft palates and other major oral defects that make it hard to use their mouths.

parking

continued from page 1

days of classes cancelled in preparation for the debates.

"UMass Boston is losing half a million dollars to shut down their campus for two days, and UMass is gaining thousands of dollars by ticketing and towing citizens when Nader came to speak," said Lyons.

When asked to comment on the events of the day, Parking Services was unavailable for comment.

The final outcome of the proposed appeals towards parking services has yet to be decided. The reps. will be just one on the agenda at today's UMass organization for Nader's meeting.

Yahoo! ads come under student attack nationwide

By Natalie Myers
The Post (Ohio U.)

(U-WIRE) ATHENS, Ohio – Yahoo!'s newest ads have evoked angry responses from some college students nationwide.

The ads, promoting Yahoo! messenger and Yahoo! mail, were designed as part of a campaign targeting college students. The ads were distributed to college newspapers nationwide, said Jackson Holtz, Yahoo! spokesperson. They were designed to be kind of quirky, edgy, and different, he said.

However, Yahoo!'s first ad, "Stoney – get over here quick! he's about to take her top off. – Bob," was one that did not impress some Ohio University students.

"I was surprised that anybody in this day and age would find it appropriate to use that type of advertising, especially after considering sexual harassment issues on college campuses," said Ohio University junior Kristin Tucker, president of the Feminist Majority. "I think it was highly inappropriate."

OU junior Matt Meyer, a member of Positive Action, agreed.

"It was really offensive," he said. "A majority of my friends thought it was wrong. I was really bothered by it."

In addition to students' personal reactions, anonymous individuals expressing anger with Yahoo!'s original advertisement placed imitation ads in some Sept. 28 editions of The Post.

The words, "Yahoo! Misogyner - The only people who use it support misogyny" were printed across the bottom of the mock advertisement.

Yahoo! did cancel the "Stoney" ad after receiving a small amount of negative feedback, Holtz said.

"We felt bad that some people might have been offended by it," he said.

Other newspapers across the nation, which are read by college students, have experienced problems with the ad as well.

One problem was that Yahoo! sent the ads directly to the printers, bypassing an opportunity for anyone to see them before they were inserted into the newspapers, said Charlie Lanter, editor of College Heights Herald, of Western Kentucky University.

The College Heights Herald did not run the advertisements after Lanter spoke with advisers and advertising managers. The paper did not use any of the series of three ads.

"I luckily our printer opened the box and looked at the ads, then faxed us a copy," Lanter said.

"The primary reasons we rejected them was because they didn't let us look at them first, and we didn't want to start an uproar around campus."

The College Heights Herald sent the insertions back to Yahoo! But received no response.

Holtz said according to the contract between Yahoo! and the advertising departments of the various newspapers, the advertisements did not have to go through a paper's staff for approval.

Nader

continued from page 1

BRIAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN

A Nader supporter donned a chicken outfit to protest the Green Party candidate's exclusion from last night's Presidential Debate held at the University of Massachusetts - Boston.

member of UMass for Nader said students at UMass are capable of making this kind of change.

"Imagine the collected creativity, genius, and power in this room, and what we can do with it," Sandberg said. "I'm not going to let some pompous politician who talks out of both sides of his mouth be my President," said Sandberg.

Students at the rally said Nader appealed to them, but they wanted to hear what Nader had to say before they would vote for them.

"He's more for the younger people and for women," said Nicole Corona, UMass sociology junior. "I don't know a lot about his campaign, that's why I'm here today."

police

continued from page 1

McNamara. While they were searching the room officers discovered a quantity of marijuana large enough to charge James Henderson, 18, of Harvard with possession of a class D substance with intent to distribute. He was also charged with possession of alcohol by a minor.

Lyons, the spokesman for the UMPD, mentioned that a great deal of police related action was not all together uncommon for the University.

"It is a busy time of the year for this type of offense," Lyons said.

University Child Care currently has preschool openings in the full day and flexible day programs. Child care tuition rates are based on a sliding fee scale determined by family size and household income. Currently, subsidies or child care vouchers are available through the University and other social service agencies. For more information about the program call
5 4 5 - 1 5 6 6

WORK STUDY $10/HR
Register your campus to vote and have fun too!
SCERA
(Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy) is looking for student canvassers and workers to register voters on campus. Hours are convenient, mostly afternoons and evenings, and the work is fun!
CALL JESS@5-0355
WEB: WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/SCERA
EMAIL: SCERA@STUAF.UMASS.EDU

PART-TIME POSITIONS
Located on the PVTA bus route, we offer convenient schedules to those looking to do some part-time office work
CLERICAL ASSISTANCE
Duties include gathering materials for mailing, packing boxes, copying papers, and other clerical tasks. Those selected need to be able to work at least 3 consecutive hours between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. on weekdays. Hours are available now.
WORD PROCESSING TECHNICIAN
This position requires word processing skills and attention to detail. Experience using Microsoft Word 97 for Windows will be helpful in working with our other word processing staff to complete a document conversion project. Both full-time and part-time temporary positions are available.
Call 413-256-0444 to have an application mailed to you.
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC.
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
E.O.E.

YAHOO! Travel Photo Contest

Show us your best travel shot!
Grand Prize
African Safari Package for Two
Two-week safari includes airfare, lodging, plus $2,000 cash!
First Place (3 winners)
Pair of Airline Tickets Anywhere in the World!
Second Place (3 winners)
Sony Digital Mavica Camera
Prizes provided by lonely planet
Two easy ways to enter:
enter online or enter by mail
Go to travel.yahoo.com for all the details.
Enter by October 31, 2000
YAHOO! Travel
travel.yahoo.com
No purchase necessary. and no on line entry necessary. You must be 18 years of age or older at the time of entry to enter. Contest begins at 12:01 AM PT on October 1st 2000 and ends at 11:59 PM on October 31, 2000. This contest is open to amateur photographers only. Photos that have been previously published, accepted for publication or are under consideration by other publications are not eligible. Void where prohibited by law. Contest subject to complete official rules. For full details and a copy of the official rules, send a self-addressed envelope to: Yahoo! Travel Photo Contest, PO Box 3294, Department A, St. Cloud, MN 56397. This contest is open to legal residents of the United States. Void in Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and foreign U.S. Military Installations. All travel companions must be eighteen (18) years of age or older. Employees of Yahoo!, Lonely Planet, their respective parents, their affiliates, subsidiaries, advertising and promotional agencies and the immediate family members of each are not eligible.
*Any city in the world serviced by a major U.S. based air carrier, not to exceed $3000 per ticket.

In the City of Angels, an unlikely crime: spandex theft

By Marla Dickerson
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES - The masked intruders burst into Ace Knitting Co. just before 11 p.m. They stuck a pistol to the head of the lone employee, bound his wrists with shoelaces, then sped away with a truckload of booty.

The target of their carefully woven scheme: bolts of spandex fabric.

Long the bane of the fashion police, the body-hugging fiber is now bedeviling local law enforcement. Armed gangs have stolen more than $2 million worth of the springy yarn and fabric from downtown textile mills over the last year, police say, making Los Angeles the nation's capital of spandex banditry. Industry veterans and insurance officials peg the regional numbers even higher, noting that the crimes have spread to nearby cities such as Vernon and Carson.

For those whose knowledge of spandex is limited to "Sweatin' to the Oldies," its theft might seem more like a public service than a felony. But thanks to advances in textile making, the stretchy stuff has shed its cheesy image to become one of the fashion world's most coveted fibers.

Designers adore it because it adds comfort, shape and wrinkle resistance to almost any fabric. Thieves prize it because the specialty yarn is worth six times the value of some commodity fibers. It is hard to trace and easy to fence in L.A.'s rough-and-tumble garment district, where some buyers are willing to look the other way.

"Fabric stolen tonight will be in some cutting room by morning," said L.A. apparel designer Melanie Apple. "That's what I used to think (about spandex)."

But she and others are now putting it into everything from jeans to tailored suits, thanks to the growing prowess of textile makers. Blending mere trace amounts of the fiber with cotton, linen, wool, even leather, yields comfortable fabrics that give gently without that sausage-stuffed look of old.

And in contrast to its cheap reputation, spandex is anything but. Expensive raw materials and a complex manufacturing process mean that DuPont Lycra, the gold standard, fetches around $9.50 a pound compared with $1.50 for run-of-the-mill synthetics such as polyester.

Now a proud spandex convert, Apple chose a Lycra-silk material to craft capri pants for her latest line. The imported fabric alone cost about $35 a yard, but she didn't blink.

"I won't even look at a fabric unless it contains Lycra," said Apple, whose fashions can be found in upscale boutiques such as Fred Segal. "My customers can't get enough of it."

So valuable is the Lycra franchise, in fact, that it became the target of an extortion attempt in 1989. Five employees at a DuPont plant in Argentina swiped manufacturing secrets, threatening to sell them to competitors unless the company coughed up $10 million. Authorities nabbed the culprits before they could make good on their threats, but only after a globe-trotting pursuit that involved the FBI and enough intrigue to fill a Tom Clancy novel.

Local spandex crooks might not be as sophisticated, but so far they've been a lot more successful. The Los Angeles area is teeming with hundreds of textile mills cranking out knit fabric for up-to-the-minute fashions. Most are mom-and-pop operations run by Korean immigrants, which so far have proved easy pickings for with bandits.

LAPD Detective Steve Koman said aired gangs have committed about 30 heists in the last year. But industry veterans suspect the figures are much higher.

Knitting equipment salesman David Choi calculates that 20 percent of his 100 or so Korean customers have been hit for a total of nearly $5.5 million worth of inventory, much of it spandex, since he began keeping track last year. "And those are just the ones I know personally," said Choi, president of Sunter Textile Machinery, based in Gardena, Calif.

Byron Hubanks, an insurance adjuster in Glendale, Calif., who investigates claims for insurance companies, figures he has worked at least 50 such cases around Southern California over the last three years. With individual claims running as high as $600,000, he said, insurance companies have raised premiums and tightened underwriting standards considerably. Some are requiring mill owners to install expensive security systems while limiting payouts to $50,000 or less.

Hubanks suspects some of the "heists" may have been staged by struggling mill owners hungry for insurance proceeds. But with claims continuing to mount despite the hefty restrictions, he said he's convinced the crime wave is no hoax.

"It seems like we're getting at least one new claim of this type a week," said Hubanks, owner of Hubanks & Kendall Inc. "I don't see any slowdown."

Authorities say at least two organized gangs as well as opportunistic, textile mill employees, may be behind the spree.

Working with rented or stolen trucks in small teams of three to six people, they usually strike at night when few workers are on duty. Startled employees are sometimes forced at gunpoint to help load heavy bolts of yarn and 40-pound bolts of fabric into the getaway vehicle. Intruders have threatened and roughed up some factory workers, but so far no one has been seriously injured.

Yong Chui Park suspects a former employee may have had a hand in a recent spandex burglary at his small Los Angeles mill. In late July, someone circumvented his alarm system, broke into his locked plant and made off with more than $300,000 worth of yarn, fabric and spare knitting machine parts.

So brazen were the culprits that they brought along a six-pack of Corona beer to wet their whistles while they worked. Park found little more than the empty bottles in his cleaned-out factory the next day. Insurance will cover only $40,000 of his loss. Authorities have made no arrests.

Buil Textile, USA's Yong Chui Park with spools of spandex fiber. Burglars recently took $300,000 in yarn and parts from his L.A. mill.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Six-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Hobson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jaime Gorlewsky-Satz Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Sendersikh Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trimble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobelanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirchner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Marcewski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Simanski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargarita Assistant Business Manager
Kane Beuh Assistant Advertising Manager

DRINK UP LOG ON FLY FREE! YOU COULD
Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html to see if you're a WINNER!
You could WIN FREE Tickets anywhere Southwest Airlines Flies!
southwest.com a symbol of e-freedom
Available on specially marked Coca-Cola Bottles/Cans inside campus vending machines.
HOW TO PLAY
1. Detach Official Game Piece from Coca-Cola bottle/can.
2. Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen.*
3. If your Official Game Piece reveals a winning message, you win the prize specified (subject to verification). See Official Rules for claim info.
*If you do not have internet access and would like to find out if your game piece contains a winning message, mail your entry original Official Game Piece (after making a copy for your records to submit upon request) along with a plain piece of 3 x 5" paper on which you have hand printed your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4932, Blair, NE 68009-4932, to be received by 11/30/2000. Limit one game piece per envelope. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE.
COCA-COLA/SOUTHWEST AIRLINES "DRINK UP! LOG ON! FLY FREE!" SWEEPSTAKES
OFFICIAL RULES NO PURCHASE NECESSARY
1. HOW IT WORKS. Official Game Pieces will be affixed to 12 oz cans and 20 oz. bottles of Coca-Cola Classic, available while supplies last, in specially marked vending machines on participating school campuses and via Blue Art. If your can or bottle does not have a sticker affixed or if your sticker contains any message other than stated below, or Blue Art, confirming the words "DRINK. LOG ON. FLY FREE." or blank, you are not eligible to claim a prize. 2. HOW TO PLAY. Beginning 12:01 am (ET) on 9/1/2000 through 11:59 pm (ET) on 12/31/2000, visit southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen. If your Official Game Piece reveals the words "WINNER WINNER FREE!", you will be part of game long tech Southwest Airlines vouchers. If your Game Piece reveals the words "Try Again", it was not a winner. Void where prohibited by law. Open to legal residents of the 48 contiguous United States and the District of Columbia, 18 years of age or older at time of entry. SUBJECT TO VERIFICATION. See Rule #3 to claim a prize. • If you do not have access to the internet and would like to find out if your school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4932, Blair, NE 68009-4932, to be received by 11/30/2000. Limit one game piece per envelope. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE. 3. HOW TO CLAIM A PRIZE. To claim, mail your entire original Official Game Piece along with a plain piece of 3 x 5" paper on which you have hand printed your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4932, Blair, NE 68009-4932 to be received by 11/30/2000. SOUTHWEST AIRLINES TICKET CLAIMS MUST BE SENT VIA REGISTERED MAIL ONLY. Free product claims may be sent via first-class mail. Limit one claim per envelope. • NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO PLAY. For a free chance to play, hand print your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number on a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mail, with free class privilege affixed, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Requests, P.O. Box 4934, Blair, NE 68009-4934, to be received by 12/30/2000. Limit one request per envelope. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE. 4. VERIFICATION. All claims are subject to verification. Decisions of the judges are final. All materials submitted become the sole property of The Coca-Cola Company and will not be returned. Any person who is ineligible, mutilated, altered, duplicated, tampered with, contains printing, typographical, mechanical or other errors, was not delivered legitimately, or was distributed where prohibited by law, is null and void. In the event of a printing error or computer error, neither The Coca-Cola Company, Coca-Cola Bottlers' participating retailers, nor their respective agents and agencies shall have any liability. If due to a printing, production or other error, more winning stickers are distributed or more prizes are claimed than are intended to be awarded for any prize level according to Rule #4, the intended prizes will be awarded in a random drawing from among all verified prize claims received for that prize level. In no event will recipient be obligated to award more than the stated number of prizes. Not responsible for late, lost, damaged, incomplete, illegible, postage due, misdirected mail or e-mail or technical malfunctions or software failures of any kind, including but not limited to, lost or unavailable Internet connections or e-mail, which may limit a user's ability to participate in the promotion. Sponsor reserves the right to cancel or modify the promotion if it is not capable of completion as planned. Sponsor reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to disqualify any individual it finds to be tampering with the entry process or the operation of the promotion or website or acting in violation of the Official Rules or any other promotion rules. 5. PRIZES. 4 OF AVAILABLE PRIZES APPROX. RETAIL VALUES & APPROX. ODDS OF WINNING INSTANTLY (INCLUDED SWEEPSTAKES PRIZES WILL NOT BE AWARDED): (3) Grand Prizes – a pair of round-trip Southwest Airlines tickets valid for travel to/from any destination within the continental United States serviced by Southwest Airlines ($650 per pair; 1:21,428 at 28); A random redemption for a free 6 pack of 12 oz. cans of Diet Coke (plus tax) ($2.49 ea. = $15); Limit one Grand Prize per household. Prizes consist of only those items specifically listed as part of the prize. 7. GENERAL RULES. Game starts on or about 8/1/2000 and will be generally available in specially marked vending machines until 10/15/2000 or while supplies last. Game open only to students enrolled in participating schools. Employees of The Coca-Cola Company, its bottlers, DPCSum, their affiliates, subsidiaries, advertising and promotion agencies, retailers and the families of each are not eligible. Void where prohibited by law. No substitution or transfer of prize permitted. All federal, state and local laws are the sole responsibility of winner. All federal, state and local taxes and regulations apply. Potential Grand Prize winners must sign and return an Affidavit of Eligibility/Release of Liability within 15 days of notification. Noncompliance within this time period may result in disqualification. Return of any prize/prize notification as undeliverable will result in disqualification. All travelers must possess required travel documents (e.g. valid photo ID) prior to departure. If a minor wins a Grand Prize, prize will be awarded in the name of a parent or legal guardian who must accompany minor on trip. Travel is subject to availability and certain blackout dates may apply. Travel must be completed within one year of notification. The Coca-Cola Company and its bottlers reserve the right to substitute prize of equal or greater value. Acceptance of prize constitutes permission to the sponsor and its agencies to use winner's name and/or likeness for purposes of advertising and trade without further compensation unless prohibited by law. By participating in this promotion entrants agree to be bound by the official rules and the decisions of the judges. By accepting prizes winners agree to hold sponsors, their respective directors, officers, employees and assigns harmless against any and all claims and causes of action of any kind for any injury or damage caused or incurred by the prize or participation in this promotion or use or redemption of any prize. Sponsors not responsible for any typographical or other errors in the printing, offering or announcement of any prize. 8. WINNERS. For a list of Grand Prize winners available after 10/31/2000 send a separate, self-addressed, stamped #10 envelope to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink up! Log On! Fly Free!" Winners, P.O. Box 4938, Blair, NE 68009-4938, to be received by 11/30/2000. 9. SPONSORS. The Coca-Cola Company and Southwest Airlines.
©2000 The Coca-Cola Company. "Coca-Cola" and the Contour Bottle design are registered trademarks of The Coca-Cola Company. ©2000 Southwest Airlines

All New. All Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt (just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
Limit one t-shirt per student.
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds. Your Campus. Free.

Cultural Study in Nepal
6 Credits
Winter Intersession 2001
December 26, 2000-January 19, 2001
Integrating classroom instruction with cultural appreciation and adventure, UConn's unique Cultural Study in Nepal program allows students to earn 6 academic credits. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students will learn about Nepal's language, culture, economy and ecology, and develop a research project tailored to their specific academic requirements.
For more information, visit us online at www.ce.uconn.edu/nepal.html, call Pat Harkins at 860-486-5985 or come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus.
OPEN HOUSES Tuesday, September 26, 7:00-9:00 p.m. Wednesday, October 4, 7:00-9:00 p.m. Saturday, October 14, 1:00-3:00 p.m.
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

NB absCence
Network plays hardball

Last night, the National Broadcasting Company (NBC to the laymen) did something most people consider unthinkable. NBC opted to carry the Major League divisional series game between the New York Yankees and the Oakland Athletics rather than broadcast the Presidential Debate between Republican candidate George W. Bush and Democratic candidate Al Gore.

While most people will point to this event as another step in America's increasing political apathy, the Collegian feels the decision is completely justified and applauds NBC's bravado.

First, the Presidential Debate was on every single channel other than NBC last night. ABC carried it. CBS carried it. Fox, CNN, MSNBC, CSPAN, PBS, CNBC, Fox News and a slew of others not named carried the debate. Anyone who has ever tried to watch something (else) while President Clinton was giving an important speech (say the State of the Union Address) knows just how frustrating this can be. You can flip threw the channels for what seems like hours and see the same exact footage being run on upwards of 20 stations.

Is this necessary? Probably not.

Was NBC's decision detrimental to the American political system as a whole? Definitely not.

The fact that NBC broadcasted a (trivial) baseball game rather than an (important) debate is not a sign of growing political apathy. It is merely a choice. That's right, it's a choice.

As much as the American people have a choice as to whom they want to run the country for the next four years, they should also have a choice as to what they want to watch on a Tuesday night. As difficult is it for some political zealots to believe, the Major League playoff game is more important to some people than the Presidential Debate ever will be. This rings especially true for the almost nine million people New York City residents who were likely tuned in to the Yankees game last night.

Now, the Collegian is not going to pretend that this was not about money in the end, because it absolutely was.

NBC broadcasted the playoff game simply because they felt It would draw higher ratings than the Presidential Debate. And who can blame them? New York City is the largest TV market in the country. For NBC to miss an opportunity to exploit an event almost assured of garnering high ratings in that area would be financially inexcusable.

Most people say that NBC had a social obligation to broadcast the debate. That these debates are the vital tool by which the voting public gets their information.

Well, guess what? You're wrong.

NBC is a corporation and they are in business to make money. If people have a problem with the social obligations of mass media, then the system as a whole needs to be addressed. As it is, NBC's decision should go unquestioned. They had every right to say, "Play Ball."

Homage to the Weird

RYAN BENHARRIS

People amaze me. I am literally astounded by the acts of people all over the world. Any time I see those "weird happening" stories on the news, I can't help but be completely disillusioned by the absolute stupidity of others. Chuck Shepard produces an Internet page with all sorts of stories of abnormal behavior. Thanks to Chuck, I have been informed of the really important issues around. I would like to use my column to, first of all, thank him for keeping me entertained, and secondly to be the liaison between the land of the college students and the world of the stupid. All of the following stories can be found on Shepard's web page at www.newsoftheweird.com.

Earlier this year, three fifteen-year old boys were rushed to Duke Hospital in North Carolina because they all had gunshot wounds in their legs. It sounds terrible to think about young adults being shot, but this wasn't your average, run of the mill shooting. No, it seems as though the three boys fired at each other so they could tell their friends "what it feels like to be shot."

Think about this for a second. You're fifteen-years old, and you're hanging out after school in Durham, NC. How do you come across the realization that you and your two friends absolutely need to shoot each other? What the most mind-boggling part about it happens to be, is the fact that all three of them were shot. You'd think that the first idiot would be the only one to take one for the team. I don't care how dumb you are. If you had half a brain you would realize that he's writhing in so much pain it would make you say, "Hmm, maybe that doesn't feel all warm and tingly. Maybe we shouldn't sacrifice our ability to walk." You would think that your friend, who's lying on the ground calling you a "bleeping, mother bleep, son-of-a-bleep," isn't enjoying it that much. That's not what the nitwit trio from North Carolina thought though. They had to feel the wrath of a twenty-two caliber as a cohesive unit. I'd love to hear what that third dude was thinking though. I know I'd be thinking something like "I'm gonna get shot! Run!" I'll bet he was a real brain surgeon, pondering, "I want chicken. I want liver…BANG!"

Shepard reports, "A man was convicted of attempted burglary in San Antonio, TX, after having been caught red-handed by police as he was removing burglar bars from the window of a beauty salon. He told the judge he was guilty of simple theft but not of the more serious crime of attempted burglary because he was not trying to break into the beauty salon; he was merely trying to steal the burglar bars to take home to put on his own windows to protect himself from burglars."

This guy will be nice and safe now. Stainless steel burglar bars that can only be opened by a key surround him. He's glad that no robbers can get in, but if he could only find some burglar bars that will fit over his ass in the shower, he'll be a hell of a lot happier.

Here's a story for all of you out there hoping to get a good job after school. "The city of Bombay, India, on a cleanup campaign, announced it had 70 job openings for rat catchers; it received 40,000 applications. Half of them were from college graduates."

I wonder how much a rat catcher gets paid. Well, I suppose if it's not enough, then you can always just eat what you seize.

Take this! "In 1996, a man pleaded guilty in Exeter, England to theft subsequent to his original charge of shoplifting from a liquor store. In the second theft, he had stolen the magnetic letters off the name board that was held up to his face when his mug shot was taken."

I've heard of kleptomania before, but that's just ridiculous. Everyone knows someone like this guy though. You knew him in high school. He was the kid who stole locks from the locker, "just because he could." You probably know the same kid right now, in college. He's the kid that steals those huge cereal dispensers from the dining hall, and gets irate when a food service employee catches him. He's the kid who says, "You don't need to find an RA. I can help you out." when you lock yourself out of your room. And he's the guy who you'll be all suspicious of when you're missing three pairs of panties.

I think this story is my favorite one. "Police in Tokyo arrested a woman for illegal interference with a man's business, charging her with calling him on the phone at work and then hanging up 16,000 times in a one-year period. She was angry that, after they had exchanged photos seeking a romantic introduction, he failed to call, which she thought was 'impolite.'"

Talk about the pot calling the kettle black. I'm not the politeness police or anything…but hanging up on someone is just uncalled for!

They may have some great football teams in Michigan, but their criminals aren't winning any championships for intelligence anytime soon. "The Ann Abort News crime column reported that a man walked into a Burger King in Ypsilanti, Michigan at 7:50am, flashed a gun and demanded cash. The clerk turned him down because he said he couldn't open the cash register without a food order. When the man ordered onion rings, the clerk said they weren't available for breakfast. The man, frustrated, walked away."

I guess I can relate to this guy's frame of mind. I'm always thinking about food. Not for nothing though, but he did have a gun. If you were robbing a fast food chain, with a weapon, you'd think that you'd be able to dictate when breakfast begins and ends. I guess no one, not even armed criminals can mess with Burger King breakfast though. Only God can do that.

Talk about being in the wrong place at the wrong time. "A Belgium news agency reported in November that a man suspected of robbing a jewelry store in Liege said he 'couldn't have done it because he was busy breaking into a school at the same time.' Police then arrested him for breaking into the school."

If you were going to be arrested for breaking into anything, would you want it to be a school? I'll bet those three kids in North Carolina who shot at each other wouldn't be too impressed. They've broken into the school thousands of times. Every morning around 7:30a.m. some irresponsible fool leaves the front door wide open!

Ah yes, the world's oddities keep me entertained, happy, and proud to be smart enough to dress myself in the morning. Of all the crazy things that I've heard in a while, the wackiest happened this Sunday. Someone told me that the Patriots actually won a game.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

Make a Change

EMANUEL NAPOLI

Have you found yourself in the all too typical UMass life cycle of school-work on the weekdays and drinking on the weekends?

Do you wake up every Monday morning with a feeling of personal emptiness? Do your friends only seem interesting when you are drinking or smoking? Has there been a lack of stimulation in your life of beer, videogames and parties? I would like to think that I have the answer to some of your problems, but first a little UMass history.

From what I have heard about the recent history of the University, we are the products of a difficult transition. UMass was once a much wilder party school. Chancellor Scott and the trustees have taken it upon themselves to change the reputation of the university for the better (their success or lack thereof is another column all together). With improvements in academics and reputation the administration has told the students to improve their behavior and backed up their statement with tougher policy. We have the opportunity to take the next step in bettering the University or battling the administration constantly in an effort to reclaim our lost party school. As the University has awoken from its slumber, people have been quick to realize what is wrong with it. UMass sits in a state of cultural impoverishment, through the actions of its students and the aesthetics of its campus. We live in a world of disgusting modern art (that piece of trash in front of the Fine Arts Center, another hunk of iron in Southwest) and architecture that sickens the average man (the Fine Arts Center and the Campus Center). Our environment has taken the creative energy out of us as individuals. Our environment has affected the student body so harshly that many of us are unable to grasp the deeper opportunity offered by our situation.

Many students refuse to see beyond the brief enjoyment of substances and affairs that only intoxicate the individual and move them away from the higher state of being we all deserve. Their movement towards hedonism leaves the rest of us in a state of despair and boredom. Our lack of apparent artistic opportunity sets us out on the same path as people that would simply waste their time here. The faculty and resources of the university offer us an opportunity to experiment with our creative ability and ambition. You have the rare opportunity of discovering your own talent, only college students are free from their house hold and not tied into a draining professional life yet. All of us could find out if we have any ability to compose a symphony, write a screenplay, or craft a sculpture. Yet most of us find out through our college experience how long we can hold a keg stand (well we would have if kegs were more prominent). A silent minority at this university work on their own and battle against the despair that hangs over all of us. These people have already been saved and are trying to save us by crafting their own works and interpreting others. All that can be left to us is to praise and thank them for their efforts.

We also could align ourselves with their cause and produce something, not for the university's sake, but for our own. To facilitate artistic aims and deeper thought anew type of RSO could be formed at UMass. Instead of the barrage of political and cultural clubs that we currently have, a new club could be made for the students at this university. This club could offer support, financially and spiritually, to those of us that would aspire to explore their artistic abilities. It could offer feedback to ambition and work that could replace the current ethic that haunts this University. The important work of this RSO would not be to promote the works of the people that major in art, theatre, or music.

Its important work could be to bring the rest of the student body out to discover itself. It could serve as a starting point and network for people that are insecure about their work or inexperienced working outside of class. The most important task it could accomplish is to make this University into a place where art is produced and brought out and seen by the students. Another simple process that it could undertake is recruiting activists to bring down the horrible outdoor exhibits and erect new and lively pieces in their place. Something could be done to give our ugly concrete boxes some sense of life. Dormitories could be given life through student made murals. I do not know what could be done with the piles of concrete we call administration buildings, but oversight could be applied to any other foolish projects that will be erected in the future. The possibilities for a new UMass filled with a new group of empowered individuals promoting local change to a faceless university are endless. Perhaps the University could become more like the ideal melting pot academics imagined in the generations ago and less like the cliched movies associated with it. Of course, this is not possible without the ascension of intellectuals, artists, and activists that would see this University become a better place.

Emanuel Napoli is a UMass student.

Hands of Time

BRYAN MCALLISTER

Wisdom comes in all forms, and some of the best forms are the least expected. For instance, on Rt. 116 in Sunderland, Massachusetts, wisdom comes in small, black plastic letters on a highway advertisement. Each morning at Annie's Garden & Gift Shop, the owners put up new advice for drivers-by like: "Fools rush in," "If you stay on the path, you'll miss all the good stuff," and "Hey, buy our plants!" We all need a little advice like that in the morning, on our bus ride to campus, and who doesn't need plants? If only Annie's also offered double shots of espresso and some extra PVTA drivers.

And so last weekend, in search of even more advice and wisdom, I stumbled across a coupon in the mail for a "discounted" palm reading at the local psychic shop. Now, as college students, we are taught to devour special offers and free stuff, and sign our name away on anything that offers it. Just last week I got a laundry bag and a pimpin' hat from MassLive.com, and I don't even do laundry.

So I admit it – I bit. I bit hard like a dog or more specifically, a cat who wants to be a dog. And here's a disclaimer: I think psychics are pretty funny, in that UMass basketball team-way. Some people actually take them seriously. Some people actually think they know what they're talking about. Some people actually think they're psychic. By the way, you're wearing green underwear right now.

But I wasn't expecting much. I went last Thursday to my psychic, and I expected a large, overweight woman with three breasts, sitting in a bean-bag chair with a large crystal ball made out of paper-mache in front of her.

But what I got wasn't paper-mache. It was more like clay, or really good play-doh.

It was different, it was unique, and I'll admit this too: she hooked me and brought me into the deep end, shielding my critical eyes with a lot of wisdom that was extremely general – I'll be the first to admit that - but was, somehow, enlightening.

"Think of two good wishes," my psychic opened with in an unimposing accent. "Keep one of them to yourself, and tell me the other."

Hmmmm…2 wishes? I tried to think to myself, and immediately came up with these two:

1. To be on Star Search.
2. To learn how to cook something besides chicken fingers and pasta.

But I kept those to myself, and told her, "I'd like to figure out what I want to do, for my career."

She nodded and began to concentrate, but only slightly. She told me to open my palms and place them forward, and began to dispense discounted wisdom.

"You will live till you're 91 years old," she said. 91! Kick ass. I should definitely learn how to cook tapioca by then.

But this next part startled me: She told me that at 91, I would "still have all my arms and legs."

Well, that's reassuring. I'm glad they aren't going to fall off along the way.

Anyway, back to the serious advice. She got something very right immediately. "You have been giving a lot of attention to people recently and getting little back, and you're losing confidence. Every time you go to put two steps forward, you feel like you've been put four steps backward."

Damn straight, sista. Although my ex-girlfriend would probably say this is "not true," or perhaps other unprintable words that mean the same thing.

But in 10 minutes, I learned more than I have in a least 3 classes here. I learned not to rush things.

And plus, I'm going to be famous anyway.

"You're going to write something important," my psychic said. "Your name will be recognized, both locally and nationally."

Well, hey, that's already happening, baby. I mean, they all read the Collegian in Utah.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian staff member.

UMass student takes on AC

ANNA FAKTOROVICH

Amherst College is a great school. But I have to say that UMass is often underestimated.

After all, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is the best education I can get. Especially considering its low cost, a large-school atmosphere, and my humble background.

But as a year of studying, here past I couldn't help being curious about the other side of town.

I had a lot of help in this curiosity. For example, one time I went to an interview with the Head of Harvard's Eastern European Studies department. And I was telling him about my extracurricular activities. He nodded, as if he was interested. But, then he inserted, "we recruited a professor from the Amherst area… oh, no, wait - she was from Amherst College." A long suggestive look followed this comment. After many similar hints, my curiosity rose to such a level that I yielded to the pressure and decided to take a course at Amherst College this semester.

So one afternoon, after going through a full day of classes in UMass, I started walking to Amherst College. Somebody told me it was a fifteen minute walk, I was lucky to get there in a half-an-hour. As I was walking my anxiety level was rising. I usually get nervous about meeting new people, but this time they weren't just people. They were supposed to be bags of money sitting around a table, speaking some deep ideological concepts that were about to blow my simple mind. So I was really energetic, bubbly and giggly. As I usually get when I'm in this type of situations. You should see me then… You'd laugh your socks off… Is that possible? Anyhow, so, I was nervous. And then, I found myself walking through the fairy-tail-like sidewalks of Amherst College. You probably think it's silly, but from where I was looking the grass seemed greener, and squirrels' tails seemed hairier.

As I was walking, for some reason one after another Amherst students kept asking me which school I was from. Until, being the edgy nervous freak, that I was at the time, I exploded saying "What? Is it written on my forehead?" I mean really, how could anybody know I was from a different school? I was taking a class in Amherst just like the rest of them, right? "It's a small school," an understanding bystander explained, smiling apologetically.

I arrived to class early, organized my notebooks and then, set in complete silence on a soft chair, looking outside at the hills, architecture and the blue sky. But, I couldn't remain motionless for long and I wondered out of the room to investigate the building. It had a gigantic lobby, with pictures, in honor of important people, on the walls, expensive leather chairs, and some holly or crucial text under a glass cover. On top of a table, near the glass cover, laid some magazines.

I picked one up and looked through it. And was amazed to find that they have a magazine called "Scrutiny," in which they scrutinize classes and professors' ability to teach. "Why don't we have it," I, later, asked a friendly faculty member. "The UMass professors wanted to spare the students from lawsuits."

"Oh well," I thought. "I guess UMass students are more likely than Amherst students to slander professors," and moved on in my observation of the building.

Soon my free time ran out and I went back to the classroom. The professor was already there. She was a big Russian wrinkled woman with a straight haircut up to the edge of her round head. She was smiling and seemed very excited to introduce us to the wonderful prose of Gogol. The subject of the class was Gogol's Dead Souls. For this senior level class we are reading and writing in Russian. And I have to agree the class is challenging and interesting.

After class, some of my classmates invited me to come to the Russian tea party, or "Chuy," as they called it. So later that same evening I made the journey to Amherst once again. This time, I waited at the bus stop for fifteen minutes and took the bus.

On the coffee table stood French cheese and French bread, which were accompanied by a great conversation. For example, I was telling this girl about a research opportunity I might have in the economics department and she seemed amazed until I said, trying to soften her amazement, "all I had to do to get it was ask the professor about it."

"That's good," she responded, taking a bite of the French cheese, "Most UMass students don't even ask." I nodded and didn't respond. But I thought, "She probably went to quite a few UMass frat parties."

But as I reflected on this point further, I got a little sad. Does UMass have an image of an apathetic student body? But how can it? With all the protests and extremists that have built a nest on campus, can UMass really be accused of being careless?

I remembered the feeling I got when I was walking home after a long school day and saw several dozen students diving into the Orchard Hill mud Bowl. There was a sense of unity among them, a sense of comradeship. And a feeling of brotherhood was in the moist rainy air. And I remembered walking in a crowed of students to Whitmore, hearing the symphonious roar, "What do we want? - Action! When do we want it? - Now!" And I saw, in the back of my mind, the eager hands, raised high, in Commonwealth honors classes. And I reflected on the friend I had last year, which was running an online company, while keeping up a good GPA and engineering major. And I remembered the countless passion and high value of conviction in the majority of UMass students' hearts. And then, I compared that passion to a group of fifteen Amherst students sitting around a coffee table and drinking tea.

Amherst students might have better manners, and might have a wider knowledge on certain topics. But we have the energy and vigor to fuel us through a lifetime.

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian Columnist.

Segregation

Ivetta Fedorova

Letters to the Editor
UMPD and Resident Assistants speak out

Dear Editor,

I would like to clarify an important technicality in your article, "FDA approves RU-486." You mentioned, "Certain abortion pressure groups [who] have gone to extreme lengths in the past to demonstrate their political opposition to abortion…[by] bombing abortion clinics and harassing both doctors and clinic workers." Later, you refer to the, "aforementioned pro-life lobbyists." People who bomb abortion clinics are not pro-life; they are anti-abortion. Anti-abortion is a smaller sub-category of pro-life that does not necessarily include the larger goal of respecting all life, including the lives of doctors and abortion clinic workers. For a pro-life person to murder anyone is a conflict of interest. There is enough misinformation surrounding the pro-life movement; please make this clarification so as not to further these misconceptions.

Leah Makuch
Sunderland

To the Editor:

There has been some recent comment in the Collegian about the UMass Police, their training, their attitude, and how they go about their work. I would like to say that I am proud to be a member of this modern, well trained, community oriented, and highly ethical police department. The officers of the UMass Police Department work long and hard hours, often in ways that are invisible to the people we serve; to protect the lives and property on the UMass Amherst campus. It takes a special person to venture forth each working day into unknown, unpredictable, and potentially, very dangerous situations. Their ability to make split-second decisions based on little available data in order to ensure that faculty, staff, students and visitors can work in peace. Our campus community is fortunate to have a police department composed of such special people. We make no apologies about enforcing the law, especially laws relating to alcohol and other substance abuse. Strict enforcement of these laws reduces death and injury to persons and property damage and helps to create a community where all persons can be secure from harm.

I invite you to get to know your police officers. Talk to them and discover dedicated, professional human beings that protect and serve you.

Chief John W. Luippold
UMass Police

To Whom It May Concern:

Last Friday, a news article was published under the title, "Former RA blasts ResLife." The article was written by Co-News Editor Jason Trenkle, and run on the front page of the Collegian as a news article.

Every day the Collegian publishes an Editorial/Opinion page that expresses the ideologies and opinions of the student population. This is not only the proper forum for student issues; it is often the only means by which students can speak their minds. However, the moment that we turn an opinion into front-page news, we lose the very integrity that grants us the rights of free speech. The article blatantly attacks Resident Assistants and the Resident Life program.

Every organization could use improvement and Resident Life is no different than other administrations within the University. It is not appropriate to use a single person's opinion or research to support a theory and call it news.

Greg Essopos did research for a thesis on Resident Assistants. He was in a position to use information, which supported a preconceived ideology, and omit any information gathered that did not conform to said ideology. Greg Essopos was a Resident Assistant, he was in a position to be biased, and it was his place to support his ideas with evidence. Jason Trenkle is a Resident Assistant, who wrote a factual news story that used a single person's biased opinion in a news article. Being a Resident Assistant, Mr. Trenkle was in a position to write a biased account of information that he had gathered, seemingly from already biased research. This is acceptable only when someone is stating an opinion, in the Ed/Op section where we can make up our own minds.

As a college newspaper, the Collegian is in a position to influence the undergrads of the University. By masquerading opinion as fact, the truth becomes dictated rather than discovered, and the truth is to be left up to the readers, not those report the news.

Patrick J. Colvario
Resident Assistant Orchard Hill

The Editor:

Do I need to remind you that Greek students, though only 5% of its population are still UMass students? Despite how we have been labeled, individuals in the Greek community care about UMass as well as Amherst as a whole. Though we feel that Greek Area Government should be reinstated, our desire to benefit and represent our peers in the SGA through different statuses, on campus and commuter, is not for individualistic progression.

Basically what you are saying is that any group that is a majority in the SGA as compared to its placement on campus is unfairly representing the student body as a whole. I am sick of being stereotyped and sick of being looked down upon by SGA and UMass. Maybe the Greek Community and I just want our say for a change. Just like you we are students; with issues, ideas and the desire to do something about it.

Daniel Springer
Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the editorial entitled "UMPD: who's protecting who?"

Congratulations Mr. Feliciano- you get only with. Cameras are being installed in some of the more remote parking lots, per SGA legislation and the Summit on Safety's hard work.

I can't really say why the officer detained you that night, but it might have something to do with The Controlled Substances Act; (a) any person committing in his presence any offense set forth in this chapter (b) any person who he has probable cause to believe has committed or is committing a felony set forth under the provisions of this chapter.

As for comparing the UMPD to the NYPD, aside from the level of violent crime New York has and the sheer number of people, UMass has, roughly the same number of "morons on the street, punks throwing crap at squad cars[s] and other random crazies."

As for the cops arresting people for "something very small" would you prefer that the UMPD do nothing? Well, it's only pot, we'll let it go. Well, he only hit her once, we'll let it go.

Student Legal Services cannot represent anybody in cases against the state of Massachusetts. It's the way things are. Legal Services lost the right to sue the University after winning several high profile civil rights cases. As for a public defender in this case it's the decision of the court. You can always have an attorney in court- it just may not be free.

As for students knowing their rights every student on campus receives a letter from the SGA spelling out their rights. If anything, your experience with the police should teach you one thing-close the door when you leave.

Kenneth Campbell
Junior, History Major

Birthday Wishes

JEANIE GERLOUSKY

Imagine, if you will, this scenario. It is a Sunday morning nineteen years ago. Outside, it is a beautiful Russian fall. It is still early in the morning. The birds are chirping, the sun is shining, there is a light breeze, all is perfect in the world — except for my mother, who is in the agonies of giving birth. All of a sudden, at 7:55 a.m. on September 20, 1981, hallelujah! Cute little I pop out in the delivery room! (As a small digression, the time of the day when I was born always seems so strange to me. I think the day of my birth was the first and only time in my life that I have ever willingly woken up, so to speak, that early in the morning. Ever since the second day of my life, I have been a confirmed night owl.)

September seems to be a huge month for birthdays! I would swear that at least a third of my friends are born in that month, and I keep meeting more and more people on campus whose birthdays fall in September. You can't imagine how many birthday presents I have had to buy and how many birthday cards/emails I had to send this past month!

I have spent a great deal of time discussing why so many people are born in September with my friends, and there are basically two theories. Theory Number One is that winter is a very cold time, and people have sex to keep warm. Nine months later, in September, large numbers of babies are born. My friend Dave says that in September of 1979, which followed the huge blizzard that caused a three-day power outage on the Northeast coast in 1978, the number of babies born shot up dramatically for the month because people had lots of sex during the blizzard to keep warm. (Hey, it's better entertainment than the TV anyday!) Of course, I'm not old enough to be one of the "Blizzard Babies," but I'm sure plenty of people on this campus do belong to that special birth group. Theory Number Two on the large number of September babies is that people get so wild (and drunk) over New Year's Eve that they have lots of unprotected sex. Again, as in Theory One, nine months later comes the onslaught of babies. Anyway, September is a very cool month to be born in — Go Virgos! (And some Libras at the end of the month, I think…I don't really believe in astrology, but it's still fun to talk about it as if I do.)

Birthdays are really special in our American culture. I think here they are really more important than in most other countries, especially considering the fact that as a result of Hallmark, Americans will now celebrate almost anything (Secretaries' Day, anyone? Grandparents' Day was just a little while ago… Did you forget to send your poor old granny a card?). A birthday is like your own little holiday, albeit one that you share with a few million other people on earth. Still, for most people, it is rare to share their birthday with a good friend or relative. Most of us get this special day all for our very own selves. We get all the attention that we want and crave all year long. Sometimes, even people we barely know at our jobs or in the dorms will go by and say, "Happy Birthday!" and we can feel all happy and popular and satisfied with our lives. They may not know my name, but they know it's my birthday, and now I feel special (thinks my brain)!

And birthdays mean presents! That's the highlight of the day to most people. Different families do birthday presents differently. In some families, every person gets the birthday boy or girl a large present. In other families, especially those with college students, the parents send the student a check in the mail and happily avoid the hassle of shopping for a present. Many times, birthday presents can present (so to speak) a big dilemma. For some people, like my father, it is really hard to find a present! Most years, I just end up buying him a shirt or another similarly boring gift. It's not that I don't have the best intentions, it's just that I really don't know what else he would want and I usually don't have the energy to be creative and spend hours looking for a present for him. It's usually easier to buy presents for my friends, but even then I often spend a lot of time looking for just the right gift for somebody. Actually, a good present idea is a plant. Plants are pretty decorations for a dorm room, and they don't require a lot of care. You can buy them in the Campus Center near the UStore at the little flower shop. They are not very expensive gifts, either, but they are quite nice. Two people got me plants for my birthday, and it is really nice to have them in my room now.

Presents are especially difficult when it comes to being a poor college student. I don't usually have a lot of money to spend on my friends' or family members' birthdays, and I don't have a lot of time to go shopping for these presents. In addition to all this, I don't even have a car, so I either have to take a bus to the hell that is Hampshire Mall or burn a ride from a friend with a car to go somewhere else. In addition, I have a huge present problem in September because, as I explained before, I have tons of friends who were born during this month, and I always go broke trying to buy everyone a present. What I usually end up doing is that I buy presents for those people at UMass who are my close friends. With everyone else I know at UMass, and also with my friends who are far away at other colleges, I usually just end up sending them a nice card or an email, or just calling to say "Hi, Happy Birthday, hope it's wonderful." Either way, even with just a phonecall, it's important to acknowledge friends' birthdays. You'd want them to do the same with you, and it really hurts when it's your birthday and you don't get a call or card from a good friend. Nobody wants to feel forgotten; everybody wants someone to care about his/her special day.

Deciding what to do on your birthday is difficult. Many people throw big birthday parties, but I'm usually too busy with school and everything else to go through the stress of planning and shopping for my own party, plus it's even a bigger pain when you live in the dorms. My family takes me out to dinner, which is a nice uncreative birthday tradition. For my friends' birthdays, I usually take them out to dinner or a movie. Often, we just chill in someone's room, which is great because then we can have fun without having to deal with the stress and expense of throwing an actual party. This September, my party plans with friends varied from going out to a nice afternoon coffee at Rao's Coffeehouse in Amherst with my friend Liz to throwing a large elaborate birthday party with assorted appetizers and a large cake for my friend Rachel, and everything in between.

But despite the presents and parties and fun of birthdays, birthdays can also be hard, especially in an emotional way. They are a time when a lot of people look back on their year and weigh what they have accomplished so far in their lives. Sometimes I feel really disoriented and scared when I realize that I am almost in my twenties and yet have no idea what I am doing with my life. Another good friend of mine, who recently turned 25, confided in me that she is really scared because she feels like her life is going nowhere and she is aging very fast. Every year, on his birthday, I sit back and realize how fast time is going by. It seems like only last year that I was a freshman at UMass, excited about turning eighteen and becoming an "adult." Now, I am entering the last year of my teens. Next year I will be twenty, and that thought scares me more than I can even express. Responsibility, family, career, future plans… aaack!

Birthdays can also be hard for college students because they are away from their families. Even though I am lucky enough to have a great group of friends at school (you all know who you are, and I love you all very much), I still feel sad that I wasn't able to see my whole family on this special day, although my mom did make the drive up to take me and two friends out to dinner — Thanks, Mom! Plus, my birthday falls right smack-dab in the middle of a weekday, so I was stuck in classes on that lovely day, and I had tons of homework due the next day. Having to work on my birthday… it's depressing. I think every student at UMass should be able to just skip class on their birthday with no consequences. Yes, I know, I'm a college student and I can take the day off whenever I want, but I actually have a lot of small classes this semester and the teachers do take attendance! But finally now it's October, and the September rush of birthdays has slowed down to a trickle. Beloved, I'm sending out a final September birthday message to all of my fellow September babies. Happy Belated Birthdays to you all! I hope all your special days were wonderful, just like mine.

Jeanie Gerlousky is a Collegian Columnist.

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

New LP from Radiohead

Kid A redefines "experimental"

RADIOHEAD
Kid A
Capitol Records

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Discussing Radiohead's music is not a matter of guitar solos and catchy lyrical hooks; or if it ever was, the release of Kid A has elevated, or reduced, or transposed that discussion to one of mood, interior landscapes of drear and elation and (most of all) delirium. It has become the discussion of how far a song can be pushed into the realm of the experimental, the abstract, before it becomes something unlistenable, and of how perfectly the relationship between melody and chordal backbone, and between anticipation and reception, can be manipulated in the communication of emotion through music.

Kid A is a ten track album, the product of two years of isolated studio work and a considerable departure from 1997's magnificent OK Computer. The stylistic jump made between albums is to be expected; this is the band that, after producing and then despising the runaway radio hit "Creep," gave the world The Bends, one of the defining rock albums of the 90s, which in turn led to the brilliantly-textured OKC.

And so the haunting keyboard intonations of "Everything In Its Right Place" that begin Kid A are both completely expected and totally new. We've heard suggestions of this mood in earlier Radiohead material – the opening of "Planet Telex" (the first track of The Bends), for instance. Gone are the pounding rhythm guitars, however; instead, the mercilessly, frighfully, unintelligibly edited vocals of singer/guitarist Thom Yorke raise slowly in volume from the floor of keyboards, cutting out only to raise again. Disjointed fragments of speech drift and fall like characters speaking in a nightmare, like ghosts trapped in wires. There are no lyrics provided in the liner notes, but the verses are clear enough, repetitious and vaguely suggestive as they are: "yesterday I woke up sucking a lemon," "there are two colors in my head, what was that you tried to say?"

The album continues with "Kid A," a drifting, capricious song built upon sweetly ringing toy piano notes (or their synthetic approximation) and more digitized vocals. By the third track, "The National Anthem," with its beat-box drumming, uncharacterisitically simple bass figure, and utterly disorganized, flock-of-birds horn section, it becomes difficult to imagine that this is the same band that brought us such understated and unabashedly beautiful guitar-centered songs as "High and Dry" and "Let Down."

As if an answer to such potential doubts, Kid A continues with "How to Disappear Completely," a somber acoustic composition supported by a string section arranged to lunatic perfection by guitarist/keyboardist Johnny Greenwood. This is a textbook example of Radiohead's genius for dragging a song through a slough of minor key insecurities, elevating it into a major key resolve for a moment, and then watching the melody falter and collapse back into its former bleakness. Following this is "Treefingers," an instrumental of drifting string-like atmospherics reminiscent of "Mellatonin," off of the Airbag EP, and suffering from the same lack of punch; it can confidently be called Kid A's weakest moment.

"Optimistic" is the nearest glimpse this album offers us of Radiohead's past years, with forceful guitars and an excellent vocal performance by Yorke. To the extent that they are intelligible, the lyrics on Kid A continue Radiohead's interest in the escalating inhumanity of the modern world and the exploitation of the individual by ubiquitous corporations. Yorke spares no irony when he declares, "You can try the best you can, the best you can is good enough."

"Optimistic" bleeds into "Limbo," another enigmatic composition concerned more with the communication of mood than any notion of what a modern rock song ought to sound like. This is not, however, to say that it, or any other of Kid A's more demanding tracks, succeeds entirely, or even nearly, at this goal. OK Computer was such a marvelous collection of music because the band's experiments in texture and production were supported by a solid collection of songs. Listening to Kid A, one gets the feeling that style was too much emphasized over content, that too many of the songs are unable to accomplish all the band asks of them in the way of supporting their experiments in production.

"Idioteque" takes the band further from guitar rock, with its synthetic percussion, thin keyboards, incidental noise, and little else. Thom's voice comes through in twisting sheets, spitting out with palpable fear such asylum floor musings as "ice age coming, ice age coming, throw it in the fire, throw it in the fire, we're not scared or hungry, this is really happening."

COURTESY CAPITOL RECORDS

Kid A continues with "Morning Bell," another tune that turns between moments of anxiety and respite, making good use of Radiohead's signature heavily processed guitar overdubs. The album closes with "Motion Picture Soundtrack," an uplifting song drenched in questionable production choices; spiraling harps and angelic vocals coming from this band have a hard time convincing us of their sincerity, but if we take them as more musical irony, the song has little else to carry itself.

Kid A is problematic for fans and newcomers alike. Gone is the seamless beauty of "Subterranean Homesick Alien," the bombast of "Just," and the accessibility of "Fake Plastic Trees." In its place are overblown horns, unlikely song structures and a subversion of Yorke's powerful and fragile voice at times painful to behold. At the same time, Kid A offers some of Radiohead's most mature songwriting, and provides sufficient assurance that they know what they're doing, even if we cannot understand it immediately. This album demands a lot of its listeners; but then, how many of their contemporaries are filling CD racks with easily digestible, forgettable tripe?

Rhyme & Reason

"Pretty Lush" by Glassjaw
Written by Glassjaw
From the album Everything You Wanted to Know About Silence

I draw them on reckless,
etched in,
scratched in like resurrection.
Your sins are killing you
and you can bet they'll get me too.
I've got to give some to get some.

Mining in the river
Standing in the rain.
Down on your knees
As you heave at the drain.

You can lead a whore to water
and bet she'll drink and follow orders.
And I said, "Is this what you
wanted?"
"Is this what you needed?"
Give it some more time.

Tonight I'm going to a party, but it's already started without me.
I aced philosophy
and mastered the art of spiritual phase.
I've got to give some to get some.

The disco ball spins away another year.
I wish you a broken heart and a happy New Year.

Only three words come to mind.

Analysis by Erin Wolf, Psychology graduate
Questions by Michael Delano

What is the mindset of the vocalist (Daryl Palumbo) during this song?

I think that Daryl Palumbo waivers between feelings of disgust and disdain to pity and sadness.

The music ranges from heavy to slow. Does this shift mimic the vocalist's feelings?

Definitely. Palumbo seems to be showing feelings of anger in the lyrics during the heavy fast sections, and during the slower parts he seems almost sympathetic.

What do you think the title refers to?

Women, groupies, frat chicks.

After studying the lyrics, do you feel another style of music could have better conveyed the feelings of this song?

Maybe this would have been a good country song...just clean up the lyrics a little and you could pull it off. Country music seems to often address issues like pain and sadness. The lyric "I wish you a broken heart and a happy New Year," I can definitely see that being a great line for a country song. You know, 'my pick-up truck broke down, my woman left me,' along those lines.

Do the lyrics or feel of this song remind you of any other song?

Yeah, "I Used to Love Her, But I Had to Kill Her," and "Earl Had to Die."

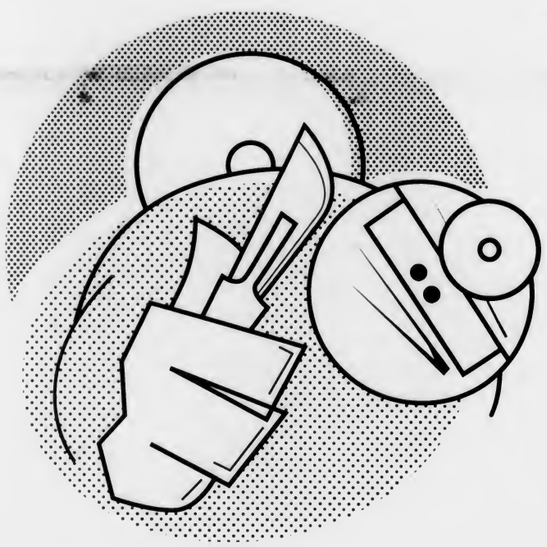
Palumbo says he "aced philosophy and mastered the art of spiritual phase." What the hell does that mean?

I think it means he can "talk the talk and walk the walk." He knows how to manipulate the women in the song to get what he wants. But it seems like he thinks it's almost too easy, and it makes him disgusted and upset at the same time. It could also mean he understands things or can talk logically and emotionally.

I knew you as a champion drinker from your days at UMass. Would you consider yourself "Pretty Lush?"

NO WAY! I was way smarter than that. Palumbo is talking about someone with no brains, no self-respect, and thinks drinking will drown their sorrows. I was never that naive.

PoPocket.com, Inc.



Sell your liver, spleen, and both of your kidneys. OR Get paid for the stuff you know.

InfoPocket.com

Answer questions. Earn cash.
www.inforocket.com/amherst

TODAY

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Office
presents

SOM
CAREER DAY
2000

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!

Date: Wed
Plac
Time: Begins at

WHO WILL BE THERE?

•You (we hope)

Acousta Sales and Marketing
ADP (Automatic Data Processing)
Aerotek
Alexander, Aronson & Finning & Co., PC
American Express Financial Advisors
Ames Department Stores
Andersen Consulting
Arch Chemicals, Inc.
Arthur
Aspen
BDO Seidman, LLP
Black & Decker
Canby & Mahoney & Co., Inc.
Carlin, Charron & Rosen, LLP
Chubb & Son
Cigna Corporation
Cintas Corporation
CSC Consulting
DataViz, Inc.
Deloitte
EDS
EMC Corporation
Employers Treasury Company
Enterprise Rent-A-Car
Ernst & Young
Fidelity
Fleet Enterprises, Inc.
Flynet
Fresh Investments
Frito-Lay
GGC Financial

•About 1400 students

General Electric
Great West Life
Hannaford Brothers Co.
Harpell
Hershey Foods
Hertz
IBM
Incentive Systems
Investors Bank & Trust
Internal Revenue Service
J.Baker, Inc.
JWG Associate, Inc.
KPMG LLP
Liberty Mutual Group
Marsh USA, Inc.
Massachusetts Financial
MassMutual Financial Group
MBNA New England
MFS Investment Management
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack
Needel, Welch & Stone PC, CPA's
New England Financial
Nortel Networks
Northeast Utilities
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
O'Connor & Drew PC
Offtech
Olde Discount Corporation (now H&R Block Financial Advisors)
100X.com
Onsite Companies

•Ninety or more firms

Ortho-McNeil Pharmaceuticals
Osco Drug
Oxford Global Resources, Inc.
PAN Communications,Inc.
Pearson Education
Pepsi Bottling Company
PFPC, Inc.
Polaroid Corporation
Pricewaterhouse Coopers
Procter & Gamble
Putnam Investments
Raytheon Company
Reed Exhibition Companies
Reznick, Fedder & Silverman
Robert Ercolini & Company LLP
Sentry Insurance
Sherwin-Williams
Solutia
Staples
State Street Corporation
State Street Corporation
Process Engineering
Stop & Shop Co.
Sun Life Financial
TEKSystems
Teradyne
TJX Companies
TJ Maxx Distribution Center
Toys "R" Us
Travelers Property Casualty
United Technologies Corp.
Walgreens
Wallace, Inc.

There will be a free shuttle leaving Bolvin Mall for the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from Noon to 5:00 P.M.

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men, dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available

Madonna's latest proves a weak, derivative mush

MADONNA
Music
Maverick Records

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Madonna's ability to cop styles unfamiliar to her and then create huge hits is well documented. Be it playing on Latin images in the mid-90s, radically altering her original pop image with darker songs like "This Used to Be My Playground" or her most recent techno excursion in Ray of Light, she's always found a way to use new music to her advantage.

With the grand exception of her latest album Music. A drivel-filled disc lacking any of her (or, if cynical, her producer's) previous creativity, Music ten tracks are a complete and utter waste.

To her fans, Madonna has been one of two things: a wonderful pop release or a guilty pleasure, to be listened to in relative secret. Unfortunately, anything that made her a guilty pleasure has given those occasional fans the legitimate right to say that Madonna just isn't that good.

Be it on the first single and title track "Music" which for some reason decides to try make a political statement about all music with the inane statements about music bringing people together or on the rest of the poorly put together album, Madonna has failed.

The second song "Impressive Instant" sounds, for all the world, like it was produced in a basement by a Cher fan, as a technish voice is overlaid over Madonna's and makes her sound like she's singing through an electrical storm. And most of the other songs suffer from the same fate: over production that manages to sound under produced. It seems as though Mark "Spike" Stent, the album's mixer, intentionally went for a truly stripped down sound (hence the over production) that sounds really bad (hence the under production).

That said, Madonna does come up with two radio songs that just don't fit on an album this low in quality. The seventh track is one of the shining examples of Madonna's talent: "Don't Tell Me" is so much better than the rest of the album. A herky-jerky guitar riff over-top of a drum machine with added synth thrown in to make the song interesting, she apparently figured out how to mix a little bit of folk with a little bit of bass to produce something finally catchy.

She managed to do this at least once more on the album, and maybe once and a half. The fourth track "I Deserve It" manages to do the exact same thing (guitar, bass, some synth) with somewhat less success. It reminds listeners that they're listening to "Music" too much, and that drawback strangles the life out of the song, as does the third and final attempt by Madonna to put her folk-bass together, the tenth track "Gone."

While she may have great talents, Madonna's most recent album surely doesn't show them off, rather offering listeners a cruel reminder that using styles unfamiliar to a performer can sink, on "Music", just as soon as they swim, as on her last album Ray of Light.

COURTESY MARIO TESTINO

With Music, Madonna fails to construct a worthwhile album out of the musical elements she borrowed from more worthy artists.

Soulfly keeps quality metal coming

SOULFLY
Primitive
Roadrunner

By Michael Deiano
Collegian Staff

"Who feels it, knows it," Max Cavalera screams on "Back to the Primitive," using words Bob Marley used many years before to describe the base physical link that connects people to music. Primitive, the second release from the ever-changing Cavalera-fronted collective Soulfly, is also the perfect word and musical statement to illustrate that connection. Basically, you either feel it, and therefore know it, or you miss out. For the uninitiated, Max's primal grunting, simplistic lyrics, and often bare bones approach to guitar riffs result in the dismissal of Soulfly just so much noise. But there is something about Max's sound, more evident than ever on Primitive, which just coaxes a primal emotional response out of those for whom he makes music.

COURTESY ROADRUNNER RECORDS

Soulfly's sound is deeply rooted in the tribal and experimental nature of Roots, the 1996 landmark album from Sepultura, the group Max fronted for 15 years before leaving due to complicated personal and professional issues. The messy split, well documented in most music news sources, coupled with the mysterious death of his stepson, Dana, fueled much of the creative fire that would result in the 1998 debut Soulfly.

That album was a triumph, balancing songs venting Max's personal rage with rousing party anthems and even including a beautiful entry into the reggae/dub world. Max also created a virtual house party for the metal community on the album, recruiting various artists for collaborations which, unlike on many other albums, didn't seem forced or unproductive. Bizkit playa Fred Durst lent his flow to "Bleed," and Deftones' crooner Chino Moreno belted on "First Commandment," both rage-filled warnings directed at those responsible for covering up Dana's death. Max addressed the Sepultura break-up on the pounding "Eye for an Eye," with members of Fear Factory. However, Soulfly proved itself not completely serious with the sing-a-long styling of "Umbabarauma" and the emotional instrumental "Soulfly."

Many of the same themes carry over to Primitive, but somehow, even after having more time to cope with the internal problems, Soulfly's second album comes off as even more forceful and directed. This focus is aided by a shorter running time and slimmer track list, giving the work a more complete feel and making a listen from beginning to end easier and more rewarding. Not to say you won't be listening to certain tracks over and over, since while every track rolls into the next very well, the structure and character of the songs themselves are never compromised.

The first ten minutes of this album are pummeling even to seasoned ears such as my own. You'll welcome the reggae reprieve during the midsection of "Bring It," especially after the aptly titled "Back to the Primitive" and the punishing "Pain," another message to the guilty parties surrounding Dana and his death. The album is smartly paced: the first nine tracks are heavy as hell, the body of the album, with the sole exception being Max's collaboration with Sean Lennon, "Son Song." This song has a more peaceful and introspective vibe to it, although it's far from quiet. From this point, Max gets a little more diverse, with "Soulfly II," and "In Memory of..." The first is an instrumental track such as the one found on the first album, and where the first "Soulfly" seemed to be a celebration, this one finds Max in a much more solemn and lonely state. The second is a straight, no frills hip-hop track, featuring members of Cutthroat Logic, and while a solid track, there is no concession made to metal fans besides briefly in the chorus, so it will be interesting to see how the metal community responds to this song. The album closes with the amazing "Flyhigh," featuring the soothing female vocals of Asha Rabouin in the chorus. The song mixes brilliant percussion with a captivating chorus to create that sort of "calm after the storm effect" that reminded me of "B.I.B.L.E." from GZA's Liquid Swords.

Max keeps the party going on this album as well, this time hosted by a new set of core hand members. Marcelo returns on bass, now aided by former Snot guitarist Mikey Doling and drummer Joe Nunez. Chino Moreno returns and yells with Grady Avenell of Will Haven on "Pain." Corey from Slipknot is present for the truly silly but still fun "Jumpdafuckup." And Slayer's Tom Araya lends his talent to the Chaos A.D.-esque "Terrorist."

If you feel it and know it, then Primitive will not disappoint. Max continues to be among the most creative and consistent forces in modern metal, and Soulfly certainly has the talent and hopefully will have the drive to keep making music for future generations. Crank it up, and let your soul fly free.

Knopfler releases solo disc

MARK KNOPFLER
Sailing to Philadelphia
Warner Brothers

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Mark Knopfler has been, for the entirety of his career, one of the most underrated guitarists in the world. His slow-hand talents and ability to draw out chords in the most beautiful of ways somehow has passed under the radar of most listeners.

While unbelievably unfortunate, Knopfler, the former frontman of Dire Straits, hasn't really turned his lack of attention into musical bitterness. He still revisits the message of his band's most famous song "Money for Nothing" in an attempt to convince people about the need to realize that good music and successful music can be two very different things, and that quality music takes hard work. However, his music rarely harps on that point.

Only once, in fact, does it appear on Knopfler's newest album Sailing to Philadelphia, a brilliant 13 song solo work that showcases the Englander's ability to play the guitar.

Regular rock riffs? The album's got that.

Bluegrass? Absolutely.

Bluesy and almost jazzy guitar? Right there.

But Sailing to Philadelphia isn't a brilliant album because those styles are all there; rather, it's that they all mesh so well on the album.

The album starts out strong with "What It Is" a song that showcases Knopfler's ability to put a song together from top to bottom, starting out like a guitar driven pop-song before slowing down into an instrumental featuring violin and a country feel before picking up for a final pop run.

The next three tracks, (James Taylor makes an appearance in "Sailing to Philadelphia," "Who's Your Baby Now" and "Baloney Again") revisit both the poppy and bluegrass that Knopfler went for with "Neck and Neck," a song made with Chet Atkins. "The Last Laugh" slows down the album before Knopfler puts together the most rocking song on the album — "Do America," a throwback to his earlier message of hard work. Knopfler sings of the misconception by British musicians that they can, without problem, tour tread; Do) America and get famous.

But by the next track on the album, "El Macho" he's starts in with a jazz sound and a harmonious singing sound. "Wanderlust" might be the one song that doesn't really feel like it belongs on this album: there's something about the sound that's rougher than the rest of the album.

"Speedway At Nazareth" is reminiscent of earlier work on Dire Straits "Man's Too Strong" with more of a bluegrass sound in the singing. It's a brilliant song with harmonies laid over Knopfler's guitar handiwork.

The last three songs on the album show a final mix of Knopfler's abilities; a country-rock song on "Junkie Doll," a blues song on the aptly titled "Silvertown Blues" and a spaced out musically quiet vocally loud song in "Sands of Nevada." again revisiting earlier sounds that Knopfler first showcased on Dire Straits' Money for Nothing album.

One of the most-hyped records released thus far this year, Knopfler shows his virtuoso touch on the guitar and his brilliant mind for the overall sound of an album.

University Health Services

Mental Health Groups Fall 2000

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Come Out, Come Out Wherever You Are! A GLBT Support Group Our goal is to create a setting for self-exploration and for making new connections with others. We plan to have fun in the process. Mon., 3:45-5:00 p.m.	Coed Self - Exploration Group for Undergraduates For college men and women who experience difficulties in inter-personal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Tues.,3:30-5:00 p.m.	Women's Eating Issues Group This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight obsessions and enhancing self acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues, and to develop coping strategies. Wed.,3:45-5:00 p.m.	Women's Self-Exploration Group (For older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees) This group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits. Thurs., 9:00-10:30 a.m.
		Coed Self- Exploration Group for Undergraduates For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Wed.,3:30-5:00 p.m.	Alcohol and Drug Discussion Group This support group is for individuals who are trying to live free from alcohol and drug abuse. In this safe, confidential setting we will explore each person's struggle to achieve and maintain sobriety. (An initial intake at Mental Health is required prior to group attendance.) Thurs., 12:45-2:00 p.m.
			Coed Self-Exploration Group (For older undergraduates, graduate students student dependents and covered employees) This group provides an opportunity for men and women to explore interpersonal relationships. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits. Thurs., 3:30-5:00 p.m.

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff. Groups are deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Supplemental Plan or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays. Application to the behavioral health network of GIC is pending. Groups require an initial screening which can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or by stopping by at 127 Hills North. Mon.-Fri. 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

CALL 545-2337
to schedule required pre-group screening appointmentor for further information.

Visit the Mental Health web site at:
www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth

Stress/Anxiety Management Group
Stress impacts all of us physically and psychologically creating various medical and emotional symptoms. This structured 3-session group is designed to demonstrate effective ways to deal with stressful circumstances. We will use educational and behavioral methods to help members lessen their stress.
Session 1: Wed., 4:00-5:00 p.m. Oct. 4, 11, 18
Session 2: Thurs., 4:00-5:00 p.m Oct. 19, 26 & Nov. 2

Mandy Moore brings joy to the Big E

MANDY MOORE
The Big E

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

Since I am not a native of western Massachusetts, I had never heard of The Big E before I arrived at this University. Yet when Mandy Moore, the latest (and youngest) bubblegum-pop teen star paid visit to the immaculate carnival, I decided it was time I went out and saw what the Big E was all about.

An Orlando native, Moore, too, was unfamiliar with this part of the country, but said she loves the touring aspect so she can see all the places she most likely never would have been had it not been for her sizzling singing career. The blond bombshell went on to say that even though she's been on the road a great deal this past year promoting her first album, she misses life at home; "People there don't look at me as a dollar sign," she said. But it wouldn't be a surprise if they did, because the young diva has done quite well and made a name for herself alongside her contemporaries Brittany Spears, Christina Aguilera and Jessica Simpson.

Several of the songs from her debut CD have already received extensive radio airplay, and it doesn't seem like it will stop soon, either. She just cut a single called "Walk Me Home" from her forthcoming album which she said she'll begin recording in the next few months, after a little R&R back home.

For the time being, however, she's giving her all to the fans at her shows. Her forty minute set at The Big E consisted of six of the most well known songs from her CD, beginning with the catchy and effervescent "I Wanna Be With You." Accompanying Ms. Moore in her dance numbers were four Backstreet Boys lookalikes who jumped, jived and gyrated all over the stage.

She followed that with a string of songs I had never heard before, but it was clear a large majority of the audience was familiar with, because, let's be honest here, her fan base is mostly pre-adolescent girls.

It would be fair to say that her male admirers, while appreciating her music, are smitten by her drop-dead gorgeous looks. Take, for example, the sixteen year-old boy behind me with the sign asking Mandy to go to the prom with him. She is every highschooler's dream date: talent, beauty and a friendly nature.

The last song of the evening was her breakthrough single "Candy," which brings new meaning to the phrase "guilty pleasure." I sang along to the pre-recorded music (after learning it by heart from all its radio airplay this past summer) and smiled at the absurdity of the situation: here I was, a nineteen year-old college sophomore who was getting funky in the freezing weather to a trite but sugary song.

It was amazing to see how captivated the young audience members were by Moore's music. I thought back to my fascination with The New Kids on the Block when I was that age, and was pleased to know that the younger generation has a whole new crop of teenybopper icons to adore. One little girl, maybe eight or nine, exclaimed to me on the way out, "That was the best concert I've ever been to!" If for no other reason, the smile on that girl's rosy cheeks was what made the night worthwhile.

Grisman douses Noho with bluegrass, fun

Caroline Fullmer
Collegian Correspondent

The David Grisman quintet delighted the mind and body of this "happy valley's" bluegrass fans. Performing in Northampton, David Grisman and his four other highly talented comrades shared their evening with a comfortably packed Calvin Theater. David Grisman a so to be, if not already blue grass legend is most commonly known for his work done with the late Jerry Garcia, I.e. Shadygrove. However, the David Grisman Quintet in now in their 25th year of playing together and touring, minus a few alterations made along the way. The closeness of a band after 25 years of playing together was perfectly demonstrated this night. The quintet jammed tightly yet allowed for a bit of improvisational finger picking jamming led by Grisman, giving the opportunity to lengthen a jam or intensify a beat, which led to more enjoyment of the music.

Throughout the evening Grisman kept the atmosphere at a comfortably personal level by sharing stories about his songs, his influences, and his travels. Keeping the mood upbeat, with a humorous side. But in no was did it seem as if Grisman was the star of the show. His four band mates: Joe Cravin, "multi-instrumental" percussionist, Enrique Correa, guitarist, Matt Eckel flutist, and Sam Bevon upright acoustic bass, equally shared in making the show a delightful as it was.

Two sets were performed, the first set running about 40 minutes long, with "Grateful Dog", a Garcia-Grisman concoction, and "Opus 38" being the highlights, of many. After a relatively short break, the quintet came back on stage for another 35 minutes. With a much more mellow and peaceful the second set was most enjoyable from my comfortable viewing spot where not only is music could be enjoyed but also the art of blue grass finger picking. This set, more oriented towards Grisman's blue grass playing, than the first, ranged from hand clapping beats to silent listening. A demonstration of music but more so of talent.

With the second set a bit shorter in length then the first, the audience was left the urge for more. After a few short minutes, the encore began with the surprise appearance of the band "The Blue Blades of Grass." A five-piece blue grass band, strikingly similar to the Grisman quintet rocked and humored the audience one last time. However as obvious as it was that the band was actually the members of quintet dressed up like down home hillbillies from Alabama, the quintet gave a one last laugh for the road, closing the evening well. However an honorable mention must be given to Smiley, the flutist, for his exceptional performance as a flute playing Mr. Roper form the TV sitcom Three's Company.

All in all the evening of Sept. 29 was an evening of exceptional music. The David Grisman quintet left no room for improvement, and left no need for compliant. A most enjoyable evening of humor, dance, storytelling, and blue-grass, if opportunity arises again do not miss the dog of blue grass, David Grisman and his quintet.

Pure Romance...

Tim Burton's The Nightmare Before Christmas will return to the big screen this Halloween season for the first time in 7 years.

Ahhhhhhhhh UMass.....
The center of the universe

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions:

CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.

DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours.
Previous kitchen experience preferred.

We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at:
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply.

COMMUNICATIONS

THE FUTURE OF COMMUNICATIONS BEGINS WITH YOU.

CLEAR IDEAS™ FOR YOUR CAREER.

At Tellabs, developing the communications landscape of the future is more than just an ambition. It is something we do every day. Through innovative technologies like dense wavelength-division multiplexing, Voice-over-IP and SONET, we keep local, long-distance, wireless, cable and Internet service providers on the cutting edge. If you are majoring in electrical or computer engineering, computer science or a related field, help us shape the future of the new public network.

- HARDWARE DEVELOPMENT AND TESTING
- SOFTWARE/SYSTEM INTEGRATION TESTING
- VLSI DESIGN
- SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT
- FIRMWARE DEVELOPMENT
- RESEARCH

Tellabs was recently ranked among FORTUNE magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work for in America."

We will be on your campus for the Engineering Career Fair at the Engineering Student Center in Marcus Hall on October 5, 2000

tellabs CLEAR IDEAS

EOE M/F/D/V

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY MAKES JACK EXTREMELY UNATTRACTIVE WITH THE LIGHT ON.

Eat with your head.™

Working hard night after night can mean junk food, and lots of it. New BALANCE GOLD, with its 40-30-30 ratio of carbs, protein and dietary fat, is a great-tasting way to help give your body sustained energy. Plus, it has 23 essential vitamins and minerals. Why not check out Balance.com to learn more.

For area employers to find you appealing, they first have to find you.

www.masslive.com/careers

MassLive is ready to take your job search to the next level.
Grab the cutting-edge tool that uses the power of the Internet and manage your career.
At Advance Careers on MassLive, simply post your personal profile and you'll be on your way to exploring thousands of new opportunities. You will even have your own Personal Message Center.
It directs you to the positions of employers who have matched their opportunities to your profile and want you to apply for that job online. So take the first step in really managing your career and let MassLive start working for you.

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com
IN AFFILIATION WITH THE UNION NEWS-SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

High-flying Rams are off to another successful start

MATT SACCO

Eyewitnesses have reported seeing only streaks of blue and gold flashing in and out of their view so fast their eyes cannot keep up. Others have claimed that the perpetrators in question moved so fast that they could not possibly be from this earth. In other words, they were describing the St. Louis Rams offense.

After five weeks the Rams aren't only running away from opposing defenses, they are also ahead of the league by a good length and a half. The Rams have played five games and have five wins to show for it thanks to eye-popping stats on the offensive side of the ball. Those gaudy numbers, which include 1,522 passing yards, 391 rushing yards and 217 points scored, have given the St. Louis faithful visions of a 19-win season and a second straight Super Bowl win.

The key to the Rams offensive juggernaut is not the fact that they have all-pros at every major offensive position, but rather that their backups could be pro bowlers. Some defenses can actually contain Marshall Faulk and Isaac Bruce, but then the second stringers come into play.

By the way, the second stringers would probably put together a 15-1 season. With Az-Zahir Hakim, Torry Holt, Tony Horne and Ricky Proehl running rampant on opposing defenses Faulk and Bruce can afford to have their rare off games. God forbid anything ever happened to Kurt Warner, Trent Green would likely be very receptive to inheriting an arsenal the likes of which the NFL has never seen.

Watching the Rams is a cross between a finely detailed offensive machine and a flag football game. While to the naked eye it seems like Warner is playing catch with his receivers, offensive mastermind Mike Martz is making precise play calling gives his team the best chance to succeed.

Many critics questioned the Martz's head coaching ability as he moved from the press box to the sideline. Contrary to popular belief, the move has only helped Martz, as the reins of former coach Dick Vermeil have been thrown out the window. With Martz's aggressive quick strike offense, the Rams are always in field position.

Spreading the ball around and using their blurring team speed is what makes the Rams offense so dominant. Consider this - four different players have 19 or more receptions, seven are averaging more than 10 yards a reception, and seven different players have caught touchdown passes.

The St. Louis offense can score close to the goal line, as evidenced by their 16 touchdowns in 27 red zone possessions. The Rams can also strike from deep with four rushes for over 30 yards as well as eight air strikes for more than 50 yards. Each of the Rams top four receivers has a touchdown catch for 70 yards or longer, making it impossible for defenses to decide whether to stay back or pressure up front.

The prime example of the inner workings of the Rams offense came in the Super Bowl against the Titans last year. The play as many remember was Warner's game winning touchdown to Bruce. The Titans came out in a three linebacker, four defensive back package to counter the Rams four receivers and Faulk.

St. Louis lined up Bruce wide right with Holt, Hakim and Proehl lined up on the left side with Faulk as the lone back. Each defensive back picked up a receiver while the linebacker on Bruce's right side had to keep Faulk in check. This allowed Bruce run his route deep with only single coverage and no downfield help. The play worked to perfection as Bruce beat his man to the ball and to the end zone.

The reason this play is such a good example of the Rams attack is this - there are so many weapons on this team that defenses cannot find a scheme to match up with them all.

On this play, Faulk was the wild card. If the linebackers helped with the coverage on Bruce, then Faulk would have been left to run unfettered through the defense. If the free safety or strong safety came over to help on Bruce than Hakim or Proehl would have to be covered by the less than fleet of foot Titan linebackers.

The success of Martz's Ram offense is attributed totally to match-ups. Unlike almost any other NFL team, St. Louis does not rely on rushing the ball to establish a play-action offense. Instead the Rams use four and five receiver sets to force defenses to either go into their bench for more defensive backs, or cover those receivers with linebackers. If the defense can cover all the receivers, then Faulk will have a speed advantage on a linebacker. However, if they key on Faulk, then the receivers will be left in single coverage which Warner can beat every time.

The Rams show no sign of slowing down as they put 57 points on the board against the Chargers in week five. Next week's victim seems to be the Falcons, hopefully St. Louis' next victim in its march towards a second straight Super Bowl and numerous offensive records.

■ football

continued from page 16

Dantzler, a serious Heisman candidate, ran for 134 yards against Duke last weekend and threw for 173, which made it three straight weeks in which he ran for at least 100 yards and had over 300 combined yards. He has also gotten a lot of help from a defense that has allowed just 48 points in five games.

That game against Florida State on the 4th of November could turn out to be the "Game of the Year" in College Football. The defending champions going up against a serious contender already has all the makings of a classic.

The other team is Virginia Tech. They have a great, balanced team - ah screw that, they got Michael Vick. Vick ran for a career-high 210 yards and three touchdowns against Boston College last weekend. For the year, Vick has 473 yards passing and 433 yards rushing. He will easily go over the 1,000-yard mark in both rushing and receiving this season and the scary part is that he makes it look so easy.

The Hokies job won't be so easy if their defense doesn't improve. They have given up 339 yards a game and 85 points in four games.

They have one big game and it is against Miami on November 4 at the Orange Bowl. Va. Tech beat Miami 43-10 last year and the Hokies want revenge on the Hokies for the beating they took.

As for this week in college football - a couple of those same Tennessee, coming off an ugly loss in overtime to LSU last weekend, travels to Athens for a date with the Bulldogs of Georgia. Tennessee has the size and one-half points at Georgia.

The Dogs have a better team, but they always underestimate the Vols. They have not defeated Tennessee since 1980 and I don't think on Saturday, either. Give me Tennessee.

Minnesota, coming off a 44-10 pounding of Illinois, is favored by two and a half points at home against Penn State. This will be a game to watch on your own press. Minnesota has one big win this year and could be overconfident against a Penn State team that is coming off a big win against Purdue on Saturday. With nothing to lose, Penn State could give me Penn State.

Besides, you can never go wrong with Joe Paterno.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist

Bring on the Badgers

Goaltender Markus Helanen and the UMass hockey team open their season this weekend in Madison, WI against the Univ. [illegible] Wisconsin Badgers.

ATTENTION
COLLEGIAN READERS

Ben & Jerry's
BUILD A FUTURE
A Partnership with Habitat for Humanity Campus Chapters
Free Ice Cream
"Pint-athlon" Ice Cream Eating Contest
University of Massachusetts - Amherst
Haigis Mall
October 5th • 1pm-4pm
Habitat for Humanity

Robinson earns A-10 Player of Week honors

[illegible] Patty Robinson was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for her exceptional play in [illegible] field hockey victories over Harvard and UConn, in that order.

"[illegible] consistent for us," [illegible] Patty Shea said. "She just puts her heart out on the field."

Robinson netted the finalizing goal in the second overtime of Friday's win over Harvard on a penalty stroke. The tally was [illegible] first of the 2000 campaign and the second of her career.

Three days later the [illegible] native recorded an assist on Jake Bregmmer's winning goal in the 2-1 overcoming [illegible] Huskies.

The assist threw Robinson into a tie for second on the UMass all-time career assists list with 40. She leads the team this year with eight assists.

"She's at her best when she's really anticipating a play," Shea said. "She goes for the ball and she's very proactive. That's when she's at her best and that's what she's done in the last couple of games."

Robinson's accomplishments have helped launch her team two spots to No. 9 in the latest STX/NFHCA Field Hockey Poll released on Oct. 3. UConn and UMass, just swapped positions as the Huskies now hold onto the No. 9 slot. The University of Maryland is still No. 1.

- Eric Soderstrom

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Patty Robinson was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after helping the UMass field hockey team to a pair of wins last week.

XC squads fare well in NY

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams competed at the Meet of Champions in Van Cortland Park, NY last weekend in the third race of the season for both clubs.

When all was said and done, the Minutewomen captured 11th place in a race that featured squads from across the nation. Boston College won the event, and was followed by Texas A&M, Brown, Wake Forest and Boston University.

Junior Kristin Cisowski was the top finisher for UMass on the day. The Salem, NH native crossed the line in the 39th position.

Other top runners for the Minutewomen included freshman Molly Ketscekek, senior Melissa Henderson, senior Megan McCormick and junior Katherine Blais.

Over on the men's side, Iona College made full use of the home-course advantage and nudged out William and Mary for the top spot. The Gaels had 71 points to the Virginia school's 73.

Princeton, Dartmouth and BU rounded out the top five. The Minutemen, on the other hand, struggled to a 17th place mark.

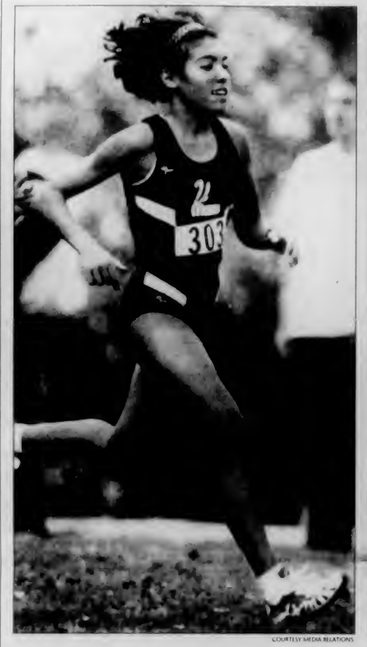
Senior Mike Pieck was the top finisher for UMass in the meet. He claimed the 63rd overall spot after completing the course in an even 26 minutes.

Fellow classmate Kevin Somers and junior Ryan Corbett were second and third for the Minutemen. Freshman David Mullert and junior David Prasse completed the quintet for the Minutemen.

This weekend both squads will compete in the New England Championships in Boston.

The race will serve as the final tuneup before the Atlantic 10 championships on Oct. 28. The conference's gala affair will take place in Pittsburgh on the campus of Duquesne University.

Both teams will be looking for a strong performance in Beantown. Needless to say, UMass can easily gain some momentum for the A-10's if all goes smoothly on Friday. The clubs will then have 15 days to prepare for the conference meet.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kristin Cisowski was the top finisher for the UMass women's cross country team last weekend.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Ryan Corbett had solid showings for the UMass men's cross country team in New York over the weekend.

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

The collegian is your friend

BUT CLOWNS ARE EVIL

ELEMENTARY CHILDREN IN LOW-INCOME AREAS ARE READING THREE GRADES BEHIND THEIR SUBURBAN PEERS.

LIZ DWYER'S THIRD GRADERS BEGAN THE YEAR THAT FAR BEHIND. IN ONE YEAR, SHE'S CAUGHT THEM UP AND PUT THEM ON A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD.

WE NEED MORE LIZ DWYER.

INFORMATION SESSION
Wednesday, October 11, 2000 • 7:00 p.m.
University of Massachusetts, Amherst
604 Goodell

[illegible] DEADLINE IS OCTOBER [illegible], 2000

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1989 Buick Century V6, cassett, AC, power, $1399 413-533-9082

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8!), excellent condition, 86k, loaded: power windows-seat-mirrors-locks; a/c, peppy V6 3.8L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker. $4500 or b.o., 508-836-3753

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

1990 Honda CRX, 139k miles, manual, stereo, sunroof, AC $3000 256-4599

EMPLOYMENT

Office Help organized person 2-3 hrs/week $9.00/hr. initial organization pays more. Call 253-8899

Cook-Day Care Center, Rt. 63, Leverett 9-1 M-F $7.50/hr Call Susan 548-9674

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr. Call Susan, 548-9674

CHILDCARE

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

House Assistant. $7.00 hr. Laundry, animal care, cleaning, odd jobs. 5-10 hrs a week. Non-smoker, car, 8 miles from Amherst. 259-1227 box #1.

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Mail Boxers Etc. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Ctr., Amherst)

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emdsnet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Adventurous grad student seeking cluster of people for personal care assistant evenings and weekends. Call Patrick at 546-6426 or 732-446-4874 or call Amanda at 546-5180

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

EMPLOYMENT

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

Assistant Swim Coach Part-time for Belchertown Rec. team. Competitive swimming background and experience working with children required. Late afternoon/evening hours. Call Cathy, 323-0419

Crocker Communitcations, Inc., a leading Internet Service Provider in Western Mass. has an immediate opening for a part-time web programmer. PHP and SQL skills are required. Knowledge of C/C++, Perl, Linux and Apac he are a plus. Willing to work around student schedules. If interested, please email your resume to jobs@crocker.com

Fraternities * Sororities* Clubs * Student Groups* Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957 Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

EMPLOYMENT

Fridge Rentals Free delivery. 253-9742

GREEK ANNOUNCEMENTS

Congratulations to our newest members: Marisa Axelrad, Leigh Boriskin, Valeries Buscemi, Ali Gerson, Jillian Goldstein, Caroline Goodman, Karen Hansen, Jill Milbury, Jamie Nott, Jackie Pinkow, Orit Reisman, Rachel Rothbard, Erika Solomon, Holly Willett. So happy to have you. Sincerely, Sigma Delta Tau.

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Dajata Bumpus. 253-0364

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

INSTRUCTION

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Have fun - Raising funds for your clubs, teams, and group. Earn up to $500 or more. Put our 25 years of fundraising experience to work for you. Call now for details 800-592-2121 ext 725

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

Large Furnished Room - Montague Ctr. Heat included. For more info 413-367-9286

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommate to share house w/3 guys. $375/mo inclusive. Call Steve @ 253-3220

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

SPRING BREAK 2001 Sunsplash Tours 1-800-426-7710

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need to Advertise? Don't hesitate... Call NOW! 545-3500 The Daily Collegian Classifieds We Advertise to THOUSANDS!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govel to Govel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 27, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Clint Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Silicon Parkway; Connecticut			Time Frenzy
WFSB 3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor "Long Hard Days"		48 Hours "Never Forget"		News	Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Big Brother (In Stereo Live)		Survivor "Long Hard Days"		48 Hours "Never Forget"		News	Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Vanished: "A Mother's Search"		News	Nightline
WLVI 56		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek "True Love"		Felicity (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)
WTXX	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Real TV	7 Days "The Cure" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)	News	Real TV		Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Friends	Frasier
WTIC 61	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Simpsons	Malcolm-Mid.	70s Show	70s Show	News
WWLP 9	22	News	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo)								Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY 57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Clint Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Great Performances: Berlin Philharmonic			News	Nightline
WGGB 40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Drew Carey	Vanished: "A Mother's Search"		Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WSBK 38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days "The Cure" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)	Frasier	I Love Lucy		Ripley's Believe It or Not!
WTBS 72		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Law & Order "Faccia a Faccia"
A&E 11		L.A. Law "Beef Jerky"		Law & Order		Biography: Jimmy Hoffa		American Justice "Mob Rats"	Investigative Reports			Sports	Moneyline
CNN 10	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live	Newsstand			Daily Show	Stein's Money
COM 55	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★½ "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" (1985, Fantasy) Pee-wee Herman.			South Park	Battlebots		Justice Files "Vigilantes"
DISC 48		Wild Discovery: Dragons		Wild Discovery "Wildest Asia		On the Inside: Death Zone		Flood of the Millennium	Wrestling the Mississippi			Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)
ESPN 51		Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)								Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE 50		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	★★ "Talk: The Price of Passion" (1992, Drama) Peter Strauss, Beverly D'Angelo.								Makeover	Say What Krke
MTV 53		Direct Effect	Makeover	Real World	Real World	Fear (In Stereo)			Say What Krke	Live Through This "Pilot"		All In Family	LeFerrons
NICK 52		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Catdog	Facts of Life	Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	Love Lucy	Bev. Hillbillies	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
SCIFI 59		Sliders (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	★★★★ "Raiders of the Lost Ark" (1981, Adventure)		Sixth Sense (N)			Extreme Machines
TLC 97	26	How'd They Do That?		48 Hours "Out of Mind"		Extreme Machines (N)		FBI Profiles: Criminal Minds				★★★ "Mortal Thoughts" (1991)
TNT 63		ER "Great Expectations"		Pretender "Unhappy Landings"		American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis		American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis				Strip Poker	Martin
USA 62		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Death Watch" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Ripcord"		Cover Me: FBI Family		Huntress "Partners" (In Stereo)
HBO 93		(5:00) ★½ "If There Was You"		★★½ "You've Got Mail" (1998, Comedy) Tom Hanks. PG				★★½ "The Thirteenth Floor" (1999, Drama) Craig Bierko. (In Stereo)	Sex and City	Arliss		The Corner
MAX 95		(5:00) "Ariz"		★★★ "Edward Scissorhands" (1990) PG-13					"Frost & Cone" (2000, Comedy) Larry Miller. (N)			Oz "Unnatural Disasters"
SHOW 96		★★★½ "The Truman Show" (1998) Jim Carrey. (In Stereo) PG				★★★½ "Hendrix" (2000, Drama) Wood Harris, Dorian Harewood.			Soul Food			"Ellis Tells Oh"
												Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

I HEARD THAT COLIN QUINN HOSTED SOMETHING HERE LAST NIGHT. THAT GUY'S ABOUT AS FUNNY AS DIRT YOGURT. DID ANY OF YOU CATCH IT?
MEAH, IT SUCKED!
BAM!!!
DIRT YOGURT! 100% OF YOUR R.D.A. OF DIRT!

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

SO I STEPPED ON YOUR BROTHER. I'M SORRY. MAYBE WE CAN WORK THIS OUT.
WAIT A SECOND. I'M BIGGER. I COULD JUST STEP ON THEM.
I'LL STEP ON ALL OF YOU.
I WOULDN'T TRY ANYTHING. WE RAIDED THE KNIFE DRAWER FOR WEAPONS.
WELL THEN.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

SEND OOH!
I GET A TINY FEELING OF SELF-WORTH WHEN I SEND E MAIL TO MY BOSS.
LOOKS LIKE SOMEONE HAS AN E MAIL MONKEY ON HIS BACK.
I CAN QUIT WHENEVER I WANT!

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

THE SUBURBAN OLYMPICS...DAY 6
SPLATTERY...
READY... AIM...
GO!
SPLAT!!!
BULL'S-EYE
FILLING THE BALLOONS WITH SUPER GLUE REALLY HELPS WITH AN ACCURATE SCORE-KEEPING THE TARGET STILL.
MILDRED! GET OUT THE JAWS OF LIFE!!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO, TOMAS, D'YOU WANT A BREW?
NO THANKS, MAN. I'M CLEAN AND SOBER.
I'M SORRY I DIDN'T...
NOTHIN' TO BE SORRY ABOUT, MAN... IT'S JUST A PERSONAL DECISION THAT WORKS FOR ME. CHANGED MY LIFE AND NOT JUST BOOZE...SUGAR, CAFFEINE, ALL MIND-ALTERING SUBSTANCES I'M LIVIN' IN THE NOW AND I'M TRULY DIGGIN' IT!
THAT'S COOL. HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN ON THE WAGON?
LET'S SEE. TODAY'S THE 13TH. UM...
BOUT TWO HOURS AND 45 MINUTES.

Get Furry By Darby Conley

I'M JUST SAYIN', YOU SHOULDN'T HAVE CALLED YOURSELF A "PROFESSIONAL" INTERIOR DECORATOR ON TV IF YOU'VE NEVER BEEN PAID FOR IT.
CATCHES. PAID ME.
I MEAN YOU'VE BEEN PAID FOR IT.
YEAH, I GAVE HIM SOME PAINT AND A DOLLAR TO PAINT MY WALL.
YOU MEAN YOU GAVE HIM A CAN OF PAINT, HE MADE THAT MESS IN YOUR ROOM, AND THEN YOU PAID HIM FOR DOING IT?
UM, YEAH. I ADMIT IT DOESN'T SOUND SO GOOD WHEN YOU SAY IT OUT LOUD.
MAYBE YOU'RE NOT AS CRAZY AS I THOUGHT.
SSSH

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

YES, I HAVE TO BE THE PARENT IN THE PRINTS OF GOLDEN ARMY!
SAY! UNCLE ZEUS! I'M THINKING OF VOCATIONS
I'D BELIEVE FIRST SHE SAID HE WAS TOTALLY OUT OF CONTROL
AWW, BLESSIE DON'T KNOW HER TO ACT LIKE THAT OH!
ADJUST AGAIN?
HIS DISGUISE I'VE DONE IT SINCE I WAS A KID

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

JASON TELLS ME THERE'S A BIG LORD OF THE RINGS MOVIE TRILOGY IN THE WORKS
WOW. HE MUST BE ECSTATIC
ACTUALLY, HE'S PRETTY DEPRESSED
THAT THEY WON'T BE AS GOOD AS THE BOOKS?
THAT HE AND MARCUS MISSED THE CASTING CALL
GOOD LORD CAN YOU IMAGINE?
WILL THE TWO HOBBITS PLEASE CLIMB OUT OF THE BALROG COSTUME?

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

I NEED FRODO AND SAMWISE ON THE SET, PLEASE
FRODO AND SAM? I NEED YOU ON THE SET, PLEASE
NOW!
YOU KNOW, YOU MIGHT HAVE TOLD US THAT ROOT BEER STAINS MITHRIL

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day to pursue your heart's desire with a little more dedication and gusto. A bold, more vulnerable approach may surprise you. Happy Birthday. Comfort and Kristen!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You mustn't let yourself settle into the kind of dull routine that can quickly be characterized as rut. Use your imagination!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your vision into the past – and the future, too, perhaps – is clearer now than it has been. You'll be enlightened about a former friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is no time to be too leisurely or relaxed. Success depends on giving every step your attention, care and dedication.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This is a good day for exploring what lies before you – at a fast or slow pace, whichever suits your mood at the moment. Curiosity reigns.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – This is a good day to keep score – and to insist that your closest competitors follow the rules to the letter. The evening brings greater understanding.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You are not suffering from a shortage of confidence or ambition. Rather, you are not sure how to take full advantage of existing opportunities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You can get a great deal of fun and enjoyment out of those endeavors today which seemed, at first, to be nothing but routine requirements.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may be consumed with thoughts of another time or place today. There is a time for nostalgia – and today, it can serve you rather well.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your enthusiastic approach is catching today, and others will benefit from your energy and vigor. This is no time to be now. Take a stand!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Apologies may be in order before the day is out, but timely and courteous behavior can serve to heal rifts and improve relations all around.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Take advantage of any and all downtime you have today to catch up on personal business that can't afford to wait much longer.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 63 LOW: 49	HIGH: 68 LOW: 48	HIGH: 58 LOW: 38

Quote of the Day

"Smile pretty and watch your back."

–Ani DiFranco

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Reuben Sandwich

Pizza Casserole

Carrot & Onion Schine (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Dinner

Sicilian Stuffed Shells

Pork Chops

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martigneth
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, John Zawislak

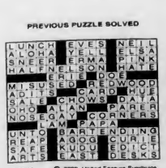
MONKEY-BOX BY PBG-J

AFTER GORING SEVERAL CHILDREN YESTERDAY, THIS TRICERETOPS WAS LOCKED AWAY IN OUR HIGHEST SECURITY FACILITY

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

ACROSS
1 Minces
6 Jewelry buy
10 Marinate
14 Change the clock
15 Fragrance
16 "Help!" in France
17 OPEC vessel
18 Days of — long ago
19 Luau paste
20 Marriage offer
22 Happenings
24 Pastrami seller
25 Brown bear
26 Choked
30 Gusto
32 Singer Fitzgerald
33 Irritated
35 Praise
40 Ordinary
42 Person with confidential information
44 Distributes
45 — apumante
47 Othello's foe
48 For fear that
50 Insubstantial
52 Talk nonsense
56 Con
58 Trepidation
59 Bakery
64 Like the U.N
65 Serene
67 Muslim scriptures
68 Dove's nest
69 Quaker pronoun
70 Superior group
71 Ogled
72 Back talk
73 Thick

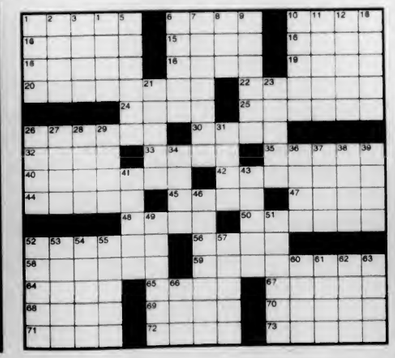
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-25-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Harvest
2 — to the throne
3 City near Johannesburg
4 Chirp
5 Walkers' purpose
6 Shade of blue
7 Adore
8 Scads, country
9 Pinko and Socialist
10 Filled to excess
11 Muscat citizen
12 Important artery
13 Newsstand
21 Bathtub
23 Ghouls
26 Breast —
27 Healing plant
28 Oversupply
29 Entrance
31 Revise
34 Pod contents
36 Unlucky
37 Roman Friday?
38 Hosa' brother
39 Stages of a journey
41 Football's Aikman
43 Capri and Man
44 "Neat!"
46 Fastens together
49 Puts up
51 Beat soundly
52 Fruit beverage
53 Badger
54 Muller or Davis
55 Harvested hay
57 Signatures
60 Pit
61 Ireland, poetically
62 Panther and lynx
63 On bended — knee
66 "Eureka!"

EVERY NFL GAME EVERY SUNDAY NFL SUNDAY TICKET
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, October 4, 2000 | 16

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegiansports@yahoo.com

Terriers set to invade Garber Field tonight

Number seven ranked UM faces tough test against BU

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

All-American Anke Bruemmer will lead the UMass field hockey team into action against regional rival BU tonight.

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

A whistle, heard in the hurried background of dueling company last November in Storrs, CT, ended the 1999 season of Boston University's field hockey program. And that final sounding, coincidentally, erased the Terriers' name from the first round bracket of the NCAA tournament. Their post-season banisher: the University of Massachusetts.

Attempt at retribution begins tonight under the lights of Richard F. Garber field, when No. 14 BU (7-3) takes on No. 7 UMass (8-2) at 7 p.m.

"The only thing we have to know about BU game is that we're the team who ended their season last year," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "And that, in itself, is a huge plus for them."

UMass is coming off of its biggest win of the year thus far. That triumph coming over the, then No. 7 nationally ranked, University of Connecticut last Saturday afternoon, Junior Anke Bruemmer scored with 8:41 remaining in the second stanza to guide UMass to the 2-1 victory over the Huskies. The Minutewomen, however, are keeping everything in perspective.

"There's a confidence but I think they also know that they can't take anything for granted," Shea said. "They still have their work cut out for them."

The Maroon and White were eliminated by UConn from the NCAA tourney last year in the quarterfinals | so it knows exactly how the Terriers feel coming into this evening's struggle.

"We have to counteract that," Shea said. "We need to come out and put the ball in first because then that forces them to fight from behind."

In the Minutewomen's last three victories, their defense has been unyielding, specifically, their deep defense. Led by Bruemmer and goalie Zowie Tucker, UMass has only allowed one shot to leak through the pipes.

"As a unit, our defense is the strongest part of our game, our defensive unit, meaning our defensive backfield and goalkeeping," Shea said. "Our actual individual defense, 1-on-1, is not the strongest. The ability to strip the ball from an opponent generates some offense for you – and we haven't been able to do that. Most of our offense has been coming from our deep defense."

Fundamentals have been the focal point this year for the Maroon and White offense. And before every game, Shea has stressed that one of the major keys to every victory is to make sure that the 'little things' are not overlooked at any point in the game, and that every skill is finished.

"Our ball speed has to be higher, and our angles and positioning a little bit better," Shea said. "Sometimes if you're two yards forward than you really should be, you're in what we call 'dead space' on the field meaning you're behind a defender. The completion of skills is important."

Boston University is lead by senior Kate Cusik, who was just named America East Field Hockey Player of the Week. Cusik is tied for 11th place on the Terriers all-time scoring list with 60 points. She has scored four goals in her last five games.

"They have great forwards, team speed and overlap from their midfield positions extremely well," Shea said. "And they have good individual skill players that can beat you on 1-on-1 if you're not careful. You can't give them any gifts – any opportunities to break away."

The Terriers, coming of a 7-1 shellacking at the hands of No. 2 Old Dominion University on September 30, could be one midfielder short.

Junior Kerry Carney went down with an ankle injury with 1:39 left in the first half of that game, and she did not return. Her status is uncertain for tonight's contest.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

A win over BU tonight would surely help the UMass field hockey team move up in the national rankings. The Minutewomen are currently tabbed as the No. 9 club in the land.

UM Crew: Rolling on the river

By Katie Landers
Collegian Correspondent

Although Massachusetts women's crew coach Jim Dietz is still living on Australian time, he's leading his team to be the best during the fall season.

Dietz arrived back from Down Under last Thursday and was in the water on Friday with the team. He was anxious to be back with UMass for Sunday's race, The Textile River Regatta. On Friday, he worked the women throughout practice, but the team was unable to have a water practice on Saturday prior to the race.

Practice on the water this fall has been hampered due to the weather in the Pioneer Valley.

Jim Dietz

"The fall season is more for practice and fun," Dietz said. "Our goal for the next race is to keep the boats from sinking."

The UMass varsity boat came in third last weekend, following behind the Community Rowing Club and their toughest competitor of the fall, Williams College. The three-mile course started at Tyng Island in Lowell and finished along the Heritage State Parkway.

Dietz noted that mornings are the only time that women's crew can practice because of classes and jobs, and they are doing the best they can with the time they get.

As far as openers go, Dietz and assistant coach Greg Kruczynski felt that the performance was great.

The Minutewomen are looking for technical improvements this fall with basis on rowing to get ready for the spring. Most of their practices will be from their pre-season races. With limited water time in the spring because of ice, rain, and fog, Dietz said it will be an advantage to be well-prepared for the Atlantic 10 season.

Sara Pragluski

Overall, it seems like the great mental attitude of this year's team will keep them right. After only losing one varsity rower from last year's team, the Minutewomen are led by tri-captains Kerry Bredenberg, Heather Walker, and All-American Sarah Pragluski.

"This year's team is really deep," Kruczynski said.

Added Dietz, "This year it's going to be very competitive to get in the boats. That's what makes it exciting."

The next race that the crew team has to look forward to will be this Sunday at the head of the Connecticut River, with tough competitors Boston University and Brown University. An Alumni tent will be located at Cromwell Beach for spectators to enjoy during the race of the holiday weekend.

Upsets reign at top of the college ranks

Running the option with David Rose

Through September, the overwhelming story in college football has been the month of the upsets.

It all started with UCLA's beating of No. 3 Alabama, and continued through this past weekend in which three top ten teams (USC, Florida and Washington) and nine top 25 teams overall were knocked off.

Leading the charge are the surprising Northwestern Huskies and the Oregon Ducks. Those two teams are already having Rose Bowl aspirations in the early going. What a great name for a bowl game.

The Ducks are coming off back-to-back wins over UCLA and Washington and are in prime position to make a run at Pasadena. Running Back Maurice Morris has 625 yards in five games with five touchdowns. The defense did the job on Saturday against Washington quarterback Marques Tuiasosopo, holding him to just 14-for-37 passing with two interceptions.

Hey, if they continue to confuse teams with the two different shades of green on their field, they might not lose again. However, that is not the case, and the road doesn't get any easier for the quack attack. They play four of their last six games on the road.

As for Northwestern, they are coming off two straight offensive explosions against Wisconsin and Michigan State. What makes it more impressive was that both wins came on the road.

Running back Damien Anderson has carried the load the last two weeks for he Huskies, as he ran 174 yards in the overtime win against Wisconsin and 219 yards last week in East Lansing. He is reminding NU fans of another running back with the initials D.A. who ran wild over defenses in the mid-90s – his name - Darnell Autry.

At 4-1, the Huskies are a serious contender for their first Rose Bowl appearance since 1995. Circle it now - November 4 - Northwestern travels to the Big House for a date with the Wolverines, with a possible Rose Bowl berth on the line.

As for the rest of college football, four teams have dominated the season so far with big name quarterbacks.

The arm of senior citizen of Chris Weinke has led number one Florida State. He led the Seminoles to the National Title last season and is a serious Heisman candidate this year. So far, he has thrown for 1,478 yards and 12 TD's for the Seminoles during their 5-0 start. His big receivers have been Marvin Minnis [27 catches] and Travis Minor [18 catches out of the backfield].

The defense has been their usual stifling self. They have allowed and average of 256 yards a game to the opposition. The Seminoles have outscored their opposition 208-45 in their first five games.

However, the road gets tougher for the Seminoles starting this week. They play No. 7 Miami this week, and then host red-hot Clemson on November 4 and arch rival Florida on November 18.

Signal caller Eric Crouch has led No. 2 Nebraska to its 4-0 start. He has rushed for 340 yards and seven touchdowns and thrown for 502 yards and eight touchdowns.

As a team, the Huskers have a 6.8-yard average per rushing attempt. That will win you a lot of ball games. The scare against Notre Dame might have been the best thing to happen to them as they have turned it around offensively the last couple of weeks scoring a combined 85 points.

Only date to circle down on the Nebraska schedule is November 11 at Kansas State. If Nebraska can pull that one out, than they should no problem getting to the title game in the Orange Bowl.

Speaking of Clemson, they have emerged from the shadows to get off to a 5-0 start. Another Bowden, Tommy, has led an ACC team to football's top 10, led by QB Woody Dantzler.

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 11

Boston College is the Hockey East favorite

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — When it comes to guiding a college hockey team, some of the best minds in the nation reside behind the benches of the clubs in the Hockey East conference.

Boston University's Jack Parker, Boston College's Jerry York and Maine's Shawn Walsh are among the many generals who have guided their clubs to national prominence during their tenures in the Northeast.

But when it comes to pre-season polls, the nine coaches in the league still haven't gotten the hang of things. For the past two seasons, BC was tabbed as the favorite, yet the Eagles failed to claim the regular season crown on each occasion.

Yesterday afternoon at the league's Media Day at the FleetCenter, the consensus was a mirror image of the past two years. The Eagles led the voting with 72 points, while BU [69 points] and Maine [68 points] were right on their heels. New Hampshire was fourth with 60 points.

Needless to say, it should be another exciting season of hockey in the conference that has produced the last three Hobey Baker award winners.

"Those four programs on paper appear to be the best, but you can definitely make a strong case for someone else breaking into the top four," York said. "It's going to make for an interesting year."

Northeastern University, Providence College, UMass-Amherst, UMass-Lowell and Merrimack rounded out the pack in the pre-season poll.

For the Minutemen, they are seeking a fresh start this season under the guidance of new head coach Don Cahoon. UMass lost only four seniors to graduation and returns two of the top players in the league in seniors Jeff Turner and Markus Helanen.

So, even though the coach and the players are still in the process of feeling each other out, the hope is that the first year of the Cahoon regime will be a successful one.

"We're going to try to develop skill in relation to the people that we have in our program…and maybe open it up a little bit," Cahoon said. "Last year this team showed the ability to play close games against some very good teams, and in some cases, they had success against them [in the form of a victory]. Some of that success was in part to a strong commitment from the trap, but we're going to try to use a little bit of both schemes."

Jeff Turner netted 34 points [15 goals, 19 assists] in 35 games a year ago to lead the club in scoring. Tim Turner, now a sophomore, enjoyed a stellar rookie season in which he was third on the squad with 26 points [five goals, 21 assists]. Helanen closed out last season with a 10-16-3 mark and a 2.82 goals against average.

All in all, the Minutemen will have 15 players on their roster who are either juniors or seniors. UMass also returns a talented sophomore class that saw more than its fair share of action in 1999-2000.

"I think that there's going to be an improvement," said Jeff Turner, the captain of the club. "We're going to depend on our senior and junior classes, and even our sophomores to bring the freshmen along. We can use our experience in closer games to get the late goal or to do what it takes to win."

Meanwhile, over in Chestnut Hill, the Eagles have some gaps to fill with the loss of Hobey Baker Award winner Mike Mottau and forwards Jeff Farkas and Blake Bellefuille. However, three-time All-American Brian Gionta returns for his fourth season along with a host of other talented players beside him at BC. Among the returnees include the goaltending tandem of senior Scott Clemmensen and sophomore Tim Kelleher.

"Scott is a four-year starter and had great numbers last year, but Timmy had great numbers also," York said. "We're blessed with two front-line goaltenders."

"We're certainly going to miss those players who graduated, but we have a group of eight seniors who have been here for four years," added York. "Those guys are going to assume a lot of the leadership skills."

Boston University suffered a bit of a blow when goalie Rick DiPietro left Beantown for the National Hockey League draft, where the New York Islanders took him first overall. The Terriers won the regular season title a year ago thanks to the spectacular play of their rookie netminder.

"I think that our expectations are much higher this year than they were last year," Parker said. "We had a great rejuvenation of our program thanks to our freshmen and sophomores, who are now sophomores and juniors. I think that we have a stronger team than last year."

Clinton and Lewinsky have alien love child named Tammy! Elvis and Garcia come back from the dead… engaged! Check it out in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The UMass field hockey team beat BU 2-1 in four overtimes. Sports covers the whole deal from a brand new place in the paper.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 22 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, October 5, 2000

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Bouncing Around
UMass gymnastic's team practicing in horseshoe of Southwest

Infighting and unhappiness: SGA's first meeting

For further SGA analysis, see related story on page two.

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

Having the results of last week's Senate election ratified on Monday, the Student Government Association (SGA) held its first meeting last night. While there are many new Senators to the University of Massachusetts Student Senate this fall, there are also many old leads.

Members of the Executive Cabinet addressed accusations made in The Daily Collegian earlier this week that they bought alcohol with monies from the SGA.

President Jeff Howe insisted that the person who brought that information to The Daily Collegian come forward with the proof.

Howe urged "the coward that made this accusation" to present documents showing evidence of the purchase of alcohol with SGA funds.

He said he would be "more than happy to see that [document] because it doesn't exist."

The most heated moments of last night's meeting, however, came at the end of Student Trustee Seth Avakian's officer report.

He spoke on the issue of the constitutionality of last week's elections and questioned Speaker of the Senate, Jim Eltringham's involvement in them. It is a topic to which he has devoted much time during the last week.

On Monday, Avakian told the Collegian, "Jim [Eltringham]… intentionally doctored the number of commuter seats so his girlfriend and a fraternity could control fifty percent of the Senate seats… Not only could this result in impeachment, but charges in the University Judicial System."

Last night, Avakian continued his allegations against Eltringham.

"[Eltrinham has] run for the office of the Presidency twice, and lost twice," Avakian said. "He figured the only was he could get into office [this time] was by defrauding the democratic system."

"I will not acknowledge this body as the Undergraduate Student Senate. . . you will not see me again."
Student Trustee Seth Avakian

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

From left to right, Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham, Associate Speaker Mike McCarthy and Student Trustee Seth Avakian at last night's SGA meeting. Progress took the back-burner to political infighting.

Eltringham stood silently at the podium while Avakian stated his charges.

Several members of the Senate jumped up to make a point of personal privilege.

"Please stop wasting the Senate's time with this personal attack," said Commuter Senator Jeff Bardillo.

Eltringham attributed Avakian's charges to "procedural disagreement." Avakian, echoing US presidential candidate Governor George W. Bush, accused Eltringham of coming up with "fuzzy numbers" for the commuter seats up for election last week.

"According to the University's best estimates, there are 18,218 undergraduates," said Avakian. "[and] 7,150 [of them are] off-campus students."

Since each Senator represents 250 students, Avakian continued, there should have been 29 commuter Senators elected. Instead there were 34.

Eltringham said he "crunched the numbers a bunch of times," and each time the results were slightly different. According to him, calculating the number of commuter seats has never been a precise science. Rather, the number has often been estimated, as it is difficult to determine exactly how many commuters there are.

Howe agreed with Avakian and claimed that the "numbers were grossly miscalculated." He said it was a "serious problem."

That Avakian also considered this a serious problem was evident.

"Until our Student Judiciary makes a decision as to the Constitutionality

Turn to SGA page 3

Homophobic graffiti reappears in dorms

"Technically this type of graffiti is a form of vandalism," Jim Lyons, University of Massachusetts Police Department Spokesman.

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Two incidents of homophobic graffiti have occurred within Pierpont Dormitory so far this semester.

The first incident occurred on the second floor of the building when a resident assistant hung up a poster of the state of Massachusetts so that students could identify where they were from.

Stacey Kazinskas, a sophomore English major and the resident assistant for the floor, explained that someone wrote homophobic comments upon the poster. According to her, Provincetown was labeled as "fag-town" and UMass was labeled as "gay-Mass."

As a result of the graffiti, Kazinskas held a meeting with all of her residents explaining the events and the consequences of this type of action. She then had her residents sign an agreement promising not to vandalize property with homophobic messages and pledging that if they did see someone writing such messages that they would tell the proper authorities.

The second incident involved homophobic messages on the door of a resident assistant on the fourth floor of the building.

The RA of fourth floor Pierpont refused to comment on the situation.

Graffiti of this type is not a new occurrence on the University of Massachusetts campus. Last year, incidents of threatening sexually discriminatory graffiti were found in Gorman Dormitory and other residence halls on campus.

According to Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMass Police Department, the police do a series of things when they are called to the scene to document offensive types of graffiti. The department arrives at the scene of the crime and photographs the graffiti for police records. When they are done, the Physical Plant is called in to remove the offensive material. Because of the necessity to get photo documentation of the graffiti, any resident assistant that comes in contact with graffiti in a dormitory is asked to cover it up with a piece of paper and then call the police.

Lyons explained that often times these types of cases were persecuted as vandalism.

"Technically this type of graffiti is a form of vandalism," he said.

Barbara O'Connor, made similar comments about the legal repercussions of vandalism on campus in a former Collegian article regarding the graffiti that occurred in Gorman.

"If you look at the civil rights law, this could be a felony or a misdemeanor, which could mean jail time for the individual or individuals involved," she said. "They would also, of course, face vandalism charges."

Consequences of a vandalism act that involved graffiti were also addressed in a meeting held last year regarding the Gorman incidents. UMass Police Detective Peter Murray discussed the consequences of this type of vandalism.

According to him, an act that involves threat to an individual's safety or threatens bodily harm against him or her can lead to a minimum sentence of 10 years in jail. An act that involves racial graffiti could lead

Turn to GRAFFITI, page 3

Piercing the body? It's a

HOLE-Y EXPERIENCE

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

Ben Hartman is a solidly built man, not very tall, covered in tattoos (including the word RAGE across the base of his neck and the mascot for the horrorpunk band The Misfits) and with a few highly visible body piercings. His ears, for instance, are stretched, the elongated holes holding heavy rings that could, at any moment, rip through his ear and hit the floor. Hartman runs Loonar Piercing, the closest body-piercing salon to the UMass campus.

Sitting in the waiting room of Loonar, a small place in a strip mall on Route 9, trying to get an appointment to talk to him for this article, sheds some light on why I'm writing this in the first place.

A group of six UMass girls walk in – one wants to pierce her navel, the other her upper ear. They all act very, very nervous… giggly, almost, like they're breaking the law and are afraid to get caught. A kid with died-blond hair, Hot Topic kickpants, and a spaced-out look in his face wanders in to get his ears stretched. A man who looks to be in his early thirties, bald and muscular, is there to get his tongue pierced. He's asking all sorts of questions about barbells and aftercare and lengths — of all the people that wander through, he will be the most informed. A 20-year-old who doesn't go to school anymore passes out while getting his tongue pierced. Afterwards he sits in a chair, his face a scary sort of gray. Ian Kelly, one of the Loonar piercers, goes and buys him a Coke from one of the other businesses in the Route 9 strip mall where they are located.

"Today hasn't even been that crazy," Hartman says.

Body piercing is one of the fastest-growing trends among young people in America, and college students in particular. Pleasurable Piercings, a salon and nationwide piercing supplies company in New Jersey, does roughly seven thousand piercings per year.

Turn to HOLE-Y page 6

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Marc Guitte, a 20 year old from Chicapee, gets his lip pierced at Loonar Piercing.

It's not just a shift in power, it's the end of a brief era

News Analysis

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's meeting wasn't the end of problematic political wrangling; it was quite possibly the beginning of the end for the current SGA leadership and the beginning of a new student politics paradigm.

Student Trustee Seth Avakian called out Senate Speaker Jim Eltringham accusing him of ignoring "the Constitution by his oath [sic] of the Undergraduate and the Code of Student Conduct" when blatantly employing his discretion in the apportionment of seats sufficient could be elected.

Eltringham's girlfriend, Jen Teixeira, former Associate Speaker of the Senate, had a falling-out with members of the SGA Administration during last year's Speaker elections. At that time Avakian said that he couldn't "trust her." Eltringham, who was running against administration favorite Aaron Saunders at the time, still managed to win the close election after four votes to eliminate candidates. Since his victory, the SGA has headed downhill.

Because of the way the SGA elections are set up, the loss of Teixeira, Eltringham's obvious choice for the position, meant the Speaker was saddled with the winner of the Associate Speaker's election, left-leaning Mike McCarthy. Ideologically on the other side of the fence from Eltringham, McCarthy has carried favor with the current SGA administration.

Eltringham's support in the Senate has consisted mainly of moderate to conservative members of the SGA. A member of the Republican Club, the Silent Majority and one time Editor-in-Chief of The Minuteman, the conservative UMass newspaper, Eltringham has long opposed SGA President Jeff Howe and Trustee Avakian. It was Eltringham who last year authored legislation to eliminate appointed seats, which included Asian Latino African and Native American students, in the Senate. He ultimately lost the vote.

During the second semester, after a heated meeting, the seats were phased out, but only after Howe got legislation to pass along with the anti-appointed seats measure that guaranteed ALANA involvement for three years, and the creation of a body to keep those students interested and involved in the Senate.

Last spring, after losing the Presidential race to Howe for the second time in two years, Eltringham won his Speaker seat. As stated previously, the SGA has spiraled ever deeper since that election.

Avakian and Howe ran the Senate last year. Speaker Mikale Billard oversaw the meetings, but the President and Trustee had almost total control over Senate votes, knowing, because of the makeup of the body, that they could count on a certain number of votes every time they had legislation pass. Billard's obvious friendship with the two administrators clearly did not hurt, as he always had a tendency to be stricter with the gavel to opposition voters than to supporters. Which isn't to say the opposition was always well behaved; quite the opposite.

Spearheaded by Zachary Spilman, a conservative and strict Constitutionalist who disagreed with most of what the SGA did, opposition to Howe and Avakian tended to be poorly organized and rarely, if ever, proved successful.

But the Senate, regardless of opposition, consisted of Howe and Avakian supporters; the ALANA Caucus, self-styled liberals and young Senators who followed Howe, Avakian and Billard because they were the leaders at the time. Commuter seats were not an issue, as so few commuter senators actually took part in meetings, thus allowing the SGA's top administration to manipulate the Senate to their own ends.

Howe, Avakian and Billard's control however, led to complaints from opponents who claimed that the Executive Branch and the Legislative Branch were far too close to be considered checks and balances to one another. But the Speaker elections finally saw a united opposition to Avakian and Howe, as anybody with complaints split their votes enough for Eltringham to slip through to the fourth ballot before choosing him to lead the next Senate.

At which point, the opposition had control of their part of the government while Avakian and Howe took a giant step backward in their ability to control the Senate. They took their second giant step backward after last week's controversial elections were ratified. With the election of 34 Greek senators, the two top student administrators lost their ability to have even a majority of the Senate supporting them.

At last night's meeting, an admittedly slightly drunk Seth Avakian, who had participated in an alcohol education class earlier in the night, charged that Eltringham had led inappropriate elections before a Senate that simply wasn't listening. Divided into three sections of chairs, Avakian stared straight into a block of 34 Greeks uninterested in his charges against Eltringham. To his right sat a small group of stalwart supporters including Howe, behind whom sat a satisfied Jeff Bazydlo. Although he won't say it, Bazydlo had a great deal to do with the Greeks election and knew that, despite his former role as a member of Howe and Avakian's cabinet, he now had the Senate's support should he ever need it. Meanwhile, to Avakian's left sat the Conservative block of senators who smiled, satisfied that suddenly, after they'd lost a presidential election last semester that had surely been theirs, they'd gained control of the senate. Behind them sat a small group of ALANA senators whose hard time getting legislation passed last year will only get harder.

Avakian's promise not to attend anymore SGA meetings until new elections are held may not matter; his swearing to new senators, "You are not the Constitutional representatives of the undergraduates of this University. You are the pipe dream of a few students who just can't win a REAL [his written emphasis] election," just might not matter. Instead of looking like the all-powerful SGA administrator he did last year, he now looks like an embittered politician who knows his days are numbed. He can't even think about passing legislation anymore; he doesn't have the support to anyway.

Meanwhile Jeff Howe has remained suspiciously silent on issues, at least when compared to Avakian. A brief statement about the Constitution being upheld is as far as Howe wants to go, maybe attempting to play the middle of the road President that he truly is. A registered Republican, Howe may now suddenly shift towards the middle of the Senate while Avakian attempts to stake his claim to the body's left-wing. His silence on the issues facing the Senate is suspicious, but that same silence could be part of a political power play in an attempt to at least maintain some hope that his legislation gets passed.

As for the Senate, Eltringham's role as Speaker might afford him much more power than he has expressed an interest to have. With the conservative stalwarts and new Greek students who can thank Eltringham at least partially for their power, the bespectacled Speaker might just be able to pass any piece of legislation he wants to, assuming he uses his favors properly.

Beyond that, the new Senate has the ability to address old issues, including what may have started it all: Title V. Giving the Greeks an area government and the battle over it last semester, while perhaps a good political idea at the time for Sheila Tunney, another member of the Cabinet, may have cost the SGA administration control of the Senate.

And unless there are new elections, that leaves at least one political lame-duck sitting in office, unless he's suddenly playing the politics that he used to brand unnecessary. And there's a possibility for a second, a Speaker who may not know the power he has behind the podium and a brand new Senate who is feared right now despite having shown no real cohesion.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Jim Eltringham (left) looks on as Seth Avakian (center) listens to a question from a new Senator. Infighting between Avakian and Eltringham will probably tilt in Eltringham's favor due to new Senators elected last week.

MAUREEN MAYOL/ COLLEGIAN

Looking Fresh
UMass student Jonny Blaze eats healthy at Fresh Side, downtown Amherst

■ SGA

continued from page 1

of the elections," Avakian declared. "I will not acknowledge this body as the Undergraduate Student Senate. . . And until the judiciary rules on this election, you will not see me again."

Avakian made it clear that he is willing to discuss issues and problems with students, including the Senators in attendance last night.

"But I will not recognize you as a student senator," Avakian declared. He then gathered his belongings and left the meeting.

The meeting continued without any further outbursts after Avakian's departure.

"We're moving on," Eltringham said when asked about Avakian's comments.

Gabe Tavarez, Chief Justice of the Student Judiciary, urged the Senators, amid the heated debates, to remember why they were there.

"The only reason you've been elected," Tavarez said, "is to represent your constituencies. You're not here to push your own personal issues."

Only one official motion was brought to the floor and passed during last night's meeting.

The Senate voted unanimously to appoint Juliet Okafor to the position of Secretary of Diversity Issues.

"I think we need to see a lot more types of people [in the Senate]," Okafor said.

She said she was looking forward to discussing matters of diversity and trying to make the Senate a more diverse body.

■ graffiti

continued from page 1

to a minimum of two and a half years in prison.

O'Connor explained that there are different types of graffiti and that the people that commit these crimes are often difficult to catch.

"Graffiti is hard to investigate because it is a very quick thing for someone to do," she said. "It takes two seconds to write something, and if it happens in residence halls like Gorman, random patrols can't deter it."

She went on to say that increased communication might help the situation.

"We need to stress community on this campus, and that includes increasing the amount of communication that we have with the students. If we have more communication we are more likely to solve cases," she said.

"If there are people who think they know what happened in the case of vandalism, we need their help, especially if it is in a residence hall."

Lyons explained that more often than not, the residence hall deals with the graffiti problem. Often, the halls seek to educate students about vandalism and dispel myths surrounding homosexuality.

"It [homophobic graffiti] happens from time to time. I wouldn't say that it is reported on a frequent basis," Lyons said. "When it happens in a residence hall, it is typically something that is handled by the floor."

One resource that a dormitory could use to educate students and dispel prejudices surrounding bisexuality and homosexuality is the Stonewall Center. According to Felice Yeskel, the director of the center, the group lends assistance to the campus community at large when it is needed. She explained that when the graffiti was prevalent in the Gorman living area that the hall provided resources such as positive posters and images, and speakers from their speakers' bureau.

"We are here for a resource for the campus community if we are needed," she said.

Seattle sued for WTO

By Paul Condra
The Daily (U. Washington)

(U-WIRE) SEATTLE — A team of civil-rights lawyers took on Seattle Tuesday, filing a class action lawsuit against the city they said undermined citizen rights in its handling of the World Trade Organization summit held here last fall.

The suit comes from the Washington D.C.-based Trial Lawyers for Public Justice (TLPJ) firm and seeks damages from the city, Mayor Paul Schell and former Police Chief Norman Stamper on behalf of more than 600 protesters and others arrested on December 1 and 2.

Lawyers in the case said the city's "no-protest zone," established by Schell to clear the downtown streets of demonstrators, violated civil rights and led to hundreds of illegal arrests.

Further, the suit seeks to show that Schell's decision to have the WTO conference in Seattle was an attempt to showcase the city to the world while ignoring the interests of its citizens.

Now, almost a year after the WTO conference and protests, and after many published reports lambasting Schell and the Seattle Police Department for breaking civil laws, protest groups and lawyers want retribution.

I would like to see the people who violated our rights made accountable," said Seattle resident Jennifer Hudziec, 25, at a press conference Tuesday at Westlake Center. Hudziec is one person involved in the lawsuit. She was arrested on Dec. 1, after being corralled by police inside the off-limits zone, she said.

The group of marchers had taken to the streets to demonstrate against the WTO, even though Schell had declared 25 blocks of downtown Seattle a "no-protest zone" after police began using tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse crowds the day before.

www.dailycollegian.com - Coming Soon

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Hobson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Rob Schultz Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sinaswski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargunza Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

DRINK UP LOG ON YOU COULD FLY FREE!

Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html to see if you're a WINNER!

Available on specially marked Coca-Cola Bottles/Cans inside campus vending machines.

HOW TO PLAY

1. Detach Official Game Piece from Coca-Cola bottle/can.
2. Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen.*
3. If your Official Game Piece reveals a winning message, you win the prize specified (subject to verification). See Official Rules for claim info.

*If you do not have internet access and would like to find out if your game piece contains a winning message, mail your entire original Official Game Piece (after making a copy for your records to submit upon request) along with a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper on which you have hand-printed your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4552, Blair, NE 68009-4552, to be received by 11/20/2000. Limit one game piece per envelope. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE.

COCA-COLA/SOUTHWEST AIRLINES "DRINK UP! LOG ON! FLY FREE!" SWEEPSTAKES
OFFICIAL RULES NO PURCHASE NECESSARY

1. HOW IT WORKS. Official Game Pieces will be affixed to 17 oz cans and 20 oz bottles of Coca-Cola Classic available while supplies last, in specially marked vending machines on participating school campuses and via Point 44. If your can or bottle does not have a sticker affixed, or if you believe something or other than stated below in Rule #2, pertaining the words "DRINK! LOG! PLAY AGAIN!" or is blank, you are not eligible to obtain a prize. 2. HOW TO PLAY. Beginning 12:01 am (ET) on 8/1/2000 through 11:59 pm (ET) on 10/31/2000, visit southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen. If your Official Game Piece reveals the words "WINNER!" on the Official Game Piece, you may be eligible to win a prize described in Rule #3 below. ONLY ONE Official Game Piece awards the words "WINNER!" per can or bottle. If you win a coupon redeemable for a free 8 ounce (8 oz) can of Coca-Cola Classic, CLAIM SUBJECT TO VERIFICATION. See Rule #3 to claim a prize. • If you do not have access to the internet and would like to find out if your game piece contains a winning message, mail your entire original Official Game Piece (after making a copy for your records) to submit upon request, along with a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper on which you have hand-printed your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4552, Blair, NE 68009-4552, to be received by 11/20/2000. Limit one game piece per envelope. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE. 3. HOW TO CLAIM A PRIZE. To claim your prize, mail your entire original Official Game Piece along with a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper on which you have hand-printed your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers, as well as your home address, zip code & phone number, to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Claims, P.O. Box 4552, Blair, NE 68009-4552, to be received by 11/20/2000. ISSUANCE OF ANY PRIZE IS SUBJECT TO VERIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY AND PRIZE ELIGIBILITY AS SET FORTH IN THESE OFFICIAL RULES. ONLY WINNERS WILL RECEIVE A RESPONSE. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO PLAY. For a free chance to play, hand print your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers on a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mail with first-class postage affixed to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Requests must be received by 11/20/2000. Limit one request per envelope. Allow 4 weeks for delivery. Void where prohibited by law. Limit one free chance per person. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO PLAY. For a free chance to play, hand print your complete name, school address, zip code, day and evening phone numbers on a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mail with first-class postage affixed to: Coca-Cola/Southwest Airlines "Drink Up! Log On! Fly Free!" Requests must be received by 11/20/2000. Limit one free chance per envelope. Allow 4 weeks for delivery. Void where prohibited by law. Wednesday, October 18

THEATER: Not Ready For Bedtime Players Sexual education has never been the same since this troupe of UMass students took on the subject. 8:30 p.m. Pierpont Residence Hall. 577-5181.

THEATER: The Misanthrope A tale of a tempestuous relationship influenced by the playwright's own stormy affairs of the heart. 8p.m. in the Curtain Theater. $ 545-2511. Through 10/21.

October '00

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Thursday, October 5

DANCE: "Short Stories" by Teatro Rugo and Ines Mime, dance and puppetry combine to play out the poetic moments of everyday life. 7:30 p.m. in the Rand Theater. $ 545-2511. Also on 10/7 at 3 p.m. and 8 p.m.

MUSIC: All That Jazz. Jazz Ensembles I & Chapel Jazz Ensemble. Jeffrey Holmes and David Sporny, directors. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.

Saturday, October 7

THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents...a high energy improvisational comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163. 545-3600.

Sunday, October 8

THEATER: American Repertory Theater in King Stag. Drawing on such diverse theater forms as Japanese bunraku to Italian Renaissance street theater, this national touring production blends movement, costumes, masks and puppetry into an unforgettable performance. 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

Tuesday, October 10

MUSIC: Sporny and Friends—Classics and Jazz Faculty Recital with David Sporny on trombone and Nadine Shank, piano and pianoes. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.

MUSIC: Gokh-Bi System. A concert by high-powered Senegalese musicians, combining ancient and contemporary African and African-American traditions of rhythm and spoken word. 7 p.m. in Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177.

Thursday, October 12

DANCE: Fall into Spring The UMass Ballroom Dance Club holds a night of dance, workshop & exhibition. 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. 549-5419.

MUSIC: Symphonic Woodwind Quintet with award-winning pianist Jan Nakamatsu 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.

Friday, October 13

MUSIC: Fall Winds Wind Ensemble & Symphony Band with Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr., director. Music by Grantham, Grainger, Gillingham and Woolfenden. 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall. Fine Arts Center. $ 545-2511.

Saturday, October 14

MUSIC: Piano Series, Concert #1 Schubert and Liszt with Nigel Coxe, pianist. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.

THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents...a high energy improvisational Comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163. 545-3600.

Tuesday, October 17

MUSIC: The Jazz Lab Ensemble with Adam Kolker, director. 8 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.

THEATER: Not Ready For Bedtime Players Sexual education has never been the same since this troupe of UMass students took on the subject. 8:30 p.m. Pierpont Residence Hall. 577-5181.

THEATER: The Misanthrope A tale of a tempestuous relationship influenced by the playwright's own stormy affairs of the heart. 8p.m. in the Curtain Theater. $ 545-2511. Through 10/21.

Thursday, October 19

UMASS ARTS COUNCIL GRANT DEADLINE! CALL 545-0202 FOR DETAILS!

Friday, October 20

MUSIC: Second Annual Choral Spectrum Wayne Abercrombie, coordinator. An array of music with ensembles singing separately and together. University Chamber Choir, Chorale, Madrigal Singers, Vocal Jazz and Women's Choir plus Hampshire Choral Society, Young People's Chorus & Newton North High School Family Singers. 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall, Fine Arts Center. $ 545-2511.

MUSIC: Percy Hill plus special guests the band's polished and infectious blend of soul, jazz, rock and smooth-as-silk four part harmonies have made Percy Hill a staple of the New England groove rock scene. 7:30 p.m. in the Skybox, Campus Center. $ 577-4759

DANCE: The Sound of Ecstasy and The Nectar of Enlightenment Buddhist ritual song and dance from Korea. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-1980

Saturday, October 21

MUSIC: Mandy Barnett. One of the hottest new voices in the country music scene. 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

MUSIC: 13th Annual Band Day 1 p.m. in the McGuirk Stadium. $ 545-6060 or 545-6061.

THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents...a high energy improvisational comedy performance. 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163. 545-3600.

Tuesday, October 24

MUSIC: Conductor's Debut University Orchestra with Robert Tueller, director. 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

Wednesday, October 25

THEATER: Not Ready For Bedtime Players Sexual education has never been the same since this troupe of UMass students took on the subject. 8:30 p.m. Cashin Residence Hall. 577-5181.

Thursday, October 26

MUSIC: We've Got Rhythm, We've Got Soul: A Cross-Cultural Celebration Paulina Stark, Horace Clarence Boyer and Nigel Coxe perform Ellington, Weill, Yiddish Theater, Spirituals and Gospel. 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.

Saturday, October 28

MUSIC: Ars Dilrance in concert. 8 p.m. in the Mullins Center. $ 545-3001

MUSIC: Boston Pops with Keith Lockhart, conductor. The inimitable Pops style combines light classical repertory and American popular music. 8p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

Sunday, October 29

MUSIC: Guest Faculty Recital with Adam LaCount, viola, and Nadine Shank, piano. Works by Hindemith, Vaughan Williams, Tower, Grant and Clarke. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.

Tuesday, October 31

THEATER: Rocky Horror Picture Show ...with a live stage show. Time and admission to be announced. In Campus Center Auditorium. 545-3600.

Exhibits

AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House 545-5177
M-TU 1-7 pm; W-F 1-5 pm
Young Artists: Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community
Through Oct. 17
Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies
Oct. 25-Nov. 1
Reception: Oct. 25, 5-7 p.m.

CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Intermay Way-Wheeler House
545-0680
M-TH 3-4 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Feopie I've Never Met
by Jennifer Hill
Oct. 10-Nov. 9
Reception: Oct. 19, 4-6p.m.

HAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area 545-0680
M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Earthbound
Oct. 16-Nov. 9
Reception: Oct. 16, 4-6p.m.

HERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Faculty Sabbatical Exhibitions
by Susan Jahada & Nancy LaPointe
Oct. 12-Nov. 8
Reception: Oct. 12, 4-6p.m.

STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
Gallery Staff Works
Through Oct. 8
Annual Self Portrait Show
Oct. 9-29
Reception: Oct. 19, 4-6 p.m.

UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center 545-3670
TU-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
Rail Julius Block (Red) Sound Installation
Sept. 16-Oct. 28 & Nov. 4-Dec. 15
Abstract Nations: Selections from the Permanent Collection
Through Oct. 28

Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events.
Sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

10/00

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, October 5, 2000
Ed/Op Editor ¥ Rob Schulze
collegianedtorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

SGA meeting; any change at all?

Last night's Student Government Association was the first of the [illegible] of the time this was written, it hadn't taken place yet, so [illegible] what we've seen so far.

[illegible] as a media organization on campus, have seen is [illegible] backbiting, call-outs and pettiness. We've seen people supposedly elected to represent us and the things that are best for students completely forget that they have that sort of responsibility. [illegible] house to represent themselves and their sides as best [illegible]

[illegible] remember why they were elected or why they originally [illegible] to guess not.

[illegible] of the SGA, if it can be called leadership at all, is [illegible] totally divided. Michael McCarthy, Eltringham's [illegible] counselor, as well as Student Trustee Seth Avakian and SGA [illegible] have called out Jim Eltringham, the Speaker of [illegible]. McCarthy has called his boss unconstitutional. Avakian [illegible] are continually accused to using SGA funds [illegible] during a summer getaway. Greek students who now [illegible] the Senate are being accused of proposing to impeach [illegible] but little remains absolutely clear.

[illegible] absolutely no role or say in student government.

[illegible] who are nothing more than the peers we walk [illegible] classes are an absolute embarrassment. Little do [illegible] that their own constant fumbling will only lead to student [illegible] Books might not get their budgets in time for events, and [illegible] that the SGA is expected to make statements [illegible] addressed.

[illegible] petty little children can continue their petty little snipping [illegible] the expense of the very people who put them in the positions [illegible] Their arrogant behavior, they have not once attempted [illegible] to make amends with a student body so disenchanted [illegible] behavior that few even care to vote, is a slap in the face to [illegible] trying to get a cut of the $1.7 million that our "governments" so unable to give away.

[illegible] But only if the senators and leaders of the SGA are willing [illegible] their internal Civil War. Every day cannot be a new [illegible] for the SGA if it is, nobody gets ahead at and the SGA continued [illegible] behind in the eyes of the student body.

[illegible] don't care about what the student body thinks, and [illegible] to make no effort to show that they do, will they ever be [illegible] to put aside their humongous egos? Will they ever be willing [illegible] that they weren't elected to represent themselves in this [illegible] war of theirs, but to represent students?

Unfortunately, it doesn't look so good.

Last night may have been a great start or it could just be another [illegible] disaster of a meeting. You'll have to read the front page to find out, but as far as the Collegian is concerned, last night was the SGA's opportunity to make a statement, good or bad.

I can't hope they make the right one.

From Russia with...hate?

"It is not only deeply ironic but tragic that this state of affairs follows $112.2 billion in Western assistance to Russia," the report said.

SIMON PONGRATZ

"Call out the spinsters and mobilize the apologists" was the cry that went forth from the White House (again) last week when a new Congressional report blamed Al Gore for the disastrous course the relationship between the United States and Russia has taken in the past seven years.

Gore, who has been in charge of United States Russia policy since 1993, and his cronies, of course denounced the findings as an "election year gimmick" by the Republicans, but the evidence and a little common sense proves otherwise. Clinton, doing what he does best, immediately trotted out to his would be successor's defense by claiming credit for others' achievements and assigning blame for his and Gore's own failures.

A twelfth grade student of history could tell you that good relations with Russia are very important. With the end of the Cold War, we had a very real chance to end seventy years of conflict, and now that has slipped through Gore's money-grubbing fingers. Almost any Russian asked (in fast, over 60% of them) would say that "economic advice was given to keep [their] country down" by Gore. The fact is that the feeling of mutual cooperation and trust that prevailed after 1989, effectively engineered by George Bush and his brilliant defense secretary, Dick Cheney, has been replaced by one of resentment. The Russia of 1991, which supported the US led coalition against Iraq, now defies UN sanctions by flying passenger planes into and out of Baghdad.

The report states that Gore willfully collaborated with corrupt officials, while ignoring the Russian Parliament. This allowed the further centralization of power in the Kremlin and led, indirectly, to the election of ex-KGB agent Vladimir Putin. Meanwhile, disturbing evidence surfaced showing fraud in that election. Since no defense against these accusations has any basis in fact, the White House resorts to its usual spin.

The Clinton administration claims that its efforts led to the destruction of thousands of Russia's nuclear weapons. The facts show that this process was well under way during Bush's tenure with the START II arms reduction treaty. They also claim credit for the privatization of many state enterprises, never mentioning that those efforts result more from the end of the Soviet Union (made possible by Reagan) and the shift to a (quasi)-free market. We can thank Clinton/Gore for the drastic changes in Russia's attitude toward the United States, brought about chiefly because of our arrogant bombing of Yugoslavia in 1999. Now, Russia has:

Increased spending on strategic nuclear weapons by 26 billion rubles.

Substantially increased arms deals with Iran, India, and Syria.

Signed a strategic alliance treaty with China, ostensibly to contain US "aggression."

Sold numerous weapons to China, including SSN 22 anti-ship missiles, Kilo-class attack submarines, SU 30 long-range attack jets, MiG-31 fighters, airborne warning and attack aircraft, T-80 tanks, advanced air defense missiles, and rocket engines. They have also made "far reaching" commitments to aid China in the event of war with Taiwan.

Now, now we must ask some very serious questions. Do Russian arms sales to India have anything to do with the threat of nuclear war between the latter and Pakistan over Kashmir (given a 50% chance of occurring by the State Department)? Does the Sino-Russian alliance mean anything in light of gross violations by China of both our nuclear secrets and our campaign finance laws? These cause huge problems for Al Gore, whose bad judgment led us here.

The fact is that Russia and China are cooperating against the United States. To challenge America's dominance, Russia today cultivates its strategic partnership with the People's Republic of China — a partnership explicitly targeting American policies and interests around the globe and founded on increasing both the PRC's [People's Republic of China] and Russia's military capabilities against the United States," states one excerpt. It also mentions the fact that although Clinton and Gore have spent enormous sums on aid to Russia (which the report puts at... are you sitting down? ... $112.2 billion dollars!), Gore has through his policies driven Moscow and Beijing closer together. Maybe Gore should have illegally spent that money on his campaign instead.

"It is not only deeply ironic, but tragic that this state of affairs follows $112.2 billion in Western assistance to Russia," the report said. "After eight years of a Clinton administration policy that has yet to place highest priority on the basic steps needed to create a free enterprise economy in Russia, the U.S.-Russia relationship is in ruins, characterized by deep and growing hostility and divergent perceptions of international realities and intentions." In 1992, Russian overtures to the United States for a strategic partnership went unheeded by the Clinton Administration, so they turned to other sources and found a common bond with their Asian neighbor to the south.... Both have a vested interest in containing the United States. Meanwhile our commander in chief, the highest ranking man in the armed forces, and his incumbent VP have betrayed every trust we have placed in them, playing politics with national security.

In 1796, when war between Great Britain and the United States was on the horizon, frail old Fisher Ames of Massachusetts made a speech in Congress that brought the delegates to the verge of tears. Declaring that war was not the path to be taken, he said "I have, perhaps, as little interest in the event as any man here....If, however, the vote [to war] should pass....even I, slender and almost broken as my hold on life is, may outlive the government and Constitution of my country." This is where we now find ourselves, for world events are everyday following paths dictated by a dishonorable and morally bankrupt administration that may have convoluted the situation so badly that we cannot extract ourselves from it. Allowing ourselves to become diplomatically isolated was a huge mistake, as we will find as the post Cold War world becomes increasingly multipolar. We must rectify this situation as soon as possible, or we will fulfill the prophecy made by Ames.

Finally, I have some advice for Mr. Gore: You say you're an honest man and you want to do the best thing for the country and for "working families?" Here's what you should do. Sell your $500,000 worth of oil stock, end your disgraceful tenure as a representative of the American people, buy a plane ticket, and go somewhere far, far away.

Simon Pongratz is a UMass student
Information from The Washington Times, World Trihune, Investors Business Daily, and The Coming of War by Albert Carr was used in this article.

Diverse is the class of UMass

BRIAN LOHNES

Sometimes you just don't know how good you have it. We like to bitch and moan about our situation here at UMass, but overall we have it pretty good. I have run into very few problems with fellow students in my nearly three years at this place and other places I have visited but, well, that's a different story.

First, off let me say that I am not an "attractive" person. I won't ever be mistaken for someone in a clothing catalog, especially ones that have names beginning with J or A&F. I consider myself to be a "nice guy" who is liked by three, maybe four people. I don't like to cause trouble, and in unfamiliar situations, I generally keep to myself. That being said, I feel rather uncomfortable when I am surrounded by, "beautiful people". When I say, "beautiful people" think of the bad guys from "Karate Kid", the army of tall blonde, muscular guys.

I went to visit an unnamed college in the unnamed capitol of Massachusetts, which bears as part of it's name, the name of that city followed by the word, "college". At this "college", I met a bunch of my old crew from home, the guys and girls I spent those formative years of my life breaking the law with. It was great to see them after a month or two of being away. We were headed to a party later in the evening, and we were set to have a kick ass time. So then, we went to the party.

Apparently, I had the wrong brand name shirt on. By the way people were looking at me and the other two guys I was with, one would have thought that we all had suffered massive blunt trauma to our heads. After overhearing a couple conversations about, "My dad's Ferrari" and "How crappy my 1999 Jetta is". I decided that I didn't really want to be there anymore and neither did my other friends whom didn't attend the said college.

I waited a few hours to sober up, and then I left thoroughly disappointed, a bit self-conscious, and really pissed off. I enjoy the company of regular people. I like to be able to feel comfortable with people and not like I am having a pissing contest with them over how wealthy or "upwardly mobile" my parents are. My parents are both hard working people whom I love and respect very much, they bust their ass for my sister and I to be in school, and I don't feel it necessary to gloat, brag, or bitch about with they do and don't give me.

So what does this have to do with UMass? Well plain and simple, the people here are the best. I realize their will always be a need to foster a more and more diverse campus, but you should see other places! I was ignorant to how diverse our campus is compared to other schools, which have almost none. Most of what I love about this school stems from the people. I would really miss walking across campus and not seeing someone with dreadlocks down to their behind, or someone walking barefoot in the middle of the winter or even a person wearing the traditional dress of his or her own home country. You see folks, this doesn't happen everywhere.

I was at a party with the fall line of A&F, possibly the J brand also, if it is the "in" thing. Here at UMass, I feel comfortable at all times because all of the people that I know here are real and genuine. I like going to parties and being able to feel like I belong there, and that I'm not some kind of sideshow being paraded in front of the gentry.

I have visited several other schools where my friends go; I have felt comfortable nowhere but here. Sure, I may have had a good time and meet a bunch of people, but I have not been able to get past the differences that I see in other places outside of UMass. I always assumed that the world outside of here was pretty much the same, a wide array of people, tolerance and understanding for the differences that make us all unique, and a general thirst to learn about people who are different from us. Sadly, I was wrong.

When there is no diversity, there is no need to make any effort to learn about those peoples who are different from us, because you don't see them. If the people are out of sight, they must be out of mind also. UMass is far from a perfect place, even in this issue of the paper you have probably read about several of the multitude of problems that arise and occur every day here at this fine campus.

UMass is a place that is unique in the world though. We are a sprawling city-state in the western chunk of Massachusetts that draws people from all over the world to learn, protest, rant about crazy religious things, refute the theory of evolution, and most of all learn about each other. UMass, you are my home, and I am damn proud of it.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist

LIFE IN HELL
©1996 BY MATT GRIENING
WISDOM OF THE AGES
1960s
WE ARE TO DESTROY THE VIAD KNOWN AS SOVIET.
1970s
WATERGATE IS PROOF THAT THE SYSTEM WORKS.
1980s
HELPING THE RICH DEVELOP THE DOOR
1990s
BY BEING THE SAME AS REPUBLICANS WE CAN DEFEAT THE REPUBLICANS

Bush, Gore, Nader? Screw politics.

ROB SCHULZE

[illegible] I said it, and I mean it. I don't give a fuck [illegible] about the presidential election this year, and I'm not excessively proud of that fact. I feel no need to be ashamed of it.

I hear it every day – the horrible, wretched, ungrateful youth of America is apathetic about politics, faithless in the system our forefathers worked so hard to protect and I gasp oh gasp! these disgusting young people don't [illegible] becomes president – the leader of the free world, this heir to the legacy of our forefathers, the man who represents [illegible]

[illegible] that it is absolutely right. I [illegible] listening anus about who the [illegible] I'm not going to vote.

[illegible] breaking.

[illegible] professors rail against from [illegible] and slime-covered ancient lec[illegible] I am the youth that Newsweek columnists [illegible] this country straight to hell. I'm the [illegible] voting George Bush's running mate. I [illegible] thing that is wrong with my generation.

[illegible] that make me a bad person?

[illegible] the fact that I knew that Darth Nader was on [illegible] and walked right by it so I could go back to [illegible] west and order from The Sub make me subhuman? Does the fact that, right now, as I am typing [illegible] this Presidential debates are on TV and, instead of watching, I am listening to AC/DC and writing this [illegible] lower me to less of a citizen? How about the fact that I was eligible to vote in the last election and didn't? How about that?

You have to see where I'm coming from on this?

I hate conflict, and meaningless conflict all the more. When people start bickering, whining, getting personal, shouting, and other such things, it makes me cringe. I simply tune out, start singing songs in my head, count the tiles in the floor, get angry and depressed and wish I was somewhere else. It seems that the people involved in politics do nothing but these things. I turn on C-Span sometimes when I'm channel-surfing, if these discussions will come up in class, or occasionally I'll catch Sunday morning TV, and that is all I see. It bothers me that people involved in politics can't treat each other like human beings. Disagreement doesn't have to be impolite. It turns me off.

I know what is right. I don't want to tell you what your opinions are, but I feel, inside, that I know what is right and wrong, what should and shouldn't be done. It is such common sense to me. When someone comes up to me and tells me, indignantly, what such-and-such candidate said or what new law was proposed in Congress, I instantly know how I feel about it. You can take that how you want it – that is the way I feel, based on who I am. I don't need to justify it to anybody, to any party, to any politician. And I don't want to tell you what's right for you.

The problem with this is that I cannot put up a good argument for my beliefs. I'm not religious, so I can't base them on any text or tradition. I'm not really very well read in the news, so I can't defend them with examples or current events. I'm ignorant of the way things work, so if I say that a certain program seems like it would be good to me, and people attack me with questions of things like budgets, logistics, the resistance of the people in the Midwest, or other such things, I just get embarrassed. I make no apology for what I feel, and I make no attempt to justify it on any grounds besides that it is what I believe it right. I don't need to defend the fact that I believe that it is wrong to, say, cheat on your girlfriend – I just know it is true. It isn't in the Bible, there aren't any laws about it – it just comes from within me. Someone could make the most compelling argument of all time, with charts, examples, quotes, surveys, and stinging wit and scorn, and I'd probably get embarrassed and feel stupid – but I still wouldn't change my opinion. I know what is right for me.

Politics is all about arguments – useless, endless, petty, sad arguments about nothing. I can't stand it. I'm not interested to read about the candidates. I don't care to do research on their policies. I'd rather spend the time doing other, less respected things that actually make me happy. I would rather read a comic book, talk on the phone, watch pro wrestling, or even just go for a walk alone than educate myself about politics. I define apathy, and I don't even feel guilty.

I'm tired of being the bad guy in all this. When politicians and their fan clubs stop being total jerks to each other and me, when respect for the opinions of others are offered, and when candidates that are acceptable to me are an option, then I might become interested in politics. Maybe.

Until that day comes, leave me the hell alone. No, I don't want your Nader pamphlet. I don't want to attend your Republican Club meeting. I don't want to take this Al Gore sticker. You can talk down to me, yell at me, harangue me about being all that is wrong with the system – that's a great way to convert me to your side.

I am a horrible, faithless, evil person and I don't even feel bad.

So screw you and your politics. I don't want either.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Collegian staff member devours Sam Wilkinson, lives to tell amazing tale!

Tiger Woods Is he really an ALIEN?

Fidel Castro Cuban leader tells all in new diet book "How to Lose 30 pounds in just 13 Days"

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
ARTS AND LIVING
$1.79 / CANADA $2.29
Thursday, October 5, 2000

TABLOIDS EXPOSED!!

Startling new evidence brings to light the seamy side of the trashy "news"

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

A war rages on as you read this. It takes place on the blood-soaked battle field of the supermarket checkout line. The opposing factions: The National Enquirer and Star tabloids. The casualties: your brain cells. I don't have to tell anyone in college that both publications are disposable garbage not worth an ounce more effort than squinting to make out the sensational headlines. But when el jefe Benharris tells me I need to do an in depth, balls-out, bomb-ass, pound-for-pound, take-care-of-business, boo-yea, hells-yes report about current tabloids, I submit under the icy chill of his heartless glare. Therefore, those whom have distinguished themselves in this winner-less war deserve to be recognized, so lets help the worthy get their decorate on.

Medal for Rock-Solid Source: The National Enquirer

In what can only be described as the single finest piece of investigative journalism ever committed to page, it turns out that talk show host David Letterman was fired from his position as a college radio DJ for making fun of a piece of classical music! Although the writer of the story is unidentified in the story, the validity is simply unquestionable since the source of the news is Susan Lea Gentry, friend of Letterman's ex-wife, whom he married thirty years ago.

Medal for Undying Secrecy: The National Enquirer

As a sort of Cliff Notes for the majority of viewers that find daytime soap operas simply too complex to decipher without assistance the Enquirer offers "Confidential! Next Week on Your Favorite Soaps." This isn't the half-assed TV Guide-style preview of a program that entices you to watch it, but rather a complete event list of what exactly will take place on the next week of the show. Granted, upcoming headthunk like "Ned finally works up the courage to propose marriage to Alexis, but is devastated when she cuts him off to take a business call" is almost too good to wait for. Confidential also serves as a handy review of the weeks events after they occur, making definition of character arcs and subtle hints of transcendentalist thought easier to spot.

The "Who gives a crap?" medal: Star

Thanks to a blurry enlarged photograph, we see sunning on a cruise ship Phil Collins (yes ladies, shirtless) and his wife who has a towel over her torso. Try as she might, the caption reads, she can't cover up the fact that she's pregnant, and Collins will be a father in March. I say "enough already" to the media blitz that has been leveled at Collins as of late: leave this man in peace!

The "No Crap" medal: Star

In the hugely informative story "When Al Gore Went to Pot," former friends of the vice president are chronicled in various biographies of Gore relating stories of his college pot smoking days. He's regarded as an "enthusiastic pot user" in stark contrast to those pot users that only reluctantly use the drug when it is brutally forced on them by sadistic friends. The article also details the paranoid state Gore was in while high, often using measures to ensure that "no one could see." These claims just fly right in the face of published reports that recalled the VP used to cruise down Landsdowne Street in a convertible blasting "Purple Haze" smoking two often three blunts at once.

The "Say It Ain't So" Medal: Star

The gas union of Olympic diver Greg Louganis and his lover Steve Kmetko has ended after four years for the most backneyed of reasons. Kmetko's dog was let free and then killed by a coyote while on Louganis' property, an incident Kmetko blames on Louganis. This reiterates what many successful gay couples have known all along: that the keys to any relationship are communication, trust, and careful supervision that your boyfriend's dog doesn't get mauled by a coyote.

I regret what I just previously said about not reading the tabloids, because as you have seen there would no way for you to obtain the valuable information above noted if you hadn't been keeping up with Star and The National Enquirer. As an incentive to you, the readers, to seek out these meccas of information, I won't tell you who wants to have superbrush (my word) Garry Shandling's baby, but will tell you that particular morsel can be found in one of these two towers of journalistic excellence.

Hopkins, Sigfried, & Roy:

See what they do with Fava Beans and a nice Cayente!!

Eminem and Paula Abdul:

The inside scoop on their rocky romance!

They don't use jelly.

The red-hot Flaming Lips play the Skybox tonight. Doors are at 7 p.m.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON
CELEBRATING 25 YEARS OF GREAT PERFORMANCES AND GREAT AUDIENCES

Puppet Festival Week

Teatro Hugo & Inés
Combining mime, dance and puppetry, Hugo & Inés play out the moments of everyday life with the help of a parade of characters composed largely of knees, feet, hands, elbows and bellies. This dance-theatre and concert will amuse children and adults alike.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5 AT 7:30PM
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7 AT 3PM AND 8PM
RAND THEATER

American Repertory Theater in King Stag
The American Repertory Theater Company brings the 18th-century fairy tale of King Stag to life with movement, costumes, masks, and life-size puppets by Julie Taymor, famous for Disney's Broadway hit The Lion King. [illegible]
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
$5 $7 $10

Uncommonly Good Chamber Music

The Berlin Philharmonic Woodwind Quintet with pianist Jon Nakamatsu
Join us for a rare opportunity to experience one of the world's best woodwind quintets joined by Van Cliburn Gold Medal winner Jon Nakamatsu. The program will include Mozart, Poulenc, Jolivet, and Reicha.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12 AT 7:30PM
BOWKER AUDITORIUM

Torch with a Twist

Mandy Barnett
You'll be dazzled by Barnett's voice. It's as startling as Patsy Cline's and as caramel-smooth as Diana Krall's. Don't miss one of the hottest new voices on the country music scene as Barnett and her band deliver an evening of pure Nashville.
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21 AT 8PM
CONCERT HALL

Get the vacationa continue!
www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER

■ hole-y

continued from page 1

many of them college-age kids. Look around campus – the sheer numbers of eyebrows, noses, septums, tragi[illegible], labrets and other visible body parts with pieces of metal sticking out of them are hard to miss. Why are we doing this?

"As soon as they get out of the house, they've got to do something against the 'rents. It's about independence, making a choice for yourself," said Hartman.

"It's not permanent [like a tattoo]... if I end up hating it, it'll heal no problem. It's a phase and I realize that. Originally it was to be different, but now everyone has them. It's our generation. It's a form of expression," said 18-year-old sophomore Jenn Dul on why recently got her tongue pierced.

"I don't know... because you're parents usually don't like it. They're [un. They're different," explained Ashlee Cheschi, sophomore, 19 with a navel piercing.

"To annoy my parents," said junior Kevin Jackson who has a variety of piercings that include the eyebrow and seven ear piercings.

"Oral sex... and I wanted to rebel from my father. He told me not to smoke cigarettes or get anything pierced... and what did I do? Most people do it to fucking fit in. Stupid fucking people... do it for yourself," said 20-year-old junior Jon Shea who got his tongue pierced.

If people always think about their parents and their sex lives when considering getting pierced, one thing they rarely think of are the consequences, the commitment, or the possible things that can go wrong.

According to Hartman, the biggest mistakes that kids make is "Not really thinking... it's a commitment. Once the novelty wears off, they don't want to take care of it as much."

A piercing that hasn't been properly cared for can become infected and painful, and can leave a scar. When the piercing has not yet healed (healing time various from two weeks for a tongue to multiple months for many others), touching it with dirty hands, saliva, or other bodily fluids can drastically increase the risk of infection. Pulling or tugging on a piercing can cause it to grow out, leaving a scar and no piercing. If the jewelry is removed, the piercing can close or shrink within hours, making is necessary to lower the gauge (diameter) of the jewelry or simply have it re-pierced. None of the students interviewed for this article said that they were ever concerned about the possibility of infection or other negative consequences.

When choosing a salon, there are certain things that should be looked out for. "I wanted it cheap and close to home," as one student put it, is not the best criteria for deciding who is going to perform on you what is, for all intents and purposes, a surgical procedure.

"I have a friend who'd been pierced there that recommended it to me. When I went I made sure it was clean, and the people came off as very professional," Dul on explained.

And the professional advice? Since there are no laws to regulate piercing in Massachusetts, the best thing you can go on is word-of-mouth Hartman explained. Once you get to the place, you need to watch out for piercers "with this whole tattoo/piercing attitude, thinking they're rock stars and shit like that."

According to Hartman, if the people who are going to poke you talk down to you, or don't want to answer your questions, or make you feel stupid, get the hell out of there. They're there to serve you, and that is the feeling you should get from a place. He went on to say that a very key thing was just "vibe;" if a place feels right, if you get a comforting impression, than chances are it is a good place.

As for the safety concerns, "It should look like a doctor's office." You should check the hands and appearance of the piercer for cleanliness – notice if he washed his hands, if she changes her gloves. There should be a sterilizer (autoclave) on the premises, an ultrasonic cleaner (pre-sterilizer), and single-use disposable needles are absolutely a must. Hartman did say, however, that the impression of seedy salons re-using their needles is almost entirely a myth – for all intents and purposes it never happens anymore.) Do not be afraid to verify these things; your safety is more important.

Verifying the competence of your piercer, however, is much more up in the air. There is no regulation, no certification – anyone with the tools, which are available over the Internet, can call himself or herself a professional body piercer with no experience whatsoever. The main thing to go on, says Hartman, is reputation, word-of-mouth. You can ask to see a portfolio, but not even all established piercers have one.

Hartman got his start after he quit his job fixing copy machines at the age of 21. He went to work for one of his friends who was a piercer – learning sterilization, basic anatomy, but never actually doing a piercing.

He explained that he would do all of the work leading up to the piercing but never the actual job.

"It was hands-on without actually being hands-on," he said.

After about six to seven months of this basic training he started doing his first piercings on his whole family and friends. Ben is now 27. He's CPR and first-aid trained. He's had somewhere in the basic area of 20 piercings done on himself over the years, and has performed countless others. He now runs the salon voted Best in the Valley in the Advocate's annual poll. What has he learned?

The most important things are attitude and competence.

"You really can talk people completely out of having problems" said Ben, meaning that if you are competent and experienced enough to be able to talk to the customer and reassure them while you are performing the piercing they won't even realize what's happening until it's over.

Are all piercers going to have the same story? No... but it never hurts to ask where, how, and why they got their start. It is, after all, your body.

Why are people getting poked? Does it matter?

Atlantis
NO COVER BEFORE 11
WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL 7 NIGHTS A WEEK
HIP HOP W/ DJ SEMANTIK 10/5 $2
GROWROOM RECORDS HOUSE ON THE ROCKS W/DJs BON BONS & SIMI 10/6 $2
HIP HOP, R&B, REGGAE W/ DJ TRENDZ (DRUNK MONKS, FINAL CUT) 10/7 $2
B-SKI'S BINS UNDERGROUND HIP HOP AND SOUL
THE MELLOW EDGE OF ELECTRONIC MUSIC WITH DJ BEN TAYLOR AND GUEST DJ: J-B
FREE FREE
41 BOLTWOOD WALK, AMHERST
DOWN THE ALLEY BEHIND ANTONIOS

Got Ride?

University Child Care currently has preschool openings in the full day and flexible day programs. Child care tuition rates are based on a sliding fee scale determined by family size and household income. Currently subsidies or child care vouchers are available through the University and other social service agencies.
For more information about the program call
545 - 1566

Castaway Lounge
Routes 5 & 10, Whately, MA • (413) 665-8733
(North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & 10 North 2 miles, South of 91 Exit 24 take route 5 & 10 South 2 miles)
Open to all students over 21 years old
We are now hiring girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business
We are now open for Monday Night Football @ 4pm
• 6 Dancers • Food • Prizes
VIP room always open for private parties

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services."
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

All New Ads Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt. Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hookes me up. Your Classifieds Work Online or Free
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR
CONVIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS!
BUZZARD BAY Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep
SHIPYARD Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep
ROLLING ROCK Case 24 btls $13.99+ dep
INTRODUCING... SATURDAY WINE TASTINGS Every Saturday Noon to 4 p.m. Stop by and sample a few of our finest selections free of charge! Sale ends 10/12/00
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 pack cans $11.99+ dep
PABST Case 24 btls $9.49+ dep
M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99 + dep
BECKS 12 pack btls $10.99 + dep
HARPOON 12 pack btls $9.99 + dep
LABATTS 12 pack btls $8.99 + dep
555 Russell St. (Rte 9) Hadley, MA 584-8774 House Mon - Sat 9am - 11pm

Artist Profile

Building education & culture in glass design

Name: Tucker Litchfield
From: Heath, Massachusetts
Class: 2001
Major: BDIC – Glass Design & Culture
Art: Glass-Blowing

Tucker Litchfield, a 21 year-old senior BDIC major, is probably UMass' only resident glass-blower. Beginning as an apprentice in a small glass studio in Heath, Mass., Tucker is now a second assistant in the studio with a job set up after graduation. He loves working with glass and hopes to open his own studio one day, making glass tables. He talked with the Collegian about his craft and interests, and also showed us a few of his most impressive pieces: a solid-glass bust of Mozart, and a funky-looking, multi-colored chalice. Here's a sample of the interview:

COLLEGIAN: How did get interested in glass work?
TUCKER: I had seen [my boss] working before, and there's a shop in Sherwood Falls I had been to a couple times, and I would watch him go, and it just seemed really cool.

COLLEGIAN: How would you explain glass-blowing?
TUCKER: Glass-blowing is basically just one method of manipulating glass. There's a bunch of different ways; there's casting, pressing, fusing. Blowing originated in Italy. So you just use a hollow rod with glass at the end of it, and blow a bubble into that, and then shape the glass with tools, while it's still hot, so it's soft.

COLLEGIAN: How long did it take you to learn it?
TUCKER: Probably for the first year, I couldn't make anything. In the second year, I could make cups and simple vases and stuff. So now I'm just beginning to use more color, and make different shapes. Trying to do something symmetrical, and even – that's where it gets difficult.

COLLEGIAN: What exactly do you do at the studio?
TUCKER: What I do is bring little bits of molded glass for the head person, who blows out the center piece, and you add on everything afterwards. So I added on... this [showing piece] is all bit work. All this stuff is added on. So I bring the molded bits of glass, and put them on the piece, keep building up the piece.

COLLEGIAN: What do you do with the stuff after you've completed it?
TUCKER: [My boss] sells in galleries around the country. He also owns a gallery in Nantucket...If you're ever in Nantucket, you should check it out. The studio is really cool there, it's got basically everyone who's anyone in glass.

COLLEGIAN: Is this something you want to do for your career?
TUCKER: For right now, yeah. Not forever. I like it. I just don't think I could do it for the rest of my life. It's too hard. You just get burnt out. I was doing it every day for 3 years, and I was already getting sick of it. You go to work everyday, work your ass off for 8 hours, go home and go to sleep...There's like no other life there. After I graduate, I'm going to work for the same guy I do now, make some money, because I have a job already. A friend of mine and I are trying to make glass tables together; so far we've made two tables, and we have parts of more tables done. He's going to hopefully open a casting studio, and we're going to do tables. So that's what I want to do, to make tables.

COLLEGIAN: What kind of recognition or money have you gotten?
TUCKER: I did a show here; I brought some work here and sold it upstairs in the Campus Center. I did alright, made some money. And I did a show this summer, that I did pretty well at, and made more money there. And we're doing a show in December. But I'm not in any museum collections (chuckles).

COLLEGIAN: Are the professors pretty supportive of your work?
TUCKER: The professors that I've met have been really supportive of me doing independent studies in glass and have been really interested in what I do. And through my department, I'm doing a show in the department this fall as well. So I think they've been pretty supportive.

COLLEGIAN: People hear glass-blowing and they might laugh because of the word "glass."
TUCKER: Yeah, (chuckling), glass is a funny word. Actually people just want to know if I make bongs and stuff. They're like, "hey, do you make pieces?"

BRYAN MCDERMOTT / COLLEGIAN

Tucker Litchfield, a senior BDIC major, poses with a sand-casted glass piece that he made.

COLLEGIAN: Do you?
TUCKER: No I don't. It's just the wrong glass. It can't be used for that stuff. The soft glass would just explode with the change in temperature.

COLLEGIAN: What would you like people to know about glass-blowing?
TUCKER: People don't know much about glass-blowing in general. I don't think it's a very accessible art. I would like glass to be more accessible, for people to try it more.

COLLEGIAN: Here are some random questions: What music is currently in your CD player?
TUCKER: Right at this moment is Radiohead. The Bends.

COLLEGIAN: Big Y or Stop & Shop?
TUCKER: Big Y. Better deals. They have the buy 1 get one free, buy 1 get 5 free deals.

COLLEGIAN: And the better calzone: Pinnochio's or D.P. Dough?
TUCKER: Pinnochio's.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian staff member. Kristi Ceccarossi contributed to this column.

Stiller meets "Parents"

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Correspondent

MEET THE PARENTS
Directed by Jay Roach
With Ben Stiller, Robert De Niro

It bits me every so often that some of Hollywood's best actors are getting on in years, and as a result, slowing down on the frequency with which they make movies and withdrawing from the public eye. I'm not specifically referring to the geriatrics like Paul Newman, Robert Redford or Jack Lemmon, whose film careers drastically dwindled in the 1990s, despite their popularity with audiences.

Aging thespians such as Sylvester Stallone, Harrison Ford and Arnold Schwarzenegger, one-time icons of Tinsel town, will soon become eligible for their AARP cards, a real bummer of a fact for my generation who grew up on Rocky Balboa, Indiana Jones and the Terminator, respectively.

One actor, though, who isn't letting his senior citizen discount at the movie theatre stop his career is Robert DeNiro, who in 2000 alone stars in four new films: The Adventures of Rocky and Bullwinkle, Men of Honor, 15 Minutes, and his most recent Meet the Parents.

Meet the Parents is one of the funniest, most heartwarming romantic comedies I have seen in a very long time, and deserves all the praise and accolades I'm sure it will garner. It keeps you in stitches from start to finish, leaving you with a natural high that few movies can deliver anymore.

Costarring with DeNiro is Ben Stiller, an excellent actor who excels in comedies (Mystery Men) just as much as in dramas (Permanent Midnight). Thanks to his breakthrough role in There's Something About Mary and his lukewarm success last year with Keeping the Faith, Stiller is popping up left and right in movies recently, but no one seems to mind; his smart career choices and every-guy appeal is what is making him a household name.

Here, Stiller plays Greg Focker, a loveable-but-nerdy nurse who is about to propose to his girlfriend, Pam (the beautiful Teri Polo of TV's "Felicity"). Before they can tie the knot, however, Greg must meet her parents (DeNiro and Blythe Danner) and get Daddy Dearest's approval. Poor Greg – if he only knew who he was dealing with.

From the moment Greg and Pam arrive on her parents' doorstep, DeNiro dominates and intimidates Greg with his rigid and all too-serious attitude that every man fears his father-in-law will be like. Just like his comedic jaunt in 1998's Analyze This, Meet The Parents works in DeNiro's favor because audiences love seeing his tough guy facade break down and the teddy bear inside exposed.

But that doesn't mean that he doesn't get in his fair share of stabs at his future son-in-law. Greg's vocation is a constant source of bantering, whether he is being referred to as Florence Nightingale, or having DeNiro chide "There aren't too many men in your profession, are there, Greg?"

Greg digs himself deeper into a pit, though not by his own doing, when a hash pipe is found in his jacket pocket, when he accidentally breaks the nose of Pam's sister in a volleyball game, and when he visually depicts how he once milked a cat.

His prognosis in getting a seal of approval by Dad looks bleak, especially when Greg meets Pam's ex-beau, played to obnoxious WASP-ish levels of perfection by Owen Wilson (Shanghai Noon). DeNiro's adoration of Wilson and his riches add more fuel to Greg's fire, and it's not long before more hysterical hijinks send Greg on a slow descent towards losing Pam for good. As time passes, Greg begins to wonder if he still feels the same for his bride-to-be as he did before he met the parents.

Starring to make a name for himself in Hollywood with his Frank Capra-esque, feel-good films is director Jay Roach (Austin Powers). Like his last foray, Mystery, Alaska, he took what, in the wrong hands, could have been a hokey, schmaltzy idea, and tweaks it just right to make us laugh, and love every minute of it.

Certainly a highlight in a season of lackluster movies, Meet the Parents is a film you won't want to miss.

WONDERING..... WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH YOUR MAJOR? WHO WILL HIRE YOU? WHAT'S OUT THERE FOR JOBS?

GET THE ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS! COME TO THE CAREER INFORMATION EXPO 2000!

MEET A VARIETY OF EMPLOYERS AT EXPO 2000 THEY'RE COMING TO MEET YOU!

EVERYONE IS INVITED - ALL MAJORS, ALL CLASS YEARS!

PUT YOUR CAREER IN GEAR!

CAREER INFORMATION EXPO
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2000
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM
10 A.M. - 3 P.M.

PRESENTED BY THE CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK

GET YOUR RESUME INTO THE RIGHT HANDS!!!
View hundreds of employment opportunities online at:
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Apply for campus interviews and send your resume to employers who are not visiting campus!!! It's easy to get started!!

1. Access our web page
2. Click on Register for Resume Referral and Employer Interviews On-Campus
3. Click on Students
4. Follow the login instructions
5. Create/update your profile AND add/edit your resume
6. Email ccnhelp@acad.umass.edu or call 577-0423 if you need help

You'll receive a confirmation email within 2 hours – once you have this you can go ahead and apply for opportunities listed on-line.

Questions?? Call (413) 545-2224

Campus Career Network

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

If you can believe it the Fine Arts Center Series is bringing a weekend-long puppet festival to campus featuring performances of Teatro Hugo & Ines and the American Repertory Theater's The King Stag.

Using only a bag of props and a choice body parts Teatro Hugo & Ines create a variety of characters that make up their vignettes, "Short Stories."

The King Stag delivers ART talent, combining a myriad of theatrical traditions to tell the classic Oriental fable of a king seeking true love. Julie Taymor, famous for her work on Broadway's The Lion King, created the elaborate costumes, puppetry and choreography of the play.

Tickets for both performances are available through the Fine Arts Center box office: 545-2511.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct 28
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Abstract Notions: thru Oct 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Scatterlings: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Paul Stopforth
Opening reception: Sept. 17, 2-5 p.m.
Hampden Gallery, UMass

Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community: thru Oct. 17
Work by various artists
Opening reception Sept. 19, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House, UMass

New Abstraction: thru Oct. 5
Work by artist Benjamin Shohan
Opening reception Sept. 14, 4-6 p.m.
Central Gallery, UMass

People I've Never Seen
Oct. 10 thru Nov. 9
Central Gallery

MUSIC

Jazz Ensemble and Chapel Jazz Ensemble
Oct. 5, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

The Flaming Lips
With Enon
Oct. 5, 7:30 p.m.
Skybox

The Music of Gokh-bi System
Oct. 10, 7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery

THEATRE/DANCE

Teatro Hugo and Ines
Oct. 5, 7:30 p.m.
Rand Theater

A Shakespeare Workshop
Umass Theater Guild
Oct. 7, 10:30 a.m. & 5 p.m.
Campus Center Room 163C

King Stag
Oct. 8, 7:30 p.m.
Concert Hall

Eun Me Ahn
Oct. 11 & 12, 8 p.m.
Scott Building, Smith College

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

SKETCH COMEDY

Active Ingredients
Oct. 5 8 p.m.
Field Classroom – Orchard Hill

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Oct. 5, 10 p.m.
Skybox

Comediennes Alex House and Erin Foley
Oct. 6
Bowker Auditorium

ATTENTION!

Hey, you! Yeah, you with the local event you've been thinking about putting up some posters for. The Source is here and ready to give you FREE advertising. So get yourself and detailed information down to the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center. Or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com.

Preparing Mental Health Practitioners for Multiple-Role Practice

Meet Clinical and Applied Psychology Faculty at an Information Session

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 6 P.M.
THE JONES LIBRARY
43 AMITY STREET, AMHERST, MA

Join an informal discussion with faculty about the changing landscape of the mental health profession, the nature and scope of our unique, practice-based master's and doctoral psychology programs, and potential career paths.

Antioch New England
GRADUATE SCHOOL
Please RSVP to 603-357-6265 Keene, NH www.antiochne.edu

I love working here, and you could too.....come on down to the COLLEGIAN

WE TAKE THE GOLD WHEN IT COMES TO OUR LOW PRICES!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT $41.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT $45.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB ULTRA, BUSCH, BUSCH LIGHT, NATURAL LIGHT $82.99 +DEP

Budweiser 30 PACK $16.49 +DEP
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 PACK $11.49 +DEP
Corona CASE $18.49 +DEP
HARPOON 12 PACK ALL TYPES $10.49 +DEP
GENUINE DRAFT & GENUINE DRAFT LIGHT CASE $10.49 +DEP
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE 12 PACK $9.99 +DEP

WINES OF THE MONTH
BUENA VISTA (CALIFORNIA WINES) $7.99
FRANZIA $6.99
CONCHA Y TORO $6.99
ROBERT MONDAVI WOODBRIDGE $11.49
FETZER EAGLE PEAK MERLOT $7.99
WILD VINES $5.49

BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99
POLAND SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
CANADIAN LTD $11.99
DEWAR'S WHITE LABEL SCOTCH $31.99
CASOLANS IRISH CREAM $10.99
GILBEY'S GIN $13.99

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor Ask For Details
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 10/5/00 THRU WEDS. 10/11/00

SexWars
PLAY THE GAME

Check your local TV listings
www.SexWars.com

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

THE MONKEY BAR & GRILLE
NEW YORK STYLE ATMOSPHERE IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST
WEEKLY ENTERTAINMENT SCHEDULE
THURSDAY – The Monkey Bar presents ELEMENTS Featuring DJ Dezz spinning the best in progressive house, trance, & Top 40 dance
FRIDAY & SATURDAY – The best in Top 40, hip-hop, r+b, & house spun by SVE production DJs Dezz, Creme, Chuck, & Ed
Now Featuring
Bud + Bud Light Pitchers $6.00
Domestic Beer Bottles $2.25
Red Devil + Vodka $6.00
This week's drink special is Rum + Coke $2.50
Come enjoy our outdoor patio + bar
LOCATED @ 63 N. PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 253-1100
No Cover••Thursday 10/5

Significant Others serves Milkweed for "Breakfast"

SPINESHANK
The Height of Callousness
Roadrunner

Disturbed, riding high off the success of their single "Stupify," is basically occupying the slot that most press had reserved for Spineshank two years ago. Hailed as the next big thing out of the fertile California metal community, their aggressive sound augmented with electronic beats wasn't considered groundbreaking, but their Fear Factory meets Deftones style was seen as potentially appealing to both crowds. It didn't work. There were a number of reasons for the failure, mainly that their debut, Strictly Dead, felt long and unfocused, and their sound was simply too heavy to yield any successful radio singles. While a lack of radio appeal is usually a blessing in terms of credibility in the metal community, Spineshank failed to cause a dent in that scene also, leaving the impression during live shows of a band with potential, but lacking purpose and direction.

On the strength of their second album, The Height of Callousness, the future should be much brighter for this talented four piece, consisting of vocalist Johnny Santos, guitarist Souren Sarkisyan, bassist Rob Garcia, and drummer (and now electronic sound gatherer) Tommy Decker. Nearly all of the problems that plagued the band in the past have been remedied. Spineshank now have, between the two albums, plenty of sonic ammunition for a truly memorable live performance. In fact, the band could conceivably play the new album in its entirety very convincingly, since the work clocks in at a tight, disciplined 37 minutes. Here lies the greatest asset of the new album. There is simply no time to fool around. Each song is a carefully calculated blast of sound, with the overall relentless effect akin to a punk album. But Spineshank is not satisfied simply pounding you into the ground, adding melodic choruses that aren't as developed as those on the first album, but just as effective. The lyrics and vocals will be familiar to any Spineshank fan: cathartic, introspective lyrics mixed with seething anti-authority rants, with Santos giving all the appropriately throat-searing treatment.

A song on the album is titled "(Can't Be) Fixed." Spineshank has certainly proven this to be untrue. These eleven songs show marked maturity and improved musicianship from the first album, and represent exactly where the band should be now. Even more admirable is how Spineshank didn't take the easy and often hollow route to radio airplay, instead refining the strong base they already had and bringing their strengths to the forefront. The Height of Callousness is currently the album of choice when I feel the need to jump around my room wildly with both middle fingers in the air. And from me, there is no higher praise. (Michael Delano)

JEGA
Geometry
Matador Records

Jega's second album, Geometry, is yet another remotely dark techno album that hints at dark places and dark mindsets and the CD cover is dark and the CD itself has some dark lines and dark dark dark. Honestly, this album is perfectly acceptable in that Meat Beat Manifesto, Aphex Twin sort of way; if one is about to make a movie about vampires in modern society, Jega is the guy to make the soundtrack.

Cleverly named songs include "_alternating_bit" and "_syntax_tree" and "Computers are really really neat but will lead to a society that forgets who you are and did you see Delicatessen" (well, not that last one). On and on Jega goes, successfully creating the same dark world that his influences have been creating for years.

And truth told, the songs themselves aren't really that bad. "_Recursion" is a dark song that hints at black factories and science fiction, a song that forces the listener into a dark part of the subconscious where the dirty thoughts that nobody talks about stay hidden.

"_Doric" features sounds ripped right out of Nintendo circa 1987; it's an almost playful song with soft beats and static, featuring a non-linear sound that doesn't really remind anyone of "rhythm." The sixth track hints at childlike qualities in Jega's music. Synthesizers that come into play later in the song truly bring out images of relief and possibility, almost connecting to the childlike video-game sounds of the early parts of the track.

"_inertia" (damn these underscores) again hints at places other than where he wants his music to be, but Jega crafts the song in such a way as never to move too far from the typical brooding of the album. But for every underscored quality track on this record, there's something like "_binary_space" a spacey-jazzy tune both out of place on the record and more apt to be used as the theme music for "Doogie Howser's Return."

Geometry hints at some definite skills, but Jega has to separate from the common dark techno musical paradigm. The world isn't as bad as he might try to trick a listener into believing with his dark music; and besides, if we need truly dark music, there are far more established techno acts who can provide. (Sam Wilkinson)

MILKWEED
For Breakfast
Dreamstorm Records

Milkweed is the latest in an endless line of rock bands to not-quite-surface in the wake of such mainstream successes as Matchbox Twenty and Fuel. There are elements of classic rock scattered around, and some softer, more acoustic compositions, and although Milkweed does a good job of duplicating the appeal of those styles, no real attempt to break out of the mold of their contemporaries is made.

Nine of the album's ten tracks were penned by singer/guitarist Andre Cumeau, who displays more confidence than talent; his voice is flat and unpolished, although not without its charm. Were the songs more engaging, it would be easier to overlook the occasional (or not so occasional) thin note or unsavory vocal texture, but the ten tracks drift around in style, doing everything well enough but nothing excellently. Highlights include the raucous "Whatever That Means," which drives ahead with thick, pounding guitars, and the moody, descending "Down Hill."

The musicianship here is fine, the production tight, if not overly creative. The songwriting, however, is simply too scattered and derivative to make the album worthwhile for anyone interested in more than the same old thing. (David Troupes)

REYMUS
Lemon Meringue Die

In anticipation of a full-length album later in the year, local artist Reymus has released a 4-track EP, providing interested listeners a taste of things to come. The four songs showcase both Reymus' influences (sometimes blatantly), and his talent for digesting and synthesizing those influences into charming bits of originality.

The disc opens with "When the Cats," the musical equivalent of jellybeans. That Reymus avails himself of a drum machine that perpetually sounds like a drum machine doesn't help things, but the clean, poppy guitars and artsy-geek vocals (think Fountains of Wayne) add some charm to the equation. "Promise" finds Reymus channeling Weezer, and "Do The Zee" again references Fountains of Wayne, complete with keyboard fills and highly danceable beat.

The disc saves the best for last with "Feelin'," combining an invitingly soft and sweet verse with a thickening chorus and nicely arranged lead work. Notwithstanding the unnecessary Beck like outro, it's a great piece of song-writing and Lemon Meringue Die's most creative and engaging moment. For more information, head to www.mp3.com/reymus. (David Troupes)

ROBERT WALTER'S 20th CONGRESS
Money Shot
Fog City Records

Walter and co. play a stylish combination of funk and jazz, featuring all sorts of piano and keyboards, sax, varied percussion, warm bass lines, and masterful guitar work. Although a bit light at nine tracks (plus one bonus song), Money Shot's tunes are rich and lengthy, sliding through passage after passage, with many songs reaching beyond the five-minute mark. This isn't background music for studying; the intricacy of each song begs careful attention.

Walter's organ lays down the foundation of most tracks, but, in true jazz fashion, every player is given his fair turn at center stage. The total lack of vocals elevates each instrument to the status of diva; the throaty bass line of "Blues for Y2K" and the gospel-tinged guitar of "I'm Over It" communicate emotion as surely as any human voice. At the same time, however, this is fun music, not weighed down by its own musicianship. (David Troupes)

AMIL
All Money Is Legal
Roc-A-Fella/Columbia

Amil is a female rapper who writes her own lyrics. That alone puts this mulatto queen in a very small category with Eve and Lil' Kim. Known for her numerous cameos, most notably the 1998 hit "Can I Get A..." with Jay-Z, Amil's All Money Is Legal (get it?) sets out to prove she can sustain us for almost an hour. She almost does.

"Smile 4 U" is a powerful autobiography that tells us so much that there's little left to say on the rest of the album. "I Got That" is fun ear-candy from the Trackmasters in which Amil ditches her gold-digging side because she got her own scrilla now. The sexy Beyonce of Destiny's Child backs her up by staring anything a man has, she has too.

"Get Down" is a jam destined to get heavy rotation. Amil belts out the chorus and once again goes toe to toe (or diamonds to diamonds) with any male hustler claiming jiggy.

Unfortunately, uber-producer Rockwilder mails it in on not one, but two tracks with the "Ya Dead Wrong" and the just plain annoying "Girlfriend."

But Jay-Z saves the day (and the CD) with cameo's in "Head It All" and the lyrically spellbinding "That's Right." Amil gets her focus back with the hypnotizing "Any Day" which samples the forgotten Three Degree's classic "Collage," a track about those lost in the game, with "Raw", and raw it is. Sees the record straight about her lyrical prowess: "You think lay wrote this that's complimenting me / I'm the best 'till somebody proves me differently."

Overall All Money Is Legal falls short of being truly great, but it's close enough to rock any fella. (Lenny Holston)

FROGWINGS
Croakin' at the Toad
Flying Frog Records

Say what you will about the jam band scene, but every once in awhile a ground-breaking act manages to emerge from its incestuous depths. The tendency of these musicians to bond and create with others in the genre has spawned a mass of music that is either remarkably handsome or hideously disfigured. Frogwings – a jam band supergroup that pulls members from the Allman Brothers, Aquarium Rescue Unit and Blues Traveler – has triumphed with the release of Croakin' at the Toad, a live disc that captures an astonishing group of musicians in their natural habitat: the stage.

"Kick n Bach" starts things off slowly and picks up steam as the guitars of Jimmy Herring and 19-year-old Derek Trucks soar high and low, speaking in bluesy tones before joining to sing in unison. The superb Herring and the tandem of bassist Oteil Burbridge and percussionist Marc Quinones truly set the song in motion, pushing it forward before quietly returning to the opening riff.

Blues Traveler front man John Popper makes his entrance on "Hurdy Gurdy Fandango," a calypso-tinged tune that benefits from his nimble vocal and harmonica work. The rock-shuffle of "Pattern" is chased by the 16-minute "Eddie's Got a Boyfriend," a vehicle that enables Herring to once again flex his guitar muscle.

"Ganja," a solid rock tune that showcases the powerful drumming of Butch Trucks, comes close to being the album's best track, trumped only by show closer "Among Your Pillows." It's simply a superb piece of music, bolstered by the dual keyboard/flute work of Kofi Burbridge, which showcases each member in a prominent and tasteful manner.

Buried under the release of Kid A on Tuesday, this album is a highly enjoyable listening experience, and a testament to what live music can achieve. (Matthew Despres)

COLD
13 Ways to Bleed On Stage
Flip/A&M

Music such as this is wisely consumed in small doses. Failure to do so can result in severe depression and a tendency to wear black eyeliner.

13 Ways to Bleed On Stage is the second album from Jacksonville gloom crew Cold, and is a highly anticipated release following their excellent self-titled 1998 debut. Their sound is similar to the angst-metal that Staind found some success with, although much more creative and less cliched. The center of their sound is the incredible Scooter Ward, whose immensely expressive voice is deep and smooth, and never approaches a whine, which can so often be the case when dealing with such personal lyrics. Guitarist Kelly Hayes pulls out some pretty neat tricks, and is joined by additional stringer Terry Balsamo on the new album, with returning members Jerry Marshall and Sam McCandless on bass and drums.

Missing from the new album are the intimate acoustic tracks sprinkled throughout Cold's first effort; now everything sounds professionally, but not intrusively, produced. The gloss certainly doesn't prevent further probing into the fragile mind of Ward; however, as the new batch of songs details the familiar themes of loss, frustration, paranoia, and heaps of relationship troubles. The album title is not to be understood physically, but instead as a description of the emotional release Ward finds on stage. A line from "Confession" explains the meaning perfectly. "You think your (sic) _ as good as me/the only thing you'll ever be is just/a way for me to bleed on this stage."

"Just Got Wicked" is incredible, and embodies all of Cold's best qualities in four minutes. Subdued, but extremely affecting guitar riffs, hints of keyboards, time shifts to keep you on your toes, and characteristically defeated lyrics. The album is smartly paced for the most part, starting off strong, resting midway (with no lapse in quality), and spicing up towards the end with some up-tempo heavy material. Taken in thirteen consecutive doses, however, the album tends to drag, therefore repeated listens, preferably with shuffled track orders, bring the most out the record. It may not be as immediately gratifying as their last album, but it's just as good, and the extra time put into appreciation is well worth it. (Michael Delano)

DO OR DIE
Victory
Rap-A-Lot/Virgin

In case you've been living under a rock, there is actually rap outside of the East Coast. There's even hip-hop beyond California. Houston's Do or Die bring it and bring it hard with their third release Victory.

Wasting no time at all, Do or Die reveal their thug side with "If U Scared." Then they proceed to get slizard with it in the banger "In A Mode." And if that's not enough for you, "Keep it Real" features Johnny P singing the chorus in this eerily honest track where Do or Die admit to pigeons "Please! Can't see me bullin', sippin on Hennessey / I can never pay your bills / Cuz I gotta keep it real." There is so much depth and diversity of subject matter in the first few tracks alone that it unveils the one-dimensionality of other dirty southern rappers such as Cash Money and No Limit.

Victory has mad highlights: "La, La, La" is an infectious, melodic jam about ghetto living and "Can U Make it Hot" featuring Mc' Unique is the album's first single that kept heads backing that thang up all summer long. Victory's best joint is the Irv Gotti-produced "Murderers, Pimps + Thugs." With Ja Rule adding his gruff voice for the perfect blend of East and South.

But don't get it twisted, there are missteps. Among them is "The Heist", an incoherent bank robbers story that is sadly out of place and "Bounce For Me" is a bass-heavy Cash Money rip-off with no purpose.

At 17 tracks deep, Victory may be a bit too much, but it is a welcome break from the usual Southern fare of boots shaking and flossing. Do or Die does indeed score a victory. (Lenny Holston)

RANE
Camelopardalis
Tide Records

When I popped Rane's new album Camelopardalis into my CD player for the first time, I wasn't exactly sure as to what I was going to be listening to. The record label describes Rane's sound as a "psychedelic world beat," and had inspiration shout outs to varying artists, ranging from Peter Gabriel to Radiohead.

While out of context it may seem like an odd mixture of sounds, it works. Each song has its own specific kind of energy to it. Rane even changes their pace from "rocking" to "laid back" in the same song. However, Rane knows when to let the music speak for itself, as heard in "Bownicity," an instrumental song that lasts over eight minutes.

On most of the songs, the vocals greatly compliment the music. There's the obvious Peter Gabriel comparison that just about every other review has made and the high notes are reminiscent of Dave Matthews.

Like any CD by any artist, there are a few "misses" on the album. "Feeding the Machine" has some excellent music and lyrics, but there are some oddly emphasized vocals. There are some songs like "Circus Ride" that have music that may put you to sleep if you're not careful. The vocals in the song are so faint that you have to strain your ears to listen to them.

Rane's new release Camelopardalis has the makings of a great album: great lyrics, excellent music and vocals. The album has a few flaws, but they won't be noticeable after listening to the CD more than once. (Andrew Johnson)

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY

Kendall Jackson Chardonnay	$13.99
Tanqueray 750	$13.99
Heineken 12 pack	$10.99 +Dep
Rubinoff 1.75	$9.99 +Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$10.99 +Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack	$9.99

Visit the Two for $9.99 International Wine Section

WORK STUDY $10/HR
Register your campus to vote and have fun too!
SCERA
(Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy) is looking for student canvassers and workers to register voters on campus. Hours are convenient, mostly afternoons and evenings, and the work is fun!
CALL JESS@5-0355
WEB: WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/SCERA
EMAIL: SCERA@STUAF.UMASS.EDU

We Sell BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS
12 NOON - 7 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 9 PM -regular hours
MONTAGUE MINI MART
We accept Visa & Mastercard
367-9551
60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions.
CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.
DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours.
Previous kitchen experience preferred.
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at:
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply.

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676
Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zürich Istanbul
Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

4 OT later, UMass beats BU

Tucker saves day

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Four score and seven years ago... Well, it wasn't that long. It's just that, at times, four overtime periods can make it seem that way.

For the Massachusetts field hockey team, however, time wasn't of the essence. What mattered was that it walked off lighted Richard F. Garber field last night with heads high, grasping onto its latest victory – a 2-1 triumph over Boston University in an extensive six-part drama (the two regular halves of play, two overtime stanzas and two stroke periods).

It came down to goalie Zowie Tucker. And to say that she simply "came through again," can't be done. The English language doesn't allow understatements of such extremity.

"She looks opponents in the eye and just scares them," junior Kristen Schmidt said. "You've got to believe in her." In the second stroke period, Tucker stopped all five Terrier shots fired from the stroke circle, including the final blast by Celeste Hubbard to seal the deal for the Minutewomen. The result of stroke play was a 3-2 tally in favor of the Maroon and White.

"A few people have told me that you need to look big in goal," Tucker said. "Every goalie has their own thing. That's just mine."

But the Terrier killer last night was Schmidt. With BU holding on to a 2-1 lead in the first period of stroke play, Schmidt walked to the stroke circle, her chance being the Maroon and White's fifth and final opportunity to extend the game.

Schmidt set, delivered and fired the ball into the left side of the cage, passed Terrier goalie Susan Harrington, pushing the contest into another five-shot stroke session.

This time, Schmidt was the second UMass player to approach Harrington. And she duplicated her previous result, firing the ball off the glove of the BU net minder and into the goal.

"I like pressure situations, it's fine for me, I'll take it," Schmidt said. "I'm just glad we put the ball in the net."

"[Kristen's] our best stroker and I knew she would put it in," Head Coach Patty Shea said. "She knew she was going to put it right in. And you could tell just in the way she walked up to the line."

It would prove to be the only tally in that last extra frame, but it was all Tucker and the Minutewomen needed to up their record to 9-2. With the loss, BU drops to 7-4.

"We didn't let the missed opportunities let us down," Shea said. "We knew that we were going to put it away in strokes. We just knew it."

The first goal of this arduous battle was credited to UMass. At 23:12 in the first half of regular time, junior Lindsay Abbot swept the ball by a frustrating Harrington to give her squad the 1-0 lead. The goal was unassisted.

The Maroon and White's last quality scoring opportunity came with 4:46 left in the first stanza on a breakaway by junior Kerry Ann Jaggassar. When Jaggassar made her way into the open field, Harrington made the decision to leave the net and kicked the ball away. Harrington, however, dropped her stick in the process, which in field hockey constitutes a penalty and a resulting penalty stroke. Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, the officials missed the call.

The Terriers knotted the game up at one at 60:48 in the second frame on a penalty corner shot by Rachel Stillings with assists from Jane Rogers and Kate Cusick. The goal was only the second scored on Tucker in the last four games.

Interestingly enough, with 6.7 seconds left in the second half of regular time, UMass was awarded a penalty stroke that could have ended the battle. But senior Lucy Koch's delivery was denied by Terrier goalie Susan Harrington, sending the game to overtime.

Kristen Schmidt and the rest of the Minutewomen had to fight hard to a 2-1 victory over Boston University last night. Up next for UMass is Syracuse on Saturday

For both squads, the theme for the night was missed opportunities.

But in turn, the respective defensive outputs were indeed respectable.

It was UMass' deep defense that came through when it needed to. And the combination of Jaggassar and Anke Breummer stymied the BU offense at the end of regular time and in the extra periods. Both backs were essential in last night's victory finding the pride to conquer the evident fatigue on their bodies.

"[Kerry] did a great job on [BU's] most dangerous play er, Jane Rogers. And she wasn't dangerous in either overtime – and there's a heck of a lot of space on that field for her to run."

Alas, credit should be given where credit is due, and the Terriers do deserve some. To take a surging No. 7 UMass squad to the absolute end is admirable, in the least.

"We didn't lose a hockey game, that's the biggest thing," BU Head Coach Sally Star said. "We lost in strokes. And we had to go to two rounds of it. I'm just really proud of how we played and competed. UMass gets credited for a win tonight but they really didn't win a hockey game.

"UMass is an excellent team and we're an excellent team," she said. "And as far as the game of hockey, neither team lost."

Close as usual

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

On August 30th of this year, the Massachusetts field hockey team demolished Colgate 7-0. By all accounts, it was an old fashioned blowout. However, it would not be a sign of things to come.

Since that time, UMass has moved up in the rankings to No. 7 in the nation and has run its record to 9-2. Blowouts, though, have not been its specialty. In the ten games the Minutewomen have played since the contest against Colgate, they have won five games by one point, two games by two points and have lost two close games at the hands of No. 1 Maryland and Northeastern.

So, yesterday's game under the lights of Richard F. Garber field, one in which the Maroon and White squeaked out a 2-1 victory over No. 14 Boston University after two scoreless overtimes and two stroke periods, was not really that much of a surprise after all.

In close games this year, the Minutewomen have plainly and simply just found a way to win. Therefore, it was textbook UMass when Kristen Schmidt knocked home two of her team's three strokes in the third and fourth extra frames, and then watched as goalie Zowie Tucker made seven straight saves to put the Terriers away.

"You need to see if you can win the close ones," head coach Patty Shea said. "And we handled it with a positive attitude and atmosphere. A game like this can only help the team."

Still, considering that in their last three games the Minutewomen have picked up a double overtime win against Harvard, a last minute upset of UConn and participated in yesterday's marathon versus BU, it would be nice for UMass if it could put a team away early and keep them down.

"I need some nitroglycerine right now," Shea said laughing after watching the extra frames vs. BU. "But we hung in tough. We kept fighting, and we didn't let the missed opportunities get us down. We knew that we would win it in strokes."

Terriers coach Sally Star put a different spin on it. "Their goalie made some great stops and they are an excellent team," she said. "But we did not lose a hockey game. We lost the strokes."

Once again for the Maroon and White, the strength of its game came in the form of scrappy defense and outstanding goaltending. Anneke, with Anke Bruemmer and Kerry Ann Jaggassar anchoring the defense and neutralizing the potent BU forwards, and with Tucker knocking away any shot that happened to go near the goal, it was no surprise that the Minutewomen only allowed one goal in 100 minutes of play.

Despite the fact that there were many positives to take out of yesterday's win, there were also a few negatives that surfaced once again for the Minutewomen, most notably their inability to take advantage of the many chances they received before a four OT victory was needed.

For example, BU goalie Susan Harrington knocked away a Lucy Koch stroke shot with less than a minute remaining in regulation that would have ended the game then and there, and in overtime, numerous chances were squandered when countless Schmidt and Bruemmer shots seemed to fly just to the side of the Terrier cage.

However, the good far outweighed the bad in yesterday's contest for the Maroon and White, and the Minutewomen are in better shape at this point in the season than they have been in a long time.

"We just have to take care of business and focus on one game at a time," Shea said.

Cold yet? NHL season kicks off with Devils on fire

It's hard to believe that the first puck of the 2000-2001 NHL season was dropped last night in an opening night matchup between the Colorado Avalanche and the Dallas Stars. Less than three months after the New Jersey Devils lifted the Stanley Cup over Dallas in Reunion Arena, the games are back in session, and already a host of intriguing scenarios have begun to play out.

There's Patrick Roy, who needs just four wins to surpass Terry Sawchuk for the all-time mark. Minnesota and Columbus – masquerading as the Wild and Blue Jackets, respectively – skate into their first season of play in the NHL. The Boston Bruins, for the first time in more than 20 years, will open a season without Ray Bourque on the roster. Mark Messier has returned to New York, hoping to revive the magic he delivered in his previous tour of duty, while the Devils have the task of duplicating their Stanley Cup run of last year.

In the midst of all the drama, however, there are games to be played. Each team in the league is in a unique position, either trying to sustain success or improve on past failure. The Eastern Conference has perhaps the most difficult situation, with a wealth of teams in position for the eight playoff spots. Here is a brief rundown of what each team brings to the table.

Philadelphia Flyers: Although the status of Eric Lindros fluctuates on a daily basis, the Flyers need to ignore him for now and focus on the definite. John LeClair is now the undisputed leader of this squad, and will have to use this role to help out the likes of Keith Jones, Mark Recchi and Keith Primeau. With the reliable Eric Desjardins back to anchor the defense, and Brian Boucher hoping to duplicate the success he had last year in net, the Flyers are a near carbon copy of last year's edition.

New Jersey Devils: As Stanley Cup champs last year, the Devils are expected to repeat the trick. With Jason Arnott and Scott Niedermayer still holding out, the Devils will need huge performances from those players who stepped up last year. Scott Gomez, Petr Sykora and Patrik Elias all performed remarkably well last year, and truly compliment the veteran corps that centers around Scott Stevens. With Martin Brodeur back in net, the Devils will be back on top if they can put their missing pieces into place.

Pittsburgh Penguins: They have Jaromir Jagr and a physically tough defense. Martin Straka and Robert Lang are back in the fold as well. The Pens, however, need something other than a three-pronged attack to surprise the opposition. A big question also lies in net: who is Sebastien Caron? Can a 20-year-old carry a team? Time will be the true test to see what these players can achieve as a unit.

New York Rangers: The Rangers are hoping to remedy three seasons of playoff no-shows with the signing of Messier, former and current captain. Brian Leetch is still plugging away on the blue-line, and it is expected that he will return to greatness by being reunited with best friend Messier. Also aiding the defense is the fact that Vladimir Malakhov was brought in as a free agent. The still speedy Theo Fleury is back up front, joined by Adam Graves, a solid player when he so chooses. The Rangers are comprised of role-players who, to the disappointment of New York fans, may take some time in learning their roles.

New York Islanders: The Islanders made a bold move by trading away future superstar Roberto Luongo and instead opting to select former BU standout Rick DiPietro with the first overall selection. DiPietro will start the season in the IHL, while steady veteran John Vanbiesbrouck will start the season for the Isles and later will help groom DiPietro into an NHL star. The Islanders have decent talent on the blue line with new acquisition Roman Hamrlik and Garry Galley joining incumbent star Kenny Jonsson But overall, this team is far too young and short of talent to make a serious run at the playoffs this year.

Buffalo Sabres: The Sabres had a strong preseason, going 7-1-0 in their eight game slate, and fans are hopeful that a healthy Dominik Hasek can bring the team back to the success it enjoyed when it made the '99 Cup Finals. Buffalo brought in former Sabre Dave Andreychuk to bolster the front lines somewhat and to help the development of phenom Maxim Afinogenov. With a gritty team led by future Hall-of-Famer Doug Gilmour, the Sabres will undoubtedly improve on what was a disappointing season assuming Hasek stays healthy.

Toronto Maple Leafs: Every fan knows just how close to a championship Toronto is, with pretty much every slot filled. Though the team will miss Bryan Berard, who is still out with his devastating eye injury, the team is deep enough on both ends of the ice to make a good run at Lord Stanley's Cup. The Leafs added Dave Manson, Gary Roberts and Shayne Corson in an attempt to add toughness and veteran leadership to a team desperately in need of both. Curtis Joseph remains one of the elite back-stoppers in the NHL, and should lead the Leafs into the playoffs.

Ottawa Senators: After making steady progress in the previous couple of seasons, the Senators hit a bit of a speed bump last year. But the distraction that Alexei Yashin's holdout provided last year is now gone from the picture as he has rejoined the team. But will his presence be a damper on a team which had such good chemistry for the most part last year? Daniel Alfredsson is predicted by most to have a resurgence, and Marian Hossa, provided he can recover from the emotional damage of being the deliverer of the aforementioned Berard injury, is on the brink of superstar status. The main downer on this team is the lack of a proven netminder, as they have only former Pittsburgh phenom Patrick Lalime at their disposal. But if he has a somewhat solid year, then the Sens could be back to the big time this season.

Montreal Canadiens: Aside from the potential breakout of defenseman Sheldon Souray and the possibility of a healthy Saku Koivu, this team is nearing hopelessness. Jose Theodore is a star in the making, but he just signed with the team after sitting out due to a contract dispute. It could be another long year for Habs fans.

Boston Bruins: It can only get better...or so Bruins fans hope. The B's should see an improvement over last year with Byron Dafoe in the net for the entire season. The management avoided tragedy by signing young stars Joe Thornton and Sergei Samsonov, but fan favorite Anson Carter remains unsigned. Boston tried to make up for the loss of Ray Bourque by signing offensive defenseman Paul Coffey, but he could prove to be too much of a liability on the defensive side. Expect Brian Rolston, acquired in the Bourque trade, to make his mark as long as he's played at left wing. If all falls into place, the Bruins could be back in the playoffs come April.

Carolina Hurricanes: The 'Canes are looking more and more like their ancestors, the Hartford Whalers. The team is struggling to draw even small crowds these days, and with Coffey gone to Boston and Roberts to Toronto, the fans have very few stars to cheer for. True, management brought in Sandis Ozolinsh to quarterback the power play, and Arturs Irbe remains his steady self, but for a team that was threatening the ranks of the Eastern Conference just a couple of years ago, they are very disappointing.

Atlanta Thrashers: The Thrashers should be on their way up this season, but when a team wins 14 games the year before, that's really not saying that much. Andrew Brunette had a solid showing last year and Petr Buzek is a budding blue line talent, yet the "Thrash" are still miles away from being respectable. Damian Rhodes still needs to prove he can be a No. 1 goalie, and without his best efforts, the team could fall short of 20 wins again.

Tampa Bay Lightning: The Southeast Division basement wars continue, as the repeated joke of the league will try to stay out of the cellar for the second consecutive year. Vincent LeCavalier is possibly the best young player in the NHL right now, and it is vital that he play at the top of his game for the Lightning to do anything whatsoever. The tandem of Kevin Weekes and Dan Cloutier in goal should prove to be a strength, but Tampa still has light years to go before they make their name among the NHL elite.

Washington Capitals: The Caps looked incredibly solid as last year rolled on and it took a heroic effort by Jagr and the Pens to take them down in the playoffs. Unfortunately for Washington fans, it will take a lot to get back to where they were then. The Caps are seeing their nucleus age steadily, and with team leader Olaf Kolzig out for a few weeks after knee surgery, the team has a huge gap to fill between the pipes. Sergei Gonchar is finally showing that he might make good on all the potential most scouts saw in him, but without a strong effort from aging veterans Adam Oates and Peter Bondra, the Capitals will have a falloff this year.

Florida Panthers: Once the bread and butter of the division, the Panthers will look to regain that standing this season. Florida is strong up front, including steady Ray Whitney, Viktor Kozlov, and Rob Niedermayer. Young talent on this team is easily seen as Olli Jokinen should be making his way up in the professional ranks and young goalie Luongo should get some time. Robert Svehla anchors a defense which is somewhat inept when it comes to offense, but is defensively solid. Oh, and they have some guy named Bure too...he might have a decent year.

The usual suspects; Dallas, Colorado and Detroit, should once again be found at the top of the Western Conference standings this year, but defending President's Trophy winner St. Louis will make a run as will the up and coming Sharks.

Turn to NHL page 11

■ nhl

continued from page 10

If the Blues can't get over their playoff woes however, and no one else steps up to challenge the Campbell triumvirate then the Avs, Wings or Stars will once again represent the Western Conference in Lord Stanley's Cup Finals.

If each team plays to their ability than the Iggians will be at the bottom of the conference with the Coyotes, Kings, Ducks, Sharks, Canucks, Oilers and Flames all with a reasonable shot at the five through eight seeds in the playoffs. Here's a brief summary of the contenders and the pretenders.

Detroit Red Wings: The Wings will once again be strong and deep up front. As important as it is to have their stars, Brendan Shanahan, Steve Yzerman and Sergei Fedorov, leading the assault on opposing blue lines, the reason Detroit won two straight cups is because of their role-players. Scotty Bowman was able to roll out three lines on every shift without having to worry about a drop off. With players such as Kris Draper, Martin Lapointe and Tomas "Demolition Man" Holmstrom, Bowman can continue to play three lines equally which wears down other teams and provides a spark for his own. The blue line will be the best its been since Vlad Konstantinov was patrolling the defensive zone. They will once again have Niklas Lidstrom's astounding skill in the back and they will also have Chris Chelios' toughness and leadership for a whole year. Larry Murphy and Steve Duchesne will most likely make up the second defensive pair with Mathieu Dandenault providing a fifth option for Bowman. The real question mark will be in goal, as once again Chris Osgood will have to prove that he is a championship goaltender. If he regains his form from 1998, the Wings will be in position to make a strong run at the cup.

St. Louis Blues: The Blues return every key player from last year's regular season championship squad...with one more year of experience. Pierre Turgeon leads this team with superstar skills and leadership. Turgeon once again took his rightful place among the leagues scoring leaders and he has some top-notch players backing him up. Pavol Demitra is a great compliment to Turgeon as a skilled winger who can score and feed the puck. Newly acquired Dallas Drake fills the gritty winger role for the Blues. He'll take a lot of punishment for his size and still score goals. Like Detroit, the Blues depend a lot on their second and third lines with Lubos Bartecchko, Michael Handzus and Scott Young filling leading the second wave of Blues forwards. MVP, Chris Pronger is the best all-around defenseman in the NHL. Then there's that Al Macinnis character whose shot is the equivalent of a steam engine, and it might leave a bigger welt. Sean Hill is beginning to show all-star form and with Velma Trophy candidate Roman Turek in net, the Blues will push the Red Wings to play their best hockey or to step aside.

Chicago Blackhawks: The Blackhawks will continue to struggle this year with sniper Tony Amonte representing 90 percent of the team's skill on offense. Alexei Zhamnov and Eric Daze round out the rest of the 'Hawks talent on offense and the defense is not much better. With the trading of Chicago sports icon Chelios, the 'Hawks lack a real presence on the blue line. Hockey in Chicago will not be a pretty sight this year but if the team continues to rebuild steadily, there could be a light at the end of the tunnel.

Nashville Predators: The Preds have one solid line, with Cliff Ronning at center and Tom Fitzgerald and Patrik Kjellberg at the wings.

It is basically all down hill after that although Nashville has some promising prospects in all-star Kimmo Timmonen and center David Legwand. Nashville won't make the playoffs this year, but they can look forward to a brighter future.

Columbus Blue Jackets: They've got Ron Tugnutt and...well they've got Tugnutt. Who's pumped for the first annual Blue Jacket golf outing?

Colorado Avalanche: The Avs will once again be the class of the Northwest division with all other contenders more than a few steps behind. Colorado brings back the 1-2 punch at center with super-Swede Peter Forsberg and rifleman Joe Sakic. The Avalanche also bring back three young budding superstars in Chris Drury, Milan Hejduk and Alex Tanguay. Patrick Roy will be a stalwart in net as he pursues Sawchuk's record and another Stanley Cup ring. The defense lost power play quarterback Sandis Ozolinsh but having Raymond Bourque for a whole year should help lighten that loss. Jon Klemm and Adam Foote round out a very physical defensive core. Even with the loss of Ozolinsh, the Avs should still be in contention when the playoffs roll around.

Vancouver Canucks: With the signing of the Sedin twins and the maturity of Steve Kariya, the Canucks represent the only playoff threat from the Northwest outside Colorado. Vancouver's defense is good and getting better with missile launcher Adrian Aucoin firing blasts on the power play as well as Mattias Ohlund and Ed Jovanoski guarding the blue line. Vancouver also has a strong group of forwards with Todd Bertuzzi, Markus Naslund and company. The Sucks have a shot at the playoffs for the first time this millennium.

Edmonton Oilers: Edmonton will have trouble competing in the crowded Western Conference this year as Doug Weight is the team's best player and they wouldn't give a solid effort in signing him. Bill Guerin and Ryan Smyth can score. Tom Poti is a star in the making, but it won't be enough to carry them into the playoffs.

Calgary Flames: Valeri Bure is money in the bank. Phil Housley is ageless but the Flames just don't have enough to make it into the post season, even with Mike Vernon in goal.

Minnesota Wild: Every time an expansion team comes into the league people start to wonder if the impossible could happen. Could this team be the one that takes an expansion team to the postseason? Answer: Nope.

Dallas Stars: The Stars are the epitome of a team. Take away any of their parts and they crumble, from Mike Modano to Jaime Langenbrunner. Everybody on the roster contributes and everybody knows how to win. The Stars are not getting older.

Jay Pandolfo and the rest of the New Jersey Devils hope to retain Lord Stanley's Cup in the 2000-01 season.

Matt Brady, Matthew F. Sacco and Matt Despres are Collegian columnists.

UMass heads to New York for CWPA tourney, match with Iona

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Correspondent

As the old saying goes, there is no rest for the weary, and this definitely holds true for the 10th ranked Massachusetts men's water polo team. After a grueling four-game weekend trip to Princeton last weekend, the Minutemen are right back at it as they head to the Big Apple for two matches on Saturday at the CWPA League tournament in the Bronx. The very next day the Minutemen travel to New Rochelle, NY, to take on the Iona Gaels. Yes, that's right, the Gaels.

Last weekend the Minutemen improved to a record of 13-5 by winning three of four at the North/South Invitational in New Jersey. UMass was led by team leading scorer Carlos Ramos who had nine goals and five assists for fourteen points in the four game set while J.R. Vanderwall was big at the other end of the pool making 28 saves in the Minutemen net bringing his season total to 97.

We played really well as a team all weekend. Nobody really stood out in any one game, it was a total team effort," said sophomore Chad Arnold.

The Minutemen managed to outscore their opponents 46-26 despite falling to 15th ranked Navy for the second time this season, dropping an 8-6 decision in double overtime. UMass defeated George Washington 17-3 in its first game before edging Bucknell 13-11. In their final game of the weekend the Minutemen beat the tournament hosts, 16th ranked Princeton 10-4.

This weekend holds a familiar foe for the Minutemen as they take on Brown in their first game. UMass has beaten the Bears twice this season, outscoring them 23-11. If the Minutemen are to make it a perfect three for three against Brown, they will need to continue getting balanced offensive production from players like Ramos, Arnold, Greg Fraser and Adam Moore, as well as another fine performance from Vanderwall in between the pipes.

Following the Brown game, the Minutemen take on the few, the proud, the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy. The Mariners have struggled to a 2-7 record this season due to a number of losses in tight games.

For the final match of the weekend, the Minutemen head upstate to take on Iona. The Gaels, who have been in and out of the top 20 all season, are led by Dominik Przekota who has 39 goals and 45 point this season.

The long day weekend for the Minutemen as they look to pick up some positive momentum before heading to California next weekend to take on national powers Pepperdine, Long Beach State and Loyola Marymount.

UMass to clash with BC

Minutemen look to keep on track

By Andy Vogel
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's tennis team has started off the season about as well as a team can, sweeping both Boston University and the University of Hartford. The competition level will steadily increase over the next few matches, however, starting with today's matchup against the Eagles of Boston College.

So far this young season, the Maroon and White have been led by junior Steve Prisco, senior Todd Champeau and a pair of freshmen, Brent Davis and Aron Gortman. Prisco, the team's number one singles player, has started off the season with a bang, jumping out to a 4-1 record on the campaign. Davis, out of San Diego, hasn't shown any freshman jitters as his record now stands at 3-1. Gortman stands at 2-0 in dual match play, and the Minutemen have also received solid contributions from sophomore Will Shaw and senior Bill Greener.

Still, the Minutemen realize that Boston College will be a more challenging opponent than their previous two, and it will take a strong effort to come out victorious.

"We're not healthy [about going into this match. It's definitely going to be a tight one. It's not like playing the University of Hartford or even Boston University. We left more confident going into those matches," commented Champeau.

The Eagles, like the Minutemen, brought in a strong crop of freshmen this year and are led by their two new editions, Justin Slatters and Brad Anderson, and senior Jason Gowell. Boston College, like UMass, stands at 2-0 on the year.

Assistant coach Scott Wilkins described the contest as the team's "first big match," and that the team is "looking forward to a good test."

"We have to be prepared for this one. They're a real formidable opponent and we're going to have to work tough it's [out them]. They're a solid team right down the line. They've got a great deal of depth. This will definitely be our first test for the more difficult matches to come," Greener said.

After Thursday's match, the Minutemen will have their first home competition of the season on Columbus Day as they face the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut State.

Come write for sports!

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
studentuniverse.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

creativity innovation knowledge enthusiasm
Bring it.
Where it matters most.
As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.
But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.
So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.
We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.
Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors
• Computer Science
• Computer Engineering
• Electrical Engineering
• Mechanical Engineering
• Math
• Physics
• Chemical Engineering
• Aeronautical Engineering
• Finance/Accounting
• Human Resources
• Industrial and Labor Relations
• Marketing/Communications
• Management
Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.
Bringing technology to the edge
Raytheon

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1981 Mazda 626 Sports coupe. Loaded $750 obo 256-1708

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1989 Buick Century V6, cassett, AC, power, $1399 413-533-9082

1993 Mercury Sable wagon (seats 8!), excellent condition, 86k, loaded: power windows-seat-mirrors-locks; a/c, peppy V6 3.8L, clean body and interior, new tires, brakes, sticker. $4500 or b.o., 508-836-3753

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

86 Honda Accord LX, New tires, exhaust. Great car. 159K. $2300 or B/O 256-1952

1990 Acura Integra GS 2Dr, Manual, 108K, Sunroof, CD, Power. $4895 Call 546-5854

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 P4D-66 640KB of RAM Intel PRCSR, Wndws 95 28K Modem, $350 549-8891

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute Teachers to work in childcare center. Please call Ellen 549-1167

Office Help organized person 2-3 hrs/week $9.00/hr. initial organization pays more. Call 253-8899

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

House Assistant. $7.00 hr. Laundry, animal care, cleaning, odd jobs. 5-10 hrs a week. Non-smoker, car, 8 miles from Amherst. 259-1227 box #1.

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

EMPLOYMENT

Cook-Day Care Center, Rt. 63, Leverett 9-1 M-F $7.50/hr Call Susan 548-9674

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr. Call Susan, 548-9674

Mail Boxers Etc. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Ctr., Amherst)

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emd-snet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957 Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy 22nd Birthday Martha! You are so special to all of us! Thank you so much for being the greatest friend. Love US!

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Have fun - Raising funds for your clubs, teams, and group. Earn up to $500 or more. Put our 25 years of fundraising experience to work for you. Call now for details 800-592-2121 ext 725

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for roommate to share house w/3 guys. $375/mo inclusive. Call Steve @ 253-3220

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

It's the place to Advertise!

What are you waiting for?

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WCICH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Cornell to Cornell
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 5, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℡		Scenic Rail Journeys		Political Debate (Live) ℡				Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News ℡	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo) ℡		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News ℡	Late Show ℡
WBZ	4	News ℡	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours (N) (In Stereo) ℡		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News ℡	Late Show ℡
WCVB	5	News ℡	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℡	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News ℡	Nightline ℡
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ℡	Friends ℡	Nanny ℡	Gilmore Girls "Pilot" (N) ℡		Charmed (N) ℡		News		Friends ℡	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℡	Friends (In Stereo) ℡		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News	Tonight Show
WTXX	58	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ℡		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ℡				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra ℡	Hollywood	Friends (In Stereo) ℡		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons ℡	Fraser ℡	Seinfeld ℡	Friends ℡	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 2 -- Teams to be Announced. ℡				News	Fraser ℡
WWLP	22	News ℡	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℡	Friends (In Stereo) ℡		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				News ℡	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℡		This Old Hse. Dra. on Call		Political Debate (Live) ℡				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ℡
WGGB	40	News ℡	ABC News	Seinfeld ℡	Fraser ℡	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Political Debate (In Stereo Live) ℡				Nightline ℡
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ℡	Judge Judy ℡	Seinfeld ℡	Frasier ℡	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) ℡				Frasier ℡	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ℡	Spin City ℡
WTBS	72	Roseanne ℡	Roseanne ℡	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Live and Let Die" (1973, Adventure) Roger Moore, Jane Seymour.							"The Man With the Golden Gun"
A&E	42	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Mayhem ℡	Biography "Jack Webb" (N) ℡		Murder One "Chapter Four" ℡		Investigative Reports ℡		Law & Order "I.D." ℡
CNN	23	Worldview ℡	Moneyline	Newshour (N) ℡	Crossfire ℡	World Today ℡		Political Debate (Live)			Newsstand ℡	Sports	Moneyline ℡
COM	26	Saturday Night Live ℡		Daily Show ℡	Stein's Money	★★½ "Polyester" (1981, Comedy)		Divine, Tab Hunter.		Saturday Night Live ℡		Daily Show ℡	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Wild Discovery "Forbidden Depths				On the Inside: Death Zone		Hospital (N)		Great Siberian Explosion		Justice Files
ESPN	51	Baseball Playoffs		Sportscenter	Coll. Football	College Football: Western Michigan at Marshall. (Live) ℡						Sportscenter ℡
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Judith Light"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★½ "Silent Victim" (1993, Drama) Michelle Greene, Ely Pouget.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Makeover	Real World ℡	Real World ℡	TBA	Real World ℡	Real World ℡	Real World ℡	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Makeover	Say What Kyke
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ℡	Rugrats ℡	Spongeb	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	45	Sliders "The Guardian" ℡		Babylon 5 "The War Prayer" ℡		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	62	Biker Women		Trauma: Life in the ER		Paramedics "At Risk" (N)		Susan Smith: Nine Days		Manhunt in the Heartland (N)		Paramedics "At Risk"
TNT	20	ER "Be Patient" (In Stereo) ℡		Pretender "Scott Free" ℡		★★ "Last Man Standing" (1996, Drama) Bruce Willis.				Hollywood Salutes Bruce Willis			"Moonstruck"
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger ℡		JAG "Wedding Bell Blues" ℡		Nash Bridges "Dirty Tricks" ℡		★★★ "Backdraft" (1991, Drama) Kurt Russell, William Baldwin. (In Stereo) ℡
HBO	63	★★½ "Erik the Viking" (1989, Comedy) Tim Robbins. PG-13				Inside the NFL (N) ℡		"A Better Way to Die" (2000) Andre Braugher. "R"		Bedazzled	G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	65	(5:00) "Run" "R" ★★ "Lost & Found" (1999) David Spade. "PG-13"				"Undercurrent" (1998, Action) Lorenzo Lamas. (In Stereo) "R" ℡		★★★ "Mumford" (1999) Alec Baldwin. "R"		★★★ "Mumford" (1999) Alec Baldwin. "R"		★★★ "Drawn-Flame"
SHOW	54	★★½ "A New Life" (1988, Comedy-Drama) Alan Alda. "PG-13" ℡				★★½ "Payback" (1999, Suspense) Mel Gibson. (In Stereo) "R" ℡				Rude Awaken.	★★½ "It Too Deep." (1999) Omar Epps. "R" ℡

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I HAVE AN E-MAIL MONKEY ON MY BACK, BUT I CAN QUIT WHENEVER I WANT.
I DON'T NEED TO CHECK IT EVERY MINUTE. I CAN RESIST.
BUT LOOK! THE STUPID MONKEY HIT MY KEYBOARD WITH HIS FOOT!
www.dilbert.com

Robotman By Jim Meddick

HEY, MAN, YOU GOT A COOL BIRD! WHAT'S ITS NAME?
"PILSNER."
HEY, PILSNER. SAY "HELLO" TO WILMA
GET THE SNAKE AWAY FROM ME.
BUT WILMA WANTS TO SAY "HI."
GET THE SNAKE AWAY FROM ME
DUDE, YOUR NEGATIVE ENERGY MAKES IT HARD FOR WILMA TO CREATE A KARMIC BOND!
I DON'T CARE, AS LONG AS IT MAKES IT HARD FOR WILMA TO CREATE A PARROT SANDWICH.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

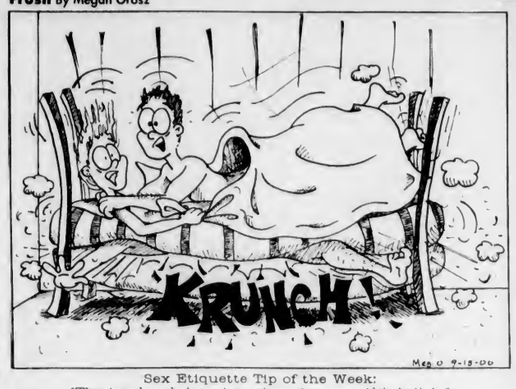
Can I borrow your textbook?
I never bought the textbook.
How can you pass the class without the book?
I do all my homework at the textbook annex.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO, I'VE BEEN THINKING ABOUT ALL THIS "HOME DECORATING" STUFF YOU'VE BEEN TALKING ABOUT AND I'VE DECIDED TO DO A BIT OF REDECORATING MYSELF.
WELL... IT'S ABOUT TIME.
YEAH, ACTUALLY I FIGURED OUT THAT YOUR FUR CLASHES WITH OUR DECOR TOO MUCH. I THINK A NICE GREY TABBY WOULD MATCH THE FURNITURE BETTER...
I DON'T LIKE THE WAY YOU'RE LOOKING AT ME.
ROB, NO!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Frosh By Megan Orosz



Sex Etiquette Tip of the Week:
"The top bunk is not as strong as you think it is."

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

HEY, CHRIS. CAN I USE YOUR COMPUTER FOR A SEC?
JUST TRY! THE LOUSY PIECE OF $#!% PRIZE UP ON ME!
DID YOU TRY REBOOTING IT?
REbooting? You mean I GOTTA KICK IT AGAIN?!
MAYBE IT'S TIME TO CALL TECH SUPPORT.
@&!® IT, I'M GETTING A BAT.

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – It may prove impossible for you to simulate responses appropriate to the day's events. You'd better count on really feeling it today.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You and a friend or loved-one may seem to be on different wavelengths during a portion of the day. Take time to be honest and specific.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You are too serious about your personal endeavors at this time. Adopt a more relaxed attitude and demeanor and circumstances will improve.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) –Your optimistic outlook will benefit others as well as you today – as long as you put your ideas into motion and turn words into action.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your practical side will receive Strokes today from those who appreciate your ability to see things as they really are.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Caution is advised today when you are dealing with emotions that may be more powerful than they seem. Dangerous currents run beneath the surface.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – This is a good day for you to take charge and make changes you know are necessary – for yourself and others. Your actions affect many at this time.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You have the power to minimize your fears today, and to banish forever any further doubt you may have about a current project.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find yourself immersed in a situation you can neither comprehend nor control. Your fate is in someone else's hand at this time.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You mustn't wait for others to show you the way today. Rather, you must take the lead and be willing to weather any inescapable hazards.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your sense of humor saves the day – again. Still, some may not long appreciate your eagerness to laugh at the more serious issues.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 67 LOW: 54	HIGH: 63 LOW: 51	HIGH: 60 LOW: 42

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"C'MON! IT'LL BE FUN!" BECKONED THOMAS IN THE AFTER-SCHOOL SPECIAL THE UNSAFE MINE.
© 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"I got a head with wings."

–Mark Sandman of Morphine

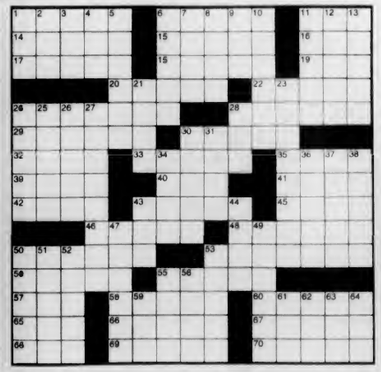
ACROSS
1 Like a tack
6 Shine
11 Dash
14 Foretell
15 Ballroom dance
16 Yale grad
17 Actress Garbo
18 Some solos
19 Corn crib
20 More chilling
22 Gemstone weight
24 Betrayal of one's country
28 Wanderers
29 Jell
30 Cite
32 Oklahoma town
33 Like kids
35 Brief letter
39 Incites a dog
40 ___ chi chuan
41 Tel ___
42 Birthright seller
43 Swingy tunes
45 Infant
46 Chandelier adornment
48 Helm
50 Water slides
53 It's the best policy!
54 Sci-fi servant
55 Look displeased
57 Spanish gold
58 Brainstorms
60 Reflection
65 Harem room
66 Sibling's child
67 Twangy
68 Court divider
69 Inca Empire locale
70 Tiny buga

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-21-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Droop
2 "Ben-___"
3 Mature
4 Furrow
5 Compliment
6 Oat or wheat
7 Bait
8 Kuwaiti leader
9 Loose robe
10 Dalmatian, to a firefighter
11 Striped animal
12 Homeric work
13 Servings of ale
21 Pika
23 Wilting
24 Not those
25 Rajahs' wives
26 Novelist Jong
27 Signifies
28 Yuletide drink
30 Doubt
31 Apartment
34 Elevator inventor
36 Egg shapes
37 Dalai Lama's country
38 All
43 Fleur-de-___
44 Put away
47 Eye part
49 One of nine
50 Sing like Bing
51 Multitude
52 German sub
53 Rubber tubes
55 Nourish
56 Hotfoot it
59 Uproar
61 Guy
62 Film exp.
63 Pistol: slang
64 Chicago Loop trains

BEST PUB FOOD ANY-WHERE
the HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Fried Clams

Jamaican Caribbean Pork Sandwich

Savory Rice& Spinach Bake (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Caribbean Jerk Tofu (vegan)

Dinner

Chicken Fingers

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Jasmine Trabelsi, Sarah Wingardner

OFFcampus ONline

www.masslive.com/offcampus

3 students
1 Web cam
24/7!

Three UMass seniors are sharing their final year of college with the world.

Meet Deanna, Ruth and Laura

MassLive.com's Web cam is...
in their apartment.
Now you can get a real–life look at their lives!

OFFcampus ONline:
It's the coolest show on the Web.

For Real!

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com
GET ON IT!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 23 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, October 6, 2000

The Exorcist returns to the theaters. Eve 6 plays the Webster, and this week's video pick in arts today.

ARTS p. 5

Minutemen attempt to rebound after last weeks loss to Hofstra when they take on Northeastern this weekend.

SPORTS p. 10

Fac Senate discusses budget

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Budget cuts, tax reductions and money were just some of the topics presented at the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate meeting which met for it's second meeting of the year on Oct. 5. Addressing this meeting was Senator Stanley Rosenberg, who brought up issues such as budget cuts and revenue as well as tax cuts to be taken in the future.

"This year we've complete the budget closer to on time which was better than the previous years. In a year that higher education has taken a higher dynamic the House of Representatives has for the first time in over a decade decided to put forth a serious budget which included this University," said Rosenberg. "Along with this budget, a supplemental budget of ten million dollar is being passed through the legislature that includes programs put on through the higher education."

Talk over the next Nov. 7 ballot and issues to be present where also topics of interest amongst the faculty and senate. Questions also arose for a second time on the issue of deferred maintenance around campus. Faculty expressed concern over the ideas of money usage and little show of overall restorations around campus.

"The University has taken steps to make changes in all the buildings around the campus, but because there has been so many changes and the magnitude of all the jobs are so large, it's hard to see what's really being done," said Rosenberg.

This years UMass office of University Advancement's performance report for FY2000 was also made available today for the senate. One aspect that made Chancellor David Scott rise from his seat was the issue of commencement and student conduct. The performance report stated that this 2001 commencement is exceptionally coordinated and ahead in progress.

However, this issue of student conduct was first brought up by Senator W. Brian O'Connor who expressed concern over the well-being and reputation of the University, this was quickly supported by Scott.

"The behavior at commencement is getting out of hand and more and more parents are commenting on the issues of student behavior and the question is whether this may be affecting funding as well as our image on campus," said O'Connor.

Although funding is not being affected by overall student conduct, the idea of student rowdiness was not only specifically looked at in respects to commencement, but students overall disregard of respect towards staff and administration.

"I don't mind students that are rambunctious but what I don't understand is why we have to be rude towards other people. I experienced this the other night when President [William] Bulger addressed faculty and students on the impacts of distance learning. Students had really good questions to ask, but what I couldn't understand was the rudeness by students towards the staff, representatives and the President," said Scott.

"Faculty needs to start saying things in their classes and articulating to students that we've tried to make this campus a better place and rudeness is not the answer."

Along with issues discussed elections also took place for a new At-Large Rules Committee member. Bob Wilson of the Hotel, Restaurant, Travel Administration (HRTA) was the newly elected candidate.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor Scott is an interested onlooker during the faculty senate meeting yesterday.

Vonnegut visits Smith College; talks of life, death, technology

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

With a wry smile and a seemingly endless supply of one-liners, world-renowned author Kurt Vonnegut addressed a standing-room-only crowd at Smith College's John Greene Auditorium last night.

"I could send you a fax or an email but it is so much fun to see you, to stand up here and talk," Vonnegut said. "I am real; I am not a machine and neither are you."

In a seemingly chaotic pattern of thoughts and ideas, Vonnegut touched on a wealth of topics ranging from technology to religion to mortality. Though his rambling diatribe seemed at times to lack direction, Vonnegut kept his audience laughing and applauding with his unique blend of humor and insight.

On the topic of technology, Vonnegut explained what it was like to work in a world before today's technology became prominent. He listed his favorite forms of technology as his address book and his Encyclopedia Britannica, because they are both, "in alphabetical order."

He also denounced the Internet as a form of technology, referring to it as an "alternative form of LSD," before launching into an unrelated story about his trials and tribulations attempting to mail out one of his novels to a typist. He explained that he was forced to buy an envelope and then lick the seal to close it, an action that he paralleled to sex.

"Licking an envelope, that's sexy," Vonnegut said. "Sex with a purpose is the very best kind."

Another topic discussed at length was death and dying. He continually reminded his audience that he was a Humanist and therefore did not believe in an afterlife, yet he contemplated within his speech the possibility of a heaven.

"If I should die, God forbid, I hope that they say that I am in heaven," Vonnegut said. "That is the funniest thing that they could say."

He also went on to address the beliefs of Christians and the message of Jesus Christ. Although he admittedly expressed skepticism about Christ, he nonetheless spoke of the importance of his message.

"What can we say about Jesus? If what he said was good, what does it matter if he was God or not?" Vonnegut said.

He concluded his lecture by explaining to the audience that human beings have no idea what to make of their eventual outcome. He asserted that since childhood we had been told what is good and bad, and he tied this into the theme of religion by wondering aloud how he could get a definitive answer on life in the end.

"I would like to go to heaven, just for a few minutes, to ask the people in charge just what was the good news, and what was the bad news," Vonnegut said.

Med school enrollment down

By Cason Crosby
The Daily Princetonian (Princeton U.)

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. - The number of students applying to medical school has decreased steadily during the last three years, according to a survey conducted by the Association of American Medical Schools. And Princeton's statistics are no exception to this developing national trend.

"We have fairly convincing evidence over the last three years to indicate that there's been a decrease in the total number of applicants applying to medical school," said Dr. Daniel Notterman, the chair of the University's Committee on Health Professions. "And our colleagues at other Ivy League schools have encountered fairly significant drops, too."

Princeton pre-medical students have one of the highest acceptance rates at the nation's top medical schools — about 90 percent of Princeton students who applied to medical school were admitted last year. But only 159 students applied to medical school in 1999 compared to some 250 applicants in 1996.

The trend has evolved during the last few years as HMOs have become more prevalent and medicine less lucrative.

Notterman said that other schools are producing even fewer medical school applicants. "Princeton has seen slight decreases but not to the extent of national universities or of the other Ivies," he said.

In 1996, nearly 47,000 students at colleges across the country applied to medical school, but by 1999 that number had dropped to below 39,000, according to John Parker, media spokesperson for the Association of American Medical Schools.

But Princeton administrators and advisers say they are not concerned, since fluctuation in the number of applicants is common. "This is part of a historic trend," Notterman said. "Now we're back to where we were in the early 1990s."

Jessica Belz '02, president of Princeton's Pre-Medical Association, agreed with Notterman that — as with any profession — it is common for the number of applicants to change from year to year. "Hopefully starting now it will remain fairly high and stable," she said.

Belz said the waning interest in medicine could be connected to the profession's volatility. "There are such rapid changes in the medical profession like advances in technology and ethical questions," Belz

Turn to IMMUNE page 3

Sex in NY bathrooms

By Jason Adler and Brandt Gassman
Washington Square News (New York U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - The amount of public sex in New York University's restroom facilities is becoming a major concern.

After certain campus sites developed reputations as hot spots for public sexual activities, NYU Protection Services has increased patrols in areas reportedly rife with sexual activity.

In early 1999 a Web site, www.cruisingforsex.com, began listing popular locations for public gay sex throughout the NYU campus. Among the locations originally listed were public bathrooms in Bobst Library, the Main/Waverly complex, Shimkin Hall and showers at Coles Sports Center.

The Web site features frequent updates about areas that are currently popular or risky.

An update last month reported the bathroom on the third floor of Stern's Henry Kaufman Management Education Center as the new hot spot for public sex. Cruisingforsex.com reports that the Kaufman Center bathroom is a destination for those "cruising" for oral sex and manual stimulation.

The Web site also told visitors that the sixth floor men's room in Shimkin had been closed for renovations and that the previously popular third floor of Shimkin now had "no action."

The men's bathroom on the third floor of Shimkin, which contains heavy marble partitions in the stalls, is under construction. The door is equipped with a padlock latch. The door is not locked, however, and the lights are on.

The bathroom on the sixth floor of Shimkin, which is adorned with construction signs, is also unlocked. The once-swinging men's bathroom on the Kaufman Center's third floor has been locked. Bathrooms in the Main/Waverly complex have recently had heavy steel plating installed on the sides of the stalls, thwarting efforts to cut "glory holes" for anonymous sexual activity.

Crime Prevension Manager Robert Woerner said Protection Services officers have been made aware of the public sex situation and are instructed to handle reports with "a great deal of sensitivity."

Woerner said that as of this spring, Protection Services has increased foot patrols of areas previously known as hot spots for inappropriate behavior. Woerner also said that Protection Services has not encountered any repeat offenders.

Craig Griffin, assistant director of Protection Services, said that the way NYU Protection Services officers deal with those caught depends on those involved. If an NYU student is caught engaging in public sex, the case is referred to the dean of his or her school. Non-NYU students caught participating in public sex face the possibility of being arrested.

SGA clarifies use of funds

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

After accusations flew earlier in the week that they'd purchased alcohol using a Student Government Association purchase order, Student Body President Jeff Howe and Student Trustee Seth Avakian were let off the hook yesterday. Sort of.

While neither purchased alcohol using the PO, five non-alcoholic mixers were purchased before the SGA leadership left on a summer retreat to Cape Cod. The total cost of the trip was $2,500. Once Campus Activities received the receipt, Howe and Avakian were asked to repay the cost of the mixers because, according to one source, "Campus Activities didn't think it was an appropriate expenditure for the SGA to make."

The mixers purchased contain no alcohol; however, Howe and Avakian repaid the money.

The anonymous accusations made against the two resulted in strongly worded responses from both Howe and Avakian, who denied using SGA funds to purchase alcohol.

Howe said, "To the coward who made that accusation, you know you can't buy alcohol anywhere with a purchase order which is the only way we can buy anything." Avakian similarly denied the allegations.

The accusations ended a week of SGA tension. After questionable elections were ratified Monday night, Wednesday night's meeting featured Avakian promising never to return if the current Senate body was kept. He maintained that its very existence was unconstitutional. Avakian feels that a Constitutional clause for the Greek Area and Hillel House to be represented by one senator for every 250 people who live in the area.

Others have maintained that the clause only applies to houses actually owned by the University of Massachusetts.

The issue is still up in the air; the SGA administration is expected to appeal the ratified election before the Student Judiciary. Should the elections be thrown out, the campus would have to have another week-long election period.

The elections are being contested after Greek Houses won almost all of the available seats for the commuter area, thus giving them a powerful block vote in the Student Senate.

Avakian has said that the Senate isn't a representative student body at this point and has threatened not to attend meetings until it is. He has accused Student Speaker Jim Eltringham of fixing the elections so that Eltringham's girlfriend could have a voting seat.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Seth Avakian spoke at the SGA meeting last night about allegations made against cabinet members buying alcohol with University funds.

Scholarship search service groups confronted with criminal charges

By Ryan Trost
Daily Egyptian (Southern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) CARBONDALE, Ill. - Congress recently approved allowing criminal proceedings to be brought against individuals involved in scholarship scams.

The bill, which was passed by the Senate last year and the House of Representatives last week, is expected to be signed into law by President Bill Clinton soon.

Under the new law, fraudulent groups would be hit with possible jail time of 10 to 16 months and fines of up to $500,000. Current legislation only requires a fraudulent company to repay the defrauded consumers and prohibits them from engaging in future scholarship programs.

The National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators estimates that 350,000 people lose $5 million a year to financial aid scams.

In 1997, a federal judge in Atlanta ordered a couple who ran a fraudulent scholarship search service to pay $6.1 million in restitution for promising information about free college scholarships which the company failed to provide.

Attempts by the 2,400 defrauded customers to get a refund of the $299 fee were denied when the company refused to honor its refund policy.

In another case in Washington, D.C., in 1997, two men were required to provide refunds to 500 people who were also promised scholarships and received nothing in return.

The scam was run by sending flyers to individuals by mail stating that they had won grants worth thousands of dollars. More than 50,000 people sent $10 to $100 for the grants and received nothing in return.

In both cases the parties settled out of court without receiving any jail time.

In 1996 the FTC began Project ScholarScam, a campaign to educate consumers on how to identify fraudulent scholarship search services. Now, with the fines and possible jail sentence, FTC officials hope to curb future scams.

Spotting scams can be difficult because they often use official letterhead, associate themselves with government agencies and make false claims of affiliation to the Better Business Bureau or Chamber of Commerce.

Monica Brahler, public relations coordinator in the SIUC Financial Aid Office, said she wasn't aware of any reports in her office of students falling victim to a scam, but she recommends students to utilize other options before shelling out hundreds of dollars.

"There are a lot of free services available to help students search for scholarships and we encourage people to take advantage of them," Brahler said.

Brahler recommends students and their families to investigate the services before subscribing by calling the Better Business Bureau or their local Chamber of Commerce.

The FTC reports there are also legitimate scholarship services that will charge anywhere from $49 to $90 for valuable information about scholarships, telling students up front what they can and cannot do for them, but Southern Illinois University at Carbondale officials say they can provide much of the same information for free.

Larry Dietz, vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Enrollment Management, said

Turn to SCHOLARSHIP page 3

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Move over Doogie Howser

The youngest student to ever enroll at UMass is running late to his chemistry class.

How to get paid to surf the Web

By Merideth Pierce
The Observer (U. Notre Dame)

(U-WIRE) SOUTH BEND, Ind. - If you are like most Saint Mary's and University of Notre Dame students, you spend at least 10 hours online a week. This online time counts the Internet, writing and receiving e-mails, or talking on the ever-addictive Instant Messenger.

Wouldn't you like to be paid to do exactly that - be online at your computer and get money to do whatever you would normally do? That "too good to be true" idea is behind many of the growing "paid to surf" Web sites. You might ask, what is a "paid to surf" Web site? Where are they?

Which are worth while?

"Paid to surf" Web sites range in organization, methods of payment, requirements and rules. Yet there are a few underlying ground rules for all of them. The basic idea is that you allow a "paid to surf" program to run a small ad window at the bottom or top of your screen.

This ad window has required software that must be downloaded from the Web site. Ads are then displayed on the window as you are online. But this window is usually less than an inch tall and can be turned off at any time.

The "paid to surf" program gets paid for running these ads and in turn pays you to view them.

Most Web sites recommend that you occasionally click on the ads that interest you and see what they have to offer, claiming you will find great deals by doing this.

Besides picking up a few bucks by being online, you can also multiply your earnings by referring others to sign up. You then earn a set amount for all the time your friends spend online, as well as money for the time their own referrals are online.

PaidtoSurf.com is a site that explains and reviews the trend of earning money while surfing the Internet. The Web site claims that "many people are making hundreds, and some are making thousands of dollars every month" through these sites. But claims like these may leave you skeptical.

Many questions arise about "paid to surf" Web sites. Does this gimmick cost anything to set up? The answer for all sites is no. All you have to do to sign up is download software for the ad window, and then share some information with the site.

In general these programs do not share personal information, but they do share broad demographic information with outside advertisers. If this causes concern, you can refer to each program's privacy statement, easily found before you ever have to fill anything out. And if you cannot find their privacy statement, the site is not worth it.

Now to the bottom line: How much MONEY can you get? It all depends on the Web site. Some pay by the hour, some by a percentage, and some even pay through sweepstake chances.

Hourly rates range from between 20 and 70 cents for each hour you surf; from eight to ten cents for the time your referrals surf, and two to five cents for your indirect referrals. Although this may not sound like much, suppose you are getting paid the average amount for all payments. If you refer five people to the Web site and they in turn refer only three, your check will be over $330 a month for spending only six hours a week online!

By far the best "paid to surf" site is DesktopDollars.com. Although the homepage is chock-full of links and information, it is still easy to follow and provides all the essential information. To start earning money on DesktopDollars.com, you must join and download their ad banner — the "PROFITzone." Then your payment begins.

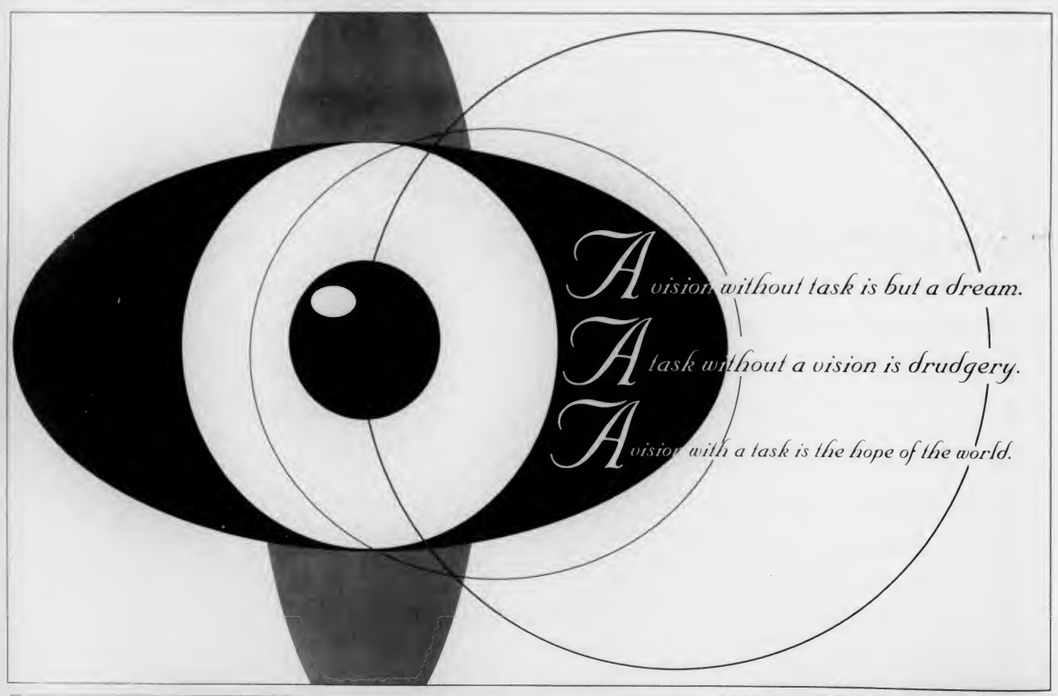
The amount you earn on DesktopDollars.com depends on the amount of ads you view while connected to the Internet. This is a benefit over other programs where you have to be actively surfing on the Internet. With DesktopDollars.com you can be working on a paper and get paid as long as you are online and the ads are running in your sight.

The payment rate for DesktopDollars.com is 45% of the amount the Web site earns to run the ad in the first place. But with extra referrals you can earn up to 70% the amount DesktopDollars.com receives. Other perks for this site include monthly giveaways of $25,000 and a $250 bonus each week for the top earners.

The payment plan for DesktopDollars.com is one of the best available. Payment that depends on the company's revenue is a better deal then a fixed rate for the subscribers.

When Web sites with fixed rates increase their revenue, you still only receive the same amount of money.

But when sites like DesktopDollars.com increase their revenue, so do you.



GOLDEN KEY NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

The Golden Key National Honor Society

Meeting on October 11, 2000
Herter Hall Room 116
@ 7:00 p.m.

Bring a Donation for the Make a Difference Day Food and Clothes Drive

General Membership Meeting

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

- Cars • Mini Vans
- Trucks • SUV's
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co.

(On bus route)

WORK STUDY $10/HR

Register your campus to vote and have fun too!

SCERA

(Student Center for Education and Research Advocacy) is looking for students and workers to register voters on campus. Hours are convenient, mostly afternoons and evenings, and the work is fun!

CALL JESS@5-0355

WEB: WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/SCERA
EMAIL: SCERA@STUAF.UMASS.EDU

U. Texas law students criticize Texas Court system

By Amy Westerman
Daily Texan (U. Texas-Austin)

(U-WIRE) AUSTIN, Texas - A University of Texas School of Law student group criticized the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals at a press conference Wednesday, saying the current court has prevented due process in capital cases. Due process is the course of legal proceedings designed to protect individual rights and liberties.

The UT chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, an organization that supports civil and human rights, organized the conference to rebut the high court's hearings held on campus Wednesday. The Court of Criminal Appeals heard oral arguments for three cases, including two capital murder cases.

Carl Villarreal, a guild member and law student, said he believes judges use highly publicized death penalty cases to campaign for re-election.

"I think once the public realizes and becomes educated about what's going on and the lack of due process involved in these cases and that people's rights are being violated, I think even most Texans would be appalled," Villarreal said.

Jim Harrington, director of the Texas Civil Rights Project, said the current Court of Criminal Appeals consists of judges who are concerned with upholding the death penalty and this notion sometimes overrides the need for justice.

"[The court's] forgotten that its role is to be a guardian of justice and a protector of the Constitution," said Harrington, who is also a UT adjunct professor.

Rob Owen, an Austin attorney and UT law professor, said some appeals court decisions have chipped away due process for capital case defendants.

Under state law, each jurisdiction must have a list of competent lawyers who can try capital cases and trial courts must evaluate the mental competency of defendants in order to stand for a capital case.

But, Owen said, the appeals court ruled recently that a lawyer is not necessarily incompetent to argue a capital case even though the lawyer is not on the competent counsel list. As a result, the appeals court upheld the man's conviction.

"Texans may favor the death penalty, but they don't favor a lynch mob. They want these procedures to be fair and reliable," said Owen, who teaches at the UT Capital Punishment Clinic, a program that provides law students the opportunity to assist in capital punishment cases.

Dudley Sharp, resource director for Justice For All, a victim's rights organization, called the group's claim absurd, adding that while Texas has the highest number of death penalty cases, its rate of convictions overturned by federal courts is half the national average of 33 percent.

"The federal courts totally disagree with this immature and unproven claim of this group," Sharp said.

Sharp said there will always be individual cases overturned, but the low rate compared to the rest of the nation indicates that there is not a major problem within the state appellate system.

Since the re-instatement of the death penalty in 1976, the state has executed 232 people. There are currently 445 inmates on death row in Texas.

■ scholarship

continued from page 1

SIUC Financial Aid is working on a database for the SIU website that will make information about existing scholarship information more accessible to SIUC students. Dietz said the information should be available on the website within a couple weeks and should help SIUC students who don't want to pay for the service.

"There are some fly-by-night organizations out there that will ask you to send them a pretty healthy check and then they'll tell you that you're eligible for the federal aid program, and we'll tell you all that and not charge you anything," Dietz said.

Fraudulent services sometimes go unreported according to the FTC because they offer some information but not what was promised, or the scholarships are outdated and victims do not feel they have been defrauded. Jodie Bernstein, Director of the FTC Bureau of Consumer Protection, said there is one question everyone should ask before sending cash for scholarships.

"Will a legitimate search service really guarantee you a scholarship? The answer is no," Bernstein said.

Factoid: For more information about scholarship scams visit the FTC website, www.ftc.gov. Websites that offer free scholarship information are: www.scholarship.com, Fastweb.com and www.isac-online.org.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

It's a jungle in here...

The sun shines on the beautiful flowers adjacent to the Student Union Building.

Write for Collegian News

Ex-NFL quarterback dispels drinking myths

By Brain Showalter
The Breeze (James Madison U.)

(U-WIRE) HARRISONBURG, Va. - College students encounter many myths when searching for answers to difficult issues involving drinking, relationships and emotions. To offer helpful hints to such confounding topics, a former professional football player, now a motivational speaker, talked to more than 100 James Madison University students Monday night to dispel some of these misconceptions.

In conjunction with Alcohol Awareness Month, Don McPherson, a former Philadelphia Eagle and Syracuse University quarterback, discussed violence against women, language, gender norms, learning, leadership and decision making at the Convocation Center.

In his presentation "You Throw Like a Girl and Other Masculine Myths," the current ESPN commentator and representative of Athletes Helping Athletes drew on motion pictures and personal experiences to relate his material to the audience.

Athletes Helping Athletes is a fund-raising program to benefit handicapped athletes.

DRINKING TRUTHS

Encouraging students to challenge his views, McPherson emphasized that his ideas were not the absolute truth.

McPherson discussed the affect of the media on shaping people's views and its role in the learning process.

"You have one of the toughest jobs — being a young person in the United States," he said. "We make money off of you and the status quo."

McPherson discussed the recent uproar against binge drinking on college campuses. To relate this problem with the influence of the media, he held up a collegiate magazine printed at Harvard University. The back cover of the periodical featured an advertisement depicting a catcher's mask that included an outline of a beer bottle. McPherson said understanding how we learn leads to improved decision making.

MISCONCEPTIONS ABOUT VIOLENCE

Violence and male attitudes toward women were addressed in the next portion of the presentation. The speaker noted relationship violence and date rape have two things in common: they pit men against women and are traditionally called women's issues.

McPherson confronted the belief that rape is only a woman's issue.

"The only way that violence by men against women is going to stop is if men approach other men about violence before it happens," he said.

An example of men approaching other men was in the movie Amistad, he said. In the film white men confronted other white men about ending the injustice of slavery and negative attitudes towards African-Americans.

AN ATHLETE'S EMOTIONS

An equally effective example utilized was the "box." The box represented norms for how men, women, athletes and friends are supposed to behave. He used his experiences as a quarterback at Syracuse for the illustration. McPherson drew a box on a chalkboard and wrote the words "tough," "hard" and "can't cry." These represented what a traditional male athlete is supposed to be according to his peers.

Outside of the box, he wrote the terms "punk," "wuss" and "queer."

These represented the possible labels directed towards a male athlete who disobeys the rules "inside the box."

The depiction centers on the fear of thinking or acting different.

The speaker pointed out that the example takes on the form of hazing in college fraternities and sororities. It also relates to male violence against women. Men need to use the power of communication to stop such problems from occurring, McPherson said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1502 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Sendzevich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Smarwski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

■ immune

continued from page 1

said, "that it's hard to tell the direction that the medical field is going."

Also, other professions are attracting students away from careers in medicine, according to Notterman. "My view is that there are lots of things other than medical school for students interested in health and health policy," Notterman said. "And electronic commerce is drawing away some of our best and brightest."

Both Notterman and Belz suggested that the competition for admission into medical school may discourage many students from applying.

Notterman said that he believes Princeton's pre-medical program will continue to attract students in the years to come.

"There are many professors and faculty members in the molecular biology department, the Center for Human Values and the Woodrow Wilson School that hold good discussions and act as role models for pre-medical students," he said. "We think we have an effective system."

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

radical christian worship
real teaching. real praise. for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street, Hadley
10-noon • Sundays
413-253-7073 • www.arcchurch.org/agape

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only; no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-701, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

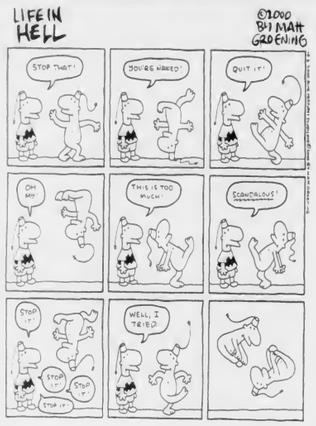
Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Cheating Father Time:
The debate over BoTox

Time passes, and people get older. These are essentially truths with which every human being must contend.
Well, just about everyone.
It is no secret that Hollywood's biggest names often have faces that seem resistant to the aging process. Celebrities like Elizabeth Taylor and Cher have weathered the passing of time with surprisingly little to show for it, albeit through the aid of modern medicine and the ever-advancing technology of fooling Father Time.
While the country's "everyday people" suffer through the wrinkles and sags, those with the riches and the resources sit through the latest injections and procedure and often emerge looking younger for it.
But at what cost?
The fact is, many of the treatments used by Tinsel Town's chief facelifters involve chemicals and procedures that have either not been researched thoroughly or were designed for different purposes altogether. Yet these celebrities place so much value on their looks that they ignore the possible long-term effects that these treatments could have. Basically, they are sacrificing their lives for their looks.
One of the industry's most widely used substances, BoTox, was actually developed as an agent for chemical warfare in the early 1900's. BoTox is a purified protein toxin produced by the clostridium botulism bacteria. Even though the substance itself is a toxin, its proponents claim there are no serious side effects or long-term health risks due to the extremely small amounts used in cosmetic surgery procedures.
How BoTox works is relatively simple: when injected into a muscle, it blocks the nerve impulse from reaching that area, and as a result, the muscle weakens. As the muscle weakens, the skin overlying the muscle relaxes and the wrinkles in the skin gradually soften and often disappear.
But the problem is, the effects of BoTox usually last only three to five months, at which time another injection is required. Someone like Cher, who has been receiving BoTox treatments for several years, has had literally dozens of injections of the toxin.
And while the Food and Drug Administration, the American Academy of Neurology, the American Academy of Ophthalmology and the National Institute of Health have all determined the treatments to be safe, their findings are based on only 10 years of ophthalmology administration and a mere six years of wrinkle therapy treatments. Considering that Botulism is one of the deadliest toxins known to man, and that its spores are startlingly resistant to heat and chemicals, isn't it at all disconcerting that surgeons are injecting it into people's skin in the first place? What if its buildup takes longer than 6-10 years, at which time it spreads throughout the body and kills its host? Is that a worthwhile tradeoff for a decade of smoother skin?
That is not to say that even the current system of administration is without dangers. Even the facelifters who employ the method warn that side effects can be caused if the BoTox migrates from the injection sites, cautioning their patients to avoid massaging injected areas for a full 12 hours after treatment. Though they don't typically elaborate on what these side effects are, one can only wonder what having one of mankind's deadliest toxins wandering through your body can cause.
But apparently, that isn't enough to dissuade the Hollywood elite from receiving these treatments. For these unfortunate individuals, looking good has become such a priority that it outweighs the risks of dying young.



Is there freedom in DC?

I am from Washington, DC, the political capital of the United States. When I say that I am from DC, I mean that I actually lived inside that "district." Indeed, I am a fifth generation resident of DC, and no one in my family has ever worked in the government. Many people do not know that anyone lives in DC--they believe that it is a city in which only government activity occurs, a sort of industrial park of government business (all innuendos intended). More than that, they don't realize that anyone or any family has lived there for longer than the term of a president or member of Congress. Nonetheless, the fact is that some 600,000 people do call DC home, and in addition to all the "normal" problems faced by residents of urban locals in the United States, DC residents have one unusual problem to add to the list: they are not citizens of this great "democracy"--they are colonial subjects.
Residents of DC have no voting representation in the Congress of the United States, despite the fact that DC (in terms of population) is about the same size, or actually larger, than several states. Oh sure, they have a sort of local government (known as "home rule"), but this local government functions always under the direct control of Congress (all local laws must be sent to Congress for review)--a Congress in which DC residents have no real voice.
What is meant by all of this? I am describing simple facts here (outraged opinion to follow): 600,000 "citizens" of the United States have no actual representation in Congress, where laws and resolutions are passed that have direct and often directly negative affect on those "citizens." Allow me a quick example. Recently, voters placed a ballot initiative on the DC ballot to legalize the medicinal use of marijuana, something that had already been done in several states around the country. Conservative (read: Republican mostly, but not exclusively) members of Congress did not like this little fact of democratic action and so passed a binding resolution that the DC Board of Elections could not expend any of its resources on the initiative--in plain English, we were forbidden from even counting the vote! This has nothing to do with the issue of federal drug laws overriding local law; this has everything to do with members of Congress (perhaps some that represent you and your family) deciding that residents of DC could not even share in that most basic function of a democratic society, the statement of opinion.

JONATHAN ELSBERG

Here's another example: Congress has forbidden the DC government from spending local money, raised by local taxes, to support needle-exchange programs (that slow the spread of AIDS and other diseases. There may be reasons to debate the usefulness of such programs, but the US Congress chooses not to debate this program, it chooses to demolish the rights of people who do wish to practice such debate.
You may think that these are outrageous examples of the worst tendencies of the powerful to subvert democratic systems to their own purposes--I certainly hope that you do. But let me mention one more recent act of Congress that adds injury to insult. Congress has forbidden the DC government from bringing court challenges to the restrictive resolutions that Congress passes. All states are allowed to challenge the constitutionality of federal laws that affect them. Unfortunately for DC, it is not a state, it is a "federal district," and has no such protection under the constitution, as members of Congress have taken it upon themselves to decide. They are judge, jury and executioner when it comes to the rights of DC as a whole and of its residents in particular--that is the essence of the city's colonial stature.
I used the term "executioner" quite intentionally just there. A current goal of several members of Congress is to force DC to institute the death penalty, something which overwhelming majorities of DC residents have opposed for a very long time. I should think that even normal supporters of the death penalty might see the insanity of such severe bloodthirsty action.
Please do not be confused by the fact that DC has one non-voting delegate to the House of Representatives (currently, the able and honorable Eleanor Holmes Norton). Ms. Norton has no actual power in the House--she is allowed to vote on legislation only so long as her vote does not matter. That's right, if her vote changes the outcome, her vote is not counted. Can anyone say "waste of time?" And as if that weren't enough, DC doesn't even have this sort of pathetic pseudo-representation in the Senate.
So you've made it this far... perhaps you are wondering why this situation exists. There are plenty of reasons that could be offered (and often are), but I'll tell you what the real reason is--DC is a Black city. In case any of you out there in the reading public think that this statement expresses some sort of racial grudge, let me make it very clear, I am white and I like white people--some of my best friends are white. But the fact remains that DC is overwhelmingly populated by African-Americans and that in part because of its racial makeup, it is politically aligned very strongly with the Democratic Party. As a result, the Republican leadership in Congress is absolutely opposed to enfranchising the residents of the District, because that would guarantee that the people sent to Congress by DC would be in the Democratic Party, threatening Republican power in Congress.
I do not hold the Republicans entirely to blame for the situation, however. Democrats have been in control of Congress for plenty of time since the invention of the ideas of freedom and democracy and they never managed to find a way to enfranchise DC residents, although I must note that many have taken the issue seriously.
Now a few (alas, probably a very few) folks at UMass might take this issue to heart and care to learn more about it; for simplicity's sake, I recommend the websites www.dcvote.org (a non-partisan group) and www.dcstatehoodgreen.org (the website of the recently merged DC Statehood Party and DC Green Party). And maybe, just maybe, a few of you might like to do something about it. I will not make any suggestions for action, I ask for them. I'd like to know what sort of creative ideas you have for opposing this nasty relic of Jim Crow (for that is precisely what it is). Anyone so interested should feel free to seek me out, and as incentive I promise a "DC Statehood" bumper sticker to the first 50 people who respond. Be the first on your block!

Jonathan Elsberg, is a UMass student

Our blind little deaths

Rachel was a smiley, curly-haired, typical U-Mass student before she passed away late last semester. No one really remembers her name except for a few friends, because her death happened quietly and never made big headlines in the papers.
It snuck away under bigger waves of the usual student protests, the abominable passing of the student senate budget, and the constant dirty politics grinding through the UMass system. Things happen so quickly that way at UMass, and in retrospect it seems that Rachel was a bit lost in the shuffle. She never quite got the social courage to strike out on her own, and trailed after the very first companions she found here, random neighbors who later got tired of her constant following of them and her apparent lack of independence. She got sick during the semester (no one really found out why or how); a week after she was hospitalized, her short life ended.
Her roommate, however, will never again forget the night when the residence director came into the room to make the announcement.
Rachel's death hit me like a bolt, because I found out about it a few days ago as I bumped into Rachel's roommate, a good friend of mine, while running to class. As I finally came back to my room in late evening and remembered the quick meeting, it was almost like a skip of a heartbeat that later comes back to pain you.
The death of a friend is always painful, but what surprised me most is the realization of how unaffected the UMass community seemed to have been by it.
We always hear of this or that student's death, due to a car accident or some other tragic circumstance, and it always hangs in a boxed announcement on the front page of the Collegian, with a finality so devastating that most people glaze over it and then put it out of their minds. There is just never enough time to process these tragedies.
What saddens me is that my friend, Rachel's roommate, had had to deal with Rachel's death almost alone. Apparently, all of her friends had either graduated or gone away that semester, and as a result she was all the more devastated.
Something, however, seemed wrong with this picture. How was it possible that my friend felt so lonely in mourning the death of her friend, when at the same time she was living on campus and studying at a university with over 10,000 people? How come there were so few people to talk to?
My friend's terrifying experience shows that there is something terribly wrong at UMass. I used to think it was the winter weather, or maybe the gray buildings, but now I know that it is not just because of the open window when I sometimes shiver in my room at night.

NATTY YAGUDIN

Sometimes I sit down at the Campus Center and look at the hurried manners of the walking people, how they gaze over each other's heads as they talk, not really paying attention to what they hear or say. We are too busy studying for classes, making money, fulfilling ambitions, or even promoting our ideals, and meanwhile people die in our community and we don't always notice.
Rachel had been lucky. She had a family, friends and a roommate who cared for her. Others haven't been as lucky. I remember the case of a young man who died last year in his car in Puffton. He apparently committed suicide in his car, right in the middle of a parking lot, but no one had noticed until about one week later. I followed the story closely, only to find out that the police were in a dilemma, as no one had come to reclaim his body for a funeral.
At the time, I could not imagine that a life could end like that for a UMass student. How could people not have noticed, I asked myself. But I guess I was naïve.
In our rush to advance ourselves and our big ideas at this university, we often forget the most important thing — ourselves. I want you, the reader, to take a little test and ask yourself: Do you actually know the names and majors of your neighbors in the dorms or apartments? Are you familiar with what is important in the lives of people who sit next to you in class? Can you name any outside hobbies or interests that your co-workers may have?
The administration at this campus is placing more and more emphasis on Learning Communities, such as Residential Area Programs and other student activities, because according to statistics these programs achieve the highest retention rate and greatest student satisfaction. In effect, it is not the programs themselves which are so great, but rather the fact that people actually have a common ground, an "excuse" to start to talk to each other and create friendship connections. The question I have asked all along is, why is it so hard to do that in this university in the first place?
While it is understandable that it is not possible to create one close-knit community in such a big university, I find that it is the individual oversight of every single one of us in our failure to embrace our neighbors, our classmates, and even closer friends.
This may sound too serious, but so was the loneliness of my friend when there was no one to help her last semester, and the unclaimed death of the student from Puffton.
Our newly computerized life, which has bred even more isolation and greed in our society than there was before, is making me shiver at the thought of what living will be like when I actually graduate into the real world, if UMass is supposed to be more protecting and nurturing than that.
More than anything, I feel that at some point during the modern evolution of Generation X and beyond, our lives just got way too busy than we care to admit. In a sense we are becoming human machines, programmed to think of success in very narrow and materialistic ways, while human spirits around us vanish and we hardly notice. My friend's experience finally opened my eyes to this terrorizing effect on our community.
So what do we do? Most of you probably don't have a simple answer, and neither do I. But I hope that you start by looking at yourself — really — for the first time and see how you act with other people you see during the day. Imagine they were your closest friends. How much of your time of day would you 'waste' for them? Or, like with Rachel, would you be willing to let them get lost in the shuffle?

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian staff member

Playstation 2: Da bomb or bust

The New York Times recently reported that Sony will fall fifty percent short of their projected distribution for the shipping of their Playstation 2 game console on the Oct. 26 release date. This marks another stumble in the history of the highly anticipated machine, with very few news sources in the game magazine industry willing to address any potential flaws in the armor of this huge project. While many game magazines are content to simply act as monthly press releases for the Playstation 2 system, the publications willing to offer unbiased coverage combined with unavoidable business leaks such as the Times story have painted an unflattering picture of the system many thought would effortlessly dominate the future of gaming.
Before the public even caught a glimpse of Playstation 2, the preliminary specifications were enough to entice even the most jaded game fan. Backwards compatibility with the existing 500+ titles for the original Playstation meant that PS2 would be the first home console to offer that feature. DVD capability was a big selling point for developers now able to add digital-quality video to their games, as well as for consumers to be able to play their existing (or forthcoming) DVD film library on their game console. A graphics engine that supposedly would surpass the current high water mark, Sega's Dreamcast, seemed to be the final nail in the coffin for foolish competitors.
Word in the gaming community quickly spread, however, that this new technology wouldn't come cheap, and a $299 price tag would be the lowest possible for the system. That was the price decided on for the Japanese and upcoming American launch, although 300 clams only secures the basics. One game, the memory card necessary to save your progress in the game, and an additional controller to play the game with someone else will drive the cost up an additional $100. The price is not unfamiliar to long-time Playstation owners, who paid identical prices for the original plus accessories in 1995, but does seem daunting when the comparable Dreamcast can be purchased now with all of the same accessories and two (older) titles for $175 less.
Rumors also flew that the PS2 was incredibly hard and expensive to develop for. Industry experts were interviewed in various game magazines and predicted that it would take ample time for developers to maximize the output of the system, and developing a game for the system could cost upwards of $1 million. Production costs as high or much higher than $1 million are not entirely uncommon, but are usually reserved for high-profile games released by Sony, Nintendo, Sega, or their first-party developers.
Issues such as price and production costs are insignificant to the hardcore game enthusiast, however, and the real test would be PS2's ability to deliver quality games. The PS2 launch this past March in Japan was among the most profitable system launches in history, although many feel that the quality of the titles available were less than consistent.
GameFan magazine is among the few sources to offer coverage of PS2 titles without unflinching adoration. The staff reviewed the Japanese launch titles with disappointment in many cases, as the average scores the games received were certainly not be expected by anyone caught up in the Sony hype machine. The games were viewed mostly as lackluster updates of existing games (Tekken Tag Tournament, Ridge Racer V), or original titles that felt unpolished and unfulfilling (Fantavision). This came at a time when Dreamcast was receiving praise for its steady stream of quality original titles, of which some were successes (Jet Grind Radio), and others noble failures (Seaman).

MICHAEL DELANO

The most recent distribution problem forecast comes at a familiar time of the year for such announcements, as Nintendo has created a flurry of free press for itself in the past with such shortages, including the 1996 frenzy surrounding game and console scarcity for their recently released Nintendo 64 system. According to the Times, at least 500,000 game players, who had secured their systems through written or paid reservations, will not be serviced on the PS2's October release date. The shortage will no doubt help sales of Dreamcast this holiday season, but in my opinion, serious game fans have already seen the benefits of Sega's system, and those practicing blind devotion to the PS2 would be wise to look at the alternatives.
The number of games available at launch on the American PS2 has increased to an impressive 30+, with and additional 20 or so by year's end. Recent additions to the list like Silpheed: The Lost Planet and increasingly intriguing titles like SSX and Oni are definitely reasons to get excited, but the short lists has plenty of crap, and most of the supposed "killer apps" have very comparable counterparts on Dreamcast. The next batch of Army Men and Theme Park games are beating a very dead horse, and Rayman 2 and Dead or Alive 2 are two games that have been offered in nearly identical (and some say better) versions on Dreamcast for the past six months. Soul Caliber, now over a year old, will, I believe, take Tekken Tag Tournament to school, and the PS2 game I am most excited about, Ridge Racer V, still looks great, but not so great that I don't recognize that the upcoming DC ports of F355 and Daytona 2.
Playstation 2 will most likely mature into a successful system, with a healthy game library and its share of technical and genre innovations. I still plan to get one after the holiday season, when software stores no longer look like a Braveheart battle scene. But the be all and end all of video gaming it is not, and hopefully won't become, since diversity is consistently the most vital aspect of the scene. Thanks to GameFan magazine for its consistently high quality, open-minded, and often unpopular content, and of the PS2 will shake the other magazines out of their trance of believing every bit of hype for the system and not bothering to voice some real issues.

Michael Delano is a Collegian staff member

Horror classic returns to the big screen with style

By Tim Letteney
Collegian Correspondent

THE EXORCIST: THE VERSION YOU'VE NEVER SEEN
Directed by William Friedkin
Written by William Peter Blatty with Ellen Burstyn, Jason Miller and Linda Blair

William Friedkin and William Peter Blatty's 1973 thriller The Exorcist is often called the scariest movie ever made. It is based on an urban legend that was written in a 1949 Maryland newspaper story. A student at Georgetown University at the time, Blatty was fascinated by reports of a nearby rite of exorcism that had been performed on a tormented boy. Two decades later, after becoming a successful screenwriter, he turned the story into a best-selling novel, changing the sex of the child and modeling her movie-star mother on his Hollywood neighbor, Shirley MacLaine.
In Friedkin's film version, Ellen Burstyn plays the bewildered mother and Linda Blair the possessed child, while Jason Miller is a priest so wracked by guilt over his mother's lonely death that he becomes an easy target for whatever force has taken over the girl. All three actors were nominated for Academy Awards, and Blatty won an Oscar for his screenplay.
This movie is one of the rare horror films to be recognized by the Academy voters; The Exorcist simply could not have been ignored at the time, and should not be ignored now. This movie remains relevant in today's society, and it is more intense than any movie that I have seen in years, with a nod to American Psycho and Fight Club.
Yes, it seems that the new scenes are a marketing ploy, and yes it seems that Warner brothers want to steal your hard-earned money. Well I have just one thing to say... Give it to them! There is a fair chance that you will never be able to see this movie again on the big screen. Sure you can rent it, but that takes away from the pure shock value that was intended. On a small screen with bad sound it becomes too easy to dismiss as just another dumb horror movie, and one's attention can easily be diverted to the odd noises coming from you upstairs neighbor. In the theater you have to watch the movie, you can't go get a beer, or go smoke a cig, hell you probably won't even go relieve your bladder. You automatically become Alex in Kubrick's A ClockWork Orange, eyes glued to the screen, screaming on the inside, and getting a bit nauseous.
This movie is just fantastic. It plays on so many of our subconscious fears, the direction is superb, and it is better than any film playing at AMC right now. Plus I see it as a great anti-Ritalin commentary for the times. "Well doctor, her bed was floating and she spit up some liquid that looked like pea soup, do you think it is a possession of some sort?" "Well ma'am, that would appear to be the case at first glance, but I strongly suggest that we just put her on a new wonder drug that mutes children called Ritalin."
It's a good film and it is worth the money. So the money you saved not going to see Urban Legend 2 should be put towards this film (if you are running low on cash drink Pabst this weekend). You will not be disappointed. Enjoy.

COURTESY OF THEEXORCIST.NET

The Exorcist returns to the big screen and puts every horror film in recent memory to shame.

For OPM, heaven is a live show

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

EVE 6 with WHEATUS and OPM
Webster Theater
Oct. 3

HARTFORD - OPM put on a better show than Eve 6 and Wheatus combined. This stems from the obvious fact that OPM is far superior to any attempt at a production ever by created by Eve 6 or Wheatus.
California's OPM opened the night with their Beastie Boy-ish mix of hip-hop and hard rock, with selections from their tremendous debut album Menace to Sobriety.
The shift in rock n' roll trends to a sound that is more like rock n' rap has been a progressive but overwhelming transition. With acts such as Limp Bizkit, Kid Rock and especially Eminem crossing lines into a blurry haze of unfamiliarity, it seems to be a challenge to stand out. Though they have not been able to take off just yet, OPM could be the band that conquers that challenge.
Their set included highlights from the album such as "11 Captian." The song is a tribute to Captain Morgan's rum. Lead singer Shakey Lo, the Creation Kid, accompanied the song by fixing himself a bowl of Cap'n Crunch cereal with Captain Morgan's instead of milk. The surprisingly young crowd responded favorably. "11 Capitan" is definite proof that the band has strong influences from perhaps the best act of their sort in recent history, Sublime. Besides the Sublime reincarnated act, Long Beach Dub All-Stars, OPM does the best job at imitating the legendary group. The one thing that they add to their ensemble that Long Beach Dub All-Stars do not is originality.
The pounding bass and scratchy turn tables added the hip-hop feeling to the heavy yet smooth guitar riffs on "Heaven is a Halfpipe," the most recognizable song of the set. The song is the first single off of Menace to Sobriety.
OPM closed their magnificent set with "Stash Up," the first track on the album. The remarkable song presents only one example of how they are going to have to spread their awesome music through other means besides the radio. The lyrics certainly cannot be played on the air.
Wheatus came up next with an unfortunately weak set. The crowd certainly seemed prepared to support the group that, with their first single, "Teenage Dirtbag," have taken ambiguity to a new level. The first time I heard the song I was not even sure if the lead singer was male or female.
Everything Wheatus played leading up to their finale had a much slower and uninteresting effect. The band's stage performance was also a bit lacking. After seeing OPM simply rip it up, Wheatus didn't do anything but stand still. There was something very unfulfilling about that.

RYAN BENHARRIS/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Wheatus entices fans with "Teenage Dirtbag"

They finished the night with a version of "Teenage Dirtbag" that seemed as though it would never end. Despite the fact that the one song did bring a wave of excitement into the venue, the band was unable to set an enticing standard when they started. By the time they were finished, they had left a lot to be desired.
The headlining act put on quite an entertaining show. Eve 6 has the raw, high-energy emotion that has sparked their short career.
Fueled by 1998's intense single "Inside-out," Eve 6 has been able to maintain the small but loyal fan base that made them popular.
Tuesday night's show began with the fast paced "Rescue" from their new album Horrorscope. What truly sells the band as an inimitable entity is the intelligence of their lyrics. "Rescue" says, "Like Jessica Rabbit she collects bad habits and gets her drinks for free." Combining animation to music has been one of the band's goals for this album and the tour surrounding it.
The cover art is a cartoon woman drawn by the people who made video game vixen, Laura Croft. The same picture appeared on the bass drum of drummer Tom Fagerson's assembly.
While the band tried hard to promote lesser known songs such as "Nocturnal" from the new album and several from their self-titled debut it was the more familiar pop-radio hits that the crowd was looking for. The band knew this though, and would hype the fact that they were about to play something recognizable. Before "Leech" from their first album, lead vocalist Jon Siebels said, "Are you ready to rest?" The crowd booed. He asked, "Are you ready to relax?" The crowd hissed. When he screamed, "Are you ready to rock," and the fans went nuts, and were excited that they were about to hear something well known.
Besides "Leech," Eve 6 also played a variety of familiar tunes such as "Tongue-tied," from the soundtrack to Teaching Mrs. Tingle. Though the movie was terrible, the video for "Tongue-tied" immediately established Eve 6 as my heroes because they were allowed to make out with my future wife Katie Holmes. Eve 6 also delivered an "Promise" and of course "Inside out." They finished the night with a cover of John Denver's "Leaving on a Jet Plane."
Eve 6 put on an impressively fast set. The crowd seemed to love them, and they truly made up for an excessively weak performance by Wheatus. Neither band even touched the marvelous kick-off led by OPM though. Even if you never get a chance to see OPM live, pick up a copy of Menace to Sobriety since it's one of the best albums of the year

Stay warm and bring home Heat this weekend

By James Schaffer
Collegian Correspondent

This is the first time I have written this section and I really don't know what kind of film to pick. For me watching movies has to be one of the best activities to do, but picking movies for people has to be one of the hardest things I can do. You pick one flick and someone thinks you're a mindless action crazed idiot, pick another and you're a snotty subtitle loving art freak. Go with a childish comedy and you're immature, a dark comedy a sick morbid freak. Well, all I can say is sorry I can't make you all happy, but I will try my best. I had so many movies I wanted to pick, and I looked around, asked around, and thought about all types of genres: comedy, sci-fi, romance, action, etc. One thing was for certain I didn't want to go out on a limb picking some no name film from hall way around the world. This week I believe I will end up appeasing to the fans of gangster films with a fairly common yet somewhat secret movie that stands atop my list of kickass flicks.

This week's pick is the cops and robbers epic Heat, released in 1995. This critically acclaimed movie was called "a masterpiece" by Time magazine, and when director Martin Scorsese of gangster epics Casino and Goodfellas was asked what was his favorite movie of the 90's was? Heat was atop his list. With actors such as Al Pacino, Robert DeNiro, and Val Kilmer, director Michael Mann creates one of the past decades most powerful dramas. Not many people know of Mann and his work. He is best known for the 80's cult classic hit Miami Vice (just think of Don Johnson in a Hawaiian shirt and white slacks) and last years Oscar contender The Insider, along with the French and Indian War film The Last of the Mohicans. The supporting cast is just as strong as the headliners; with Jon Voight and Tom Sizemore, along with Amy Brenneman, Ashley Judd and Natalie Portman. To top if off this movie has a cameo of the "Wild Thang." Tone Loc. Nowadays Hollywood is willing to pay millions for any moron who can read a script. Because of this it is incredible to see how the casting director in Heat was able to create such a talented ensemble of characters. Even though it was a mainstream film with such big names, I ask many people about this movie and get a mysterious gaze.
This is a powerful story of obses-

Turn to HEAT, page 6

AMHERST COLLEGE
DINING SERVICES OPPORTUNITIES
Amherst College is accepting applications for the following positions:
CATERING
Banquet Captains • Waitstaff • Bartenders • Drivers/Setup • Catering Dishwashers
Work special function/catered events. Previous experience preferred but will train.
DISHWASHERS/FOOD SERVERS/KITCHEN RUNNERS
Weekday and weekend shifts available to work lunch and dinner hours
Previous kitchen experience preferred.
We offer competitive starting rates. No benefits. Interested candidates may submit a resume or complete an application at
Office of Human Resources,
201 Converse Hall, Amherst College, Amherst, MA 01002-5000.
Amherst College is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer and encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to apply.

Campus Awareness Days
9:30am - 3:00pm
•Wednesday October 11
•Thursday October 12
•Friday October13
Campus Center Concourse

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am
in the Jones Library Conference Room
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org
43 Amity Street
Downtown Amherst
It's a Church!
374-7532

Welcome to the Jungle

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

PHOTEK
Solaris
Astralwerks

TRINITY HI-FI
Fuego
TVT

Listen to your mom. Listen to your conscience. Listen to your CDs. It's not an unreasonable request. Too many music listeners are quick to dismiss an album after only one listen. I can say from experience that many albums just need time to grow on you. Selling an album only to buy it back later when you can appreciate it is no fun, so give your albums a full-attention listen, and if it doesn't grab you, come back to it later, sometimes much later. To be sure, some albums will never grow on you, no matter how many chances you give it. And some albums get worse the more you listen. What follows are examples of both types. The first album got better with time, while the second revealed some faults upon closer inspection.

To be honest, upon first listen I had no patience for Solaris. I am a newcomer to jungle, and to drum 'n bass in general. The two spins I gave the disc just bored me to tears, since I have to be in a certain mindset to enjoy the subtleties of the genre, and I just wasn't in that frame of mind when I approached Rupert Parkes' latest offering. I was hoping that one more spin would allow me to review it and file it away forever, and thankfully I got my mind right for the third rotation and began to appreciate the controlled, minimalist benefits of Solaris. The beats are, for the most part, lively and very appealing, somehow sounding bouncy but feeling leisurely at the same time.

Parkes hits you with some to-the-point stuff right off the bat, as "Terminus" and "Junk" are among the highlights of the album. He's not trying too hard to please, instead letting the beats develop and grow on you, with the inventive textures making themselves evident over time. Much of the album grows on you over time, but the two ventures into house music territory, with Robert Owens on vocals, fit the mood but are on the whole unsatisfying. This isn't the spunky house of Basement Jaxx, and I didn't expect it to be, but the vocals and the music just seem to be going in two different directions. "Mine to Give" is the better of the two, and shows a hint of potential for future subgenre excursions.

"Infinity" is the nearly nine minute centerpiece of the album, and it's amazing. Atmospheric sound washes over the listener leaving them wandering for almost two minutes before the beat kicks in like a shot of adrenaline. The relentless beat engages in a sonic tug-of-war with the sweeping atmospherics to great effect, and when Parkes pulls the plug leaving just a faint bass rumble, the listener knows they're coming down from a peak.

The remainder of the album is a fitting cool-down after "Infinity," but the slower compositions like "Halogen" and the title track have just as much attention to detail hidden in their darker, moody depths. The smart form of Solaris is ideal for taking in the album as a full work, an activity highly recommended for fans of intelligent, exciting (in a weird way) electronic music.

Careful listening is also essential when you're on your own as a music critic, without the cushion of a press release, public or critical opinion, or even band member names to help shape a review. Such is the case with Fuego, an album from the group Trinity Hi-Fi. Therefore, you the (handful of) readers (still awake) get a rare opportunity to witness the rare occurrence of just my brain, the music, and the keyboard formulating a review, free from all other harmful/necessary/unimportant influences.

Trinity Hi-Fi is comparable to Morcheeba and the recent Supreme Beings of Leisure, due to the presence of an airy female lead vocal and a laid-back sound comprised mostly of dance beats and samples. The latter comparison is more apt, since Hi-Fi is pretty much just about having fun, or lamenting personal relationships to a syrupy, sweet beat. "Lazy Afternoon" reminds you of Len's "Steal My Sunshine," with all of those summer breeze, pop happy feelings, but none of the mounting guilt and annoyance that comes with repeated listens of the Len song. Instead, there's a hidden sadness in her voice, emotions that aren't explicitly stated in the often light-hearted lyrics, but are certainly audible.

The vocals are the most consistent aspect of Fuego, and without that thread running through the album, it would simply be too disparate. Turntable scratches, saxophone solos, Hendrix samples--hey, I'm all for wacky diversity, but Hi-Fi could benefit from more focus towards creating a cohesive album. That said, Fuego works much better as individual songs, of which there are enough good ones to make it worthwhile. "Hey Joe" and "So Glad" have a melody that prove Hi-Fi could be a name you hear a lot more of if radio would get off its ass and give upcoming, eclectic acts a chance to shine.

Photek (Rupert Parkes) continues to craft quality jungle/drum 'n bass on his most recent release Solaris.

COURTESY OF MIRIAM KRONIKER

The late Mark Sandman, Dana Colley and Billy Conway made up Morphine, one of the music scene's most regretfully departed bands.

COURTESY OF DANNY LEINER

Morphine's legacy lives on with Bootleg Detroit

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

MORPHINE
Bootleg Detroit
Rykodisc Records

The sudden death of visionary musician Mark Sandman in 1999 brought an end to Morphine, the incomparable three-piece rock and roll band hailing from Boston. Sandman coupled his low, breathy vocals with the sound of a two-string slide bass; the band also includes Billy Conway on drums and Dana Colley on saxophones. More than a mere experiment in instrument combinations, Morphine was a brilliant confluence of musicianship, tonal innovation, and mature songwriting, and its premature death goes down as one of the great tragedies of modern music.

Sandman left behind Morphine's recently completed sixth studio album, The Night, which was released to glowing and bittersweet critical acclaim.

Bootleg Detroit represents another of Sandman's projects, one he never had the chance to bring to completion. Recorded live with low-fi audio equipment by a fan in attendance at Morphine's March 7, 1994 performance at St. Andrew's Hall, Detroit, the album had been polished and prepared for commercial release under Sandman's direction, and he had also provided black and white album artwork.

The sound quality on Bootleg Detroit is excellent, although speakers with strong low-end capability are necessary to appreciate the full texture of Morphine's music (this is less true for their studio recordings). Crowd noise is nominal during the music, and there are no obnoxious outbursts or errant screams to ruin the fun. The audience, it seems, was mesmerized by what is undeniably an excellent performance.

After a short introduction by Sandman, the show kicks off with the energetic groove of "Come Along," allowing Colley plenty of time to improvise. "Come along/ stay in touch/ we're with you/ and you're with us," sings Sandman by way of an invitation, before launching into the equally manic "Mary."

Morphine's small size and minimal instrumental lineup may seem like limiting factors, and to an extent that's true: there're only so many textures you can achieve with bass, sax, drums, and vocals. The true appeal of their music comes from their explosive energy and shifting, organic rhythms, qualities that thrive in a live setting. The mingling of Colley's saxophone improvisations, Conway's intricate and responsive percussion, and the singularly captivating sound of Sandman's slide bass come alive on stage in a way impossible to capture in the studio.

At the time of this performance Morphine had only released two albums--Good and Cure for Pain--so the material doesn't reflect the bulk of the band's catalogue. Bootleg Detroit contains 18 tracks, but when you subtract the tracks which contain only band introductions and banter, the number of actual songs drops to 12--a little short for a live album, perhaps, but the fact that the performance is represented in its entirety gives the album a sense of completeness. Longer might have been nicer, but you can't say that the performance lacks anything in the way of authenticity. Such Morphine classics as "Candy," "Head With Wings" and "You Look Like Rain" are performed with delicious enthusiasm, and the show closes with a raucous rendition of "Buena."

As a bonus, the album is an Enhanced CD, meaning that you can put it in your computer and watch performances of "Cure for Pain" and "The Saddest Song," recorded Live at The Montreux Jazz Festival.

Those unfamiliar with Morphine's music should look elsewhere to start their collection (namely, to Cure for Pain), but fans shouldn't be without this testament to Morphine's talent and power as performers.

■ heat

continued from page 5

Los Angeles homicide detective. The master thief Neil McCauley (Robert DeNiro) and his "crew" made up of Val Kilmer as Chris Shiherlis, Tom Sizemore as Michael Cheritto, and two other smaller characters. This five-man crew has been part of many high profile robberies in the Los Angeles area.

After a botched job where three armored car drivers are left dead, homicide detective Vincent Hanna (Al Pacino) and his crack team of detectives investigate these high profile robbers. The obsession between both men, and their cat and mouse game to outsmart each other is what drives this movie. Each man is the master of their trade and soon realizes this is the showdown of their life, where only one will succeed. (Little foreshadowing for you.) The game works its way up slowly heist after heist and reaches its pinnacle when McCauley's crew attempts to pull of the score of a lifetime: a multimillion-dollar bank in downtown Los Angeles.

Mann is often known for his portrayal of criminals in a sympathetic fashion; and even though these men cheat, steal, and kill you want them to win. Your sinister side comes out and the thought of walking away with over $10 million dollars cash puts you on the edge of your seat. The story is not some two-dimensional action flick as many would suspect. With each man's obsession for their job, their personal lives crumble today. The action is realistic and powerful, and only done to prove a point. There is no John Woo, Mission Impossible II-style fighting where Al Pacino does a flying dragon kick to DeNiro's melon. Just lots of automatic assault rifles reeking havoc across LA. The movie grabs your attention immediately with DeNiro's crew armed with explosives, assault rifles, and Jason style hockey masks violently taking down a Wells Fargo truck. From there you're hooked up until the very dramatic and suspenseful end.

Enjoy the butt-kicking gangster style of Robert DeNiro in Heat.

COURTESY OF THE OFFICIAL HEAT WEBSITE

before them. Within this story lie many other conflicts of love, marriage, teen depression, and revenge.

If you like Al Pacino's explosive intensity with the character Tony Montana from Scarface, you will love him in this role. And if you're a fan of the butt kicking gangster style of Robert DeNiro you'll almost want to rob a bank yourself. (However, I do not recommend this.) Both actors have been on screen together before in Godfather III, but have never been in the same scene together. Finally the two gods of acting collide for a killer dialogue that is one of the best yet simplest scenes I have watched in a while.

With scenes of paced dialogue there also comes incredible moments of anticipation and action. These action scenes are done on a handy cam that shakes making it hard to follow. However it does not compare to the MTV style of editing seen in film today. The action is realistic and powerful, and only done to prove a point. There is no John Woo, Mission Impossible II-style fighting where Al Pacino does a flying dragon kick to DeNiro's melon. Just lots of automatic assault rifles reeking havoc across LA. The movie grabs your attention immediately with DeNiro's crew armed with explosives, assault rifles, and Jason style hockey masks violently taking down a Wells Fargo truck. From there you're hooked up until the very dramatic and suspenseful end.

The only downside to Heat is the fact it is a two-tape package that is long. It's not the kind of film you just pop in the VCR or DVD player and watch on a whim. Be prepared for a lengthy intro of characters and pay attention to the dialogue. With enough sub plots and characters to make your head spin you have to be on the ball to know exactly what's going on. Also after the climax of the film, it seems to drag on and you begin to squirm. However the ending is well worth the wait.

So if the weather goes as it has so far this week, meaning rain or suhzero temps, I recommend burning a little under three hours of your hung over Saturday or Sunday watching this film.

Thanks to both people who read Friday's Collegian Arts.

dream it up

Imagine an internship with one of the most exciting companies in the world. Where friendships grow. Opportunities are made. Futures begin. One experience - a thousand reasons why. The Walt Disney World College Program. Get ready to Dream It Up!

Attend the presentation for more info and to interview.

DATE: 10/16/00
TIME: 7:00pm
LOCATION: School of Management Room 120

Walt Disney World
COLLEGE PROGRAM
wdwcollegeprogram.com

POF - Driving Creativity from Diversity - ©Disney

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?

Consider a career in Clinical Social Work . . .

To find out more, attend the

Smith College School for Social Work

Alumni Symposium

Talking When Talking Is Tough:

Taking On Difficult Conversations About Race, Sexual Orientation, Gender, Class, And Other Aspects Of Social Identity

Saturday, October 14, 2000
9:30a.m. - 3:00p.m.
Seelye Hall - Room 106
Smith College

For more information call (413) 585-7960

NFL Week 6 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	6-8-0 (31-24-2)	8-6-0 (28-27-2)	11-3-0 (30-25-2)	7-7-0 (26-29-2)	9-5-0 (27-28-2)
Indianapolis @ New England	Indianapolis by 3 1/2	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	New England	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Buffalo @ Miami	Miami by 1 1/2	Miami	Buffalo	Buffalo	Miami	Miami
Green Bay @ Detroit	Detroit by 3	Green Bay	Green Bay	Green Bay	Green Bay	Detroit
New Orleans @ Chicago	Chicago by 5 1/2	Chicago	Chicago	New Orleans	New Orleans	Chicago
Pittsburgh @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 8	NY Jets	Pittsburgh	NY Jets	NY Jets	NY Jets
Tennessee @ Cincinnati	Tennessee by 9 1/2	Tennessee	Cincinnati	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee
Washington @ Philadelphia	Washington by 3	Washington	Washington	Washington	Washington	Washington
NY Giants @ Atlanta	Pick Em	Atlanta	NY Giants	NY Giants	NY Giants	NY Giants
Oakland @ San Francisco	Oakland by 4 1/2	Oakland	Oakland	San Francisco	Oakland	San Francisco
Cleveland @ Arizona	Arizona by 4 1/2	Cleveland	Arizona	Arizona	Cleveland	Arizona
Denver @ San Diego	Denver by 6 1/2	Denver	San Diego	Denver	Denver	San Diego
Seattle @ Carolina	Carolina by 3 1/2	Carolina	Carolina	Carolina	Seattle	Carolina
Baltimore @ Jacksonville	Jacksonville by 2 1/2	Jacksonville	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Jacksonville
Tampa Bay @ Minnesota	Minnesota by 1	Minnesota	Tampa Bay	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota

TRASH TALK

I think I had the best week in Collegian NFL picks (11-3) in its two-year existence. In fact it was so good that I had already won before the Sunday night game was even played. To my fellow associates... the reign of supremacy is about to start. Beware.

First I have to call out frontrunner Adam White. Now I cannot cuss him out in this as much as I would like because it is possible that he would pack my room up and have my living under the narrow Bridge on Snell St. So here is my feeble attempt at picking on him.

Adam, if only the Falcons could have held off a furious charge put forth by the Eagles I would have moved in to sole possession of first place. So you sit atop the ranks for another week, but you should recognize that I stay true to my squad, the Patriots. They seem to be the brunt of your trash talk columns, but do not count them out. As I have said before, they could be giving 146 points to God and I would still pick them. After three weeks of picking I am grabbing at your heels. By next week I will have sprinted by you on my way to the top.

Next I will pick on Sam. I feel as though the only thing that he has a clue on is whether or not the SGA can bring him down. Oh, he also knows his stuff on West Virginia football. Stick to Amos Zeroue and Todd Sauerbraun... they will have just as long of an NFL career as Kobe will have grown inches. I will give credit where credit is due, 8-6 is not bad, but it will not cut it with the big boys. Sorry you oaf (at least you are not a troll like someone who was previously mentioned).

Now for Benson. I refuse to call him by his actually name until he wins a week. My bad, he won two weeks ago, but his Trash talk did not get to run. I guess it is because his feeble attempt the week before did him in for the season. I think you should take that dew rag you have been wearing and wipe the tears from your eyes. I am disappointed in you. Not keeping it real for your 49ers. To bad, they covered for me two weeks in a row. I guess I am the only true fan to my team.

Scarecrow. I have no idea where the name came from, but it definitely personifies your intelligence level when it comes to picking games. "If I only had a brain. If I only had a brain." I distinctly remember a certain member of the land of OZ having the same problem. Maybe you should eat some of the Lollipop Kids, maybe they will be a supplement for Ginseng. One question, how did you pick Pittsburgh over Jacksonville? I cannot believe that that game allowed you to -500 for two straight weeks. Oh well, still in last place.

Locks of the week...

Anyone who does not take the Pats at home getting 3? ought to have their head examined. Indy cannot win two tough division games on the road in consecutive weeks. Not only will the Pats win, they will steamroll the Colts.

Tennessee giving 9? to the Bengals. I think that Amherst High could give Cincinnati a game. The Bengals are flat out the worst team in football. They are a disgrace to the best division in football. Titans win by at least 20.

Randy Moss and the rest of the best receiving core in the game will have a field day with the secondary of the Buccaneers. Vikes only giving one. Give me Minnesota in a route.

— Bryan Smith

Minutemen to go raptor watching; expected sightings: hawks and owls

By Matt Crocker
Collegian Staff

Hoping to keep its windshield and current unbeaten streak clean this weekend, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will be on the lookout for some circling Hawks and Owls who have other plans on their minds for the Minutemen.

Journeying to Philadelphia, the Maroon and White have two road games this weekend against Saint Joseph's University on Friday evening at 7:30 p.m., and then against Temple University on Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m. UMass will head into tomorrow evening's match with the Hawks undefeated in its last six contests, with its last loss on September 11 to Boston University.

With a record of 5-3-2, 1-0-1 in the Atlantic 10, the Minutemen are just coming off a scoreless tie with Duquesne and will push to get back into the win column in their two upcoming conference games. However, it will not be easy.

"We are going into a very hostile environment to play," said University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach Sam Koch. "We do not have the field advantage, which can put you a goal or two down before you even start at both places."

Helping to ensure that the Minutemen will not be fighting an uphill battle this weekend will be sophomores Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales. Deren is the leading point man for UMass with five goals to his credit and was recently named A-10 co-player of the week. Morales has netted only two goals, but has recorded four assists this season.

On the other end of things, junior Bryan O'Quinn has played every minute of every game this season for UMass. O'Quinn has a save percentage of .750 and has only given up four goals during the Minutemen's current unbeaten streak.

Looking to change all of that will be Saint Joseph's University, who heads into Friday's game with a 5-5 record, 1-1 in the A-10. The Hawks are fresh of a loss to George Washington in a game they dropped 4-1, their forth loss in five games.

Leading the way for the Hawks this season is freshman Andrew Kulinski. Kulinski has hit the back of the net five times and has tallied five assists for St. Joseph's.

"St. Joseph's is on Astroturf, which is obviously a surface we do not like to play on," Koch said. "They are used to it and certainly have a home field advantage."

Also gaining a sight field advantage will be Temple University in its game with UMass on Sunday. Temple enters this weekend 1-7, 0-2 in the Atlantic 10, and is currently on a seven game losing streak. The Owls have only managed to score four goals since their streak began and have given up 22. Heading the charge for Temple against the Maroon and White will be freshman Andrew McMenamin who has 3 goals and one assist this season.

"We are playing teams that are not playing really well, but they can still get the job done and that is certainly an issue," Koch said. "We want to come back with two W's, and that is what we are going down there for."

How does one become a top golfer? Continuous practice gets it done

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

...We chuckled. And it wasn't because we hadn't been there before.

When the golf world witnessed Jean Van de Velde throw away the British Open Championship two years ago at Carnoustie, most of it echoed in recognition.

He stood silent on the par four, 18th tee, knowing that even a double-bogey would scribble his name onto a list that would forever place him with such legends as Bobby Jones, Jack Nicklaus, Ben Hogan and Arnold Palmer. And at the end of this 18-hole journey, at one point finding himself ankle-deep in the infamous Barry Burn stream, thinking 'this is going in'," Frost said. "The amateur is thinking, 'get it up and down.' I think that's where it becomes mental as well as physical, although you have to have the mental awareness first, and let that carry you through."

The average Tour pro gets up everyday with golf solely in mind. A golfer struggling to keep his Tour card, or succeed on a mini-tour, gets up a lot of mornings wondering how he's going to make some much-needed cash.

"You get to a point, and you don't know whether you're going to make any money the next week," Haberl said. "In golf there are huge steps as you go up the ladder, and somewhere down the line, you have to make a choice..."

Haberl, who attended Temple University on a full golf scholarship, is one of the many talented players of the game who decided to turn their love for golf into a career of almost certain stability. He, like Frost, accepted the job as club professional knowing that he'd be simultaneously sliding into the role of golf missionary.

These days, the association of "Club Professional" to one's name says so much more than "Hi, I'm a good golfer." While trying to stay, so to speak "up-to-par" with one's own game, the club pro is busy promoting the game of golf, helping juniors in their quest for greatness, organizing tournaments, supervising merchandising, and among many other duties, keeping the members all smiles.

"The Tour player is really only wearing one hat," Frost said. "The club professional is wearing ninety."

Amidst the Tour pro and the club pro lies the amateur. There's no doubt about it, Cape Cod, MA is a hotbed for outstanding amateurs. Take, for example Kenny Lewis, recent graduate of Dennis-Yarmouth High School and freshman at Vanderbilt University. As a student under a full golf scholarship, it is Lewis' job to play golf. It's that simple. Instead of going back to his dorm every evening, Lewis carries a set of golf clubs down the fairway. Time is all it takes.

"Kenny Lewis plays golf seven days a week," Haberl said. "In high school he was forced to go out five days a week, but he just loves to go out there."

As of now, Lewis can be dubbed a top amateur, but it is quite likely that he will one day cross the line into professionalism – that is if he wants to. Golf is more a mental game than anything else. And when it comes right down to it, the pros are pros because they believed they could make it. At times, everyone questions their game, but the pros are able to answer these questions with focus. Too much frustration will kill a man. But learning to gather your thoughts and hit the next shot on the green from behind a tree will keep you coming back for more.

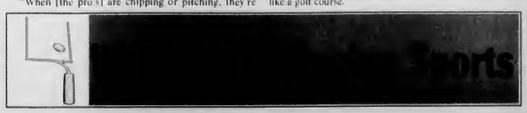
It's all about practice and dedication. One thing is for sure, club pro's have proved that they can play the game. They just don't have the luxury that top amateurs do in constantly having individual tournaments to compete in. And the only way you get better is in competition.

If you're a scratch golfer playing on a lazy Saturday afternoon with your friends, great. But if you can't throw down a good score in the final round of the Mass. Amateur, then you're just a regular Joe. It's hard to make it in this game. It's an eternal grind.

But no matter where your game takes you, remember to keep everything in perspective.

"The more that people start to have fun with the game, and realize that it's an opportunity and a privilege, not an entitlement – those are the people who are succeeding the most," Frost said.

"We are such lucky people to have the opportunity to go out on a beautiful day and enjoy such a beautiful place like a golf course."



Volleyball set to 'Duke' it out; Will take on Duquesne at home

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

There is nowhere like home, and after a little more than a month of weekend traveling and bringing its show on the road, the schedule finally takes a twist in the favor of the Massachusetts women's volleyball team. UMass is on the brink of hosting its longest home stand of the season, beginning Saturday night at 7 p.m. in Curry Hicks cage. Duquesne University comes to the cage in hopes of upping their Atlantic 10 win total, but the Minutewomen feel otherwise.

The Dukes (11-6, 2-2 A-10) enter Amherst on Saturday with an in-conference .500 winning percentage and a shot to add a big win to their in-conference 'W' column. Duquesne, like UMass, is coming off a three game sweep of Fordham last weekend. It will enter the Pioneer Valley Saturday, after a Friday night match-up with Rhode Island, who the Minutewomen defeated in their first home win of the season a week and a half ago.

With only one senior, but with a team full of experience, Duquesne will be looking to snatch a win out of the cage at the expense of the Minutewomen.

"We look to bring a fast-paced, high-energy game to the court along with a strong blocking and defensive team," said head coach Steve Opperman.

But Maroon and White expectations are high.

UMass (5-9, 2-3 A-10) is looking to even out its A-10 record before Temple arrives next weekend. The Minutewomen are coming off a strong showing this past weekend in Bronx, New York, where they knocked off Fordham in a three-stanza sweep. Rebecca Hasson, the do-it-all senior for UMass, once again led the Maroon and White with 22 big kills.

COURTESY OF MEDIA RELATIONS
Lauren Vander Veen

Helping Hasson in the shootout was junior Lauren Vander Veen with 10 kills of her own. The Oakland native's recent play has come as a pleasant surprise, as she has been making a name for herself on the stat sheet while improving her play on the floor.

On the defensive front, junior Lymarie Llovet and senior Jenni Drennan proved themselves strong, pulling out 10 and 15 digs, respectively.

The Minutewomen hope to overcome the opening game jitters they encountered against URI a week and a half ago. UMass gave up 10 points in the first game, which they won, and finished giving up only 10 more points over the next two games.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

Complementing the fourth-year center will be his younger brother, Tim. The sophomore forward enjoyed a stellar rookie season in which he was third on the team with 26 points.

Other players who are expected to contribute this year include forwards Jedd Crumb, Kris Wallis, Darcy King and Jay Shaw. All four of those players scored at least 10 points a year ago. Junior defenseman Toni Soderholm and sophomore Samuli Jalkanen are the top offensive threats from the blue line.

Goaltending should also be a strong suit for UMass this season. Senior Markus Helanen is an All-Hockey East candidate, while junior Mike Johnson has played well when called upon in his first two seasons.

Wisconsin also has a formidable netminder in senior Graham Melanson, who won 31 games a year ago for the Badgers. A two-time All-WCHA pick, the Plymouth, Nova Scotia product will log plenty of time between the pipes this season.

Offensively, sophomore forward Dany Heatley is Wisconsin's catalyst up front. The No. 2 overall pick in last June's NHL entry draft by the Atlanta Thrashers, Heatley put off his pro career to return to Madison. All-American defenseman Jeff Dessner is back for his fourth year for the Badgers, and will serve as the mainstay on the Badgers blue line.

"I've played against Don's teams before, and he's an excellent coach," Wisconsin hockey coach Jeff Sauer said. "I have an idea of how he's going to try to play against us, but otherwise I'm going in cold. I don't know much about them as far as player personnel because I've never seen them play before."

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Acura Integra GS. 2dr, manual, 108k, sunroof/cd/power $4895. Call 546-5854

86 Honda Accord LX, new tires, exhust. Great car 159k $2300 o/b/o 256-1952

1981 Mazda 626 Sports coupe. Loaded $750 obo 256-1708

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1989 Buick Century V6, cassett, AC, power, $1399 413-533-9082

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

Gateway 2000 P4D-66 640KB of RAM, Intel Prcsr, wndws 95, 28k modem, $350 o/bo 549-8891

EMPLOYMENT

Subs-Day Care Center, Rt.63, Leverett $7/hr Call Susan, 548-9674

EMPLOYMENT

Dishwashers Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

Drivers Wanted Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

Personal Assistant/Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

Office Help organized person 2-3 hrs/week $9.00/hr. initial organization pays more. Call 253-8899

House Assistant. $7.00 hr. Laundry, animal care, cleaning, odd jobs. 5-10 hrs a week. Non-smoker, car, 8 miles from Amherst. 259-1227 box #1.

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Light Custodial Duties. Sunday - Thursday evenings from September - June. Adjacent to UMass. 253-3101

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an international career? EMDS can help. EMDS, an international recruiter, is hosting "Careers in Europe" in November. This event is for students and early-career professionals and will be held in Boston. World renowned companies such as Arthur D. Little, Dresdner Bank and Siemens SPLS, to name a few, will be offering international jobs at the event. For more information and to apply for this free forum, visit our website at www.emd-snet.com or call the EMDS Boston office at (617) 367-3700

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

EMPLOYMENT

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

TEACHER'S AIDES for fall. Join our teams in small innovative alternative schools (primary,middle,high) in Amherst and Northampton; tutor/supervise small groups in variety of academic subjects/activities. Training/benefits provided. HS or GED diploma required, college recommended. 185 days (school year) contract. Salary range: $11,117-$14,957

Speech Pathologists (2) Licensed/certified, CCC highly desirable. Send letter and resume ASAP to: Jone Messmer #160 Hampshire Educational Collaborative, 97 Hawley St., Northampton, MA 01060 AA/EOE/ADA

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

What are you waiting for??

Call NOW!! 545-3500

Sick and Tired of your living situation?

Don't hesitate to change it!

Place an Ad Today and get what you want.

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Mohw Ch.
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Govel to Govel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 6, 2000

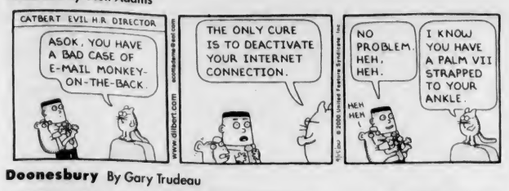
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		The Grand (In Stereo)		Nova "The Brav Eitler"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive "Pilot" (N)		C.S.I. "Pilot" (N)		Nash Bridges (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Enl. Tonight	Fugitive "Pilot" (N)		C.S.I. "Pilot" (N)		Nash Bridges (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigen Men	20/20 (Season Premiere) (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends		Nanny		Sabrina Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular "Open Shame" (N)		News	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 3 – Teams to Be Announced.		News		Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven "Happy's Valentine"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	To Be Announced				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra		Hollywood		Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 3 – Teams to Be Announced.		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Police Videos (N)		Freakylinks "Pilot" (N)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs		Division Series Game 3 – Teams to Be Announced.				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley (The Games)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigen Men	20/20 (Season Premiere) (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	★★ "Broken Arrow" (1996, Adventure) John Travolta. (In Stereo)				Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Licence to Kill" (1989, Adventure) Timothy Dalton. Carey Lowell.						"The Living Daylights" (1987)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	The Bus Wall	Biography Rock Hudson		Poirot		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Privileged"
CNN	43	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Strein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	★★ "If Heads in a Duffel Bag" (1997, Comedy) Joe Pesci.		Storm Warning! (N)
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Gorillas		Wild Discovery: Giant Bats		On the Inside "Skip Tracers"		News	Explore Our			Justice Files "Informers"
ESPN	31	Baseball Playoffs		Sportscenter		Major League Soccer: Semifinal – Metrostars at Fire				NFL Films		Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Celine Dion"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Deadly Family Secrets" (1995, Drama) Loni Anderson.				Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	33	Direct Effect	To Be Announced						TBA	Jackass	Senseless	Celebrity	Celebrity
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	U Pick Nicktoons				Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	Facts of Life
SCIFI	60	Sliders "The Dream Masters"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Invisible Men "Ralph"		★★ "Mimic" (1997, Science Fiction) Mira Sorvino. (In Stereo)				Invisible Men "Ralph"
TLC	29	Strange Science: Unusual		Trauma: Life in the ER		Police Force: Double Lives		Egypt's Lost City		Riddle of Nubia's Tombs		Police Force: Double Lives
TNT	65	ER "Under Control" (In Stereo)		Preferider "Over the Edge"		★★★ "The Apostle" (1998, Drama) Robert Duvall, Farrah Fawcett						★★★ "The Apostle" (1998)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "To Russia, With Love"		Nash Bridges "Crossfire"		★★½ "The Getaway" (1994, Drama) Alec Baldwin, Kim Basinger. (In Stereo)				Strip Poker
HBO	35	(5:30) "Co-Ed Call Girl" (1996)		Inside the NFL		★★ "Sinking Distance" (1993) Bruce Willis.		★★½ "Die Hard" (1988, Suspense) Bruce Wilis, Bonnie Bedelia. (In Stereo)
MAX	46	(4:45) "Lured"	★★ "Kickboxer" (1989) Jean-Claude Van Damme			★★½ "Guilty as Sin" (1993, Suspense) Rebecca De Mornay.		★★½ "Universal Soldier: The Return" (1999)				Bedtime
SHOW	45	(4:30)	★★★ "Trekkies" (1997, Documentary)			★½ "Snake Eyes" (1998) Nicolas Cage.		Movie News		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "Breaking Point"	Beggars

Dilbert By Scott Adams



CATBERT EVIL H.R. DIRECTOR
ASOK, YOU HAVE A BAD CASE OF E-MAIL MONKEY-ON-THE-BACK.
THE ONLY CURE IS TO DEACTIVATE YOUR INTERNET CONNECTION.
NO PROBLEM. HEH, HEH.
I KNOW YOU HAVE A PALM VII STRAPPED TO YOUR ANKLE.
HEH HEH

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

I LIKE TO SNIP RED FOOD COLORING INTO PEOPLE'S MILK OR SOUP AT LUNCH. THEN I POINT AND YELL, "OH MY GOD! YOUR TEETH ARE ALL BLEEDING!!"
WHEN I GROW UP, I'M GOING TO LIVE IN A PIPE.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SO HOW MUCH DO THOSE GROIN GORSHITS COST DUKE?
WELL, I THINK I COULD PIT YOU IN AT THE $440,000 LEVEL.
$440,000? WHAT AN INSTITUTION!
IT'S THE NUMBER OF ANKLE-CAVES YOU KILL BY ART YEAR.
OH.
I THOUGHT IT SOUNDED FAMILIAR.
WELL, IT'S EASIER TO REMEMBER THAN "WHY BUSH IS HERE."

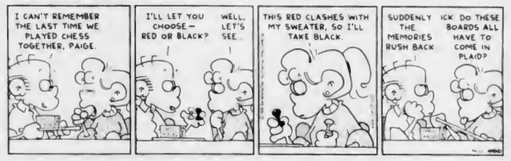
Dilbert By Scott Adams

REMEMBER THE TIME YOU WENT SKYDIVING?
NO
YOU WILL. I'M PLANTING FALSE MEMORIES IN YOUR SUB-CONSCIOUS
IT WON'T WORK
BUT YOU BELIEVE YOU WENT TO COLLEGE, RIGHT?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

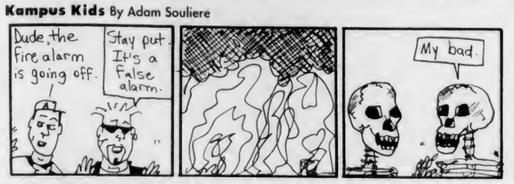
YOUR CAT ISN'T GOING TO DO SOMETHING TO GET US KICKED OFF THE GOLF COURSE, IS HE? I DON'T EXACTLY WANT TO RELIVE THE BASEBALL GAME INCIDENT.
NAHHH, HE WANTS TO COME TODAY. AS SURES, THEY DON'T SELL SAUSAGES AT THE GOLF COURSE.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



I CAN'T REMEMBER THE LAST TIME WE PLAYED CHESS TOGETHER, PAIGE.
I'LL LET YOU CHOOSE— RED OR BLACK?
WELL, LET'S SEE...
THIS RED CLASHES WITH MY SWEATER, SO I'LL TAKE BLACK.
SUDDENLY THE MEMORIES RUSH BACK.
ICK! DO THESE BOARDS ALL HAVE TO COME IN PLAID?

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere



Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO IS WILMA. WERE YOUR SCARIEST SNAKE?
NO SIR. WILMA'S A PUSSYCAT COMPARED TO HYMIE.
HYMIE'S MY SAW-SCALED ADDER. YOU DO NOT WANT TO MESS WITH THAT LITTLE DUDE. HE ACK. HE TRAVIS? TRAVIS!!
OH #@&%! CALL 9-1-1!!
IT'S COOL. IT'S COOL. BUT I GOTTA GO. WILMA ALWAYS GIVES ME A LITTLE LOVE NUG WHEN IT'S FEEDIN' TIME.

Balderdash By Tim Dwyer

OOPS, I STEPPED ON A BANANA. WELL THAT BYTES.
SQUISH
YOU KILLED MY BROTHER, PREPARE TO DIE!
WHY ARE FOOD PRODUCTS ALWAYS OUT TO GET ME?
I'M SORRY TO HEAR OF YOUR LOSS BUT I MUST BE GOING.
AHH THE HORROR!
STOP EVIL BIRD!

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Whoever said choosing between regular ice tea and tasp berry ice tea today, remember that raspberries are poisonous, and should never be eaten under any circumstances, unless you want a long, slow, painful death.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Keep self-indulgence to a minimum today and you should be able to see things as clearly as possible. You deserve lots of sex, but don't tell that to your partner. Say you want ice cream" instead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Please clean your room today. It's so messy, I can't find anything! And vacuum the living room. Sincerely, your mom.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Ernest Hemingway once said, "The inhalent deeply. He left very tired. He was very, very tired. They took the thing away from his finger. Use these words to guide you today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You are likely to attract considerable attention today, but that's because you forgot to put clothes on last look at yourself. You're ridiculous.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You mustn't let secondary or peripheral activities sap your strength today, or erode your enthusiasm for those bigger things you have in store. Bigger things like one of those cake-sized cookies you always wanted to order from Sugar Jones. What are you waiting for?

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You're not about to be persuaded of anything against your will today. You are strong, confident, and thus at times be too aggressive. You probably shouldn't kiss with your teeth like that anymore.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) China Dynasty isn't much of a dynasty. The Ming Dynasty, for one, there was a dynasty speaking of dynasties, remember that show, "Dynasty"? That was not a dynasty.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Today is the day to take advantage of your personal standing. Certain privileges should be open to you and you alone.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may want to take some time today to recuperate from a recent physical or emotional shock. Maybe next time you shouldn't respond to person-jester M.H.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You should be able to cash in today as a result of increased communication and the willingness to let bygones be bygones. What are bygones, anyway?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You will be quick to condemn others for those things you, yourself, are guilty of at this time. Wear your scarlet letter, but not the way Demi Moore did it on The Scarlet Letter. I like pears.

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 75 LOW: 55	HIGH: 58 LOW: 46	HIGH: 49 LOW: 42

Quote of the Day

"A solitude ten thousand fathoms deep
Sustains the bed on which we lie, my dear;
Although I love you, you will have to leap.
Our dream of safety must disappear."

–W.H. Auden

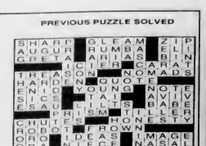
ACROSS

1 Kimono sashes
5 Cease
9 Kitten's cry
12 Sign on a door
13 Of cities
15 Mound
16 — Stanley Gardner
17 As good as won
18 Part of a harness
19 Imagined
21 Draw off (liquid)
23 Get an "F"
25 Tight
26 Self
29 Casual tops
31 Cast a sidelong glance
35 Rover's doc
36 Novelist Sadat
38 Terrify
39 Hit builders
41 Installed ceramic
43 Singer Turner
44 Eats to lose
46 Cuttlefish pigment
48 None
49 More uncanny
51 Popular teen hangout
52 Nevertheless
53 Actor Newman
55 Cheerleader's shouts
61 Filbert
63 Swamp air
65 "Once — a midnight . . ."
66 Fairy tale brother
68 Warm up
69 Do a banker's job
70 Margaret Mead's workplace
71 Oxen bar
72 Dismiss without notice
73 Incinerations
74 Riverbank plant

DOWN

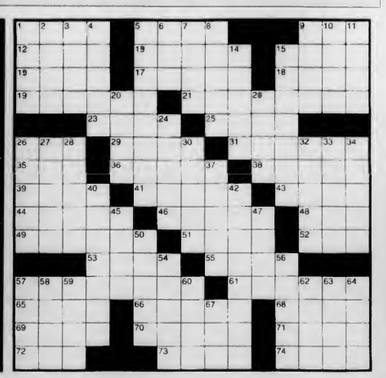
1 Newspaper pg
2 "Perry Mason" star
3 Man, for one
4 Armload of papers
5 Division result
6 Coffee server
7 Wading bird
8 Unspoken
9 Mannerly
10 Wider Wessel
11 Proceed
14 Himalayan country
15 Shells
20 — Hari
22 Shades of color
24 Author Carroll
26 Sidestep
27 Magic-lamp dweller
28 River mammal
30 Oregon capital
32 Wet
33 "Sesame Street" character
34 Handed out cards
37 Return the favor
40 Salary
42 Predicaments
45 Waterproof
47 Jai —
50 Ladder parts
54 Virginia caverns
56 Faun
57 Luau dance
58 Highest point
59 Area
60 Weekly magazine
62 Loafer, e.g.
63 Compel
64 Thunderstruck
67 Wk. day

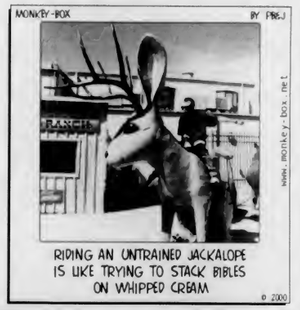
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10 2:00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

EVERY NFL GAME EVERY SUNDAY NFL SUNDAY TICKET
the HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE





Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Bagel Pizza

Chicken Rotini Casserole

Vegetarian Paella (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Dinner

Beef Forestier

Wild Mushroom Strudel with Spinach (Vegetarian)

California Chili (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Anna Weisfeiler
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, October 6, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Rebound needed against NU

Minutemen will take a crack at duplicating last year's 77-0 win

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Right where they stood last year. After a tough home loss to Hofstra, the week four of last season the Massachusetts football team saw itself in an Atlantic 10 game with the visiting Northeastern Huskies.

On the heels of a three-game losing streak the Minutemen bombarded their cross-state rival 77-0 in a game that was over from the opening kickoff.

This season the Maroon and White have been on a see-saw ride through the first four weeks winning its opener over William and Mary, dropping a road game to VMI, toe Richmond, beating New Haven at home before falling last week to the Pride.

If there is one thing that has hurt the Minutemen this season it has been turnovers. In last week's loss to Hofstra UMass turned the ball over five times. The five giveaways resulted in 35 Pride points. The previous week the Maroon and White also had five turnovers, but fortunately the offense clicked when it had to and pulled out the win.

The Huskies are coming off a big win against former A-10 rival UConn, a team that is in its first year of Division 1 play this season. Last year when the Minutemen played NU the Huskies were also coming off a game in which they had played a Div. 1 opponent, Boston College, and ends ended up losing that game 31-22 in a hard fought contest.

The Maroon and White abused Northeastern in every aspect of the game en route to the victory, and got the Minutemen back on track after starting the year 1-3. After that contest UMass did not lose a game for the remainder of the regular season.

"I think they are playing very good, and I expect them to play well this week. They had a great win against Connecticut, head coach Mark Whipple said. "They are back home and we have to play our best game. We can't gift wrap a couple of presents like we have done the last two weeks. It will be a really solid football game."

The game will also be a reunion of former UMass defensive coordinator Don Brown. Brown spent two years calling the plays for the always-solid UMass defense, and in his tenure in Amherst, was known as Whipple's right hand man.

"We coached against each other in practice for four years, so that is nothing new," Whipple said. "We are close together and after the games we would go have a beer. We practiced hard against each other everyday. That goes back to when I was at New Haven and he was at Yale where we got to know each other when we scrimmaged. I have a great deal of respect for him and his family. He works very hard. I wish him the best of luck. I think we are at the stage that we have to focus on us and start playing UMass football."

Going into the contest the Maroon and White will be without the services of wide receiver/kick returner Jimmie Howard, who tore his anterior cruciate ligament returning a kick in the second quarter of the loss to Hofstra.

Walter Payton Award candidate Marcel Shipp, who left the game after the first series against the Pride before his return in the second half, is still nursing a bad ankle. Backup Kevin Quinlan, who carried 10 times for 82 yards in the last week's contest, spelled Shipp in his absence.

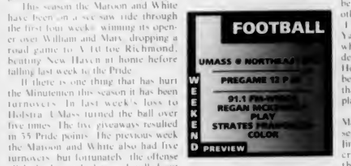
"[Quinlan] played very well with 82 yards rushing on 10 carries," Whipple said. "He scored a couple touchdowns and has been solid all the way through."

However, he is no Shipp, and if the Minutemen are planning on making another deap run into the post season than they will need their star running back.

UMass leads the all-time series against the Huskies 21-7-1. The last time Northeastern defeated the Minutemen was Nov. 19, 1983 on Parsons Field. Kickoff is set for 12:30 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Richard Lucero and the rest of the Minutemen attempt to rebound from last week's loss to Hofstra when they travel across the state to take on Northeastern.



UMass to attempt an icing of No. 3 Wisconsin

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

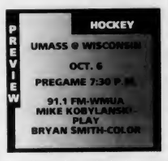
In its 1998-99 season opener, the Massachusetts hockey team walked into Munn Ice Arena with the youngest squad in the nation and gave No. 4 Michigan State a run for its money before dropping a 3-1 decision.

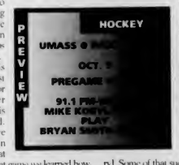
Although that contest seemed little more than a moral victory at the time it may turn out to pay dividends this weekend. That is because the Minutemen head to Madison, WI for a pair of games with the No. 3 ranked Wisconsin Badgers.

But this time around, there are two major changes. First of all, UMass brings a veteran squad into the Kohl Center for the season opening couplet with Wisconsin, including 15 upperclassmen.

The Maroon and White also have a new look behind the bench, with former Princeton coach Don Cahoon making his debut at the helm of the Minutemen this weekend.

However, don't expect the Badgers faithful to feel sorry for a UMass club that plays 18 of its 34 games this season against clubs who went to the NCAA Tournament a year ago. Rather, a crowd in excess of 15,000 is expected at the Kohl Center both tonight and tomorrow night to see the defending Western Collegiate Hockey Association regular season champs battle the Minutemen.





"This is going to be a big test for us," UMass senior captain Jeff Turner said. "Their arena is going to be packed. [Two years ago] we went to Michigan State [ranked No. 4 at the time] and played them tough, but in that game we learned how to play in that type of atmosphere. That's something that I think that we can use to our advantage this time."

Said Cahoon, "One of the things that we have to do this year is become road warriors. We've got to have the ability to go into another team's rink and just keep it in between the boards."

According to Cahoon, however, the poll doesn't really play a key role in what he hopes to accomplish in his first season in Amherst.

"Honestly, I pay very little attention to the polls," he said. "I've seen too many crazy things happen over the years."

"We're going to try to develop skill in relation to the people that we have in our program...and maybe open it up a little bit," Cahoon added. "Last year this team showed the ability to play close games against some very good teams, and in some cases, they had success against them [in the form of a victory]. Some of that success was in part to a strong commitment from the trap, but we're going to try to use a little bit of both schemes."

Offensively, Turner will likely shoulder most of the offensive load this season. An All-Hockey East candidate, the Saginaw, MI product led the Minutemen in scoring a year ago with 34 points.

UMass enters the 2000-01 season with the hopes of proving the rest of the coaches in the conference wrong. The Minutemen were tabbed to finish seventh in the pre-season poll, ahead of only UMass-Lowell and Merrimack.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

UMass attempts to take bite out of Orangewomen

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

This is the point when the members of the Massachusetts field hockey team need to sit down and contemplate their current position in the world of Division I NCAA field hockey.

"They see their dreams in front of them," Head Coach Patty Shea said. "And they just want to chase them every day."

On Wednesday, the Minutewomen ended the tough half of their 2000 schedule with a 2-1, marathon victory over Boston University. And now standing at 9-2, the No. 7 Maroon and White look to their remaining eight games with some form of relief. Beginning on Saturday afternoon, when UMass hosts Syracuse University, there are no Top 20 teams remaining on the to-play list.

But that is not to say that each game will be a roll-over, because in stating that, the gods of the jinxing cosmos would come forth and allocate a defeatist plague that would make the Maroon and White buckle with frustration.

So that won't be said. We'll just say that past events have lead some to believe that the Minutewomen will cruise into the post-season rather unblemished. But Shea and her squad remain cautious.

"We're focusing on what we need to do to be successful and that our energies are geared to just bringing it to the field today. What we did in the past is not going to effect what we do today.

"I think they're doing a tremendous job of staying in the present. This group has a lot of character and a lot of heart and there's a lot of pride that runs really deep within them. They're fighters and they know what their potential is."

Yesterday's triumph over the Terriers illustrated all of Shea's remarks. Not only are the Minutewomen taking their 2000 campaign game by game, they're taking it shot by shot. And only because scoring hasn't been at a maximum – it's the Maroon and White's Achilles' heel. But lately, that really hasn't mattered too much.

Because the defense is stepping up and despite several missed opportunities, the offense is doing just enough to put shit up on the scoreboard. In every game, you can count on one of the Minutewomen showing up to make a big play.

On Wednesday, it was junior Kristen Schmidt who delivered the one-two punch, exactly, coming up successful in both of her penalty stroke chances. She was the only player to tally in the second stroke period, securing the win for UMass.

"I love pressure situations," Schmidt said. "We just need to take care of the pressure situations during the game."

It really doesn't even have to be addressed, but the backbone of UMass is goalie Zowie Tucker. And if Syracuse can conquer her stifling poise, heads will be turned.

In the BU win, Tucker stopped the last five Terrier strokes. Yet again, she delivered an amazing performance. "I just try to react," Tucker said. "And as soon as [Kristen's] goal went in I just looked at the crowd and looked at people I knew and I felt bad that they were all just hanging out on a Wednesday night. Some of them took four hours to travel here. It's just good motivation when you have everybody out here."

Tucker's counterpart, Orangewomen goalkeeper Audrey Latsko was named the BIG EAST Co-Goalkeeper of the Week. She leads the conference in goals against average for overall games (1.18) and conference games (0.48).

Minutewomen to raid Philly; take on St. Joe's and Temple

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

After almost a full month on the road, the Massachusetts women's soccer team returns home to Totman Field this weekend for an important couplet of Atlantic 10 contests.

St. Joseph's (3-6, 0-2 in the A-10) visits Amherst today at 3 p.m. in the first game of the weekend. Temple (8-4, 1-1 in the A-10) arrives Sunday for a 1 pm kickoff against the Minutewomen. UMass (6-5, 2-1 in the A-10) is coming off a sweep of Duquesne and St. Bonaventure last weekend.

Senior Jenn Cocca scored three goals, including the game winners in both affairs, to lead the Minutewomen offensive attack. Junior Brooke Bartlett added three points in the win over St. Bonaventure.

However, the UMass defensive unit and goalkeepers more than held their own in the two matches. The two groups combined to allow only one goal during the course of the weekend, coming with a mere one-second left in Sunday's win over the Dukes.

"This is a very important weekend for us," Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "I've explained to the players that it doesn't matter what our level of competition is, the conference becomes our most important thing right now. The only way to get into the NCAA tournament is by winning the A-10 tournament, and to get there we need to win conference games."

"We're going to be aggressive and get right to it," added Rudy. "We're not going to mess around."

St. Joe's has had problems generating offense in its first nine games. The Hawks have scored only nine goals, four of which have come from Katie Watson.

Last weekend, SIU dropped a 4-3 overtime decision to George Washington in Philadelphia. The Hawks rallied back from three one-goal deficits, but the Colonials netted the next goal on each occasion. Top players for the Hawks include Watson [eight points], Kim Dwyer [eight points] and Mindy Spellman [eight points].

"They've got some key players that we have to deal with," Rudy said. "Mindy Spellman is an All-Conference player, and she's someone that we really have to deal with and be aware of on the field. She's a major part of their game."

Temple has jumped out to a solid start this season, as evidenced by its eight wins. However, the Owls are on a two-game skid after falling to George Washington and Virginia Tech last weekend.

"They're off to their best start in seven, eight years," Rudy said. "They are a tough team who plays hard and is physically and emotionally into it."

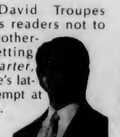
JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Jill Fantasia leads the Maroon and White into this weekend's clash with the Syracuse Orangewomen.

The Massachusetts Daily

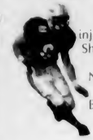
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 24 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 10, 2000



Our David Troupes advises readers not to even bother-ing getting Get Carter, Stallone's lat-est attempt at cinema.

ARTS p. 6



Malden's own Kevin Quinlan made UMass fans forget about the injured Marcel Shipp by bull-dozing the Northeastern Huskies in Brookline on Saturday.

SPORTS p. 11

Minuteman Mack suspended following shoplifting incident

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Monty Mack

Monty Mack, the leading scorer for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team, was arrested and charged with shoplifting last Thursday.

The arrest came after Mack was discovered with $159.93 worth of DVDs in his pants. Caught at the Hadley K-Mart, Mack was detained by security and later arrested by the Hadley Police Department. Mack, who led the Minutemen in scoring with 19.8 points per game last season, has been suspended for the first three games of the UMass season. He was caught at 11:21 A.M. Thursday.

He pleaded innocent at his arraignment in the Northampton District Court on Thursday.

UMass head coach Bruiser Flint suspended Mack for the season's first two exhibition games and for the season opener against Iona. Mack apologized to the University community in a statement released by the school. Mack, a fifth-year senior who had to sit out his freshman year for not meeting NCAA academic requirements, is entering his final season at UMass.

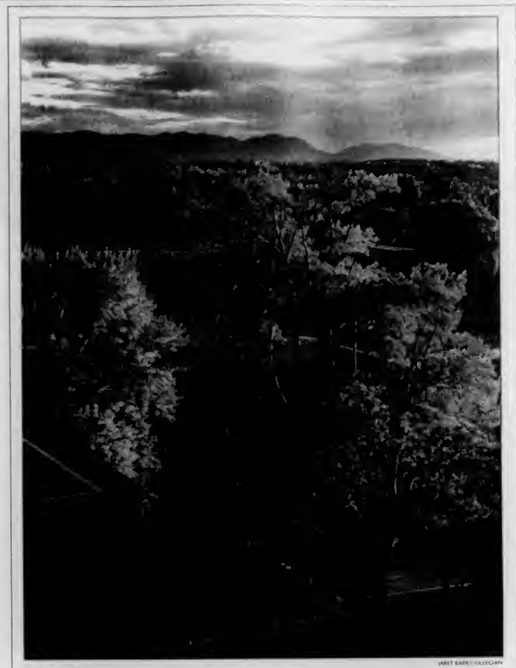
Mack said that he was "sorry that I have embarrassed myself, family, teammates and the University. I know that I made a bad decision and I regret my actions and know that I will have to pay a penalty."

Mack is expected to once again anchor the UMass offense at a time when the program is rebuilding.

Both UMass officials and K-Mart were unavailable for comment as of press time.

—Sam Wilkinson

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

The Pioneer Valley is burning

This view from Coolidge tower in Southwest of blazing autumn leaves disproves reports that the foliage this year isn't living up to the usual hype.

NASA scientist urges women to join science field

By Rachel Devaney
Collegian Staff

Chief Scientist Kathie Olson presented "Women in Science: The Times are A Changing," Thursday, Oct. 5 at the University of Massachusetts to motivate more women to contribute to the science, math, engineering and technology fields.

Currently Olson is the most senior ranking woman at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Her work involves research on the neural and genetic mechanisms underlying the development and expression of behavior.

In addition to giving tips on how women can become involved in the science fields, Olson covered information about careers in science in general as well as how and why she decided to become a scientist.

"It's really critical to keep an open mind to really make an impact on society and peoples lives," said Olson. "Just having that PhD and Masters in science gives the opportunity to find out what's best for what you want and what you need."

Olson said that networking and talking to people will pave the way for new challenges for men and women in all aspects of science and engineering. "We have internships in Federal labs at NASA," said Olson. "There are all kinds of opportunities if you know different fields and different people."

Because of a lack of women in the science fields, the Office of Research Affairs, along with other representatives on campus, decided to start the program, "Trends For Women in Science and Technology," (TWIST) Marfa Michel, who works in the Electronic Enterprise

Institute and Department of Computer Sciences said that over the last few years, trends have shown a sharp decline in the number of women pursuing technological careers. TWIST is a way to raise awareness.

"There is no one reason why there are a lack of women," said Michel "In Elementary school girls tend to do better then boys in the sciences, but in adolescents they become discouraged and less aggressive."

Michel says TWIST is a grass roots initiative made up of faculty and students who are concerned and committed to this problem and want to create more opportunities for women. "You have women that go into fields dominated by men that think differently and approach things differently," said Michel. "A lot of the times it is intimidating being the only woman."

TWIST will enable open forums, events and programs for faculty, staff and students regarding the issues surrounding women in technical disciplines. Michel would like to see it become a great addition to UMass.

"TWIST consist of role models, a mentoring program and a safe environment to help women express who they are," said Michel "We need to address attraction and retention to support them."

During this current semester, TWIST will hold two events with motivational speakers, similar to Olson and follow up brown bag discussion. The first brown bag is occurring on October 31 from 11:30-12:30 in Campus Center 162-175 discussing retention.

According to Michel, TWIST welcomes facts and good ideas around women's issues. "I have come from an industry perspective while working with Bell Laboratories for a dozen years," said Michel. "I was involved in women's groups there, and it really helped. It is part of our responsibility to make sure women survive through school."

Olson also believes in the support that the experience of college will give to students. "These are the people who are going to be really great friends for life," said Olson. "This is your team, and the people who will give you strength every day."

Football feline A-OK

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

He may appear now to be just an energetic kitten, but a month ago, Duke was reportedly being thrown around like a football in the Southwest residential area of the University of Massachusetts.

Today, Rachel Carney, a junior English major, has been reunited with her tiger cat that she lost in downtown Amherst on Sept. 9.

According to her, she lost Duke when he got out of a house in downtown Amherst owned by her boyfriend, junior engineering student Alex Brown.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN

UMass student Rachel Carney poses with her cat, Duke, in Amherst yesterday.

When a thorough search turned up nothing, Carney and Brown posted "missing" flyers throughout Amherst and UMass with a picture of Duke, a four-month-old kitten at the time.

According to Carney, she received reports days later from people who saw a kitten on Fearing Street matching Duke's description.

On Sept. 10, a day after Duke was reported missing, a Domino's pizza delivery person reported to the UMPD what he described as, "a cat being thrown around like a football" near the Washington residence hall in Southwest.

The delivery driver, Scott Savoie, first saw what he described to be a group of African American men petting a kitten. According to Savoie, the next minute one of the individuals picked the kitten up and pitched it through the air. The kitten landed against his windshield and rolled off the vehicle's antenna.

The UMPD reported that the kitten did not have any evident injuries and showed no signs of being "skittish." Officer Patrick Archbald took the unshaken kitten back to his home in Williamsburg with the intentions of adopting it.

"It was here to stay had the owner not come forth," Archbald said. "It was a very beautiful cat and loving and seemed to have gotten over the trauma from what I've heard was a nasty situation."

However, initial statements from Savoie indicated that the kitten had not survived the incident. His statement, printed in the Sept. 12 Collegian, was read by Carney's friends who were afraid to tell her what they believed was bad news, Carney said.

"My friends didn't want me to read the article because they knew I'd be upset about it," Carney said.

Her hopes were answered when she called the UMPD with a matching description of Duke. Officer Archbald said he was immediately notified that an owner had come forth, but he said the disappointment was in letting go of the kitten he had grown so fond of.

"We were happy in the way that it [the cat] was going back to the owner, but we were at the same time losing the friendship we had developed in just the short time we had it," Archbald said.

Archbald said that his family has agreed to adopt a cat as a result of growing fond of Duke. Carney commented that she still feels anger towards the individuals who would commitit such an act of animal cruelty, but said she is thankful Duke is alive and well with eight more lives to live.

Clemson shocked by murder-suicide

By Mackie All
The Tiger [Clemson U.]

(U-WIRE) CLEMSON, S.C. – In an apparent murder-suicide that shocked those who knew him, Pendleton police stated that Clemson senior Thomas Demar Littlejohn shot his ex-girlfriend, Anderson resident Tashauna Gardner, and then took his own life.

Littlejohn and Gardner were discovered dead in his bedroom by his roommate, Andrico Tanner, on Saturday, Sept. 23.

According to Pendleton Chief of Police Ken Arthur, Tanner returned from visiting his parents in Spartanburg to find Littlejohn and Gardner dead due to gunshot wounds. He went next door to phone the police since the phone would not work in his Edgewood Square apartment. The phone in Littlejohn's room had been taken off the hook, Arthur stated. The 911 call took place about 9:35 p.m. that Saturday.

Gardner was fully dressed, Arthur said, but Littlejohn was naked, except for his socks. A large amount of marijuana was found underneath his body, "but I don't think that's important. It's kind of gross," Arthur said.

"It was definitely more than a pound," Arthur said of the marijuana found in the room. Toxicology reports on the bodies were not yet available to determine whether or not the couple had been using the drug.

Littlejohn, 24, and Gardner, 25, had broken up three months earlier, and according to Anderson County Coroner Greg Shore, family members of the couple described a rocky relationship. Gardner filed a restraining order against Littlejohn after the split. She had recently moved to Atlanta to be with the father of her child and complained to her family that Littlejohn stalked her even after the move.

However, that weekend Gardner had returned to Pendleton to visit Littlejohn and family, said Arthur.

"She dropped her child off at her mother's and came back [to Littlejohn's]," Arthur said. "Witnesses saw them laughing and joking going into the apartment."

But later, witnesses also reported hearing loud arguments coming from the apartment Friday night that ended

Turn to SUICIDE, page 2

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Boy is this hard work

Sara Sciarriano and Michael Goyette choose pumpkins at Atkins Farm yesterday.

■ suicide

(Continued from page 1)

with a noise. By Saturday morning, Gardner's mother Bobbie became suspicious and filed a missing persons report after her daughter failed to call her as promised. After arguing with hospitals and friends, Bobbie Gardner requested that a police go to Littlejohn's apartment at about 6 p.m. The deputy went to 56 Cherry Street where Littlejohn resided in apartment C1 but got no answer.

Shortly said he believes the police acted in good faith at the time, perhaps even did right.

"I thought something was wrong because she always called me," Bobbie Gardner said. "I still don't understand how [she was] by herself."

Shortly said Littlejohn's gunshot wound was self-inflicted with a gun being pressed to his right temple. A spent handgun was found near his body.

Gardner was shot in the top of her head after an apparent struggle. Shortly reported that marks on her head suggested that her hair may have been yanked forward before the shooting.

"It makes no sense," Arthur said. "Everyone says Littlejohn was a great guy who would never do anything like this, but people have quirks and tempers. It's tragic."

Part of the tragedy is the fact that Gardner and Littlejohn both left a child behind from separate relationships. The Pendleton police do not yet know who bought or owned the gun involved in the deaths.

"We investigate all deaths as a homicide, but quite honestly, I don't think we're going to find anything else," Arthur said. "We have no reason to think it's anything than what it appears to be."

Littlejohn Sr. said Gardner "is the best and they turned the gun on himself. She's gone."

This point of view frustrates Littlejohn's father, Thomas Littlejohn Sr., a Conway, S.C., resident.

"I think the police investigation was inaccurate," Littlejohn Sr. said. He refuses to believe the murder-suicide theory.

He urged this young lady, he said "but still I am sure not that weak for one another."

Littlejohn Sr. said his son was a good person.

He was respectful, polite, church going, he said. The way the cops that could make you smile. The last thing he ever said to me as he was leaving home was, 'Peace out, Daddy. I'm straight.'

Littlejohn Sr. said that the police never once had "before the parents had a chance to see him. He stated that the police did not call the parents to notify them of their son's death. Instead, the Littlejohns received a phone call from a friend of their son. Littlejohn Sr., said the friend was hysteric, screaming, "Thomas is dead! Thomas is dead!"

According to Littlejohn Sr., Gardner was staying in Atlanta during the week, but spending weekends with his son. Bobbie Gardner said her daughter was warmhearted and always had a smile.

She always tried to make everyone cheer up and look for the good in themselves," Bobbie Gardner said. When you were in a bad mood and depressed she would lift your spirits."

Littlejohn was remembered in a memorial service in Tillman Hall on Wednesday.

At his [Sept. 28] funeral, it was very, very evident that many people loved this young man," Dean of Students Joy Smith said.

She met Littlejohn during his sophomore year and remembers his intense eyes and a very intelligent mind.

"We are living in a world where things happen that nobody can explain," Reverend Williams said, who spoke at the memorial service.

Silent frustration is destroying a lot of people today. It will have you smiling when you really feel like crying. It will have you hanging out with your friends when you're hurting on the inside. There are a lot of unanswered questions, and people ask, 'Why, why, why?' Death is all around us."

The obituary printed in Littlejohn's funeral program remembers a religious, devoted son, father and brother.

"The memories we have of [him] will always be precious to our hearts," it read. "He gave much devotion to each of us. His family and friends will always love him."

"I think the Clemson family feels the loss of anyone, and we especially feel for his family," Student Body President Rita Bolt said.

Littlejohn Sr., said he cannot accept the supposed circumstances of his son's death.

"He loved his son [Sha'Quille Allen] very much, and he was about to graduate; he just had too much going for him," he said.

Littlejohn Sr., said the family will wait for the final results of the police investigation and if they are not satisfied, they will hire a private investigator.

"We will never believe that he killed himself or that girl," Littlejohn Sr. said.

UBriefs

Alexander Cockburn, one of America's best know radical journalists, is to speak at Food For Thought Books on his new book Al Gore: A User's Manual. This book exposes many of Gore's unfavorable decisions. Cockburn will appear on Tuesday, October 10 at 7pm. For more information, call Joan at 253-5432.

The League of Women Voters of Amherst is hosting an information session on the eight ballot questions that will appear on the November 7 ballot. Nancy Carapezza, president of The League of Women Voters of Amherst, will explain the meaning of yes and no votes to these questions. The session will be October 17 in the Town Room of the Amherst Town Hall from 7 to 9 p.m. For more information, call Margaret Roberts at 549-1575.

—Jessica May

China trying to keep up in space race

By Philip P. Pan
Washington Post

BEIJING – Zhang Fanglei craned her neck back to take it all in: the towering gray-and-white cylindrical spacecraft, the gleaming solar panels attached like wings to its sides, the red calligraphy painted on the ship's front that declares simply, "Magical Vessel."

For Zhang, a 35-year-old nurse who grew up in a poor village during some of modern China's most turbulent times, it was something like magic to be standing before a Chinese rocket ship designed to carry Chinese astronauts into space.

"Oh, we were so excited and proud!" she said, recalling the morning last year when China surprised the world by announcing it had sent the Shenzhou-1 into orbit on a test flight.

"When we were young, we never dared to think it was possible. It was unimaginable, like a fantasy. ... But now, our country is strong and prosperous, and people look up to us."

Nearly a year after Chinese scientists steered the unmanned Shenzhou module around Earth 14 times and then landed it safely in Inner Mongolia, the government appears to be pumping up the public for the next step in its quest to join the United States and Russia in the exclusive club of nations that have sent humans into space.

Recently, the government put two life-size replicas of the Shenzhou ship on display, drawing Zhang and crowds of thousands to the Military Museum of the Chinese People's Revolution. And last week, a senior official in China's secretive space agency declared that China will one day send people to the moon.

The state-run media have carried reports that a second, unmanned test flight of a more advanced model of the Shenzhou could occur this month. "Manned space flight is a progressive process," Long Lehao, China's chief rocket designer, said in one article published last month. "The Soviet Union conducted seven unmanned flights before sending (cosmonaut Yuri) Gagarin into space, and the American people conducted even more experiments. ... I think this day (when China sends a man into space) will not be too far away, but it will also not come too early."

China began pursuing manned space flight in the late 1960s but abandoned the effort because Premier Zhou Enlai thought the program too costly. The late Deng Xiaoping, China's former paramount leader, also said China had "no need to go the moon." It was only in the early 1990s that the program found a high-level sponsor in President Jiang Zemin.

Still, the fact that nearly a year has passed without a second test flight means the program remains "hamstrung by financial considerations," said Joan Johnson-Freese, a professor at the Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies in Honolulu. "China has committed for the long haul and appears to be sticking with it, but like the West, it is finding its space efforts competing with domestic priorities."

Western analysts say it might be two to five years before China achieves its goal of sending a human into space, let alone putting one on the moon. Reports in the state-run media indicate scientists are debating how many test flights they need before launching a manned capsule into space and whether the number should be reduced to save money. Some reports have put the price of a single test flight at as much as $100 million, a staggering amount for a developing nation like China.

Coming Out Week in Texas marked by understanding and respect

By Brooke Holbert
The Battalion (Texas A&M U.)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE STATION, Texas – College is a time of self-discovery. Throughout adolescence, children are teased with this delightful Norman Rockwell image of young people going to college to find their calling, make lifelong friends and burn the candle at both ends as only crazy college kids can do. Even Mom and Dad get a raised eyebrow and sentimental look when reflecting on their college days. Clearly, it is in this environment of higher education that all those wild attempts at finding oneself and one's purpose are to be had.

But what if finding oneself entails more than realizing one is not the computer science type?

Saturday marked the kickoff of Coming Out Week, an event inspired by National Coming Out Day, which has been observed at Texas A&M University for 11 years. This week, sponsored by Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgendered Aggies (GLBTA); Aggie ALLIES; and Gender Issues Education Services, is designed to encourage openly gay, secretly gay and heterosexual Aggies to become more informed and more comfortable with the growing homosexual community at A&M.

The idea that coming out is a fate that results in misery and heartache is one of the myths GLBTA hope to dismantle.

Jordan Davis, president of GLBTA and a sophomore English major, said coming out can be a beneficial experience.

"People have this idea that coming out is this horrible, tumultuous event where the gay students are pummeled by Nazis or something," Davis said. "Yes, some people have a really rough time coming out, but it is such a liberating, empowering experience. It changes the course of your life, and for the better. I cannot imagine not having come out."

Davis said finding tolerance at a school as traditionally conservative as A&M has proved no easy task. In 1979, the school refused to recognize GLBTA as a formal organization, and it was not until a Supreme Court ruling six years later that GLBTA won its place at the University. Even as recently as this August, controversy was sparked when new wording in a policy protecting sexual orientation from discrimination was deferred and reinstated.

Though sexual orientation discrimination is now listed as barred on the Student Code of Conduct Web site, this continuing battle is best summed up in the 1999 survey released by the Princeton Review that ranks A&M as the nation's third-least gay-friendly campus in the United States.

"People have just not been exposed to it," Davis said. "They have never had to deal with it, so they have not. Exposure is what proves the stereotypes wrong. Not all gay men are extremely effeminate, bisexuals are not all promiscuous, and transgendered individuals are not to be feared. Sexual orientation is not a defining characteristic."

In an effort to expose more people to the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered (GLBT) community on campus, Coming Out Week is hosting a panel on the steps of the J. Wayne Stark Galleries on Monday from noon to 2 p.m. GLBT students will be able to share their personal stories and answer questions in a non-threatening, visible way. The sponsors of Coming Out Week say they hope the panel will give the community the opportunity to see that GLBT students are not something read about in a textbook, but a real, viable part of the University.

Nathan Anderson, a Coming Out Week participant and senior management information systems major, said he empathizes with those who are uncomfortable with Coming Out Week, but thinks a little understanding can go a long way.

"Everyone should not have to give tons of love and support to the gay community, but there is a need for support," said Anderson. "When someone is dealing with something this personal, it is natural to pass judgment. It is really important to try and step back and try to put their needs first, not yours."

Megan Wright, former vice president of GLBTA and a senior sociology major, said she has faced especially strong opposition for professing herself a Christian as well as openly gay.

"One time, I was listening to this preacher outside the Academic Building, and he began to talk about homosexuality. I told him that I was gay and a Christian, and he went off on me about it. 'Don't make me laugh,' he said. It was pretty bad. Religion is a personal thing. I do not attack anyone for their religious choices, and I do not expect anyone to attack me."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gee Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobslarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppo Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiulo Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating entirely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as The Index. The Collegian in 1903, the World, Collegian in 1914 and then Massachusetts Collegian in 1959. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been continuously operated since its founding in 1890. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 or visit our Web site at www.dailycollegian.com.

The Daily Collegian:
There's a party in our pants.

Bring it.

Where it matters most.

As one of the world's leading diversified technology companies, we're breaking new ground in everything from defense and commercial electronics, and business aviation and special mission aircraft. As a Raytheon employee, you'll contribute to the development of exciting, revolutionary technology designed to make life better, easier, and safer throughout the world. Such as our STARS air traffic control system. And our award-winning NightSight™ technology.

But it all starts with you. Your creativity. Your knowledge and innovation. And enthusiasm about the future. In return, we offer exceptional training and professional development opportunities. A supportive, down-to-earth work environment. And incredible benefits including flexible schedules designed to respect your quality of life.

So you can still show off all those great qualities of yours outside of work, too.

We'll be visiting your campus soon — contact your career placement office to schedule an interview. If you are unable to meet with us, please send your resume to: E-mail: resume@rayjobs.com (ASCII text only, no attachments). Raytheon Company, Attn: National Staffing Data Center, P.O. Box 660246, MS-201, Dallas, TX 75266. U.S. Citizenship may be required. We are an equal opportunity employer.

Opportunities are available for exceptional students with the following majors:

- Computer Science
- Computer Engineering
- Electrical Engineering
- Mechanical Engineering
- Math
- Physics
- Chemical Engineering
- Aeronautical Engineering
- Finance/Accounting
- Human Resources
- Industrial and Labor Relations
- Marketing/Communications
- Management

Check out our Website at www.rayjobs.com/campus for further information including a calendar of recruiting events. At Raytheon, we strive to be the employer of choice for a diverse workforce by attracting, retaining, and recognizing the most talented, resourceful and creative people.

Bringing technology to the edge

Raytheon

Northwest heroin use is epidemic

By Rene Sanchez
The Washington Post

SEATTLE – The junkies drift along downtown streets, scrounging for change and another hit. They cluster in alleys waiting for community vans to arrive with clean needles. And by the hundreds they straggle into Kim Murillo's health clinic here every month, duped up and wiped out by heroin.

"We're seeing so many people," she said. "Many of them are desperate to quit, but the habit can be extremely hard to break. They think they need it to survive. It's such a vicious cycle."

It's also an epidemic. No region in the country is having a deadlier struggle with heroin than the Pacific Northwest. The problem isn't new, but all signs suggest it's worsening.

Deaths from heroin overdoses have more than doubled in King County, which includes Seattle, over the last decade. They have risen so much in the nearest metropolitan area, Portland, Ore., during the same time that the drug is now ranked among the leading causes of death among white men ages 25 to 54.

Treatment centers in both cities are handling record numbers of heroin cases. Needle exchange programs are besieged. Jailed criminal suspects commonly test positive for the drug. By some estimates, there are now as many as 20,000 heroin addicts around Seattle. In a report last summer, the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention called some of those statistics the most severe in the nation. Heroin use has been rising nationwide, but the overdose fatality rate in the Northwest is twice as high as the national rate.

"We have a pretty big chronic user population, and it seems like more and more young people here keep getting recruited to the heroin scene," said Gary Oxman, director of the Multnomah County Health Department, which covers Portland. "It really is exacting a large social toll on the community."

Heroin has become a drug of choice, and a public health scourge, in the Northwest for many reasons. It's plentiful, usually smuggled into the port here or north of the border in nearby Vancouver, then whisked down the Interstate 5 corridor by a sophisticated trafficking network. It's getting cheaper, often sold for only about $20 a dose. What's available on the streets is mostly a crudely refined "black tar" heroin made in rural Mexico, whose potency is wildly unpredictable, making it more dangerous.

Both Seattle and Portland also draw transient youths fleeing the largely rural Northwest. With no steady jobs or ties to the area, they fall prey to the heroin culture because it's communal and easy to find.

"For some, this seems to fill a spiritual void," Murillo said.

Underground heroin circles have thrived particularly since Seattle became popularized last decade as a hip haven for "grunge" slackers, artists and musicians, drug counselors say. Some local officials even wonder if the frequently rainy, cloudy weather contributes to heroin use.

Oxman said he believes the heroin problem intensified when traffickers changed their marketing strategy, essentially putting the drug on sale. "They figured out it was more profitable to have more people hooked at a lower price."

The clinic that Murillo directs, Stonewall Recovery Services, is in a neighborhood near downtown, filled with fashionable coffee shops and restaurants. But it's also a hub for the heroin trade.

Each month at the clinic, about 400 addicts are counseled and some 36,000 clean needles are distributed, in hopes of protecting addicts from diseases such as hepatitis or AIDS. The clinic also enlists a brigade of recovering addicts to roam the area and try to persuade other drug users to get help.

"A lot of people want to quit, but the availability of heroin around here makes it almost impossible for them to stop," said Luke, 26, one of those outreach workers, who declined to give his last name. "You can find it almost on any corner."

Here and in Portland, officials are expanding programs that provide addicts with methadone, an opiate that satisfies a craving for heroin without the same destructive effects. They're also dispatching more health workers into the field to seek out and help heroin junkies. But hundreds of addicts still spend months on waiting lists for treatment.

Seattle Mayor Paul Schell recently appointed a community task force to study how the city can better treat heroin addiction. Health officials also are urging the county and the state to shift their philosophy toward "harm reduction" than abstinence. Providing addicts with CPR lessons or safe injection rooms supervised by nurses could save lives and reduce crime, they say, as well as slowly but surely luring junkies in for medical help to break their habit. But some elected officials say the steps could promote more heroin use.

Police also are cracking down. Last month, after a two-year undercover investigation, Seattle narcotics investigators and federal agents arrested nearly two dozen people and charged them with running one of the city's more organized heroin distribution rings. But they suspect other traffickers are still on the I-5 corridor.

The recent raid temporarily dried up some of Seattle's heroin market. Now health officials are bracing for a rash of overdoses, because heroin addicts, desperate for a fix that late, is has been harder to find, apparently are buying and injecting even cruder forms of the drug, or mixing it with other drugs.

Last year, about 110 people each in metropolitan Portland and Seattle died from heroin overdoses. More than 1,500 heroin addicts are in treatment around Seattle.

Addicts are a diverse group, officials say. Some are middle-aged and middle class, from a wide range of prosperous jobs, until they succumbed to addiction.

"They aren't necessarily just the young, inexperienced, rock-crazed types that people expect," said David Solet, an epidemiologist in the King County Health Department.

Public health officials in Portland and Seattle say they're starting to see encouraging results from recent steps to expand treatment and needle exchanges and from the greater use of recovering addicts as mentors to junkies. Overdose deaths have even declined a bit lately. But no one predicts a swift end to the crisis.

"We're making progress, but we're in for a long struggle," Oxman said. "Among young people, this has become just another drug. And I wouldn't say that heroin has just been glamorized to them. The main thing is that it has been normalized. It's regarded with a lot less concern and fear than it once was."

www.dailycollegian.com
Coming Soon
Imagination

☆ Grand ☆ Opening

Now you can shop online 24 hours a day at efollett.com!

* New merchandise---offering the best selection of UMass clothing and gifts
* ecredits--earn money back when you place your textbook order through efollett.com
* Avoid the lines -- Purchase your books online and we'll ship them to your door, or pre-pay and pick them up in the store!

UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center Phone: (413) 545-2619

efollett NEW & USED COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS .com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Fouling Out:
Athletes and Criminals

The arrest of basketball player Monty Mack on Thursday for attempting to shoplift DVD movies from K-Mart is certainly a disappointment. The Massachusetts men's hoop squad is weathering a difficult period already, in which the team is struggling to rebuild and speculation is high that coach Brainer Flint's job is in jeopardy.

But while Mack's error in judgment is unfortunate, it isn't all that surprising. It is only the latest in a series of black marks against UMass athletics' incidents that have many people wondering just how much trouble these athletes can get into before the University decides enough is enough.

Mack's situation is strikingly similar to one faced by two members of the women's basketball team last year. Tri-captain laywana Bradley and a teammate were picked up for the very same charge at TJ Maxx, leading to Bradley being stripped of her captaincy and serving a suspension from regular season play. The senior never really recovered from the incident, suffering a rapid decrease in playing time and struggling to find any semblance of rhythm over the rest of her final year here.

One can only wonder now how Mack's future, and that of the men's hoop squad, will be affected by his predicament. He is also a captain, and he is undoubtedly the most consistent scorer on the team. Whereas Bradley was more of a role player for the Minutewomen, Mack is the Minutemen's marquee player.

That begs yet another question: how hard can Flint and the UMass Athletic Department come down on Mack without inadvertently destroying what little cohesion the team has left? Flint has already come under fire for being too much of a "players' coach," as in maintaining too much of a rapport with his players at the risk of losing their respect. His predecessor, John Calipari, was regarded as a disciplinarian who achieved fantastic results by demanding respect from his players. Flint has achieved much less favorable results with his style of coaching.

So how does a players' coach deal with his biggest star making a bonehead play such as Mack has? Chances are, the three-game suspension he will serve was imposed largely to placate the NCAA. He may lose his captain status, but the chances of that affecting his actual role on the team are slim. Quite frankly, any wrongdoing will be forgotten the first night Mack puts up 20 points.

Will he learn anything by this incident? More importantly, will the University? Maybe the school should go ahead with the idea, proposed by a nationwide survey, to pay athletes; that way guys like Mack wouldn't have to resort to crime to attain the material goods they need.

More realistically, UMass should take harsher action when one of its athletes goes astray. If Mack were suspended for half of the regular season, what are the chances that another athlete would try his hand at petty crime? Had Bradley faced a harsher punishment last year, maybe her example would have prevented Mack from trying to boost a handful of movies last week. Of course there are individual circumstances at play in each situation, but the underlying facts are the same.

UMass needs to somehow keep more control over its student-athletes. After all, the deeds of these few players are casting a bad light on their teams, the Athletic Department and the University as a whole.

Our Brian goes road trippin'

BRIAN LOHNES

My girlfriend Kerri and I like to go on road trips. We've been to Canada, Florida, Vermont and, last summer, upstate New York. Thankfully, we didn't have a video camera, because if we did, we could market the video "Circus of Freaks 2000." You see, Kerri and I also have the innate ability to encounter the weirdest and most mind-blowing situations one could expect to see on vacation.

We departed the sleepy little Massachusetts town of Abington on a Wednesday afternoon and headed west. (An important side note to this story is that we did over 1,000 miles of driving in my car with an expired inspection sticker.) We figured it to be about a five-hour drive to our first stop in NY, which was Lake George. We were really impressed with our digs for the first two nights, a Holiday Inn. The next morning is when the trip began to slowly unravel.

We stopped for breakfast at a reputable, well, semi-reputable restaurant chain named after a man called Howard Johnson. We got the, "deluxe breakfast buffet," which consisted of a large quantity of fake eggs, some half cooked breakfast potatoes and what looked to be a variant of porridge....whatever that is. Needless to say it sucked, and that food would almost become the benchmark of culinary excellence on the rest of our trip.

On our first day in the Lake George area we decided to take a ride up to Ausable Chasm. This is a big place that you walk through, with a raging river and deep canyons and so forth. We drove about an hour and a half from our base at Lake George, all the while the sky kept getting darker and darker until we pulled into Ausable Chasm and lightening struck the ground about six inches to the left of my car. I looked at Kerri, she looked at me, and we both jumped out of the car and made like Carl Lewis for the entrance door. Once inside a huge group of very friendly Japanese tourists were marveling at things like shot glasses and "New York" tee shirts, so the ever-intrepid Kerri suggested that we go out into the rain, I agreed, and luckily the downpour stopped after 20 or so minutes in it.

After leaving there, I wanted to go south a little way and check out Fort Ticonderoga. This is your typical 200-year-old Revolutionary War fort. Not too much to note here but they had a good snack bar. They had a bunch of people dressed up like soldiers and a ton of artifacts, but who gives a crap about stuff like that? I wanted to see some shootin' and hollerin'. The best thing about the fort was that most of the people visiting it could have actually served in it while it was active. One of the staff members was over 85 years old! Unfortunately, she outran me while I was trying to catch her for an interview... well, she was pretty fast.

That evening we returned to Lake George. We were planning on walking around and checking out the town and looking at the lake. We checked out the town all right; two words: crap hole. The town, which has a ton of history behind it, is a tourist trap. Tee shirt shops, cheesy restaurants, and just like Amherst, it was complete with gangstas. I wanted to remind these kids that they LIVED IN UPSTATE NEW YORK. The worst crime they could commit would be to steal lebediah's cows. We later took a ride on a steamboat, which was fun, but I was really disappointed by the town.

The next day we packed up and headed to an amusement part, "The Great Escape." This place was really cool. It was pretty old so it had some wooden roller coasters, a whole bunch of old carnival rides and a couple new coasters to spice things up. We spent the whole day there and had a great time. I tease my girlfriend about various fears she has, because I am a horribly mean person. No, no, it's because I think they are funny. For instance, Kerri will climb onto a roller coaster with no questions asked, but will not get on a Ferris Wheel or a "sky ride" (read: glorified ski-lift) to save her soul. Thankfully, I was able to coerce her onto the sky ride, but she was having no part of the Ferris wheel. The other major accomplishment of the day was winning a little annoying thing at one of the games they had there. The toy itself was dumb, but the thousands of little kids that wanted it were awesome. "How does it feel to want little boy?" Ok, ok, I never said that, but man, I wanted to.

After we left the amusement park we were headed for Cooperstown, NY, home of the Baseball Hall of Fame. We were going to stay in the town of Cobleskill, a few miles away from Cooperstown. We arrived at our hotel and Kerri didn't want to get out of the car; the place was downright freaky. I convinced her to come in so we could check into our room, but the whole time she kept saying that she was afraid of the place. I was trying to play it all cool, "What's there to be afraid of?" or, "C'mon, nothing's going to happen," but the whole time, I may have been more afraid than she was. We decided to eat at the hotel restaurant, B.W. Delaney's. Later, this decision would result in a pact never to eat at a hotel restaurant again.

We get seated, and wait a half-hour for a waiter. Tom, our waiter, comes over and it looks like he is about to either crap his pants or have a heart attack. He blurts out the specials and takes our drink order. A half-hour later our drinks arrive, courtesy of another waiter. We had ordered some potato skins for an appetizer, so we figured like most people there would be maybe 10 on the plate. Then we see this woman carrying what looks a sculpture, to scale, of Mt. Everest made of potato skins. We ate as many as we could, but we still had other food left coming so we didn't go crazy. Then the woman came back. "You didn't like them?" we said we liked them but we had more food coming. "So they weren't what you expected." No they were exactly what we expected, potatoes with cheese on them. We explained a few more times that we had food coming and she finally took the plate away. We then waited 40 more minutes to get our food. Which, as you have been expecting all along, was vile. Tom didn't even have the guts to bring the bill, some other jamoke brought it over. We paid and then went back to our room.

We got back to the room and Kerri flipped out. She said the place was haunted and she was really afraid being there. I on the other hand went to sleep. Kerri was up all night, thankfully none of the suspected monsters attacked, and she was not stolen by gypsies and carried into the night. Needless to say, we canceled the second night of our reservation.

We went to the Hall of Fame and to a place called Howe's Caverns, a really cool underground natural tunnel network, the best thing we did all trip. We had an extra night because of our cancellation, so we decided to stay in Sturbridge on the return trip. We found a place that had a Jacuzzi room available, not that we were looking for one, but it was a bonus. So we took the Jacuzzi room and settled in, then we fired the sucker up and tested the water. It was heaven, until we heard a knock on the door. It was the lady from the desk, "Is the Jacuzzi overflowing?" I said, "No." The she told us it was leaking downstairs and we had to shut it off.

If that one moment didn't sum up the whole trip, I don't know what could. I mean for all the zany moments, there were others that were well, less zany. We had a great time, as we usually do while traveling, and these types of memories are the ones that stick with you and make you laugh after the fact. So the next time you see your girlfriend or boyfriend, load up the car and hit the road; you are guaranteed to have a good time.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

EXCUSE ME? IS THAT A DVD IN YOUR PANTS OR ARE YOU JUST TRYING TO RUIN YOUR FUTURE?
K-MART
MONTY MACK: ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF WHY THE UMASS SPORTS PROGRAM IS ONE OF THE BEST IN THE WORLD

A matter of debate

MATT DESPRES

I swore I wasn't going to do this.

I made a promise to myself that my previous piece on the 2000 presidential election would also be my last. I decided that there were more pressing matters to discuss, and that I would leave the politics to those who are naturally inclined to lean that way. However, as Election Day draws closer, one question continues to bother me, something that nobody has been sufficiently able to answer.

Why won't they let Ralph debate?

Last week, while George W. Bush and Al Gore were set to spar in Boston, Green Party candidate Ralph Nader emerged here in Amherst, addressing an auditorium comprised mostly of students. While the speech offered a fresh generation of voters the opportunity to witness firsthand the unfolding of a new political vehicle, it remained buried under the glitz that was being pushed two hours away. What should have been heard by anyone with a televison set and an interest in voting was instead confined to the concrete walls of the Fine Arts Center.

That very day, after finishing his tour of western Massachusetts, Nader arrived in Boston with a ticket in hand, only to be turned away. He didn't even manage a foot in the door. If the man is considered to be a mere blip on the screen of a two-person race, how dangerous could his presence be?

This isn't to say that the Green Party is the cure for what ails our country, nor is it to say that Ralph Nader should be our Commander in Chief. My faith lies not in this man, but rather in the idea of a third party and the possibility that something better is out there. I've found this to be the source of my frustration: that if Nader is allowed to state his case, the door will finally be opened for future individuals that may offer a sincere and legitimate alternative.

As much as I disagree with their exclusion, I can see why the major party candidates are working so hard to keep the others at bay. They're afraid that it may spark actual debate. Something that will force actual thought. Something that falls outside the realm of a rehearsed script. By now, we've all become well aware that Bush and Gore can memorize facts and read off of cue-cards, but they've yet to display an ability for formulating opinions of their own. If they are so committed to their ideas, so confident that the right way is their way, why don't they use the debates to back themselves up? One would think they'd welcome the chance to invite the smaller parties to the podium, if only to showcase their alleged supremacy to their supporters. The fact that they won't, however, leads us to believe that Bush and Gore aren't as comfortable with their own ideas as they would like us to believe.

In his column for salon.com, Joe Conason makes the following point.

"Because the Democrats and Republicans already possess excessive advantages in our system, they shouldn't be allowed to exclude their would-be competitors from all of the events that promise to attract the greatest voter attention." Mr. Conason, who also puts forth that third-party ideas would broaden a national discussion that is otherwise dull and narrow, is exactly right. Bush and Gore have a very real fear that prime exposure would attract voters to an "outside" candidate. They also fear that non-voters, the majority of us, would regain interest when presented with another choice.

This is perhaps the scariest fact about the elections. Bush and Gore are putting a hold on the elections by limiting voter option. At a time when voters are exercising their right not to choose in record numbers, the major parties still present themselves as the only viable options. If we want more people to vote, than we should have more options. It seems like such a simple concept, yet nearly everyone has been reluctant to adopt it.

What Nader the Candidate wants most, perhaps more than a vote, is for us to become more like Nader the Citizen. He is, after all, our best-known consumer advocate, having spent most of his life lobbying for the rights of American citizens. He has spent his time trying to better the lives of everyone, acting as a voice for the people against the corporate monsters.

His work has benefited us in countless ways. Perhaps he sees his candidacy as setting down a foundation. Perhaps he knows that the Nader/LaDuke ticket has gone as far as it can. He wants more choices for the American public, and is again using himself to pave the way. If nothing else, he's put a face to a side of politics that people had never seen.

What happens to these politics is entirely up to us. A million Ralph Naders amount to nothing if we continually settle for the Bushes and Gores that force themselves into the presidential mold. If we don't want to adopt the man, then we should at least look into what he stands for. The beauty of a democracy is that, in theory, we are allowed to choose what suits us best.

The decisions are placed in our hands and dictated by our needs and desires. In seeking out a third party, we don't have to settle for what popular opinions say we should. We shouldn't have to settle for second best, or as some say, the lesser of the evils.

You see, as much as the political process interests me at times, it always reduces me to speaking in repetition and bad cliches. I know I want something better for the country, something better than I've seen from any of the candidates, and yet it's still a hard topic for me to get across. Maybe it's because I have yet to see a candidate that truly excites me. It's easy for anybody to look good in front of the camera, to promise us the world, but to do it in a genuine manner is a different story. At this point, I'm sure of only two things: that I'll vote, and that I'll do it without further mention here.

I promise.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

District of colonialism

JONATHAN ELSBERG

I am from Washington, DC, the political capital of the United States. When I say that I am from DC, I mean that I actually lived inside the "district." Indeed, I am a fifth-generation resident of DC and no one in my family has ever worked in the government. Many people do not know that artistic lives in DC – they believe that it is a city in which only government activity occurs, a sort of industrial park of government business (all commercials intended). More than that, they don't realize that anyone or any family has lived there for longer than the term of a president or member of Congress.

Nonetheless, the fact is that some 565,000 people do call DC home, and in addition to all the "normal" problems faced by residents of urban locals in the United States, DC residents have one unusual problem to add to the list: they are not citizens of this great "democracy." They are colonial subjects.

Residents of DC have no voting representation in the Congress of the United States; despite the fact that DC (in terms of population) is about the same size of, actually larger, than several states. Oh sure they have a sort of local government (known as "home rule," but this local government functions always under the direct control of Congress (all local laws must be sent to Congress for review) – a Congress in which DC residents have no real voice.

What I mean by all of this? I am describing simple facts here (outraged opinion to follow): 600,000 "citizens" of the United States have no actual representation in Congress, where laws and resolutions are passed that have direct and often directly negative effect on those "citizens." Allow me a quick example. Recently, voters placed a ballot initiative on the DC ballot to legalize the medicinal use of marijuana, something that had already been done in several states around the country. Conservative members of Congress (read: Republican motifs, but not exclusively) did not like this little fact of democratic action and so passed a binding resolution that the DC Board of Elections could not expend any of its resources on the initiative – in plain English, we were forbidden from even counting the vote!

This has nothing to do with the issue of federal drug laws overriding local law; this has everything to do with members of Congress (perhaps some that represent you and your family) deciding that residents of DC could not even share in that most basic function of a democratic society, the expression of opinion.

Here's another example: Congress has forbidden the DC government from spending local money, raised by local taxes, to support needle-exchange programs that slow the spread of AIDS and other diseases. There may be reasons to debate the usefulness of such programs, but the US Congress chooses not to debate this program, it chooses to demolish the rights of people who do wish to practice such debate.

You may think that these are outrageous examples of the worst tendencies of the powerful to subvert democratic systems to their own purposes – I certainly hope that you do. But let me mention one more recent act of Congress that adds injury to the insult of existing injury. Congress has forbidden the DC government from bringing court challenges to the restrictive resolutions that Congress passes. All states are allowed to challenge the constitutionality of federal laws that affect them. Unfortunately for DC, it is not a state, it is a "federal district," and has no such protection under the constitution, as members of Congress have taken it upon themselves to decide. They are judge, jury and executioner when it comes to the rights of DC as a whole and of its residents in particular – that is the essence of the city's colonial stature.

Please do not be confused by the fact that DC has one non-voting delegate to the House of Representatives (currently, the able and honorable Eleanor Holmes Norton). Ms. Norton has no actual power in the House – she is allowed to vote on legislation only so long as her vote does not matter. That's right, if her vote changes the outcome, her vote is not counted. Can anyone say, "crock of crap?"

And as if that weren't enough, DC doesn't even have this sort of pathetic psuedo-representation in the Senate.

So you've made it this far... perhaps you are wondering why this situation exists. There are plenty of reasons that could be offered (and often are), but I'll tell you what the real reason is – DC is a black city. In case any of you out there in the reading public think that this statement expresses some sort of racial grudge, let me make it very clear, I am white and I like white people – some of my best friends are white. But the fact remains that DC is overwhelmingly populated by African-Americans and that in part because of its racial makeup, it is politically aligned very strongly with the Democratic Party. As a result, the Republican leadership in Congress is absolutely opposed to enfranchising the residents of the District, because that would guarantee that the people sent to Congress by DC would be in the Democratic Party, threatening Republican power in Congress.

I do not hold the Republicans entirely to blame for the situation, however. Democrats have been in control of Congress for plenty of time since the invention of the ideas of freedom and democracy and they never managed to find a way to enfranchise DC residents, although I must note that many have taken the issue seriously.

Now a few (alas, probably a very few) folks at UMass might take this issue to heart and care to learn more about it; for simplicity's sake, I recommend the websites www.dcvote.org (a non-partisan group) and www.dcstatehoodgreen.org (the website of the recently merged DC Statehood Party and DC Green Party). And maybe, just maybe, a few of you might like to do something about it.

Jonathan Elsberg is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor must be typed and must include the name, address, and phone number of the writer. Submit one today!

© 2000 Nintendo ™ ® and the "N" logo are trademarks of Nintendo of America Inc.
© 2000 Nintendo of America Inc. Game, System and N64 Expansion Pak sold separately.
N64 Expansion Pak™ required.
EVERYONE E
Animated Violence
THE END IS COMING OCTOBER 26.
TO PREPARE, RESERVE YOUR COLLECTOR'S EDITION GOLD CARTRIDGE WITH 3D LABEL, WHILE SUPPLIES LAST.
TO SURVIVE, GO TO WWW.RADIOZELDA.COM
THE LEGEND OF ZELDA
MAJORA'S MASK

Tao of Steve close to real thing

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

THE TAO OF STEVE
Directed by Jennifer Goodman
Starring Donal Logue, Greer Goodman
Playing at Greenfield Gardens Quartet

He's content. He works part time and is unemployed. He sometimes has pot. He lives in a studio apartment with a bunch of his friends. And he has a serious sex life.

That's the motto for Dex (Donal Logue), who refers to the Tao of Steve, a philosophy comprised of most males' greatest goal: it almost guarantee a man will get incredible sex without desire to excel in his career, his passions, and find love. Why Steve? Because all stereotypes must come to this very way, with examples Steve, The Bums, Mac, Austin, Steve McQueen and Steve Martin's character in the film.

The Tao of Steve isn't unlike the rather recent trend of independent-talking movies that try to get at what the contemporary dating scene is really like. It's got a bit of the lines. It's got a chunky script this time written by Duncan Nevoll, director Jennifer Goodman and actress Greer Goodman. It's got likable characters that talk with wit, ease and wit that we all wish we had. And it's got pleasant cinematography and music, keeping all stylish aspects content.

With this formula The Tao of Steve has virtues. It is clever. It's well-acted because a finely wrought script allows it to be. And it almost scratches beyond the surface to say something real and insightful about the way people behave when it comes to sex and relationships – almost.

But predictably, there is a necessary conflict in the film. Dex meets a girl he really likes and wants to stop manipulating women in order to really win her. Syd's (Greer Goodman) heart. After much flirting, several uncanny incidents and an almost realistically flat ending.

Dex really proves his love and the movie closes with a clear suggestion that the two live happily ever after.

It wasn't until here, the final moment of the film, that The Tao of Steve irritated me. Despite lots of proof that Dex is unable to commit, that he has slept with countless women, that he is always calculating the progress of his relationships, Syd believes that he's lost all such tendencies by the end of the film simply because he hopped on a plane to New York to see her. Well, okay.

Regardless of the script's practical shortcomings, The Tao of Steve is entertaining. Logue as Dex is consistent, has an excellent sense of timing and really does make himself – beer bells and all – sympathetically attractive. Goodman's Syd has the obligatory sass of the educated woman in this genre of film and softens appropriately when she should.

The Tao of Steve doesn't do much we haven't seen before, but it comes a lot closer to making one think than most films ever attempt to. I suppose we should be grateful for that.

Steve: romantic Taoist, excellent poker player and champion Frisbee-golfer.

COURTESY SONY PICTURES

No use getting Carter

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

GET CARTER
Directed by Stephen T. Kay
with Sylvester Stallone,
Miranda Richardson, Rachael Leigh Cook
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

COURTESY OF WARNER BROTHERS

Sly Stallone as Jack Carter

Had Get Carter not been a remake of the 1971 film of the same name, it would be a simple matter to label it a fun, mindless action flick with some thickly applied visual stylizations and let the matter end there. Stallone gives one of the best performances of his career – it's still awful, mind you, but not as awful as his other roles – and the supporting cast is solid. The action is gritty and fun, with some great chase scenes and spoonfuls of testosterone for everyone.

Its lineage, however, complicates things. At the center of every remake is the question of justifiability. What about the new version makes it worth seeing? What has been changed, and what do those changes add or subtract from the film's solidity? Is the remake paying homage to the original, or trying to fix perceived mistakes of the original?

In the case of Get Carter, all of these questions lead into the inevitable observation that very few changes have been made, and that those changes do nothing to improve the film.

The plot, at times difficult to follow, begins with Jack Carter (Stallone) discovering that his younger brother has been killed in a suspicious car crash. Jack (himself deeply involved in mobster activity) suspects foul play and so begins an investigation into his brother's death, while trying to protect his now widowed sister-in-law (Miranda Richardson) and fatherless niece (Rachael Leigh Cook).

Much of the edginess of the original has been discarded; the humorously kitsch sex scenes are gone, the settings are visually overblown, the characters are flatter, and the music is over thought and intrusive (and the funeral theme is a shameless bit of stylistic thievery of Mobb's Playa). The brilliant 1971 ending has been completely discarded in favor of a much more optimistic, touchy-feely one, although, admittedly, the rewrite works well with the increased emphasis placed on the relationship between Carter and his niece Doreen (and Cook's restrained and charming performance is one of the movie's highlights).

Visually, the remake takes the original's taste for camera trickery and moodiness and inflates it beyond all levels of reason, using of MTV-style editing and cliched bits of dialogue repetition, everything coming across as only so much directorial ego-stroking.

In order to succeed and justify their own existence, a remake must offer a new interpretation of the original, or a significant improvement over it, and unfortunately, Get Carter offers neither.

Turn to KISS, page 8

KISS bids farewell with tour

By Robert Grover
Collegian Correspondent

KISS
Providence Civic Center

We live in an age where dinosaur rock 'n' roll acts dominate the touring scene. All summer, bands with members almost eligible for social security haul their road weary behinds on stage to give a rendition of songs that were popular before most UMass undergraduates were born. The image of sad old men singing devoid of passion (and showmanship) filled my head as I drove down to Mohegan Sun Tuesday night to see KISS on their 'farewell' tour.

Like Styx, Steely Dan, Kansas and the slew of other reunited bands that toured this summer, KISS reached their nadir of popularity 20 years ago, so I half expected them to have walkers or canes aiding their effort to mount the stage. After all, I first saw the band 23 years ago, in the fall of 1977, during the Rock and Roll Over Tour, and nearly three decades of adhering to the dictum "rock and roll all night, party every day" must extract an enormous toll on the body (anyone who doubts this ought to look at the cavernous lines in Steven Tyler's face or the walking skeleton that is Keith Richards).

Much to my surprise the band took the stage sans wheelchairs, opening with the crowd-pleasing "Detroit Rock City." Showing the enthusiasm and energy of men half their age (everyone in the band is over 50) and adorned in the black leather and grease paint that launched their careers, KISS played a set that drew most heavily upon their hay day of the 1970's. There were few surprises, most notably the inclusion of Ace Frehley's "Shock Me," but most of the evening was filled with tracks from their greatest hits package Double Platinum. Playing for two hours, they ventured into their post

Turn to KISS, page 8

Theatre's The King Stag offers puppets, some bright colors but ultimately, just boredom

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

THE KING STAG
Oct. 8
Concert Hall

Straight out of Cambridge, the American Repertory Theater brought its production of The King Stag to the Concert Hall Sunday night to round off a weekend of puppetry at UMass, sponsored by the Fine Arts Center.

Yes, puppetry.

Exaggerated gesturing, distinctly "acting" voices, unnecessarily loud costumes and a flat plot line. Who benefits from this kind of theater? Maybe the frightened little boy sitting behind me.

Seriously, though. The King Stag is precisely the kind of production that turns people off to theater, making it seem too "dramatic," inaccessible or just plain irritating. This text, based on an Oriental fable, interpreted by Carlo Gozzi (so all characters have Italian names), translated into English by Albert Bermel, is utterly uninteresting.

Deramo (Jay Boyer), king of this elusive land, is interviewing for a queen. His prime minister, Tartaglia (Dmetrius Conley-Williams), really wants his daughter Clarice (Kristine Goto) to get the crown. Clarice is predictably, in love with another man, Leandro (Antonio Suarez). To make matters worse, her best friend and Leandro's sister Angela (Sarah Howe) has a big crush on Deramo.

But Deramo, in searching for a wife that will truly love him, realizes Angela's feelings for him. They get together. Not longer after Tartaglia – who's mad that his daughter isn't queen and that Angela, the object of his lust, is – gets really hostile and plans to kill Deramo.

Here it gets a bit complicated. Or just silly. While on a hunting trip Tartaglia persuades Deramo to share a magic trick with him. A magic trick imparted to Deramo by an unexplained magician who also lives as a bird named Duradandarte (Sean Runette). A magic trick that allows one to leave their body and inhabit the corpse of another creature, just by chanting a few words. For example, Deramo kills a stag and then occupies its body. Tartaglia takes advantage of the Deramo's

Turn to KING STAG, page 8

WHERE TO EAT BETWEEN COURSES
d'angelo sandwich shops
The Sandwich Specialists™
48 North Pleasant Street • Amherst • 256-4131
Next time you get hungry in between classes, come to D'Angelo for delicious subs, salads, wraps and pokkets. For over 30 years people have come to D'Angelo to get the freshest, tastiest sandwiches and salads around because they know that we use only the finest quality ingredients, and plenty of them. All served for a reasonable price and served quickly! That's why they call us The Sandwich Specialists!™
DELIVERY • CARRY OUT • DINE IN
SAVE $1.50 on the purchase of one large sub or two small subs/pokkets.
SAVE $5.00 on the purchase of three large subs. Great for study groups or instant parties!
SAVE $1.00 on the purchase of one medium sub.
Not valid with any other offers. Valid at participating locations only. Please mention coupon when ordering. Call for delivery availability and area. Taxes payable by bearer. Expires 10/15/99. # PL7617.
SUBS • POKKETS • WRAPS • SALADS

FREE EVENT
Ready for law school?
Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.
Wednesday, Oct 18th 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass
Presenter: Noted author & legal expert, Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD
To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.
Alumni Association
sponsored by:
KAPLAN barbri NLE

As a 23-year-old investment banker with Salomon Smith Barney, Paul Leung and his team were asked to compile a list of suggestions that would illustrate how the firm could improve in the eyes of its junior-level analysts. Paul wrote a blunt memo highlighting 36 different ways the firm could increase the quality of life for its analysts. Among the suggestions: an easing of the firm's dress code, improving relationships between senior and junior bankers, and a place "where we can relax when things get crazy." While most firms would have laughed in his face right before calling security, Salomon Smith Barney responded by meeting some of the requests immediately and refusing to dismiss any outright. To Paul's surprise, the memo was leaked around Wall Street. He soon found himself in a press storm—The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, CBS, and CNN all wanted to talk to this brash young man who had inspired the Street to adopt a casual-dress policy. Paul was asked to voice his opinion. He took that directive seriously, speaking his mind the only way he knew how, with passion and distinction. And while some of Wall Street's old-boy network might not like it, at Salomon Smith Barney, impact is not dependent upon job title.

"UNDERGRADUATES" ON OCTOBER 11TH, COME SHAKE OUR HAND & DISCOVER THE DIFFERENCE
When you meet us face-to-face, you'll understand what sets us apart from the field. We invite you to attend our recruitment presentation beginning at 7:30pm on Wednesday, October 11th at Willits Hallowell, at Mt. Holyoke College. Check with your career placement office for exact details, or visit us on the web at www.ssmb.com/careers/
SALOMON SMITH BARNEY
A member of citigroup
Imagine No Limits™
©2000 Salomon Smith Barney Inc. Members SIPC. Salomon Smith Barney® is a registered service mark of Salomon Smith Barney Inc. "Imagine No Limits"™ is a service mark of Salomon Smith Barney Inc. Salomon Smith Barney is an equal opportunity employer. M/F/D/V.

Stone Temple Pilots fly into Lowell

By David Traupes
Collegian Staff

STONE TEMPLE PILOTS
Tsongas Arena
Oct 5

The Stone Temple Pilots, one of grunge's greatest ambassadors (if not its greatest innovator), sold out the Tsongas Arena in Lowell last Thursday, but you wouldn't know it from the crowd that greeted Liquid Gang, the first of two opening acts. Thirty minutes of backlash thrash metal later, the crowd began to thicken in anticipation of Disturbed, the latest flavor-of-the-month metal act to roll off the assembly line. (Do I sound fed up? Jaded? Sick of the direction rock is going? You're damn right I am.)

An electric chair had been placed on the stage, and two robed and hooded men led Disturbed front man David Draiman to the chair and strapped him in. Strobe lights flashed, smoke rose and Draiman jittered in his seat. But wait! He wasn't dead after all, and the clusters of shirtless high school boys waiting for the cue to start moshing cheered and hollered as the immortally garbed singer rose from his seat to be joined by the rest of the band. They played a well-received 40-minute set culminating in their hit single "Stupify."

As the house lights came on and roadies scrambled to get Disturbed's equipment off stage a marked shift in crowd demographic took place: most of the high schoolers moved away from the stage (the best part of the show over to their minds, and an older crowd of grunge patrons filled in the gaps.

Finally, the lights dimmed again and the arena speakers blared "Wet My Bed," the oddball track from STP's 1992 debut, Core. As the song finished the curtains withdrew, and Scott Weiland, Dean DeLeo, Robert DeLeo, and Eric Kretz leapt into "Crackerman," also from Core, and followed this with "Vasoline" from their sophomore release, Purple.

Weiland, back on tour with the band after fulfilling his obligations to the most recent correctional facility to cross his path, writhed around on stage with delirious abandon and quickly shed his shirt and wide-brimmed hat, revealing a bubblegum-pink mohawk. He frequently made use of a megaphone to further modify his already plastic voice, and regularly encouraged the audience to sing along, or take over vocal duties altogether.

The band was in top form, with Weiland's vocal antics supported by the Kretz's muscular drumming and the DeLeo brothers' practiced and effortless guitar/bass combo.

The Pilots emphasized older material for most of the show, packing their set with such classics as "Meatplow," "Interstate Love Song" and "Sex Type Thing." They didn't touch their fourth and most recent album, No. 4, until the sixth song, when a smaller drum kit and stools were brought on stage for a two-song acoustic set, featuring the popular and uncharacteristic "Sour Girl" and the Core favorite "Creep." Other No. 4 material came in the sludgy rockers "No Way Out" and "Down."

STP's third album, Tiny Music, was regrettably under-represented. Their energetic single "Trippin' On a Hole in a Paper Heart" was present, but such other excellent and stylistically atypical tracks as "Lady Picture Show" and "Seven Caged Tigers" were omitted, leaving the set list without sufficient interruption of the entertaining but homogenous grunge tunes.

"We heard that before today, Creed held the record for the most people packed into this place," Weiland began between songs, easing into a mischievous grin. "Well, not anymore." Weiland did his best to connect with the crowd, mumbling compliments to the Boston music scene and how great it was to tour on the East coast again.

Not all of his banter worked out for the best, however. "Do you want to hear an old song, or a new song?" he asked the crowd, the band visibly chomping at the bit to begin. The cries arose for a new song. "What's that? You want to hear a new song? Okay, here's a brand new song." And they played "Plush," the much over-rotated single from Core. Yeah, real funny, Scott, but a new song would have been nice.

STP returned for one lengthy encore, during which the band invited first Draiman and then Godsmack vocalist Sully Erna on stage to duet with Weiland (Godsmack will be joining STP on later tour dates).

As the four members took their final bows at the front of the stage, Dean took a moment to remove the American flag Weiland had decided to wear around his waist (to the exclusion of all else), leaving the singer with nothing but two strategically placed hands to preserve his dignity. This worked, of course, until he turned around to walk off stage.

LAUREN BARON/COLLEGIAN

Scott Weiland and Stone Temple Pilots played at the Tsongas Arena in Lowell last Thursday

■ Kiss

continued from page 6

1970's catalogue infrequently, offering only a few songs ("I Still Love You," "Lick it up," "I Love it Loud") from the 1980's, the decade that saw them discard their makeup (and lose half of their audience). The one foray into their more recent offerings (the title track from 1998's reunion album Psycho Circus) fell flat when stacked beside such classics as "Do You Love Me," "Black Diamond," and "Love Gun."

Putting aside KISS' questionable musicianship, the spectacle that is a KISS concert has changed very little in three decades. Fireworks, billowing flames and blinding lights punctuated every song, overloading the audience's senses and disguising the band's mediocre playing. To be fair, KISS has never been about musicianship (this is the band after all that has written more songs about getting laid than Aerosmith). KISS is about performance and in that resect they still shine after nearly 30 years together. All the rock 'n' roll clichés were present in abundance – lots of "let me hear you say 'Yeah!'" chants, fawning over the audience ("You people showed all the critics who doubted KISS that they were wrong," singer Paul Stanley told the crowd), a bloated guitar solo, a bass solo, fans with lighters held high during the encores, even a final bow, in unison, by the band. The only thing missing was the drum solo, but I suspect that drummer Peter Criss was saving his energy for the pay-per-view final concert on Friday.

As they finished the show with a sing-along version of "Rock and Roll All Nite" I recalled my KISS experience from 23 years ago. I was 12 and hardly a big fan – in fact the tickets were a last minute gift and I only knew the song "Beth." I remember the 1970's concert more for being my first concert then the songs, for in all honesty I cannot recall a single song they played (it was such a loud experience that I didn't hear properly for days afterward). What I remember is the explosions, the risers that lifted Gene and Ace over the crowd, the billowing smoke, and lots of fireworks – the particular elements of the show.

Two decades later that first KISS show is still the litmus test I use for judging concerts. Other bands have offered more meaningful lyrics, better melodies, more appealing vocals, superior musicianship, but none in my experience offer a better show.

■ King Stag

continued from page 6

empty body, says the special words, moves into it, taking over the kingdom and the girl.

Deramo finds the body of an old man who Tartaglia, as Deramo, shot for no special reason. Deramo leaves the stag, enters the old man and returns to the kingdom to save the day.

Awfully compelling, isn't it? Well, it is a parable. Meant to teach us lessons about the importance of truth and all of that. I suppose it's good for the kiddies.

In choosing this show for production, the ART was probably banking on big name Julie Taymor's movement, costumes, masks and puppetry design. Taymor, of course, of Broadway's The Lion King fame. The King Stag did fulfill its spectacle quota, using standard Taymor creativity so far as the same kites-made-to-look-like-birds from the The Lion King were used. Perhaps her talents were best displayed in the moments of the stag puppet, operated by one of the many puppeteers clad in slightly disconcerting baby blue executioner garments. Her art is slightly over the top and has a place in what I consider a lesser, sometimes unfortunate forms of theater. But it is an art, and as seen by the elegant movements of a piece of silk cut out in the shape of a stag, it can be lovely.

Director Andrei Serban was clearly trying to invoke the roots of classical Asian dance and theater, with his characters in constant posturing and deliberate hand indications. For the audience members who didn't recognize this intertextuality, though, the play just looked like it was absurdly catering to an unintelligent crowd.

In The King Stag the stage isn't set up as though it were a mirror to the world. The knack its actors might have to portray real people in a real and powerful way was untapped. Its potential to speak to an audience about significant ideas in any context was lost. When libraries are full of contemporary works that can inspire an entirely new generation to the theater, I have a hard time understanding why any company, especially one with the resources of the ART, would prefer to do a show like this one.

Write for Collegian Arts...you're a dandy if you do.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

A great place to get contact lenses

FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year-warranty on frames

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

GOLDEN KEY NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

The Golden Key National Honor Society

Meeting on October 11, 2000
Herter Hall Room 116
@ 7:00 p.m.

Bring a Donation for the Make a Difference Day Food and Clothes Drive

General Membership Meeting

GOLDEN KEY NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

Campus Awareness Days

9:30am - 3:00pm

•Wednesday October 11
•Thursday October 12
•Friday October13

Campus Center Concourse

*SCHOLARSHIP * LEADERSHIP * FELLOWSHIP*

ΦΣΠ

PHI SIGMA PI
COEDUCATIONAL NATIONAL HONOR FRATERNITY

If you have a 3.2 or higher GPA and between 12 and 90 credits, please come to our informational meeting

Tuesday October 10th 6-7pm in Dukes
(left of Student Union Ballroom)
Wednesday October 11th 7-8 pm SOM 106
(remember Wednesday is a Monday schedule)

*SCHOLARSHIP * LEADERSHIP * FELLOWSHIP*

ELEMENTARY CHILDREN IN LOW-INCOME AREAS ARE READING THREE GRADES BEHIND THEIR SUBURBAN PEERS.

LIZ DWYER'S THIRD GRADERS BEGAN THE YEAR THAT FAR BEHIND. IN ONE YEAR, SHE'S CAUGHT THEM UP AND PUT THEM ON A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD.

WE NEED MORE LIZ DWYERS.

OME LEARN HOW YOU CAN JOIN THE CORPS OF OUTSTANDING AND DIVERSE RECENT COLLEGE GRADUATES OF ALL ACADEMIC MAJORS WHO COMMIT TWO YEARS TO TEACH IN OUR NATION'S MOST UNDER-RESOURCED SCHOOLS.

INFORMATION SESSION
Wednesday, October 11, 2000 • 7:00 p.m.
University of Massachusetts, Amherst
604 Goodell

TEACHFORAMERICA
1-800-TFA-1230 WWW.TEACHFORAMERICA.ORG
FIRST APPLICATION DEADLINE IS OCTOBER 30, 2000

Field Hockey peeled apart by SU Orangewomen

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Defense can't win every game. And although the Massachusetts field hockey team turned in another fine defensive performance this past Saturday against Syracuse, it failed to conquer its offensive demons and lost the game 1-0.

Syracuse	1
UMass	0

To make matters worse, the No. 7 Minutewomen (9-1) completely outplayed the Orangewomen (8-5), out shooting their opponents 10-3 and winning the penalty corner battle 8-5.

However, they were unable to counter a goal by Syracuse freshman forward Emily Smith, who snuck in a rebound off a Colleen Cech shot with 33:15 remaining in the second half to give her team the lead for good. It was Smith's third goal of the year and proved to be the difference in the game.

"We outplayed them," said senior forward Kristen Schmidt. "We just made stupid decisions at the wrong times."

At the beginning of the first half, it looked like UMass would easily continue its four-game winning streak by constantly pressuring the Orangewomen defense, but the offense failed to take advantage of all its opportunities and was unable to get the ball past goalie Audrey Latsko. Latsko ended the day with 10 pivotal saves, and was able to pick up her third consecutive shutout.

"In the first 30 minutes we were all over them," said UMass goalie Ziwie Tucker, who finished the game with two saves. "But it was one of those days we couldn't put the ball in the net. The game kind of goes like that sometimes. We had plenty of opportunities, but didn't capitalize. I guess we weren't hungry enough."

At the end of the game, UMass mounted another furious offensive rally, but it was not to be, and when the horn sounded to signify the end of the contest, the Maroon and White had failed to knot the goal that would have moved the game to overtime.

It was the Minutewomen's first loss since a 2-0 defeat on Sept. 16 at the hands of No. 1 Maryland.

"I'm disappointed," said Tucker. "Now we have to pick ourselves up. This week in practice we are basically rebuilding."

"We have to grow from it," said Schmidt. "This brings us back to the beginning. I can now say it is the start of a new season."

The loss to Syracuse continued the streak of close low scoring games the Maroon and White has been playing in of late. After dismantling Albany 3-0 on Sept. 21, the Minutewomen won three consecutive one-point contests against Harvard (1-0), Connecticut (2-1) and Boston University (2-1).

Minutewomen spike Duquesne out of Pioneer Valley

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Sit back, relax, and strap on your seatbelts.

October brings with it a list of Atlantic 10 foes looking to defeat the Massachusetts women's volleyball team in its home arena, and on Saturday night, the Minutewomen evened up their A-10 record at threes while playing the role of the unwelcoming host to Duquesne.

The Dukes (11-7, 2-3 A-10) arrived in the Pioneer Valley on Saturday looking to sneak out with a quick victory, but the Minutewomen would have nothing to do with that.

Duquesne got off to a slow start with some skopps play early in the first match, and UMass capitalized immediately. Picking up where they left off against URI in their last home match, the Minutewomen snagged the momentum early. Senior captain Rebecca Hasson, the centerpiece of the Maroon and White offense, made her presence known early in the night. Hasson, who notched 23 kills overall, helped UMass get an 11-7 lead, but the Dukes wouldn't go down easy. They came back to tie things up at 11's, which forced Head Coach Bonnie Kenny to call time. The Minutewomen regrouped, and with timely help off the bench from freshmen Maddie Kamanao and Kelly Lewis, were able to notch the overtime win by two, 17-15.

"Ku [Kamanao] did a good job of getting us back in it," Kenny said of the Hawaiian native. "And our defense was excellent."

The second game wasn't any easier for the Minutewomen, and this time the Dukes proved too much to handle. UMass got into a hole early, 10-5, until Janeen DeMarte was able to put up a couple key serves that led to big points and a short lived lead.

"Janeen was a fighter, and she got better as the match went on," Kenny said of the junior from Texas who added a score of digs to her resume.'

DeMarte would get the Maroon and White to 12-11, but Duquesne wouldn't go quietly, getting the serve back and with it, putting up four straight points to steal the win from the clutches of the Minutewomen.

Limaric Hovet, the junior co-captain, stepped up big for the Minutewomen and brought the momentum back in the third stanza. Hovet posted up enough money serves to help the Maroon and White take an early 7-1 lead. Duquesne, once again, wouldn't go down easy and battled back to come within two at 10-8. But the Minutewomen displayed a great deal of resilience and put up five straight points, highlighted by an ace from freshman Lindsay Bailey to end the match.

"Lindsay Bailey has come along and she's staying with the pace of the ball," said Kenny. "Limaric hit on the right side well."

Hovet would keep up her strong play in the fourth set and help take UMass out of an early hole by evening things up at four. UMass had the Dukes on the ropes all game long, but Duquesne wouldn't quit. Senior Jenni Drennan, who played strong all night setting the ball for Hasson, notched a big point of her own to put the Minutewomen at game, set, match for the evening. Hovet would nail the last point of the night to finish off a fine personal performance, which featured 15 kills.

"This is the best Duquesne team I've seen; Duquesne played hard," Kenny said. "Our energy was low. We didn't have a good week of practice; we're better than how we played tonight. A win is a win."

The Minutewomen have an important week of practice ahead of them, with Temple, one of the best teams in the A-10, coming to Amherst on Friday.

"I thought we fought hard," said Kenny. "I love to win and this was a good win."

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

The Thrill of Victory

No. 13 Katelyn Jones celebrates with a teammate after the Minutewomen pulled off a win this past weekend.

■ hockey

continued from page 11

Johnson at the start of the period, was beat when a wrist-shot by Brian Tahey from just inside the red line was redirected by a UMass player and beat the senior. Helanen made 20 saves in his lone period of action.

The Minutemen had five different players notch goals in the contest while Wisconsin saw eight different players light the red light (Granato had two goals).

"I like the balance of our scoring," Sauer said. "We had a lot of different people score, which is a real positive."

The game was best summed up in the post-game press conference:

"It was one of those tapes that you think about watching, but it will probably end up in the bottom of the garbage can," Sauer said. "I knew it was going to be sloppy just because of the way, initial game and guys are all hyped up to play.

"I'm sure that [UMass] was the same way in terms of anxious and all of those types of things."

■ Wisconsin

continued from page 11

"We're a better team as a result of the competition, a better team for having a couple of high caliber games under our belt," Cahoon said. "The alternative is to play a lesser opponent, but you're certainly not going to learn as much about your program and you're certainly not going to elevate your game by doing so."

"Those are the things that we have to bring from this – that we've played in a hostile environment against a team that is ranked among the top five in the country," he added. "We've played two nights back to back in October, and there are some positives to take out of it."

Sauer also felt that the two games were a solid way to start the season, even after recording an ugly win on Friday night.

"The best thing about the weekend was that it was kind of two completely different games," he said. "We got a lot of practice in areas that you don't usually practice early in the season. We've done things in practice that you can't simulate game conditions for, but this was great because it gave us a lot of opportunity to practice some things that we hadn't done yet."

■ football

continued from page 14

fourth and 18 from the UMass 23. Holder Galli took the snap and shoveled the ball to NU fullback Sean Connor, who tried to crash through the weak side but was met immediately by Smith and linebacker Joe Ferrer for a 1-yard loss.

"They tried to run up the middle, away from the block side," Smith said. "They ran right into the strength of our line. We had focused all week on being more aggressive, and we made the play." Brown said it was less a case of gambling and more lack of faith in the Husky field goal unit.

"Unless the ball is on the ground inside the 20, we're wasting our time," Brown said. "Anywhere outside, I'm not comfortable that we're going to knock it through. I thought we could slip Connor up inside, but they did a good job defending it."

The timely play gave UMass a lift that it parlayed into another quality drive, going 76 yards in 13 plays highlighted by three DeShon Hardy catches. The drive appeared to end in a 22-yard Doug White field goal, but the Huskies were flagged for roughing the kicker and UMass capitalized with a 2-yard Quinlan plunge to take a 14-10 lead with 14:20 remaining.

"Obviously, we gave them some momentum running into the kicker," Brown said. "Instead of a tie, it's a touchdown."

Northeastern didn't seem too fazed by the mistake, stringing together a frighteningly efficient 53-yard drive to set up a first down at the UMass 19. But cornerback Shawn Murray shen made emends for an earlier late hit penalty by handcuffing NU's Dave Klemic and keeping the Huskies out of the end-zone. Galli's desperate heave on fourth and 11 fell short, leaving UMass with a chance to nail shut the coffin.

The job of swinging the hammer was left to Quinlan, who took the sideline to pad the UMass cushion to 21-10. NU backup QB Adam Browne would put up a meaningless TD as time expired, leaving the Huskies a mere five points away from the redemption they so craved.

"The bottom line is that close is not good enough; it's not what we're looking for," Brown said. "My thing, since I came here, has been to make a statement about Northeastern football. Talent wise, we've got enough to get over the hump."

Whipple saw the contest as a crucial step toward returning the Minutemen to the championship form that has evaded them thus far in 2000.

"It was a great team-building win," Whipple said. "We overcame a lot of things in a place where it's difficult to play. That's the great thing about this game, and about life: giving kids more confidence."

The team hits the gridiron again this Saturday, when it hosts A-10 rival Maine in a 1 p.m. Family Day matchup.

■ Quinlan

continued from page 14

was meaningless. With less than two minutes to go in the contest, the Massachusetts offense lined up at midfield with the purpose of controlling the ball and preserving the 14-10 lead.

Coach Whipple called Quinlan's number for the 38th and final time in the game. Seibert took the snap and gave the ball to his halfback on a weak side sweep. Quinlan beat the entire Husky defense to the corner, then proceeding to burn past two NU defensive backs on the way to his second touchdown of the game. The 50-yard scamper gave UMass a much-needed 11-point lead as the game ended up closer than expected after Northeastern scored a late touchdown.

After the game Coach Whipple talked about his running back's career day and days past, saying, "The first time I saw him play I was recruiting him at Malden Catholic. I saw the little 5-11 I-T banging it up on a cold Wednesday night."

Quinlan played the game of his career on Saturday afternoon in front of some familiar fans, as he grew up only a few miles away. When asked about the hometown support he responded by saying, "It helped me focus a little more."

He did more than focus, as the Massachusetts native put up All-American numbers in a close game. "I knew he was gonna play well," Whipple said of Quinlan, who has since been crowned A-10 Player of the Week. Quinlan didn't just play well; he shone for a team that looked like it was fresh out of stars.

St. Joe's and Temple sent back to Philly by surging Minutewomen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

A 3-0 loss to Rhode Island in the Atlantic 10 opener back on Sept. 17 could have spelled trouble for the Massachusetts women's soccer team. In a game that the Minutewomen dominated for most of the 90 minutes, it was the host Rams who left the URI Soccer Complex victorious.

Since that loss, however, UMass has played some of its best soccer of the season. In fact, the Minutewomen had won three of four contests heading into last weekend's tilts with St. Joseph's and Temple.

Now that streak can be extended to five wins in six tries, as UMass [8-5, 4-1 in the Atlantic 10] swept a pair from the Philadelphia schools over the weekend.

"After we woke up in the second half of the Rhode Island game, everything has gone well," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "This team knows where its bread is buttered – that's in the conference. Everything before that was just preparation [for the Atlantic 10 games]."

On Friday, St. Joe's nearly squeezed out a tie in another game that the Minutewomen dominated. That is, almost came away with a point until sophomore defender Holly Wildenhaus netted the game-winner in the second overtime to propel the home team to a 2-1 win.

"St. Joe's did give us a scare," Rudy said. "But it was probably the best attacking without finishing that we've had all year. We had 24 goal scoring chances within 15 yards."

Kara Green tallied an unassisted goal just under five minutes into the game, but the Hawks eventually knotted the game on a goal by Katie Watson early in the second half. The game stayed that way until Wildenhaus netted her first collegiate goal off a gutsy effort in front of the SJU goal.

"At the last minute their coach [John Byford] decided to start Christy Ganc, and she was spectacular," Rudy said. "None of her saves were of the ordinary variety, they were all big time stops. She kept St. Joe's in it for 114 minutes."

"Ultimately, it took a team that is the sum of its parts [to win the game]," added Rudy. "A seldom-used player in Holly came on and rode through a rackle to win the ball and bury it in the far corner. Here's a kid who has been working hard to get back into a starting role, and it was nice to see her score. I was very happy for her."

Two days later, the UMass offense rose to the occasion, keyed by a three-goal effort from junior midfielder Katelyn Jones. Freshman Amy Mink also added a pair in a 6-0 win over the Owls.

Anna Morozuk added the other goal for the Minutewomen. Goalkeepers Julie Podhrasky and Kelly Nigh split time to combine for the shutout.

SOUPer BOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads
96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

UNBLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Preparing Mental Health Practitioners for Multiple-Role Practice
Meet Clinical and Applied Psychology Faculty at an Information Session
Thursday, October 12, 6 p.m.
The Jones Library
43 Amity Street, Amherst, MA
Join an informal discussion with faculty about the changing landscape of the mental health profession, the nature and scope of our unique, practice-based master's and doctoral psychology programs, and potential career paths.
Antioch New England
GRADUATE SCHOOL
Please RSVP to 603-357-6265 Keene, NH www.antiochne.edu

Countdown to mid-night madness...
3 Days

Hockey drops pair in Madison

Minutemen unable to skate by third-ranked Badgers

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

MADISON, WI – It was a night of firsts for the Massachusetts hockey team. The debut of Head Coach Don Cahoon, the inaugural game in a Minuteman uniform for sophomore Binnie Callahan and freshmen Thomas Poeck, Mike Warner and Scott Horvath and the first game of the season.

Wisconsin	9
UMass	6

Unfortunately for the Maroon and White, its night of firsts fell victim to the vaunted attack of No. 3 Wisconsin in a 9-6 loss at the Kohl Center.

The crowd of 10,490 was treated to a 10-goal explosion in the second period (Wisconsin 6, UMass 4) in a fast-paced end-to-end 20 minutes.

"In the second period [Wisconsin] made some nice plays," Cahoon said. "Defensively, we made a couple of bad turnovers. [Wisconsin] probably thought that once they scored a couple goals the whole thing was going to fall apart."

With the score tied at two midway through the middle frame, Erik Jensen scored a goal that gave the Badgers a lead; a lead they would never relinquish. The native of Madison tallied on a pass from Andy Wheeler and Mike Cermgila for the first if three consecutive Wisconsin goals in a span of 1:49.

The Badgers added to their moments later when All-American Dans Heatles converted on the power play. But the Badgers flurry would not end there, as Kent Davydiuke scored to pad the lead once again.

"That's just the way the scoring went, how there were defensive breakdowns all over the place," Cahoon said. "That's what happens early in the season."

But just as it had done earlier UMass (0-1-0) battled back when Horvath scored his first goal as a Minutemen to cut the Badger lead to 5-3. The Horvath tally seemed to open the floodgates at the 10:17 mark as a barrage ensued and the end result was an 8-5 Badger lead at period's end.

In a span of 1:54, the two teams combined for five goals, three for the Big Red and two for the Minutemen.

Three minutes later, Kevin Granato pushed the Wisconsin lead to three again when he scored from the doorstep off a great feed from Mark Jackson. But as the puck was dropped on the subsequent faceoff Tim Turner scored the first of his two goals on the night to inch closer to the Badgers.

Wisconsin refused to be outdone, as Wheeler answered right back by scoring his first goal of the season. But again the Maroon and White responded, as Turner netted his second goal of the contest.

But as UMass was celebrating the tally, Dan Boeser scored to close out the second period.

"That second period was just wild," Wisconsin Head Coach Jeff Sauer said. "It was like a pond hockey game, back-and-forth both ways.

"It was a nightmare from Graham [Melanson]. You can't fault him on any of [the goals]," Sauer said. "We just didn't do a good job."

Melanson, who posted a 31-9-3 record last year and posted a goals-against average of a little over two allowed all of the Minuteman tallies. It was the first time since his freshman campaign that he had allowed six or more goals in a game.

Both teams looked to be tentative when they came out of the locker rooms for the opening period of the season. The ever-dangerous Badger power play punched in its first of three goals on the night. Assistant captain Alex Brooks pinched in and converted from the left face-off circle. Brooks was the beneficiary of a great cross-ice pass from Brad Winchester for the game's first goal.

With the Minutemen trailing 1-0 the Maroon and White fell victim to the games most bizarre goal when a clearing pass from Jedd Crumb hit the skate of J.R. Zavisza and bounced over the shoulder of UMass goalie Mike Johnson to put the hosts up by two.

"The second goal we scored was a very, very lucky goal," Sauer said. "There were a lot of odd goals scored tonight."

UMass' lone goal of the first period came when Callahan scored his first collegiate goal. The sophomore, who sat out last season because of an NCAA Clearinghouse violation, dented the home with assists being credited to Jeff and Tim Turner.

Early in the third period, it seemed as though UMass would finish its comeback when Toni Soderholm scored on a slapshot from the slot to cut into the Badger lead once again.

Trailing 8-6 the Minutemen looked poised to get over the hump, but another fluke goal by Wisconsin spelled the beginning of the end for the Maroon and White.

Markus Helanen, who came in relief of

Turn to HOCKEY page 10

COURTESY WISCONSIN MEDIA RELATIONS

Wisconsin goalie Graham Melanson was like a different person in each of his two games against UMass, allowing six goals in the first contest and shutting out the Minutemen in the second.

UMass falls in low scoring affair; gives Wisconsin early season test

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

MADISON, WI – For a pair of clubs that held their opponents to under three goals per game last season, Friday night's 9-6 shootout between the Massachusetts and Wisconsin hockey teams was a total aberration.

Instead, Saturday's second game of the series fit the bill a bit better. An individual showdown between goaltenders Markus Helanen of UMass and Wisconsin's Graham Melanson took center stage, but it was the latter that left the Kohl Center with a 3-0 victory.

Wisconsin	3
UMass	0

The Badgers received goals from David Hukalo and Jeff Dessner in the opening 5:24 to jump out to a 2-0 lead. Those two tallies were more than enough for Melanson, who bounced back from a shaky outing on Friday to pitch a shutout this time around.

"I talked to him when he came out last night during the third period," Wisconsin hockey coach Jeff Sauer said. "I just told him 'Relax, it's not your fault. You're going to go again tomorrow night, so just go out and shake it off.'"

"Every Saturday morning when we have a bad Friday night, the first thing that I say at our meeting on Saturday is that the sun came up," added Sauer. "It [the previous night's game] is over with, and you can't do anything about it, so let's get ready for tonight. I think that Graham approached it with that attitude."

The Plymouth, Nova Scotia product made 32 saves on the night for Wisconsin, a performance that came only 24 hours after he allowed six goals against the Minutemen. However, in game two of the series, Melanson showed why he is a two-time All-Western Collegiate Hockey Association pick with a host of stellar stops.

"We had chances to capitalize, to tighten the score up in the second period, but we didn't," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "We spent a lot of energy killing penalties and ended up with 10 forwards on the bench. That came to be a little bit of an issue as the game went on."

Meanwhile, over in the other end of the rink, Helanen was doing his best to keep the Minutemen in the game. The Vantaa, Finland native kept the contest close until late in the final period, as Matt Doman's power play goal with 9:51 remaining proved to be too much for UMass to overcome. All in all, Helanen made 38 stops in his first start of the season.

However, even the strong effort of the senior netminder couldn't ensure a victory for the Minutemen on this night.

"They clearly have a high skill level and they have some premier players," said Cahoon of Wisconsin. "You can see at times where they can really get it going and where they can make it difficult on the opposition. It's really difficult to defense against them down low."

"They're going to be one of the top teams," he added. "How well they mesh as a team will tell how far they go."

Hukalo opened the scoring a mere 25 seconds into the game off a pass from Dany Heatley in the high slot. Then, just over five minutes later, Dessner lit the lamp on a bid from the point that snuck past Helanen.

Overall, the pair of losses over the weekend proved to be an inopportune start to Cahoon's regime as head coach of the Minutemen. Nevertheless, it was an important early season test against one of the top squads in the nation.

Turn to WISCONSIN page 10

©reation
How should we protect the rights of artists in a digital world? Get the online music debate from a different point-of-view.
ARTISTS AGAINST PIRACY
www.ArtistsAgainstPiracy.com

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director UHS Eye Care Services

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART-TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, eml Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas: Administrative Support Data Entry Operator Entry Level Management Front Office Support Customer Service Representative CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com Corporate Staffing Solutions 126 Northampton Street, Suite G Easthampton, MA 01027 (413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001 Cancun, Bahamas, Mardi Gras, Jamaica, Florida, Padre, Barbados Book Trips & Travel Free Call Campus Representative 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise? You Found the Place! It is Easy! Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCCH & HSCN
14	Internatonal
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gonet to Genet
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 10, 2000

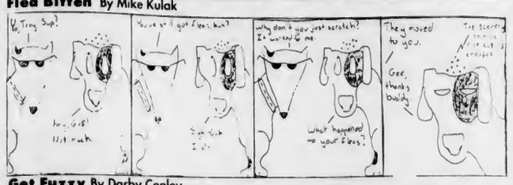
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Bedge	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Building Big (N) (Part 2 of 5) ⓒ		Frontline "Drug Wars" (N) (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 2) ⓒ				30 Second Candidate ⓒ
WFSB	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Legacy" (N) ⓒ		60 Minutes II (Season Premiere)		Judging Amy "Zero Tolerance"		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ	4	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Legacy" (N) ⓒ		60 Minutes II (Season Premiere)		Judging Amy "Zero Tolerance"		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Gideon's Crossing "The Gift"		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Buffy the Vampire Slayer ⓒ		Angel "Final Impressions" (N) ⓒ		News ⓒ		Friends ⓒ	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 1 -- Teams TBA				News		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Choices" ⓒ		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	★★½ "Seven" (1995, Suspense) Brad Pitt. (In Stereo) ⓒ				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra ⓒ	Hollywood	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 1 -- Teams TBA				News		Friends ⓒ	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	70s Show	Titus (N) ⓒ	Dark Angel "Heat" (In Stereo)		News		Friends ⓒ	Fraser ⓒ
WWLP	22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 1 -- Teams TBA				News ⓒ		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Building Big (N) (Part 2 of 5) ⓒ		Frontline "Drug Wars" (N) (In Stereo) (Part 2 of 2) ⓒ				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB	28	News ⓒ	ABC News	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Gideon's Crossing "The Gift"		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK		Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	★★½ "Seven" (1995, Suspense) Brad Pitt. (In Stereo) ⓒ				Fraser ⓒ	Med Abt. You	Spin City ⓒ	Spin City ⓒ
WTBS	72	Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Thunderball" (1965, Adventure) Sean Connery, Claudine Auger.						"You Only Live Twice" (1967)
A&E		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order ⓒ		Biography: Ben Vereen		American Justice		Investigative Reports ⓒ		Law & Order ⓒ
CNN	43	Worldview ⓒ	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	World Today ⓒ		Larry King Live ⓒ		Newsstand ⓒ		Sports	Moneyline ⓒ
COM	39	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money	★½ "Mother's Navy" (1997, Comedy) Tom Arnold, Tim Curry.				Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money
DISC	40	Wild Discovery: Monkeys		Wild Discovery: Indonesia		On the Inside "Killer Floods"		New Detectives (N)		FBI Files "Killing Spree"		Justice Files "Fatal Attraction"
ESPN	41	Sportscenter ⓒ		Outside the Lines		PBA Bowling: Canandaigua Open. (Live)				Wonderful World of Golf (N)		Sportscenter ⓒ
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Silencing Mary" (1998, Drama) Melissa Joan Hart. ⓒ				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31	Direct Effect	Making-Video	TRL (In Stereo) ⓒ		2Gether		Jackass		Real World ⓒ	Real World ⓒ	Real World ⓒ	2gether
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Thornberrys		Facts of Life	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Facts of Life	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family
SCIFI	45	Sliders "Dragon Slide" ⓒ		Babylon 5 "Believers" ⓒ		Batman ⓒ	Batman ⓒ	Batman ⓒ	Batman ⓒ	Batman ⓒ	Batman ⓒ	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	28	Greatest Magician: Houdini		Operation "Pituitary Tumor"		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Science of Sex-Aim		Science of Sex: Why Ie		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	42	ER "Match Made in Heaven" ⓒ		Pretender "Nip and Tuck" ⓒ		"Baby" (2000, Drama) Farrah Fawcett. (In Stereo) ⓒ				Bull "The Duck Hit" (N) ⓒ		ER "Sins of the Fathers" ⓒ
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		JAG "Embassy" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Downtime" ⓒ		"Shark Attack III" (2000, Action) Nikita Ayer. (In Stereo)				Strip Poker	Martin ⓒ
HBO	51	★★ "Entrapment" (1999, Suspense) Sean Connery. PG-13 ⓒ				★★★½ "Three Kings" (1999, Comedy-Drama) George Clooney. R				Real Sports (N) ⓒ		Sex and-City	G-String Divas
MAX	49	(4:30)		★★★ "Coming to America" (1988, Comedy) Eddie Murphy. R ⓒ		★½ "Rumi" (1991, Drama) Patrick Dempsey. R ⓒ		★★½ "Heartbreak Ridge" (1986, Drama) Clint Eastwood. R ⓒ
SHOW	55	★★ "The Cowboy Way" (1994) Woody Harrelson. PG-13 ⓒ				★ "The Mod Squad" (1999, Action) Claire Danes. (In Stereo) R ⓒ		Beggars and Choosers ⓒ				★★½ "I Want You" (1998) R ⓒ

Dilbert By Scott Adams

FROM NOW ON, THIS IS GOING TO BE A FUN ORGANIZATION.
WHEN ARE YOU LEAVING?
I HAD NO IDEA THAT A RUBBER CHICKEN COULD HURT SO MUCH
www.dilbert.com
dilbert@unitedmedia.com
© 2000 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SIR, I CAN'T ALLOW YOU ONTO THE GOLF COURSE UNTIL YOU CLOTHE YOUR CAT
WHAT? HE'S A CAT--HE'S ALWAYS NAKED
I'M NOT ASHAMED OF MY BODY
SORRY, RULES ARE RULES
WHAT IF I PUT A HAT ON HIM?
I'M TIGGER WOODS
WELL, AS FAR AS THE CLUB IS CONCERNED, YOU'RE A NAKED "TIGGER WOODS."
COOL

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ, YOU? THE TOURT? NO WAY YOU CAN HOLD UP! THE COMPETITION... THE PRESSURE... THE GRUELING PACE...
GRUELING? GOLF? GIMME A BREAK!
RJ... NO CARTS. YOU HAVE TO WALK ALL 18 HOLES.
WHAT?! THAT'S RIDICULOUS. WHY, THE NEXT THING YOU'LL TELL ME IS WE CAN'T USE...
NO SUPERBALLS?!!

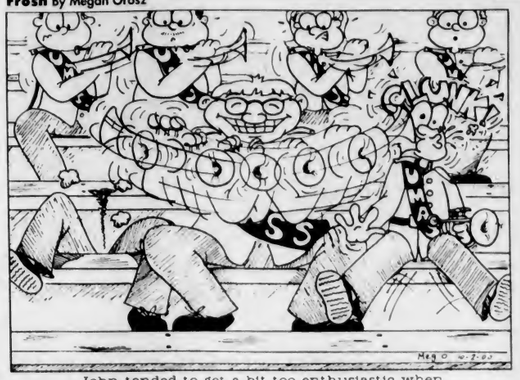
Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – What you want may be as close to you as merely asking the right people for it. Today, most problems are less complicated than they appear.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You'll enjoy an opportunity to express yourself in ways you have only imagined in the past. Numerous doors are opening up for you at this time.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Career pressures cannot be avoided, but today you can put them aside and locus on the more pleasant aspects of your life. Make time for others.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Travel plans may have to changes slightly, but you'll discover that last-minute alterations only serve to enhance your en-route enjoyment.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – What appeared out of reach only yesterday will loom ahead of you today larger than life. A little determination can bring you big rewards.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You are able to derive a great deal of strength and inspiration from those closest to you today – but only if you acknowledge your own weakness.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may be closer to sealing a pact or making a new personal commitment today than you had expected. Things are picking up in pace and meaning.
TAURUS (April 20- May 20) – You may find that you and a fierce rival are actually quite compatible when it comes to things that have little or nothing to do with work.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may have to wade through numerous meaningless messages today before you can get to the one that can really make a difference to you.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Questions about an upcoming career move may not be answered with ease today – but you'll be able to illuminate certain key choices.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Questions of policy and other official issues may not be easily avoided today. Fortunately, you seem to have an answer for everything!
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) –This may be an unusually unimaginative day for you – but you can still reap considerable benefits from an unexpected opportunity

Amherst Weather

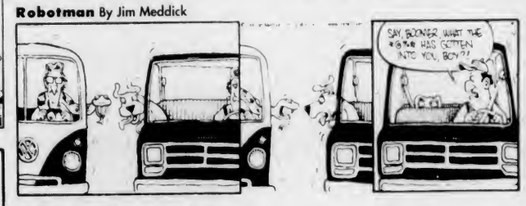
Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 35	HIGH: 50 LOW: 34	HIGH: 57 LOW: 35

Frosh By Megan Orosz

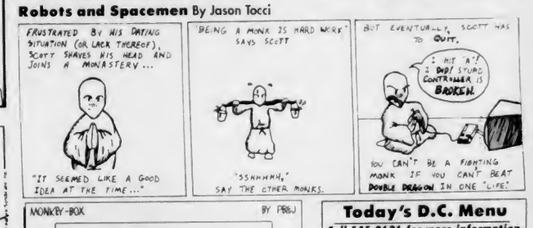


John tended to get a bit too enthusiastic when swinging his horn during "Fight Mass"

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci



FRUSTRATED BY HIS DATING SITUATION (OR LACK THEREOF), SCOTT SHAVES HIS HEAD AND JOINS A MONASTERY...
"IT SEEMED LIKE A GOOD IDEA AT THE TIME..."
BEING A MONK IS HARD WORK, SAYS SCOTT
"SSHHHH," SAY THE OTHER MONKS.
BUT EVENTUALLY, SCOTT HAS TO QUIT.
I HIT A 2 POINT STUDD CONTAINER IS BROKEN.
YOU CAN'T BE A FIGHTING MONK IF YOU CAN'T BEAT DOUBLE DRAGON IN ONE LIFE!

MONKEY-BOX BY PBRJ

LUCIFER WASN'T BLESSED WITH GOD'S BOOMING VOICE, SO HE WAS FORCED TO RESORT TO ARTIFICIAL AMPLIFICATION - PSALMS 6:66 © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"I ain't got nothin' against the press; they wouldn't print it if it wasn't true."

-Joe Jackson

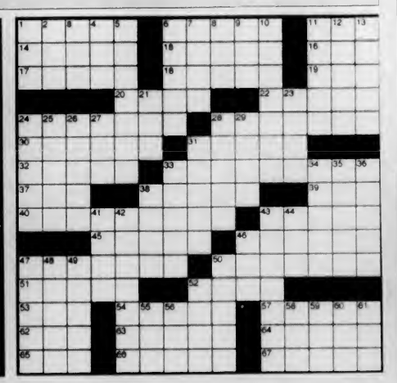
ACROSS
1 Written reminders
6 Bitten
11 — Apple Roman road
14 Wide open
15 Busan's country
16 Unusual
17 Seattle and New York
18 Bandleader Desi
19 August sign
20 Ciov
22 Author — Allan Poe
24 Dream up
26 Free
28 Frontier establishment
31 Net fabric
32 Writer Chekhov
33 Arty places
37 Anecdote collection
38 Blazes
39 Chilly and damp
40 Paper product
43 Actress Garbo
45 O. Henry's forte
46 More conceited
47 Seek advice
50 Praises
51 Brightly colored fish
52 Fuzzy fruit
53 "— Miserables"
54 Rider's outfit
57 Deserves
62 Morsel
63 Overjoy
64 Type of sailing vessel
65 Vote against
66 Was brave
67 — bear

DOWN
1 Explorer's need
2 Type of trip?
3 Spoil
4 Make a choice
5 Meeting
6 Travel on ice
7 Ripped
8 Vase
9 Teachers' org
10 Antelope
11 Europe's longest river
12 Brainstorms
13 Love dearly
21 Actress — Margret
23 Forest creature
24 Musician Hayes
25 Food from heaven
26 Bride's destination
27 Gunk
28 Governed
29 Additions
31 Linger
33 King-size
34 Purine of films
35 Gobbled up
36 Meadow
38 Deceive
41 Bowl or saucer
42 Grazed against
43 Plucksert
44 Wheel part
46 Oath
47 Punctuation mark
48 Met offering
49 Bad-tempered
50 Gave as an example
52 Lightweight toy
55 Pie — mode
56 Prohibit
58 Malt beverage
59 Pole
60 Head motion
61 Secret agent

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-7-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

THE BEST DEAL AROUND (SINCE YOUR MOM LEFT TOWN) THE HANGAR Pub and Grill 55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich

Manicotti

Vegetable Sloppy Joe (vegan) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Dinner

Roast Beef with Black Pepper Crust

Chicken Breast with Rice Stuffing

Greek Pita with Tahini (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Brian McDermott
Copy Editor	Melissa Hommel
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak, Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff	Alan Basque

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass football weathers Northeastern storm

Injury plagued Minutemen pull out gritty win at NU

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE – If the Massachusetts football team managed to make a statement on Saturday at Northeastern, it was that no amount of adversity is a match for guts and effort.

The Minutemen (3-2, 2-2 Atlantic 10) lost their third wide receiver of the season to injury. They lined up without their biggest backfield weapon and with a fresh face at signal caller. They faced off with their old defensive coordinator calling the shots from the opposite sideline at Parsons Field. And in the end they held on to beat the Huskies 21-16.

"This game was played with a lot more emotion than anyone who hasn't been close to UMass would know about," head coach Mark Whipple said. "Nobody's going to lay down for UMass. I think my guys know that. I hope they know it."

With UMass' Marcel Shipp still nursing an ankle sprain, backup Kevin Quinlan stepped into the lineup and had a career day (241 yards rushing, two touchdowns) at the expense of the Huskies. Quarterback Kelly Seibert turned in a solid outing by orchestrating a pair of long touchdown drives and breaking the Maroon and White's interception curse (nine picks in its first four games).

Northeastern (3-3, 0-3 A-10) no doubt entered the game with lingering memories of last year's 77-0 thrashing at McGuirk Stadium, and managed to exorcise some demons by running the opening kickoff back for a touchdown. The play started with NU's Rocco Rinaldi fielding the kick and running tentatively to his right, then ended with teammate Andy Alsup taking the ball on a reverse and sprinting down the left sideline for the score.

Quinlan's groundwork was about the only thing clicking for the UMass offense early, and the team took a tremendous blow on the first play of its fourth possession with 1:39 to go in the first quarter. Seibert tried hooking up with All-Conference wideout Adrian Zullo on a fly pattern along the left sideline, but the receiver got tangled up with Husky defensive backs William Griffin and T.J. Hill as the three converged on the ball. Zullo was helped off the field with what would later be diagnosed as tendon damage.

"Coming in, we knew Shipp was questionable," Hill said. "But when Zullo went down, we felt like that was their number one and two guns out. We had the advantage personnel-wise."

The Huskies failed to capitalize on that advantage, and their third-straight punt set up Seibert and company for an 11-play, 57-yard march down to the NU four. The sophomore then faked a handoff and bootlegged right, with only Husky Excell Walker standing between him and the endzone. Seibert tucked in the football and tried to go airborne over the NU corner, who slammed the UMass signal caller to the turf and recovered the ensuing fumble. Instead of surrendering a touchdown, the Huskies earned a touchback and the Minutemen went back to the drawing board.

"That was a huge play," Whipple said. "Kelly could have ducked his head, but he didn't. And he came right back and said 'let's go.'"

But before Seibert could atone for his bobble, Northeastern put together a 93-yard drive that ended in a 24-yard Joe Connolly field goal and a 10-0 lead. The series was highlighted by a 41-yard run by NU junior L.J. McManus, who hit a seam off-tackle right and would have gone the distance if not for UMass free safety Jeremy Robinson.

"L.J. is the real deal," said NU coach Don Brown. "He's all means and elbows, a hard-nosed blue collar running back. He makes other things open up."

McManus would terrorize the Maroon and White for 163 yards on 16 carries, until a tackle by UMass' Paul Bolden sent him limping off in the second half with a medial collateral ligament injury.

UMass got on the board just before halftime, as Seibert finally got the green light and marched the Minutemen 74 yards in a dozen plays with crisp passing and an eight-yard TD keeper up the middle. Along the way, fill-in wideout Adonis Kinves stepped up with a 13-yard snare and a devastating block to free teammate Jeff Howard for another 20-yard pickup.

Northeastern appeared set to regain momentum during the penalty-plagued opening action of the second half, as a 53-yard McManus explosion through the right side of the line put the Huskies on the UMass 16 with thoughts of another TD.

That was until UMass' Bryan Smith made perhaps the play of the day, picking off a forced attempt from NU's Logan Galli in the left corner of the endzone to kill the drive and silence the then-frenzied crowd.

"That was certainly one of the biggest plays of the game," Whipple said. "There were a bunch of momentum swings, but that one really turned things around."

The UMass defense provided an even bigger lift seven minutes later, when the Huskies faked a field goal on

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 10

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kelly Seibert did an admirable job of stepping into the quarterback role against the Huskies, passing for 131 yards and breaking the UMass interception jinx.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior running back Kevin Quinlan had a career day Saturday, rushing for 241 yards and two touchdowns at the expense of Northeastern.

Marcel who? Backup RB stampedes over Huskies

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE – Kevin Quinlan grew up mere miles from Northeastern University, and he felt right at home at Parsons Field on Saturday afternoon.

The halfback from Malden Catholic High School in nearby Somerville, MA said, "I didn't know until Monday morning" that he was going to start in place of injured All-American, Marcel Shipp.

In the postgame press conference, Quinlan said he was thinking before the game "be smart, be safe, don't be conservative" and "minimize turnovers." The junior did more than that, as he was a quick study as an every down back. He torched the Husky defense for 241 yards on 38 carries although the most important statistic might be this: two touchdowns, zero turnovers.

After Northeastern returned the opening kickoff for a touchdown, Quinlan took his place in the backfield ready to begin his stampede over and through the Husky defense. On only UMass' second offensive play of the game, Quinlan took a hand off, cut back to beat one defender and then burst through the gut of the defense for a 39-yard gain. The Somerville native continued to carry the kind for the rest of the drive, carrying a total of four times for 46 yards.

Quinlan took over the workhorse role vacated by Shipp, carrying the ball 22 times in the first half alone. The junior ran roughshod over the Northeastern defense for the remainder of the frame, totaling 125 yards and 5.7 yards per carry.

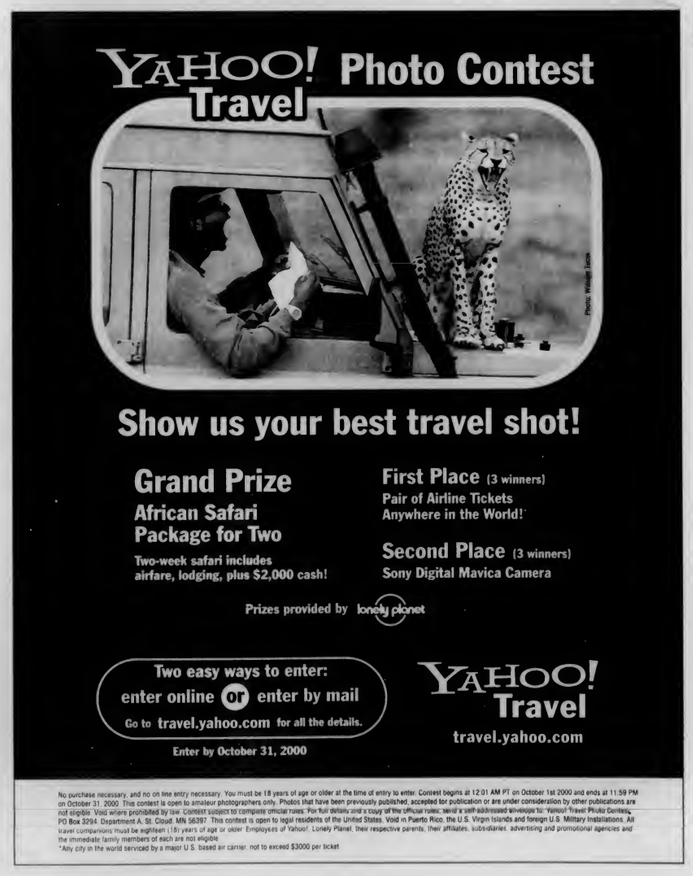
Nearing the end of the third quarter, down 10-7, UMass needed someone to step up and carry the team to victory. With three of its best offensive players on the bench (Adrian Zullo, Jimmie Howard and Shipp) the 5-foot-10, 170 pound Quinlan put the team on his shoulders and took them straight to the house for the second Maroon and White score of the game.

With three minutes left in the third frame, the Minuteman offense lined up on its own 36-yard line. New starting Quarterback Kelly Seibert navigated familiar territory ...he gave the ball to Quinlan for a 12-yard gain. Four plays later the junior tailback ran for 14 more yards and another first down to the Northeastern 22.

After two Seibert completions to DeShon Hardy, the Maroon and White found itself inside the Husky 6-yard line. Quinlan got the call again, but could not find the goal line as the NU defense held up and forced Massachusetts into a field goal attempt. The home team was caught being too aggressive, however, as a roughing the kicker penalty gave Coach Whipple's offense another shot. This time they did not disappoint, as Quinlan punched the ball in for six points and the first UMass lead of the game.

Quinlan took over the workhorse role vacated by Shipp, carrying the ball 22 times in the first half alone. The junior ran roughshod over the

Turn to QUINLAN, page 10



YAHOO! Travel
Photo Contest
Show us your best travel shot!
Grand Prize
African Safari Package for Two
Two-week safari includes airfare, lodging, plus $2,000 cash!
First Place (3 winners)
Pair of Airline Tickets Anywhere in the World!*
Second Place (3 winners)
Sony Digital Mavica Camera
Prizes provided by lonely planet
Two easy ways to enter:
enter online or enter by mail
Go to travel.yahoo.com for all the details.
Enter by October 31, 2000
YAHOO! Travel
travel.yahoo.com
No purchase necessary, and no on line entry necessary. You must be 18 years of age or older at the time of entry to enter. Contest begins at 12:01 AM PT on October 1st 2000 and ends at 11:59 PM on October 31, 2000. This contest is open to amateur photographers only. Photos that have been previously published, accepted for publication or are under consideration by other publications are not eligible. Void where prohibited by law. Contest subject to complete official rules. For full details and a copy of the official rules, send a self-addressed envelope to: Yahoo! Travel Photo Contest, PO Box 3294, Department A, St. Cloud, MN 56397. This contest is open to legal residents of the United States. Void in Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and foreign U.S. Military Installations. All travel companions must be eighteen (18) years of age or older. Employees of Yahoo!, Lonely Planet, their respective parents, their affiliates, subsidiaries, advertising and promotional agencies and the immediate family members of each are not eligible.
*Any city in the world serviced by a major U.S. based air carrier, not to exceed $3000 per ticket.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 25 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, October 11, 2000

wiremnky brings his fresh cold cuts to his latest album with mixed sucess. Curious? Check out the review in Arts.

ARTS p. 6

Jeff Deren and the Massachusetts men's soccer team won two games over the weekend to move up the Atlantic 10 standings.

SPORTS p. 10

"It is a slower weekend than usual..."

All quiet on UM front

By Chris Thompson and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

It was a typical Columbus Day weekend for the University of Massachusetts Police Department with less criminal activity than usual on campus.

"It is a slower weekend than usual because people usually go somewhere," said Jim Lyons spokesman for UMPD.

On Wednesday the 14th, a United Parcel Service package was stolen from Lincoln apartments. It contained a palm organizer valued at $100.

"It [the package] was signed for by someone that does not exist," Lyons said.

Another incident occurred requiring police intervention on Tuesday the 3rd, when hate graffiti was found written on a bulletin board in Crabtree Dormitory. The graffiti was directed at a resident assistant and the document on the bulletin board has been taken as evidence. The police have possible suspects in the incident.

"It is still an open and ongoing case," Lyons said.

On Saturday, the UMPD responded to a request by Delinquent Youth Services of Greenfield to check on a child living in North Village Apartments. The child was taken from his father and put in the custody of the Department of Social Services.

A wallet was stolen from Coolidge Dormitory on Friday the 6th. The owner of the wallet left her door open to take a shower, and when she returned to her room she saw four individuals outside her door. Upon searching her room, she found her wallet missing. Four individuals matching their descriptions were identified and it was decided that they were not UMass students. The police searched the individuals but they did not have the wallet in their presence. They were escorted off campus for trespassing.

Another wallet was stolen on Tuesday from Hasbrouck Laboratory. Charges were made from the owner's U-Card that valued $350.

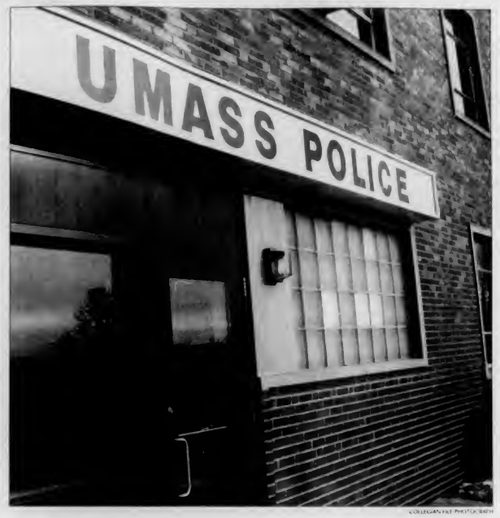
On Sunday, a maintenance closet was broken into in Coolidge Dormitory. The door was damaged beyond repair and is valued at $250.

Some other minor occurrences this weekend were several fire alarms that were either set off or accidentally went off in various parts of campus.

"A trouble alarm comes in for any number of reasons," Lyons said. "When it comes in, it can give you a chance to fix whatever is wrong with it."

A second floor window in the men's room in Pierpont Dormitory was smashed on Saturday the 7th at 1 a.m. Glass from the window was scattered onto the bathroom floor and the sidewalk outside. Students were prevented from accessing the bathroom until the glass was removed. Police made a call to the Physical Plant in an attempt to get the situation cleaned up as soon as possible in order to prevent students from injury.

"A situation like glass on a bathroom floor we feel is a kind of emergency," Lyons said.



COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/C. BATH

Thanks to the droves of students who went home for the Columbus Day holiday weekend, the UMass police department had less criminal activity than usual to deal with. Still, hate graffiti was found on a bulletin board in Crabtree and several wallets were stolen.

FCC chief technologist to speak today at UM

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

As the Internet community continues to grow exponentially in society, so does the technological community to support it. On Wednesday, Oct. 11, David Farber, chief technologist for the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] will be speaking at the University of Massachusetts.

Four years ago, Alumni Sydney Topol donated a generous amount of funding to the Computer Science department here on campus. This funding established the Sydney Topol Distinguished Lecture Series, which ensured that the money donated would be used to bring in speakers to the UMass campus.

"We've been funding lectures and speakers to come to the campus. Many have spoken about telecommunications. [We've had people from] television networks as well as speakers from cable networks," said Professor Wendy Copper of the computer science department.

Farber will be speaking about various aspects of technology, much will be focused on "Predicting the Unpredictable: The Impact of Technological Innovation, Government Regulation and Individual Rights on the Future Networking World."

Farber is known for his work that he has done to help design computer-programming languages as well as other designs such as electronic phone switches and super-high-speed computer networks.

Farber also received the Alfred Fitler Moore Professor of Telecommunication Systems Award at the University of Pennsylvania where he is currently a faculty member of the Computer and Information Science Department as well as the Electrical Engineering Department. In addition to being a faculty member of the UPenn, he is also on the Faculty Council of the SEI Center for Advanced Studies in Management of the Wharton School.

"By having Farber speak here at UMass, it will bring insight on the future of technology, which is becoming larger as far as the Internet goes. And it's interesting for students to see a person at Farber's level and what he sees as important technologically to our future," said Cooper.

"If the past is any indication, we've had a good broad turnout of at least 150 faculty and students over the past years. We encourage students of every field to attend. It's certainly not limited to computer science majors, it's for everyone to enjoy and learn," said Cooper.

This event takes place at 4 p.m. tomorrow in room 150 of the Computer Science Research Center. This event is open to the public and free of charge.

TIBORA GIRLYC-BLUM / COLLEGIAN

James Kallstrom, left, received the Eleanor Bateman award from Chancellor Scott on Tuesday, October 3. Kallstrom was the FBI Head in New York City during the TWA flight 800 investigation.

In Middle America, rally at Iowa State U. kicks off 'Coming Out Days'

By Julie Rule
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa – A rainbow-colored flag and a crowd of about 40 people stood north of the Campanile Tuesday for the National Coming Out Days rally at Iowa State University.

A tent with tables containing informational brochures about resources available on campus and in the community was south of the Campanile.

"We hope to get people motivated about the week's events," said Jeremy Hayes, president of the ISU Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Ally Alliance.

Interim Dean of Students Pete Englin, who was the first speaker at the rally, said that while coming out gives a person freedom, the reactions from others sometimes can be difficult.

"It's kind of a mixed blessing, that coming-out process," Englin said.

He also talked about "hateful language" that was used at the Iowa State/Nebraska football game over the weekend, leaving some people "probably feeling personally attacked." He said he plans to "make the commitment to making a better community for all."

Travis Greene, LGBT Student Services coordinator, was the next to speak.

"I'm here, I'm queer and I'm a member of the family," said Greene, graduate student in educational leadership and policy studies.

Greene focused on the redefinition of families to include gay men and women living together who may adopt children.

"I think it's important we look at how we can broaden and redefine the family," he said. "I encourage you all to come out in one way or another, whichever way you are comfortable."

Victor Raymond, coordinator for the Central Iowa Bisexual Social Group, talked about dealing with his move from the Twin Cities to Ames and having to come out again in his new community.

"It wasn't just doing formal presentations," said Raymond, graduate student in sociology. "It was actually getting to know people. It's the relationships we form, that family of choice we form. We can support one another, regardless of where we're at."

Carolyn Cutrona, president of the Ames Chapter of Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays (PFLAG), came to speak about the accomplishments PFLAG has made in the community, such as getting the Ames school board to add sexual orientation to non-harassment and discrimination policies.

Cutrona, professor of psychology, also said PFLAG has been working with local churches to be more accepting of LGBT members.

Hayes said he was pleased with the rally, which was the first event in the weeklong National Coming Out Days celebration.

"We had a good turnout," Hayes said. "We had some really good speakers."

Kent State U. deals with issues of online porn

By Mark Cina
Daily Kent Stater (Kent State U.)

(U-WIRE) KENT, Ohio – One student checks his e-mail. Another works on a paper. A third downloads pictures of naked women straddling each other.

That was last week in the Tri-Towers computer lab.

It's not that scenarios like this have been a problem at Kent State University. Usually, only a handful occur each semester. However, they are causing more colleges and universities to grapple with ways to deal with students who download pornography.

Pornography has been an issue since schools were equipped with Internet access. Today, it's just as volatile.

Kent State dealt with various isolated incidents last year:

One pornographic video, made by two students in Verder Hall, was aired on ResNet, which provides Internet access to residence halls.

Two investigations were conducted on two students rumored to have been accessing child pornography — state and federal offenses — from their dorm rooms. (There was insufficient evidence in both instances to pursue the matter beyond the initial investigation.)

Four complaints were filed on students accessing pornographic materials from their computers.

The tough part is that the university cannot police students, said David Futey, senior local area network administrator for residence services, who handles all Internet complaints.

Although material viewed may be offensive, he said the university cannot punish students who view pornographic, or inappropriate, materials from their personal computers, unless it violates state or federal laws, like child pornography. "Nothing can be done unless others feel harassed or if it makes for a disruptive environment, Futey said.

"It's a concern everywhere," he said. "Every college and university has problems."

Students have the right to view any sites they want on their computers. If the university interrupted that, it would be "a violation of the First Amendment," said Tim Smith, director and founder of the Ohio Center for Privacy and the First Amendment at Kent State.

"They are almost adults," he said. "The university would be hard-pressed to enforce their version of morality on these students."

Futey said the reasons pornographic-site viewing has increased is a three-fold answer. One is because of the growth of the Internet and business sites providing pornographic information; second is because of the development of web browsers which make graphics easier to download; and third is because of the university's increased bandwidth, which allows for greater data exchange.

"That was not available three or four years ago," Futey said.

However, Futey said overall pornography is not that monstrous a problem at Kent State because of the measures the university takes.

University policy states that ResNet network access is a privilege that can and will be revoked if actions by an individual are detrimental or inappropriately to the network and its functioning." According to the policy, violations could result in suspension from the network resource, suspension or termination from the university and prosecution under applicable civil and/or criminal laws.

Policy for computer labs is different because students are using public property, Futey said. He said if students are offended by others viewing offensive sites, lab supervisors will ask them to close the sites or leave. Policy for the lab states that "actions that result in the disruption of or detract from the cluster being an educational environment will result in removal from the cluster at a minimum."

Senior Robin Shura has told about a half-dozen students to turn off pornographic sites over the three years she has worked in the library computer lab. All students she has asked have complied, she said.

"We remind them that these labs are intended for academic use," she said. "Most readily comply."

YOU'VE SPENT FOUR YEARS WAITING FOR THIS AD.

...you graduate as college and business leader. Network practice. We're the industry leader with over 50 years of prestigious HR consulting experience. You'll have client contact almost immediately, and be expected to hit the ground running. The ...ging. You'll receive on-going career training. Customized career planning. 24/7 access to sophisticated technology. If you have an extensive background in Business, Finance, Actuarial Science, Computer ... MIS, please explore our Online Career Profile at www.pwcglobal.com/us/careers.

www.pwcglobal.com
www.us.pwcglobal.com

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Join us. Together we can change the world.℠

DRINK UP LOG ON YOU COULD FLY FREE!

Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html to see if you're a WINNER!

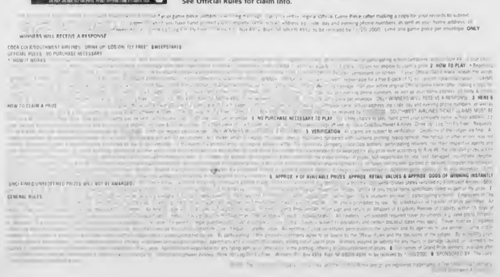
southwest.com
a symbol of e-freedom

southwest.com
a symbol of e-freedom

Available on specially marked Coca-Cola Bottles/Cans inside campus vending machines.

HOW TO PLAY

1. Detach Official Game Piece from Coca-Cola bottle/can.
2. Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen.*
3. If your Official Game Piece reveals a winning message, you win the prize specified (subject to verification). See Official Rules for claim info.



TODAY!

WONDERING..... WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH YOUR MAJOR?
WHO WILL HIRE YOU?
WHAT'S OUT THERE FOR JOBS?

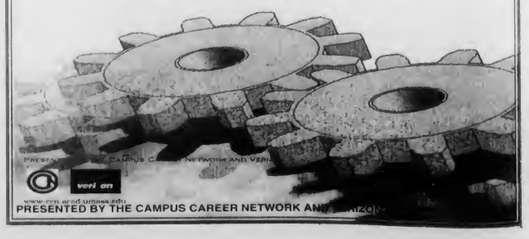
GET THE ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS!
COME TO THE CAREER INFORMATION EXPO 2000!

MEET A VARIETY OF EMPLOYERS AT EXPO 2000
THEY'RE COMING TO MEET YOU!

EVERYONE IS INVITED - ALL MAJORS, ALL CLASS YEARS!

PUT YOUR CAREER IN GEAR!

CAREER INFORMATION EXPO
TODAY, OCTOBER 11, 2000
CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM



PRESENTED BY THE CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK AND ...

Police Log

Alarms
Oct. 6
A fire alarm went off in Emerson Dormitory the Amherst Fire Department was dispatched as a response.
An intrusion alarm went off in Lederle.
Oct. 8
There was fire alarm trouble in Hamlin Dormitory.
Oct. 9
There was an elevator alarm that went off in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
There was an elevator alarm that went off in John Adams Dormitory.
There was an elevator alarm that went off in Kennedy Dormitory.
There was a fire alarm that went off in the Chancellor's House; Amherst Fire Department was dispatched. There was a malfunction within the alarm.
There was an elevator alarm that went off in W.E.B. DuBois Library.
There was fire alarm trouble in Hamlin Dormitory on North Pleasant Street.
Oct. 10
There was fire alarm trouble in Coolidge Dormitory.

Accident
Oct. 6
There was a two-vehicle accident on University Drive and Massachusetts Ave. No one was injured.
Oct. 7
There was a minor accident on Fearing Street. No one was injured.
Oct. 8
There was an accident on Rocky Hill Rd.; UMPD was called in to assist the Hadley police.

Annoying Behavior
Oct. 8
A group of individuals were reported running through John Quincy Adams Dormitory causing a disturbance.

Burglary
Oct. 10
A vehicle was broken into in lot 47 near Sylvan Drive. The stereo to the car was smashed but nothing was stolen.

Disturbance
Oct. 7
There was the report of a fight in progress that was a verbal argument in James Dormitory.

Drug Law Offenses
Oct. 7
There was an offense in Dickinson Dormitory.
There was an offense in Hamlin Dormitory.
There was an offense in McNamara Dormitory.

Health and Safety Hazard
Oct. 8
Officers were dispatched to check on a suspicious jug in the parking lot.

Noise Complaint
Oct. 7
There was a complaint of loud music in Emerson Dormitory.
There was a complaint of loud individuals in John Adams Dormitory.

Vandalism
Oct. 7
There was damage to a vehicle in lot 11 North of Alumni Stadium.
There was a window reported smashed in Boyden Gymnasium.
Oct. 8
There was damage to a vehicle in lot 11 North of Alumni Stadium.

UBriefs?

Actually, Boxers.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, an independent student newspaper.

Arizona tests online voting

By Kara Saige
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. With Americans able to conduct bank transactions, order airline tickets and shop for almost anything online, it might seem logical to many to cast votes from a personal computer instead of going to the polls.

Online elections have already been administered, with the Arizona Democratic Party conducting the first legally binding online vote for the presidential primary in March. Chair Mark Fleisher said it was conducted with minimal problems.

But along with arguments that voting online poses serious security problems, the idea that it discriminates among voters has also been a key point, said Deborah Phillips, chairman of the Voting Integrity Project, a nonprofit organization that deals with elections and voting rights.

Phillips said because those with access to the Internet are commonly white, it unfairly discriminates against minority citizens without the same access to the Internet.

The project and two members of the minority community filed suit in January against the Arizona Democratic Party. They sought an injunction to stop the vote, but a U.S. District Court judge allowed the party to move forward.

The second portion of the suit claims the online voting conducted in Arizona violated the Voting Rights Act of 1965, which in part prohibits methods used to prevent minorities from voting. The case is set to be heard in April, despite the outcome of the primary not being affected.

Phillips said online voting rivals practices such as literacy tests, posing the question of whether the effect of this voting method is just as serious.

"We think it potentially it could be, and that's why we brought the lawsuit," Phillips said.

But Fleisher said the results from the primary show minority voter turnout increased tremendously. In a press release issued by Election.com, which joined the Arizona Democratic Party to run the online vote, numbers from the 1992 and 1996 primaries were compared with those from the results in March. In two districts in Maricopa County, which the release said has a high Hispanic population, the turnout jumped by 828 and 1,011 percent.

He also said alternative methods were offered, including mail-in ballots, paper ballots and polling place online voting – where computers are available at the polling sites.

Phillips said actual numbers have to be examined to truly determine the ethnicity of each voter.

Fleisher said he had talked with people in areas with a high minority population and said they believed the Internet vote "empowered their communities."

He also said overall voter turnout increased.

"More people voted online by 11 the first night than we had vote in the last election," he said.

Creativity!

Junior Esther Kleinerman measures two necklaces that she created at the Student Union Craft Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

All New All Yours All Free

MadAdz welcomes University of Massachusetts Amherst

The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T shirt. Just mention way in which MadAdz.com will help you to book your ad.

Limit one T shirt per student

No Brainer.

$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.

...g & Learn.

MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds, Your Specifics, Free

No more hassle with newspapers, fixed ad rates, profiteer...

FREE EVENT

Ready for law school?

Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.

Wednesday, Oct 18th 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass

Presenter: Noted author & legal expert, Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD

To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.

Alumni Association

sponsored by:

KAPLAN barbri BAR/BRI

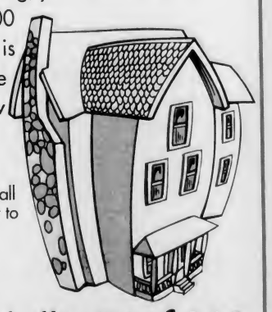
CK SADD1-4

A Great Opportunity for Students!

Share a 3 bedroom apartment with two women in Monson who need some support to live independently. You'll have a wonderful place to live, others to help with the responsibilities of the household, time on your own, and no rent to pay!

If you're interested in finding out more about this incredible opportunity, call Brenda at Specialized Home Care: (413) 732-4715 x 153 or (800) 652-2201 x 153. You'll need a valid Ma driver's license to apply.

In addition to rent-free living, you'll receive an annual stipend of $27,000 per year. regular respite is provided, so if you're free to relocate in the next few months, call today.



SHC is an equal opportunity employer. We welcome each call we receive, and we'll be happy to talk with you.

Specialized Home Care

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

SGA:
Finally Making Progress?

Of all the things that the Student Government Association needs, improvement is definitely at the top of the list. Their current state of being bogged down in the minutia of rules and regulations has gotten their body nowhere.

So in response, and in what might be considered the greatest SGA decision ever made, they decided not to have a meeting this week – instead, they're planning to have a mock meeting to teach students how the SGA works.

At least one high-ranking member of the SGA declared that a mock meeting couldn't be any worse than last week's mockery of a meeting. Strong words indeed, especially for a group desperate not to be on the receiving end of criticism.

But for once, the SGA has made a good decision.

Having a mock meeting to teach the new senators not only indicates that somebody is thinking about having a Senate that is faster and more productive, but also sends a message to the petulant Student Trustee Seth Avakian who has promised never to return to the Senate. Avakian doesn't seem to understand that his threat is empty and, hopefully it will be agreed, baseless.

He has only threatened not to return to the Senate because that organization no longer supports him. It is not that he opposes how the election took place. It is that he doesn't like whom it was that students elected. However, that immaturity will end up being more detrimental to himself than to the Senate.

In declaring that the Senate would hold a mock meeting, the Speaker of the Senate, Jim Ettringham, has more or less declared that he is sick of the personal politics that have been an embarrassment to the SGA in the past few weeks. Instead of laying down at the whims of Avakian, Ettringham is standing up for his Senate as it was elected.

He wants the body of the SGA to move on and away from the past weeks' pettiness. And he is admitting that the body is fundamentally weak in its knowledge of Senatorial procedure. Having the mock meeting is his attempt to build on that weakness and turn what could be detrimental to the Senate into a strength.

That is the sort of forward thinking that our student government has lacked recently. It's almost like the SGA has started to acknowledge that its role on campus is more than just to fight with one another. It takes a certain subtlety for them to finally come to that realization, a certain maturity that they very rarely show as an organization.

But perhaps they will prove. Perhaps they will now finally get down to the real business that they are voted in to take care of. Perhaps now they will start voting on RSO budgets and start making statements in students' best interests. Perhaps now they will come to understand that personal feelings and situations should be kept out of a body whose job it is to represent students on campus.

That's definitely an improvement.

Bo' Sox Blues

KATIE LANDERS

With the recent death of the Red Sox season, I feel it's only fair to pay a final homage to them. I'm not a fair weather fan; up until their last loss on Friday the 29th of September, I held my breath with aspirations of a playoff birth. Perhaps even another chance at grasping for a World Series victory. The season started off great, and I was even fortunate enough to see them live in action this summer.

In May, I attended a Red Sox game against Detroit, with Ramon Martinez as starting pitcher. Not only was I excited to see a great game, but I also got to attend this game from The 600 Club courtesy of Mike Briggs. In case you haven't been there, The 600 Club is awesome. The seating is very steep so you look straight down to the field from behind home plate, and the loud sounds of the game fill the glass enclosed place through speakers. There are TV monitors everywhere so that you can see replays, and what I really liked was that you could see the seven-second delay live television has. You have to dress nice, no tee-shirts, sneakers or jeans) and I think it may be taboo to cheer from inside. The three of us, little Briggs, Rob Daly and myself were dressed well and we made out way up the three escalators that take you to the top of Fenway Park. When you get there, they give you a free program and all the free popcorn you could imagine. You also get a free parking pass in a private garage, but I refused to drive in Boston, so we took the T. Back to my story.

We watched Ramon's pitching ability go completely unused in the three innings that he lasted. I noticed that a lot of people in The 600 Club weren't actually there to watch the game. There were some families, but it seemed mostly like fancy men and women talking to each other or on their cell phones, not really appreciating that they were at Fenway Park. We enjoyed ourselves and around the seventh inning stretch we ate lunch up behind the seating area. The food was good, but Rob stated that every one to know that they serve their turkey sandwiches with cranberry sauce all over it, without putting it on the menu. Who does that? The Sox didn't play well and lost the game.

The next time I went to the Red Sox the experience was on the complete opposite side of the spectrum. This time I saw them play from the bleachers. The game was against the Mets in early August, and Briggs and I bought tickets from the first scalper to maul us off the T. Unfortunately, we paid something like three times the face value of the ticket, but it was well worth it because the game was sold out. A fight broke out at least twice an inning in the stands, and many people got escorted out. Well there were fights off the field, the tension on the field began to mount. A near bench-clearing brawl broke out in which LI Guapo flexed and showed his might to all sitting behind the ballpen. The game was full of excitement as the Red Sox had the lead early in the game, but lost in the end. I enjoyed both the scenes around me and a famous Fenway Frank.

Besides my attending Fenway twice this season, a lot of other things will long be remembered. Who will forget Carl Everett and his head butt to the Umpire during that series with the Mets? It did bring on a ten game suspension, but the entertainment value was immeasurable.

August was just as exciting for the team. A series in Tampa Bay brought championship boxing back thanks to the right hook from Gerald Williams to Pedro Martinez. An accidental beaning

Dawson and Joey return for senior year

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

So, it's that time of year again when pond-watchers everywhere turn their eyes toward Capeside MA to catch up on their favorite group of over-intellectualized, over-sexed high-schoolers. Last Wednesday, "Dawson's Creek" made its season premier with an expected amount of teen angst, verbal wit and "Survivor" references.

The big question on everyone's mind, viewers and Capesidians alike, was obviously "Did they do it?" That is, in reference to our two sea bound lovers, Joey and Pacey, who took a summer away from Capeside's "oh so predictable" shores for an unlikely high seas adventure.

Well, after dancing around the issue for almost the entire episode, an apologetic Joey indirectly tells her surprisingly unforgiving best-friend-turned-ex-boyfriend Dawson that they didn't (equally predictable in my opinion). To quote Joey, "It's not about the right time and the right situation...it's about the right person." And as much as Pacey/Joey fans would like to believe otherwise, the charming class clown with the caustic tongue ain't the right person.

Elsewhere, insecurities about the Hub Four's senior year abounded. The crew is heading into their final year at Capeside High, even though the main actors' contracts extend for one more year after this one. Personally, I'm hoping for a suite at Boston University.

COURTESY OF WARNER BROTHERS
Dawson and the gang huddle together for a new season and a game of truth or dare.

The Good

No more Henry. Easily the most annoying twerp ever put on the show, Henry is currently attending some posh boarding school in who-knows-where for his football prowess. Word has it that he'll soon disappear from the show completely.

This begins to solve one of last season's biggest problems, the influx of too many characters with too many plotlines. With the disappearance of Henry, (Andie is rumored to be following soon thereafter), maybe the writers will finally pare their focus back to some sort of core story. Now, as difficult as this may be to believe after last season's debacle, there was some evidence of this in the first episode. Dawson's newfound love of photography seemed to bring the group together over the summer, which might mean we'll get to watch a one-hour coherent drama, opposed to four or five different non-dramas.

I'll also buy Dawson's new hobby since photography is close enough to film to be believable, but the writers need to make sure they don't get carried too far off the beaten path.

The core story is back. For better or worse, "Dawson's Creek" was conceived on the idea of a love triangle — Dawson's enviable struggle to choose between new girl in town Jen and lifelong friend Joey. The idea is back in some sort of perverted form. We now have the Dawson-Joey-Pacey love triangle and maybe it will be refreshing to see Dawson pine for a while.

I still think the perfect plot twist would have been to have Dawson and Andie start dating (imagine the awkward feelings there). Then again, that would be presuming that I know something about writing.

- Andie in a hot, pink bikini the entire episode. Impressive.

The Bad

The goddamn parents! I've been screaming for nearly two seasons now about how extraneous Dawson's parents' plot line is to the show. And now, it's back in full force. This time the Leary's return to season one form, bumping on every piece of living room furniture possible. While the display may have lead to a great one-liner from our favorite blonde-haired son, I simply can't tolerate more of the parental antics.

Gretchen materializes out of nowhere. Sure there have been mentions of Pacey's sisters before, but none of them have ever actually shown up. That is until now.

Pacey's sister Gretchen has mysteriously returned to Capeside for a "break" from college. Of course, she wants to shack up with Doug, leaving Pacey homeless and with double the number of verbally combative siblings. While some new Witter family banter may be nice (the Doug gay references grew old in season two), the back-story doesn't bode well.

We found out that Gretchen was the first person Dawson had a crush on at age nine (as if we can't see where this is going). So, I'm sure in four weeks, she'll be leaving the show like all of the other people the writers created to occupy our hero's interest during his time away from Joey. Have they learned nothing?

Plus, doesn't this crush ruin the whole platonic Dawson/Joey thing at least a little?

- Appearance by "Real World's" Danny as a foreign exchange imposter. Dumb.

The Haircuts

Of course with a new season comes a new crop of hair, and this time, the results are drastically different than what we were left with at season three's end.

Michelle Williams (Jen) has abandoned her bleached, short, spiky coif in favor of something much similar to season one. Thankfully, it's not identical to that straight shoulder length disaster, which made her seem so stuck up. Short, curly, cute. It gets rave reviews all around.

James Van Der Beek (Dawson) has gone a bit too Mission Impossible 2 for my tastes. His blonde locks have grown back to season one length and the Tom Cruise dew just isn't (hat appealing. Overall, it's not bad, but not great. However, it's infinitely preferable to...

Josh Jackson (Pacey) shaved his frosted hair and looks like something straight out of G.I. Jane. Not only is the whole militant thing completely revolting, but I think it made an overbearing Pacey come off even worse. Bad news all around.

All in all, it was a good season start with the potential to recapture some of the magic that the show obviously lost during season three. I'm looking forward to the continued reconciliation between Dawson and Joey, Henry's leaving the show altogether and the possible rekindling of a story involving all the characters. I'm not looking forward to the impending Perfect Storm parody, the Leary parent's ongoing saga or the Gretchen fallout. Who knows though? They might get it right this time around.

I leave you with this deleted scene from the first episode (more "Survivor" references and some gauging of Jack's situation). Overall it's a solid 'B.' This would have occurred right after Andie kisses JJ. Thanks to Dawson's Creek Daily for the info (http://www.fanforum.com/dawsonscreek)

ANGLE ON – JEN AND JACK.
They're standing about twenty yards away from the kiss.
JEN: I'll be damned, Jack, your sister did it. Her first summer fling.
JACK: Why can't her luck run in the family?
JEN: It will. This is gonna be your year. I predict it.
JACK: Given the evidence, Jen, I think it's safe to assume the romantic gods don't exactly have a relationship in mind for me.
JEN: I think you're wrong. I think, even as we speak, Aphrodite is pleading your case to Zeus. And if I know Aphrodite, you have a pretty damn good shot.
JACK: And if anyone knows Aphrodite...
JEN: (a little offended) What's that supposed to mean?
JACK: I'm not sure, but I think I was trying to be funny.
JEN: Keep working on it. Now, let's get me home so I can e-mail Henry.
JACK: Ooh, you're getting better; it's been at least two hours since you've mentioned his name.
JEN: I'm not that bad.
JACK: Yes you are. But guess what? I love you anyway.
Jen laughs sweetly, wraps her arm around him.
JEN: I love you, too, Jack.
JACK: Oh yeah? If you love me so much why would you kick me off the island?
JEN: Are you still whining about that?

COURTESY OF THE DAILY TOREADOR UMOR

Sing Out, Louise!

The Second Annual Choral Spectrum hits UMass Oct. 20 in the Concert Hall at 7:30 p.m. Scheduled to perform this year is the University Chorale, the Chamber Choir, Madrigal Singers, Women's Choir, Vocal Jazz Ensemble with special guests Hampshire Choral Society's Young Peoples Chorus and Newton High School Family Singers. Call the Fine Arts Center box office for more info: 245-2511

Congress discusses law about digital openness

By Erin Bryce
Independent Florida Alligator (U. Florida)

(U-WIRE) GAINESVILLE, Fla. – With the threat of digitally recorded music being banned across the United States, members of Congress have decided to take action - something University of Florida students say does not solve the issue. Rep. Rick Boucher, D-Va., and three Republican representatives are sponsoring a bill to amend federal copyright laws so listeners can hear digital music after first proving ownership of the desired music. Some University of Florida students said the legislation, scheduled to be heard during the next congressional meeting in January, will not affect them and does not completely give them what they want.

Other UF students said they disagree with the legislation completely. UF law professor Thomas Cotter said the legislation would make it so that listening to digital music already owned by the listener would be "viewed as a fair use." Cotter said currently there are parts of the federal copyright law that may seem in violation but are written to be considered fair use. Recording pre-owned compact discs to a personal cassette tape is an example that is considered fair use, Cotter said. He also said that recording TV shows – which are under copyright law – to watch at a later date is considered fair use. The piece of legislation – which stems from the recent lawsuit against the digital music company MP3.com Inc. – will make it so digital music can be transmitted to a computer or digital music player once the listener has proved he or she owns the music.

"Right now, MP3.com cannot operate without permission," Cotter said. The company recently lost a lawsuit in which a New York judge found the company in violation of the copyright law. The judge sentenced the company to pay Universal Music Group - a recording company – $25,000 per compact disc that MP3.com owned. The total in damages could amount to $250 million. MP3.com argued against the lawsuit by saying the company was abiding by fair use, Cotter said. But the judge found loopholes in the argument, including the fact that listeners could prove the ownership of the music without actually owning it but by borrowing it from a friend, he said. Currently, the company has to have permission from the record company to offer music over the Internet.

"If this bill were to pass, MP3.com would not have to get permission," Cotter said. UF journalism sophomore Michele Dye said she does not see the legislation as beneficial at all. Dye downloads music she does not own from Napster, another digital music company which currently is facing a lawsuit. Dye said she has more than 200 songs downloaded on her computer that she does not own compact discs for.

"I listen to it all the time," she said. Dye also owns a small digital music player. She can take the downloaded music from her computer and place it on a small card, much like a computer disc. The card then can be inserted into the portable player. "When I go for a

Turn to MP3, page 7

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
FREE
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video.
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy - just a great chance to learn how to meditate

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups Fall 2000

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Come Out, Come Out Wherever You Are! A GLBT Support Group Our goal is to create a setting for self-exploration and for making new connections with others. We plan to have fun in the process. Mon., 3:45-5:00 p.m.	Coed Self - Exploration Group for Undergraduates For college men and women who experience difficulties in inter-personal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Tues.,3:30-5:00 p.m.	Women's Eating Issues Group This is a group for women who are interested in changing negative eating patterns, decreasing food and weight obsessions and enhancing self acceptance. Members will have an opportunity to learn about the underlying dynamics contributing to eating issues, and to develop coping strategies. Wed.,3:45-5:00 p.m.	Women's Self-Exploration Group (For older undergraduates, graduate students, student dependents, and covered employees) This group provides an opportunity for women to explore personal relationships, work, studies, family of origin, health, acculturation, and other relevant concerns. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits. Thurs., 9:00-10:30 a.m.
			Alcohol and Drug Discussion Group This support group is for individuals who are trying to live free from alcohol and drug abuse. In this safe, confidential setting we will explore each person's struggle to achieve and maintain sobriety. (An initial intake at Mental Health is required prior to group attendance.) Thurs., 12:45-2:00 p.m.
		Coed Self- Exploration Group for Undergraduates For college men and women who experience difficulties in interpersonal connections or who have concerns about their relationships. Wed.,3:30-5:00 p.m.	Coed Self-Exploration Group (For older undergraduates, graduate students student dependents and covered employees) This group provides an opportunity for men and women to explore interpersonal relationships. This group is ongoing with members added as space permits. Thurs., 3:30-5:00 p.m.
			Stress/Anxiety Management Group Stress impacts all of us physically and psychologically creating various medical and emotional symptoms. This structured 3-session group is designed to demonstrate effective ways to deal with stressful circumstances. We will use educational and behavioral methods to help members lessen their stress. Session 1: Wed., 4:00-5:00 p.m. Oct. 4, 11, 18 Session 2: Thurs., 4:00-5:00 p.m Oct. 19, 26 & Nov. 2

Groups are conducted by Mental Health Division staff. Groups are deducted from your UHS Basic Plan, Supplemental Plan or Health New England plan subject to plan limitation and co-pays. Application to the behavioral health network of GIC is pending. Groups require an initial screening which can be arranged by calling 545-2337 or by stopping by at 127 Hills North. Mon.-Fri. 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

CALL 545-2337
to schedule required pre-group screening appointmentor for further information.
Visit the Mental Health web site at:
www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth

wiremnky lacks novelty

WIREMNKY
fresh cold cuts
Ersatzkis

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

The record company's based out of Phoenix, so it can only be assumed that wiremnky (Jeffrey Barnet) is as well. There are two ways to approach this spinner of technotic songs; a DJ with decent skills on his way up in the electronic world or as a self-absorbed crazy – or at least one who has signed with a self-absorbed record company.

Artists who truly believe that what they are doing will change the world immediately almost always tend to be lying to themselves. They tend to be very self-involved and in the habit of seeing much more pain in their lives than what is actually there. So it goes with wiremnky's description on the ersatzkis.com webpage: a self-proclaimed misanthrope, wiremnky is driven to music in a desperate attempt to unify grooves, emotions and ideas: the urge, primal and instinctive; the act, pre-meditated and intellectual...all in an ironic effort to reach out to the world while uncontrollably trying to pull away.

Please. Ignoring the fact that he describes himself as a misanthrope (perhaps he makes other obscure references to himself like sycophant or delicious), he is most likely not desperate to unify beats. There are those who are desperate to unify Palestinians and Israelis, yes, but desperate to unify beats? Absolutely not. And just ignore the presence of intellectual in his description; that sounds cocky doesn't it?

And the album fresh cold cuts, while a decent listen, isn't enough to get overly cocky about. Unfortunately, wiremnky too often sounds like somebody else; a disease that leads to others walking into the room asking if it's Orbital or Meat Beat Manifesto. His record company made website admits to his influences, also listing early industrials favorites Ministry and Front 242 and Dr. Dre (No kidding.) Not a good sign for the wiremnky. Too often his beats sound like somebody else's, their soft ambient feel just feeling so played.

The only thing he's really done right is add the lyrical stylings of barewire (Simone Grey), a highly pitched singer that manages to sound deeper than she really is. Her voice over some of the tracks is absolutely haunting, tending toward images from a dark place; say the French film Delicatessen perhaps? Indeed, as for some reason this album features The Delicatessen Remixes, hinting at the dark French movie that apparently inspired wiremnky.

The album does feature some standout tracks, including the tenth track "tunnel visionary," featuring the extensive styling of barewire. The music sounds a little less familiar than earlier on the album, and might be a sign of hidden talent within wiremnky's work. He always does fairly well with "no auto focus" and "seaweed" two tracks on which he lets his own mind do the talking, rather than his influences.

But the rest of the songs just sound too familiar – be it the opening track "couri adjournment" or "curious foliage." They're both decent little songs, but they just seem like they've been on somebody else's record. For wiremnky to really do his thing, he has to focus on doing his thing. The influences are nice, but his own music would be a hell of a lot better.

COURTESY OF PHOTOBUCKET.COM
With a name like wiremnky, how could he not be misanthropic?

COURTESY OF SONY MUSIC
Residential Arts presents...
Euh Me Ahn, a dancer trained and raised in Korea, tonight and tomorrow night at the Scott Building, Smith College. Performances begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are available at 545-2511.

■ mens tennis

continued from page 10

the eight ball from the start, however, as they could only field a team of four players to bring up to Amherst.

In the premier match of the day, Prisco had a gritty performance as he overcame a 3-5 second set deficit to defeat Chris Markowski 6-4, 7-5 in a hard fought battle. The other Minutemen had little to no trouble in their matches as Champeau and Davis continued their undefeated streaks in dual match play, and Hershipped up to win his match in his first singles appearance of the year. Champeau cruised to a 6-3, 6-1 victory over the Blue Devils' Nathan Gaudreau, while Davis crushed CCSL's Brian Shapiro 6-0, 6-1. Theodoropoulos also appeared to have no trouble adjusting to singles play as he defeated Tim Knowles 6-1, 6-1. UMass won the other two singles matches by default.

In doubles action, the Maroon and White rested their top two doubles teams as the team of Shaw and Theis defeated Markowski and Gaudreau 9-7, and Bill Greener and Phil Rodrigues defeated Shapiro and Knowles 8-0.

Dixon expressed pleasure with her team's dominating performance, but stressed that the match was necessary to gain more preparation for yesterday's match against Boston College.

"I'm glad it rained. Last Thursday[,] because we weren't ready to play BC," she said. "With Saturday's practice and this match, we're more prepared. The conditions in the Central Connecticut match were horrible but it was a good warm up. Everybody played and it was definitely better than a practice."

The BC match had the same conditions and they weren't as ready for it," added Dixon. "That gave us an edge in the end."

According to Dixon, there would be no excuses for the match against BC. The Minutemen didn't need any on Tuesday, as they showed they could not only just compete with but defeat quality opponents.

The team will participate in the UConn Invitational this upcoming weekend, and return to dual match play on October 17th against the Rams of Rhode Island.

■ womens tennis

continued from page 10

In doubles matches, the duo of Hamilton and Gilfoely defeated the Blue Devils' tandem of Katie Anderson and Colberg. Stamatiou and Hanson took their match 8-4 over McGaughan and Hower. The team also received another win from the pair of Horak and Hanns by default.

"I think everyone played really well today, the weekend. Everyone was satisfied with the way we played and hopefully we can carry it over to our match with Dartmouth," Horak said.

The Minutewomen travel to Hanover, NH for a match with Ivy League foe Dartmouth College today. The Big Green of Dartmouth has yet to compete in dual match play so far this season, competing only in tournaments thus far. However, the Massachusetts team is looking to be challenged a little more than they were over the weekend.

"Dartmouth is good. They are similar to BC, who beat us," Mancini said.

The Minutewomen haven't had much success over the years against Dartmouth, who is considered one of the top programs in the East, so they are hoping to go into the match tomorrow with the same kind of strength and domination they showed in their previous two matches.

After tomorrow's match, the team has a bit of a break before heading on the road to face Columbia on October 27th.

■ mp3

continued from page 6

walk, I listen to my MP3s," she said.

UF computer and information sciences junior George Mora agreed with Dye. He said he listens to digitally downloaded music all the time and likes to use Napster because he does not have to show proof of ownership – unlike what the proposed legislation will require.

"All I hear are the big, rich bands complain," he said. "I think the only people it's hurting is the poor college student who's just trying to get their music for free." UF business administration senior Cody Metcalf took a different approach to the issue. Metcalf, president of the band promotion company Missionary Records, said he dislikes MP3.com and Napster. He also is against the piece of legislation being offered by Congress. Metcalf said the legislation and the digital music companies take away money from small bands money that could be used toward promoting.

"I think it's an easy way out for Congress," he said. "If there was a way to control (the digital music companies), I would really like to see songs that are already on the radio be available for listeners."

Metcalf said he has seen entire albums offered to people for downloading, which he said takes away from the record sales and promotion that a band needs. He said the legislation is Congress' way of making constituents happy and would be out of date soon.

"Technology is always going to move faster than Congress," he said.

On the web: www.umass.edu/umim
UMass GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Foul Shooting (M/W/C).....10/16
3-Point Shootout (M/W).....10/16
STILL TIME TO ENTER:
Tennis Singles..... A.S.A.P.
Ultimate Frisbee..... A.S.A.P.
Weekend Softball..... A.S.A.P.
Volleyball..... A.S.A.P.
CAMPUS RECREATION

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

Do you like to dance? Learn some Swing?

Fall Into Swing
Presented by UMass Ballroom Dance Club
Where: Campus Center Auditorium
Date: October 12th, Thursday
FREE Beginner Swing Lesson 7:00 pm - 8:00 pm
Open Dance from 8:00 pm - Midnight
FREE Refreshment
FREE Demonstration by the UMass Ballroom Dance Team

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Student Discounts
✓ Professional Bartending Training
✓ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✓ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✓ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
Class Begins Fri. Oct. 13th 6:00pm Valentine Hall Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Keep Reading the Collegian

The money is waiting...
www.guess4green.com

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work . . .
To find out more, attend the
Smith College School for Social Work
Alumni Symposium
Talking When Talking is Tough:
Taking On Difficult Conversations About Race, Sexual Orientation, Gender, Class, And Other Aspects Of Social Identity
Saturday, October 14, 2000
9:30a.m. - 3:00p.m.
Seeyle Hall - Room 106
Smith College
For more information, call (413) 585-7960

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, em! Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas: Administrative Support Data Entry Operator Entry Level Management Front Office Support Customer Service Representative CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com Corporate Staffing Solutions 126 Northampton Street, Suite G Easthampton, MA 01027 (413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL

WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise?

You Found the Place!

It is Easy!

Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*See Store for Terms and Conditions.

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2619

UStore CAMPUS CENTER Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board	21	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3 Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4 Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5 Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57 Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20 Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel	28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain	29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61 Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24 Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WGCH & HSCN	32	Cartoon Network
14	International	33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV	34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven	35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance	36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel	37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19	38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — SEPTEMBER 27, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Client Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Falcon Pertway	Connection		Time Freeze (N
WFSB	3	News (N	CBS News	Harwood Sq	Big Brother (In Stereo Live) (N			Survivor: Long Hard Days' (N	48 Hours 'Never Forget' (N		News (N	Late Show (N
WBZ	4	News (N	CBS News	Hollywood Sq	Ent. Tonight		Big Brother (In Stereo Live) (N		Survivor: Long Hard Days' (N	48 Hours 'Never Forget' (N	News (N	Late Show (N
WCVB	5	News (N	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N	Drew Carey (N	Vanished: 'A Mother's Search'	News (N	Nightline (N
WLVI	56		Sabrina-Witch	Charmed (N	Friends (N	Nanny (N	Dawson's Creek 'True Love' (N		Felicity (In Stereo) (N	News (N		Friends (N	Change Heart
WHDH	7	News (N	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) (N
WTXX	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (N		Blind Date	'Real TV' (N		7 Days 'The Cure' (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Real TV (N	Blind Date	Change Heart
WVIT	10	News (N	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) (N
WTIC	61	Simpsons (N	Sabrina	Seinfeld (N	Frasier (N		Simpsons (N	Magicath-Blind	The Shoe	The Shoe	News	Friends (N	Frasier (N
WWLP	22	News (N	NBC News	Olympic Summer Games (In Stereo) (N
WGBY	57	4, World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Client Eastwood: Out of the Shadows			Great Performances: Berlin Philharmonic			Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N
WGGB	40	News (N	ABC News	Seinfeld (N	Frasier (N		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N	Drew Carey (N	Vanished: 'A Mother's Search'	News (N	Nightline (N
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N	Judge Judy (N	Seinfeld (N	Frasier (N		7 Days 'The Cure' (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier	Love Lucy	Mad Abt. You	Judge Mathis
WTBS	72		Roseanne (N	Roseanne (N	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Nanny a Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	69	L.A. Law 'Rock and			Law & Order (N		Biography: Jimmy Hoffa		American Justice 'Mob Rule'		Investigative Reports (N		Law & Order 'Facade' (N
CNN	33	Worldview (N	Moneyline Newshour (N			Crossfire (N	World Today (N		Larry King Live (N		Newsstand (N		Sports	Moneyline (N
COM	32	Saturday Night Live (N			Daily Show (N	Stein's Money	It's 'Pandemic 2 The Adventure'		(1982, Post-Holo Horror)		South Park (N	Battledrones (N	Daily Show (N	Stein's Money
DISC	53	Wild Discovery 'Dragons			Wild Discovery 'Wildest Asia'		On the Inside 'Death Zone'		Flood of the Millennium		Wrestling Ma Bloodbaths		Justice Files 'Vigilantes'
ESPN	43	Sportscenter (N			Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced (Live) (N						Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced (Live) (N
LIFE	63	Golden Girls	Golden Girls		Intr 'Trial The Price of Passion' (1982, Drama) Peter Weller, Beverly D'Angelo (N				Any What Artist	Live Through This 'Pilot'			Makeover	Say What Artist
MTV	45	Direct Effect	Makeover		Real World (N	Real World (N	Pete (In Stereo)		Any What Artist	Live Through This 'Pilot'			Makeover	Say What Artist
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys		Hey Arnold! (N	Rugrats (N	Catalog		Facts of Life	Colleges Idle	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	Gen. Hillbillies	All in Family
SCIFI	66	Sliders (In Stereo) (N			Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales		Intr 'Return of the Living Dead' (1985, Adventure) Hamilton Finn, Edmo Allen				Jeffersons (N	Crossing Over
TLC	54	How'd They Do That?			48 Hours 'Out of Mind' (N		Extreme Machines (N		FBI Profilers: Criminal Minds (R		Sixth Sense (N		Twilight Zone	Extreme Machines
TNT	44	(PA 'Great Expectations' (N			Pretender 'Unhappy Landings'		American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis				American Cinematheque Salutes Bruce Willis		Intr 'Blood Diamond' (1981)
USA	65	Walker, Texas Ranger (N			JAG 'Death Watch' (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges 'Report' (N		Crime Inc. FBI Family		Murders 'Partners' (In Stereo)		Strip Poker	Martin (N
HBO	48	(5:00) ♦ "13 Going On 30" (2004, Comedy) Jennifer Garner, Mark Ruffalo, Andy Serkis (N							Sex-and-City		Miles		On 'Unnatural Disasters' (N
MAX	49	(5:00) "Alice" (N	Here 'Edward Scissorhands' (1990, PG-13) (N				Ira's 'The Thirteenth Floor' (1999, Drama) Craig Bierko, Jo Stewart (N				'Three A Crime' (2004, Comedy) Lucy Liu, Jay Mohr, Jon Gries (N		Lucy Liu, Jay Mohr, Jon Gr
SHOW	47	♦♦♦ "The Truman Show" (1998, Drama) Jim Carrey, Ed Harris (PG) (N					'Heroes' (2000, Drama) Wood Harris, Dorian Harewood				Soul Food		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

HEY MORK, HOW'S IT GOING?
I LIVE ENTIRELY ON PINE NEEDLES THAT FALL NATURALLY FROM UNDISTURBED PINE TREES.
AND BACON. PLATES AND PLATES OF FATTY, GREASY BACON.
meat! because there are too many cows!

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

GOVERNOR BUSH, ALL THAT THE MOMS HAVE DEMANDED WAS SIMPLE REGISTRATION AND LICENSING. IS THAT UNREASONABLE?
WELL, YES IT IS. AND LET ME TELL YOU WHY. ONLY LAW-ABIDING GUNOWNERS WOULD END UP REGISTERING.
WHICH WOULD LEAVE THEM DEFENSELESS IF OUR GOVERNMENT EVER SENT TASKFORCED AGENTS TO KICK DOWN THEIR DOORS AND TAKE THEIR GUNS!
TO MILLION DOLLARS?
WELL, NOT ALL AT ONCE. IT'D BE LIKE A TEN-YEAR PROJECT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I'LL HAVE A CAN OF TUNA
THIS IS A CHINESE RESTAURANT, BUCK
MA AM, WHAT IS THIS, ONE?
THAT'S THE "FAMILY PLATTER"
I'LL EAT CHINESE TUNA. I'M NO RACIST
SORRY ABOUT THIS. WE DON'T GET OUT MUCH
WOW. THAT'S MADE FROM A WHOLE FAMILY?

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

SAMMY, WHEN YOU LOOK AT THIS INKBLOT, WHAT DO YOU SEE?
A BUSY-BODY LITTLE TURTLE WHO CAN'T ACCEPT HIS FRIENDS FOR WHO THEY ARE
R.J. PLEASE!... TIM ONLY TRYING TO UNDERSTAND SAMMY SO I CAN BETTER...
...YEAH! AFTER HE'S BEEN SQUASHED LIKE A BUG BY A WOOLLY MAMMOTH...!
HEY! YOU'RE RIGHT! GOOD EYE! ...NAMED BEATRICE.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

YOU KNOW, B.D., I THINK I WILL JOIN UNCLE DUKE'S CAM PAIGN.
YOUR LOSS, AL.
OF COURSE, I'D HAVE TO TAKE A SABBATICAL FROM MY OU TIES HERE.
I'M NOT ASKING YOU TO BE A WEEK.
I DON'T THINK SO... THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT BEING INVOLVED IN A NO-BLS CAUSE AHEAD OF SCHEDULE THAN YOUR LIKING.
DUKE 2000! HOW MAY I DIRECT YOUR CALL?
HI, MAN! IS THE BIG GUY IN?
HELLO!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

YO, DUDES. I'M HOME!
DOWN, BOY! HEEL!
I MISS Y' YOU, BUT YO, DUDES GOTTA LEARN DISCIPLINE
REMEMBER WHAT HAPPENED LAST TIME?
THEY KNOCK THE CABLE INSTALLER FOR ME AND LAST I HEARD HE'S STILL UNDER MEDICATION AT BELLEVUE

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

UM, ABOUT THE FOOT-LONG CORN DOG YOU SOLD ME YESTERDAY.
WHAT ABOUT IT?
IT WASN'T A FOOT LONG. IT WAS 11½ INCHES. YOU OWE ME HALF AN INCH.
WE DON'T STOCK HALF-INCH UNITS OF CORN DOG, KID.
BUT I PAID FOR A FOOT! I WANTED A FOOT!
FINE. HERE'S ANOTHER CORN DOG FOR FREE. NOW SCRAM.
I GUESS THE SQUEAKY WHEEL REALLY DOES GET THE GREASE

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Robotman By Jim Meddick

DO YOU SEE THAT SPECTACLE? DO YOU SEE HOW PEOPLE ARE OVEREATING WE OUT?
I'M NO LONGER "MONEY MERCURY" AT THE SUPER SALAD BAR. NOW I'M A COOL ROCK AND ROLL GUY AT THE SUPER SALAD BAR
LOOK, HERE COMES ONE OF THE KIDS WHO WORKS HERE. HE PROBABLY WANTS A BACKSTAGE PASS OR SOMETHING SO, SECOND YOU KEEP YOUR HAIR UP OFF THE GREASY TARTARE?

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — This is a good day to pursue your heart's desire with a little more dedication and gusto. Happy Birthday Comfort and Kristen!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You mustn't let yourself settle into the kind of dull routine that can quickly be characterized as a rut. Use your imagination!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your vision into the past and the future, too, perhaps — is clearer now than it has been.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Now is no time to be too leisurely or relaxed. Success depends on giving every step your attention, care and dedication.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — This is a good day for exploring what lies before you - at a fast or slow pace, whichever suits your mood at the moment. Curiosity reigns.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a good day to keep score - and to insist that your closest competitors follow the rules to the letter.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You are not suffering from a shortage of confidence or ambition.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You can get a great deal of fun and enjoyment out of those endeavors today which seemed, at first, to be nothing but routine requirements.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You may be consumed with thoughts of another time or place today. There is a time for nostalgia — and today, it can serve you rather well.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your enthusiastic approach is catching today, and others will benefit from your energy and vision.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Apologies may be in order before the day is out, but timely and courteous behavior can serve to heal rifts and improve relations all around.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take advantage of any and all downtime you have today to catch up on personal business that can't afford to wait much longer.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 60 LOW: 32	HIGH: 60 LOW: 38	HIGH: 63 LOW: 38

Quote of the Day

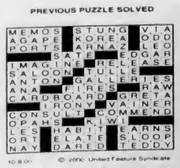
"You can't spend your whole life tryin' to get high- You gotta get up, get out, and do something..."

–Macy Gray

ACROSS
1 Shady place
6 Yen
10 Guardian's charge
14 Sea creature
15 Cleveland's state
16 Water, in Mexico
17 Does a banking job
18 Magician's stick
19 Den
20 Gloomy
21 Declaim
23 Eye movement
24 Chef's attire
26 Tag accompany
27 Contribute
29 Junk
31 Hindu princess
32 Condescend
33 Python
36 Difficult problem
40 Commuter vehicle
41 Actor Jack —
42 — spumante
43 Become mellow
44 Wrinkle-resistant fabric
46 Thin material
48 Fruit pulp
49 Fish-like
50 Wild horse
52 Tennis shot
55 Elevator inventor
56 Comic Rivers
57 Subarctic forest
59 Gait
60 Impulse
61 Not moving
62 Winter transport
63 Pullovers
64 Restaurants

DOWN
1 Leatherworker's tools
2 Ms. Perlman
3 Large handkerchiefs
4 Ancient
5 Spa
6 Des Moines resident
7 Not this
8 Movie
9 Goat scuttle
10 Smack
11 Once more
12 Remaining
13 Until
22 Caviar
23 Bugs Bunny's voice, Mel
25 Couple
26 Golden Fleece ship
27 Cheerless
28 Honolulu's island
29 — one's ways
31 Quote
32 Jazz musician Ellington
33 Certain sculpture
34 Eight: pref.
35 Samar
37 Lace mat
38 Scruff of the neck
39 Hurry
43 Washed off
44 Hound for payment
45 Cold place
46 Urgent
47 Chilled
48 Corn breads
49 Dandies
50 Make weary
51 Fast
53 Monster
54 Bailey residents
56 Protrude
58 Med. workers org.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

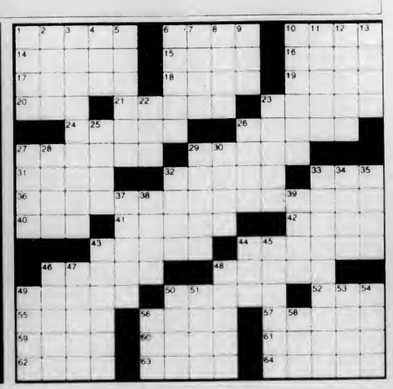


10-9-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

WHERE THE BEER FLOWS LIKE WINE & THE WOMEN FLOCK INSTINCTIVELY

The HANGAR Pub and Grill

55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Rigatoni Sausage Casserole

Chicken Quesadilla

Native American Stew (vegan)

Vegetable Black Bean Quesadilla (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

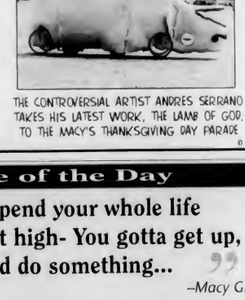
Dinner

Szechuan Beef & Broccoli

Roast Pork Tenderloin

Quinoa Stuffed Tomato (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli



THE CONTROVERSIAL ARTIST ANDRES SERRANO TAKES HIS LATEST WORK, THE LAMB OF GOD, TO THE MACY'S THANKSGIVING DAY PARADE

© 2000

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	John Zawislak, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass soccer wins a pair

Minutemen down SJU and TU in A-10 tilts

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen went hunting over the weekend in Philadelphia and they came back with a saddlebag full of Hawks and Owls.

The Massachusetts soccer team entered this weekend's matches against St. Joseph's and Temple, boasting a six game unbeaten streak. After a 1-0 overtime win against the Owls and a 4-2 offensive explosion against St. Joe's, the Minutemen stand at 7-3-2 with a 2-0-1 mark in the Atlantic 10.

The UMass offense was firing on all cylinders on Friday's match against St. Joseph's, notching a season high four goals. The most important scores of the match may have been from the foot of junior striker Fred Kinateder, who scored two goals in the contest.

Leading scorer Jeff Deren (six goals) opened the scoring with an unassisted tally less than six minutes into the game. The sophomore has been carrying most of the scoring load this year for the Maroon and White, but in this match, he got some help from fellow front runner Kinateder.

Kinateder, a Wisconsin native, notched his first goal of the contest with 31:20 left in the half. The junior took a pass from assist man Yuri Morales and then beat the keeper for his second goal of the year.

St. Joe's cut the UMass lead in half with five minutes left to play in the first half. Hawk midfielder Adam Duffy crossed the ball into the box, where forward Matt James headed the ball past O'Quinn for the home teams first scoring strike of the game.

The Maroon and White quickly regained their two-goal lead as freshman standout Pratt Myers notched his second goal of the year. Myers scored off an assist from Max Wolf, sending the Minutemen into halftime with a two-goal cushion.

Kinateder quickly found the net again in the second half. Only 10 minutes into the period, sophomore Andrew Fisher fed Kinateder for his second goal of the match and a three-goal lead.

The Hawks managed to cut the lead to two with a goal later in the half, but it was not enough as UMass left the field with its unbeaten streak intact and a 2-0-1 record in the A-10.

Coach Sam Koch said after a tie with Duquesne earlier in the week, "We have to finish our chances." The Minutemen did just that on Friday, finding the net four times in its 4-2 victory.

On Sunday, UMass went up against another A-10 opponent in Temple. The Owls were almost completely dominated during the entire match with the Minutemen holding a significant edge in all offensive categories.

Coach Koch's offense was on the attack again forcing opposing goaltender Drew Moser to make 11 saves. Massachusetts also held a 12-3 edge in corner kicks, while holding Temple to only four shots on goal.

Despite the lopsided game, at the end of regulation the scoreboard showed zeroes for each team. UMass had fired 11 shots on goal and none had found the back of the net.

Overtime would see the Maroon and White finally take advantage of their talent edge and scoring opportunities. With less than six minutes left in the extra frame, senior co-captain Patrick Beattie sent a ball towards Olive Gravely who leapt head over heels, bicycle kicking the ball over the goal line and into the net, securing another UMass victory.

Coach Koch and his Minutemen look ahead to another away match against Harvard this afternoon.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeff Deren had a big weekend as the UMass men's soccer team won two conference games.

UMass field hockey prep for PC Friars

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It is unwise to take any team lightly, and the Massachusetts field hockey team should know this better than anybody.

After ripping off four straight wins against Albany, No. 20 Harvard, No. 7 UConn and No. 14 Boston University, the Minutewomen failed to get the job done against an inferior Syracuse squad, and lost a 1-0 defensive struggle, despite out shooting the Orangewomen 10-3 and completely outplaying them on both ends of the field.

However, while the game was disappointing in almost all aspects, it did succeed at getting the team's undivided attention.

And now, the Maroon and White will attempt to enact revenge on the unfortunate Providence Friars, when it travels down to the smallest state in the Union for a 3 p.m. Wednesday showdown.

Unfortunately for the Friars, they receive the honor of being the first team to face the wrath of the Minutewomen following the Syracuse loss.

If UMass plays up to its potential, then the outcome most likely won't be pretty, but so far this year the Maroon and White have had a bad habit of playing up or down to its competition. And statistically, the 4-10 Friars are one of the worst teams they will face all year.

That is why the Minutewomen cannot take their opposition lightly, lest they make the same mistake they did against the Orangewomen.

In this game, however, there are more things to worry about for UMass than just playing down to the competition. Providence does sport some firepower at the forward position and at the back position, to go along with a goalie, Heather Tattersall, that has just as many shutouts (4) as All-American candidate Zowie Tucker.

In one week alone, forward and leading scorer Breane Wojnarowicz (6 goals, 2 assists), back Julie Tunguay (1 goal, 4 assists) and Tattersall all earned Big East player of the week honors at their respective positions. It showed that the Friars have somebody to look out for at every position on the field.

To go along with aforementioned big three are Casey Geary and Stefanie Suehnholz, who each have three goals on the year to round out the offense.

Another advantage for the Friars will be the fact that Wednesday's game will be played on grass, as opposed to the artificial turf the Minutewomen are used to playing on. Yesterday, the Maroon and White had a practice on the grass fields behind Boyden in an attempt to prepare for today's game, but nothing can quite simulate exactly what the team will face when they head out onto the unusual playing surface.

Zowie Tucker

As far as UMass' offense goes, Anke Bruemmer has continued to score the majority of the team's goals, all of which come on the Minutewomen's patented penalty corner play in which Lucy Koch fires the ball to Patty Robinson, who stops the ball, and lets Bruemmer whack it as hard as she can toward the goal. Bruemmer has totaled a team leading seven goals on the year, while Robinson and Koch each have eight assists.

When the Maroon and White are not in a penalty corner situation, Kristen Schmidt and Lindsay Abbott do most of the offensive damage, totaling six and five goals respectively.

UMass men's water polo team wins three in Big Apple

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Later this week, the No. 12 Massachusetts men's water polo team (16-3, 6-0 CWPA) will be traveling to California to take on three of the top 11 teams in the nation. That being said, it was crucial for the Maroon and White to have a successful trip to New York last weekend.

The Minutemen accomplished their task, sweeping the three game CWPA tournament with victories over Brown, the U.S. Merchant Marines Academy, and No. 20 Iona College.

The Minutemen defeated Brown by a score of 15-10 to begin the weekend. The game was essentially over after the first quarter as UMass held a 6-1 lead.

"I had a few key saves to setup fast breaks in the 1st quarter, which set us up for the rest of the game," said junior goalie J.R. VanderWall.

The Minutemen then coasted to victory with Carlos Ramos leading the offense with six goals. VanderWall led the defense with 12 saves.

In the second game of the weekend, the Maroon and White beat the U.S. Merchant Marines Academy, 15-11.

UMass had a slim 4-3 advantage after the first quarter and a 7-4 lead at halftime, which it held throughout the second half.

"We were a little shaky at first when I played some of the younger kids," UMass men's water polo coach Russ Yarworth said. "Once we put the starters in, we got the lead and kept it."

Adam Moore led the way with four goals for UMass. Rodrigo Gonzalez led the defense with 11 saves while giving VanderWall the game off.

The final game of the weekend was also the most challenging as UMass took on No. 20 Iona. The Minutemen were forced to navigate some major obstacles that ended in a tight 11-10 victory.

The first obstacle was the home pool advantage. Iona had a big, loud crowd in the game, helping their team gain momentum.

The second obstacle was the shallow/deep pool, which UMass rarely plays in. This means that the end of the pool is shallow. Water polo is usually played in pools that are entirely deep so the players must tread water.

"When I was standing in goal, the water was only up to my suit," VanderWall said. "The bottom was slippery and it took some time to adjust."

The third obstacle was Iona's ability to play very tight defense due to the shallow water and their taking advantage of some liberal refereeing.

"They could use the bottom to get more mobility and could hold a lot more," Yarworth said. "They were fouling and holding and we dug ourselves into a [7-4] hole [at the half]."

"I told the guys that they would have to be tied by the end of the third, or we aren't going to win this game, and it will have serious implications on their post-season hopes," added Yarworth.

UMass scored four goals in the third quarter and tied it up 8-8 going into the final frame.

"In the fourth quarter, we got a quick two goal lead and kind of hung on by the skin of our teeth," Yarworth said. "It was one of those games where you get the win and then get out of there as fast as you can and go home."

Ramos and Mike Foley led the way for UMass with three goals apiece. VanderWall played terrific defense and had another 12 saves in net.

Minutewomen win two; SJU, CCSU fall victim

By Alison Sciomanna
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's tennis team finished off a successful holiday weekend by sweeping both St. John's and Central Connecticut to push their record to 5-1 while freshman sensation Francesca Mancini now remains undefeated at 8-0 this season on the strength of two more strong outings.

The Minutewomen got the 9-0 sweep over St. John's on Saturday behind the consistent play of Mancini, who took the Red Storm's Corina Cetateanu in straight sets. Susan Hyams also defeated Caroline Miccolis in straight sets, while junior Anne Hamilton beat St. John's Vera Ustathiou. Freshman Jafra Depontes took Mirela Blanaru in straight sets. Junior Helena Horak got the win over Heidi Lanzeno, while the final win came from Caroline Larson by default.

Massachusetts dominated in the doubles matches as well. The freshman duo of Mancini and Depontes defeated the Red Storm's pair of Cetateanu and Ustathiou 8-3.

The UMass tandem of Hyams and Horak downed Blanaru and Miccolis 8-0. Katie Stammen and Larson recorded a default victory to complete the sweep.

"We played good, especially at doubles," Mancini said. "We had fun."

The team returned to action on the Monday holiday, sweeping Central Connecticut State 9-0. Once again, Mancini came out victorious for the eighth time in eight matches this season, defeating the Blue Devil's Rose Anderson in straight sets. Hamilton beat Katie Anderson, while Depontes took her match against Heather McGaughan.

Juniors Horak and Gillooly kept both of their opponents scoreless. Horak defeated Eleanor Flower, while Gillooly beat Jennie Gilberg. Sophomore Stammen picked up a victory for the Minutewomen by default.

Turn to WOMENS TENNIS, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The UMass women's tennis team had a good weekend, downing Central Connecticut and St. John's in non-conference action.

Minutemen earn huge regional wins Boston College and CCSU fall prey

By Andy Vogt and Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

Since the beginning of the season, the Massachusetts men's tennis team cited Boston College as their first real test of the year. After being rained out on Thursday, the Minutemen traveled to Chestnut Hill yesterday, looking to prove they could defeat tougher competition than schools such as the University of Hartford.

While there was no fourth consecutive sweep by the Maroon and White, the team clawed and scratched its way to a 4-3 victory over the Eagles, improving its record to 4-0 on the young season. UMass lost the doubles point, but won where it counted, taking four of six singles matches on the day.

"This was a terrific tennis match," UMass tennis coach Judy Dixon said. "I said to the team early in the season that we want to be able to win three set matches. We're a young, scrappy team and this match could have gone either way. This obviously gives us great momentum."

Steve Prisco defeated Justin Slattery 6-4, 6-3, taking care of BC's No. 1 singles player. Freshman Brent Davis overcame a first set loss to dispose of the Eagles' Marc Lucero 2-6, 6-2, 6-3. Will Shaw also rebounded after losing his first set to defeat Ross Pyiko, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3. The other UMass victory came from freshman Aron Gortman, as he won 7-5, 3-6, 6-1 over BC's Paul Calohan.

Boston College picked up two singles victories as Jason Cowen defeated UMass' Todd Champeau, 6-2, 6-3 and Damon Vartabedian defeated the Minutemen's Rory Theis, 1-6, 6-3, 7-5. BC took two of three doubles matches as well, but that proved to be insignificant as UMass continued their streak of success on the young season.

"Beating B.C. gives us great momentum for the rest of the season," Davis said. "We have a lot of confidence going into the individual tournament and the match at home against St. John's [on October 21st]. Our big test is definitely going to be our rival UConn [October 28th]."

On Monday, the Maroon and White breezed to an easy 7-0 win over the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut State, playing through chilly and brisk temperatures at Upper Boyden tennis courts.

The victory marked the third consecutive sweep over non-conference opponents for UMass. CCSU was behind

Turn to MENS TENNIS, page 7

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

The UMass men's tennis team earned a big win over regional rival Boston College yesterday afternoon in Chestnut Hill.

Check out our Fall TV preview on page 5 and read about all the TV shows that might keep you from studying.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass Field Hockey seeks out another close game. Check out the results from our new permanent Thursday Sports slot and do your best to enjoy it. We sure do.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 26 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, October 12, 2000

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Senior Journalism major Alicia Conway peruses through the t-shirts at the Clotheline Project outside the Campus Center yesterday.

Open, up front, and honest

UMass Coming Out Day

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, Oct. 11, was National Coming Out Day, a day during which many Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender individuals celebrate their individuality. Here at the University of Massachusetts, many students came out to celebrate the event at a rally put on by the Pride Alliance club at UMass. The event took place outside the Student Union, where many students spoke of their own personal coming out experiences.

"It's a day that there is for those who have yet to come out or who have it's a way of showing support of one another," said Pride Alliance member, Angie Crittendon.

This event is nationally recognized by Congress and began in 1987 in commeration of the '87 march in Washington D.C.

"It's a day not only to commemorate the '87 march in Washington, but also to dispel myths, rumors and fears that many people have about LGB [Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual] people," said Pride Alliance president Ed Kammerer.

UMass as a whole has provided not only support groups and clubs, but they have also provided housing options for those who choose to live in a Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender environment.

"The school has been great, there are still aspects which could be improved, but overall they [UMass] have been extremely supportive. Housing has been great, they sent out packets around campus to RA's [resident advisors] as well as RD's [resident directors] explaining the days events as well as information," said Kammerer.

Pride Alliance also continued the event into the evening where they held an event at 7 p.m. in the Student Ball room. A game called "Guess Who's Straight?" was played to kick off the evening's events.

"This game that we are playing is to dispel stereotypes as well as give students the ability to ask questions and get information. I've been doing the Guess Who's Straight panels for the past year. Last year we visited 15 dormatories and had a fabulous student response. It's great because we get to increase the awareness amongst students," said Moderator for the Pride Alliance event and Resident Director, Leslie Evertz.

"I think it's important as an administrator to be a role model for students and to let them know that it's ok to be yourself around administration and staff," said Evertz.

The movie Get Real followed. This offered students a chance to get to know one another as well as offer information on LGB issues.

"The whole event is to increase student awareness around campus and to increase the knowledge of people by talking about issues at hand," said Kammerer.

The evenings event brought together a diverse group of individuals, some there to show support for friends, and others to open there minds to the diverse issues which were being presented.

"I came here tonight in support of a friend of mine who is on the Pride Alliance board," said sophomore Michelle Beller. "I think it's great, I know that before I came to UMass I was not as aware of these issues, and by being here it's made me more open-minded which I think is good. It's great to get the awareness out there, because I know there are still ignorant people out in the world who don't care to learn more."

Pride Alliance currently holds between 30 and 35 active members.

Meetings take place every Tuesday from 7-9 p.m. in the Campus Center.

For more information on how to become involved, or if you have any questions concerning events, visit room 413B at the Student Union building or call 545-0154. All meetings are open for anyone to attend.

SGA attempts to diversify

By Michal Lumsden
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) says it wants to take a closer look at diversity issues on campus. To do so, a new position in the Executive Cabinet and a new Senate committee has been created.

Juliet Okafor, a senior communications major, was appointed by SGA President Jeff Howe to the position of Secretary of Diversity. At last week's SGA meeting, the Senate voted unanimously to accept the appointment.

As the Secretary of Diversity is a new position, much of the work Okafor will do this year will be to pave the road for the following Secretary.

Okafor said she hopes to get a wider group of students involved in the SGA. Among those she would like to work with are women, Asian, Latino, African, and Native American (ALANA) students, and Gay, Bi-Sexual, Lesbian, and Transgender (GBLT) students.

There is no question that traditionally these groups of students have received little representation in the Senate.

Associate Speaker of the Senate Mike McCarthy said, "The Senate has been historically caucasian. . . By creating Juliet's position . . . [the Senate] hopes to promote diversity in the Senate and in the University as a whole."

Many wonder whether or not the creation of the Secretary of Diversity will adequately address all diversity issues, though.

"I'm only one person," Okafor said, "My position, along with the ALANA caucus is essential."

Currently, ALANA students are appointed and make up roughly 13 percent of the Senate.

Last April, the Senate voted to phase out the appointed ALANA seats over the next few years. The issue must be approved by the student body through a referendum question that will appear on the ballot this spring.

ALANA constituents fear that Okafor's position will be used to pay lip service to issues involving minority students on campus without actually addressing those issues and looking for solutions.

"You can't use my position to take away ALANA seats," Okafor stated.

Nelson Acosta, Director of the Office of ALANA Affairs, agreed.

"The Secretary of Diversity is a great idea," Acosta commented. "But there is no guarantee that the Secretary of Diversity is going to be able to recruit people [to get involved with the SGA.] And there is no guarantee that those people [once recruited] will get elected."

Acosta continued to say that the Secretary of Diversity is a temporary remedy, not a solution, to addressing diversity issues.

ALANA students comprise about 18 percent of the UMass undergraduate population.

With nearly one-fifth of the student body members of racial minority groups, it is important that those stu-

Turn to DIVERSITY, page 2

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Chief Justice Gabe Tavarez and Senate President Jeff Howe sit in an SGA meeting last week. Tavarez is one of the few Non-Caucasian members of the SGA.

U attempts to make campus ADA A-Ok

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Picture a person who's not capable of being able to walk up the stairs, their only option an elevator? What if they went to class to take notes, yet were unable to read the overheads? These are just a few challenges that many University of Massachusetts students face daily.

The passing of the July 26, 1990 American Disability Act, [ADA] it made it a national law that any public as well as business facility must provide proper accesses of accessibility for those of disabilities. This meaning that every building should be equipped to serve any person even those with disabilities. The question however has arisen, as to the extent of how far this campus has gone to make changes for the better to accommodate every student who is apart of UMass in compliance with this law.

"What the University has is a transition plan, these include all the buildings on campus. What the University did, is took class rooms and auditoriums as there priority one group. This meaning that they look at each particular building and it's disability needs. It then goes on to numerous other levels of needs and prioritizing from that point," said Disability Services Director Madeline Peters.

In efforts that have started beyond building ramps and elevators issues such as personal learning and classroom accessibility has been addressed by Disability Services.

"All classes are accessible. We say this and students say: how is this possible when you look at places such as South College? But, if there is a class there were for some students it's not accessible, we then move the class out of South College so that it's in an accessible building, so the class is still accessible to students with disabilities," said Peters.

Students, however, have expressed concerns over the issue of access for students with disabilities on campus. Students around the UMass campus have expressed a general concern over safety, and lack of accessibility into buildings.

Turn to DISABILITY, page 2

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Pride Alliance President Ed Kammerer speaks outside the Student Union during "National Coming Out Day."

Concert at Mahar

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian staff

"Tierra!, Tierra!, Tierra!: Songs of Spain and Latin America," is a benefit concert held tonight in the Mahar Auditorium, UMass, beginning at 7 p.m., in honor of thousands of lives lost, and over 200,000 left homeless due to 15 days of torrential rains that led to massive flooding and mud slides in Venezuela.

Jorge Gonzalez, a UMass graduate student, said that everything from small shacks to huge houses were destroyed. "There were rocks as tall as buildings that destroyed water pipes and electricity," said Gonzalez. "It was like the mountains were completely swept to the sea."

The organizing committee of the event consists of Gonzalez and two other graduate students in the UMass community, Srachesco D'Introno, and Rosemary Weston. They feel that with the support of different groups within the university, this event will raise people's awareness of the Venezuelan culture.

"This is a symbolic way to express solidarity and Race awareness," said Gonzalez. "We have gotten a lot of support within the university and it is greatly appreciated."

Last spring semester, Gonzalez helped Venezuela fly putting together "A Venezuela Gala" at Amherst College which raised $4000. Because of this success, many felt that more fund raising is necessary. "All the work and effort is worth the while," said Gonzalez.

Featured performers tonight will consist of Andres Algara, accompanied by Venezuelan classical pianist Elizabeth Guerrero. "One of the initiatives that we hope to get across is that our music is very wide and diverse. Many think that Latin American music is just salsa, merengue, and Ricky Martin," said Gonzalez. "Although that kind of music is great, we have been influenced by Africa, as well as Indigenous people. We want to fight those stereotypes."

This concert will include sounds of Spain and rhythms coming from Cuba, Argentina, and of course Venezuela with in Indigenous and African roots. Gonzalez explained that because of African slavery and colonization of Indigenous people throughout Latin America and the Caribbean, viewers will be able to feel all of the influences of history within Venezuelan music.

"There are also folk singers, as well as lyrical composers combined with the movement back and forth from Latin America to Europe," said Gonzalez. "With Everything combined, it's a fiery rhythm, with a classical edge to it. It includes the best of both worlds."

The concert will be free; however, donations will be accepted. All proceeds will go to the children and families left homeless in Venezuela.

It was sponsored by Student Activities, the Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts, Lee Edwards, Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), and the Department of Spanish and Portuguese.

■ diversity

continued from page 1

dents have representation in the SGA.

Jim Eltringham, Speaker of the Senate, and author of the bill to eliminate ALANA seats last year, said this is a very complex issue.

"You have to make sure that certain views are heard, regardless of the color of skin and nationality," Eltringham said. "To that extent it is very important that [the ALANA] seats are there. But you can't appoint people to a democratically elected body."

Eltringham went on to say that he thinks it is better to phase the appointed seats out than to wipe them out all at once.

According to Okafor, however, the ALANA seats are necessary to represent ALANA students. She said the number of appointed seats should correspond to the number of ALANA students in the student body.

"Taking away the ALANA seats in five years," Okafor said, "is predicting that the [UMass] environment would change."

■ disability

continued from page 1

"I'm a part time student here, yet UMass is lacking in many ways. The Student Union is a clear violation. There is no probable access and I have no way of getting in and up to the second floor of that building and that is blatant discrimination," said student and disability rights activist Paul Winske.

"Also the sidewalks are extremely difficult and dangerous. I briefly discussed these issues with the Disability Services as well as with the Physical Plant, and they told me they would talk about these issues."

Disability Services responded to this accusation by explaining that:

"Building's such as the Student Union don't have access for disabled individuals to get to the second level, but we need to know that if you have a meeting or want to be involved in something to talk to us, because we can have meetings moved so that they are accessible to everyone. If you need someone to talk to you, they can come to you, that's what where here for, to work out these limitations," said Peters.

Funding has also been an issue for tackling issues such as building accessibility for students. With the focus not only being presented on helping students with their needs and concerns, overall funding has proven to not be enough. With expenses running higher than estimated, what would be thought to be a timely task is also changing the speed of changes around campus.

"We have $125,000 in one time monies and were allotted $400,000 a year for making more accessible changes to buildings, however, most of the changes have been by adding in elevators which our running around one million dollars," said Manager of Planning and Architecture for the Physical Plant Martha Smith.

Disability Services also responded to the issue of a lack of funding in response to productions to improve accessibility for students around the campus.

"We're a state institution, we don't have embalmment funds and money flowing in, so we can't run around the campus tearing things down, but what they are doing is with every new building, and every renovation it is being done by code," said Peters.

"It is happening, but no It's not all going to happen overnight, it's not going to happen real fast, I'd love to see it and be able to say, whoa, this campus is accessible, but lets talk about it from a reality perspective, and the fact is that nobody has that kind of money."

With much changes to be made, Disability Services as well as other areas around campus are still working to make the proper changes that need to be made towards this campus.

"There's a lot of things that fall under the category of disability, students often don't even know where available to assist them. Where a human service that provides not only resources to students, staff and faculty but we are also here to advocate on the behalf of those in the position of being disabled," said Peters.

LEA DWYER/COLLEGIAN

JUST A LITTLE OFF THE TOP...

People get a hair cut at the Crow Room in the Amherst Carriage Shops last week.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benhamu Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holstein Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tremble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Mellisa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Sirilawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

All New All Yours All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt
Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.

No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
Your Classifieds. Your Campus. Free.

Four Seasons
CONVIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS!
WINE & LIQUOR

RED STRIPE Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	CORONA Case 24 btls $18.99+ dep	HONEY BROWN Case 24 btls $13.99+ dep	INTRODUCING... SATURDAY WINE TASTINGS!! Every Saturday Noon to 4 p.m. Stop by and sample a few of our finest selections free of charge!! Sale ends 10/19/00
M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99+ dep	WACHUSETT 12 pack btls $10.99+ dep	HEINEKEN 12 pack btls $10.99 + dep
PAPER CITY 6 pack btls $5.99 + dep	CIDER JACK 6 pack btls $4.99 + dep	GLACIER BAY 4 pack btls $4.99 + dep

335 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon - Sat 9am - 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. ID's checked by Legal Age Software.

one hit wonders are the by-product of speculation.
don't listen anymore.
CLICKRADIO

CollegeFest® live music
•KITTIE
•THE SHEILA DIVINE
•C60 •SEVENTEEN AND MORE
SATURDAY & SUNDAY OCTOBER 14 12-7PM & 15 12-6PM
•REAL WORLD CAST MEMBERS
•COLLEGE FEST DATING GAME
•FREE STUFF
$6 W/STUDENT I.D.
$10 GENERAL ADMISSION
The Hynes Convention Center
900 Boylston Street | Boston
Take the green line to Hynes ICA
For more information:
www.collegefest.com
SPONSORED BY:
ALERO Oldsmobile
Phoenix FNX
boston.citysearch.com
WBCN 104 BOSTON

Sale!
$10- off
Skechers
All Styles, All Colors
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Campus Scenes

Lea Dwyer (left) looks through clothes for a fashion column she was writing. Gokh-Bi (right)came to the New Africa House to perform.

imagine
www.dailycollegian.com

Looking to Get Involved?
HAVE A PROBLEM WITH THINGS ON CAMPUS ?
Need An Extra Credit ?

Join a Campus-Wide Committe:

-Athletic Council
-Health Council
-Academic Priorities Council
-Status of Minorities Council
-Student Affairs and University Life Committee
-University Writing Committee
-Status of Women
-Library Research Council
-Arts Council
-Council for Teaching, Learning, and Instructional Technology
-University Advancement Council
-Student Health Advisory Board
-General Education Council
-Program and Budget Council

For more info contact Jen Casavant at the Student Government Association 545-1284

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Presidential debate
hopefully a better one

Last night's debate between presidential candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore hopefully will go farther to settle questions between the two than their first did. Hopefully it will present the American people with a clear, or at least clearer choice than the first petty debate's petty infighting did.

With Gore clinging to a statistically insignificant one point lead and Bush debating in a format that may benefit him, sitting around a table debating informally, the Texas governor certainly has the advantage.

But that advantage might not have really meant anything last night if the two candidates stop wasting the nation's time with their personal infighting. Bush continues to make an issue of Gore's embellishment of the truth, a valid point, but one that has been made and the American people have either come to accept or reject Gore's tendency to do such things. Gore keeps making an issue of Bush's tendency to be an out and out fool which is, again, something that the nation both knows about and has come to accept.

Which leaves the American people wondering when they're going to get any sort actual debate over actual issues.

Yes, both Gore's behavior and Bush's absolute lack of intellect are important to voters, but we want to know more about policies. What is it exactly that Bush wants to do and can he argue that successfully under pressure? Can Gore do the same?

Too often, American politics have become focused on faces and personal quirks rather than ideas, philosophies and policy proposals. This country is stuck in political quagmire with opponents of our conventional politician heaving charges that politicians are now all the same.

The only to disprove such ridiculous assertions, there can be no confusing Gore and Bush after all, is to allow them to debate specific issues before the American people. Last night was an opportunity for definite improvement.

Let us hear foreign policy proposals.

Let us hear surplus spending proposals.

And let's hope they gave us a chance to hear what they've been saying on the stump for the past weeks and months and years. And let's hope they went so far as to make it sound good or run the risk of revealing their weaknesses.

Is it too much to ask, as a media organization, that our presidential candidates debate their hearts out over the important issues facing American people?

No more sighs of dissatisfaction for Gore – no more claims of "fuzzy math" for Bush. No more attempting to trip the other one up or offering accusatory insults as reason enough to support the other.

Last night's debate will have been a failure if the candidates brought their personal issues to the debate because these debates are much more than a big personal fight between two grown men. It's about the political future of our nation and a set of decisions that will be made affecting every single American everywhere.

Personal infighting just won't cut it.

Petty bickering and childish finger pointing won't do it either.

We as citizens are far more important than behavior like that and so is this election.

SGA – ego, alcohol, and abuse

SAM WILKINSON

Last night was a marked improvement for the Student Government Association. Or maybe it was; I have no idea. Knowing the SGA, they screwed it up, screamed at one another and continued to absolutely suck wind as a political organization.

Not that a state of wind sucking would be any different from anything else that's happened over the past few weeks. Lying, cheating, backstabbing, pettiness, immaturity: all the typical signs of the fully idiotic SGA in full swing.

And as usual, ego and selfishness is the cause of it all.

Seth Avakian's big ego wouldn't take a seat when he lost control and influence over the Senate, so he stood up, big boy that he is, and pouted about it in a wonderfully quotable and equally embarrassing rant before the Senate last week.

The rest of the SGA administration's ego wouldn't take a seat when they were accused of buying alcohol using SGA funds, instead falling back on the "alcoholic mixers" that they purchased instead and claiming that the money wasn't the SGA's.

The Greeks who got elected have egos too big to admit that they rigged the election to win it, instead choosing to maintain, at times, that they just all happened to run together.

And what has all of this ego proved?

Not one damn thing.

All of these groups with all of their constant denial and grandstanding aren't doing any better for themselves; they're simply looking more and more stupid to those few remaining people on campus, all six of them, that still really believe the SGA is a functional and successful body. And the fact is that those six kids are probably losing faith, and why shouldn't they? Rather than be up front and honest with the campus, the SGA hides behind half-truths and casual lies.

Seth Avakian claims he's not coming back to the Senate because it wasn't elected fairly. He seems honestly to believe that this is reason enough for him not to have the common decency to show up for meetings with the undergraduate student body representatives and do his job. Of course, it isn't justification not to do his job. What's further, it isn't that he's not coming to meetings because of how they were elected, but who was elected. Avakian, as has been stated previously, now has no support from the Student Senate. Last year, when he and the SGA President ran roughshod over the Senate with Speaker Mikale Billard, Avakian showed up whenever he wanted and got whatever legislation he supported passed. Every time. The SGA Student Senate was too young and just didn't know what the hell they were doing.

But now they do and Avakian isn't going to be able to do whatever he wants. Because of that, he's behaving like an insolent child, refusing to perform his duties because his precious pride has been pricked by reality. Rather than suck it up and attempt to make amends where amends should be made, he's sitting in his office pouting.

And what about the supposed alcohol that was purchased with SGA funds? Well, receipts clearly show that it wasn't. Jeff Howe and Seth Avakian both won a victory in that. Look at it more closely, however, and one wonders what in the hell they were thinking. We aren't supposed to tip our hand when we, as reporters, have something, but here it goes: we have a photograph from the trip to Cape Cod to work on SGA related "issues." Among those issues was apparently the consumption of alcohol, as almost the entire SGA leadership is arm in arm smiling behind bottles and bottles of liquor.

SGA issues my ass. They used SGA money to rent a house where they partied. They won't go on the record about it of course, but they went on a trip using money that belongs to you, your roommate, and me, and they threw a big party. They claimed that it wasn't SGA money; no, it was money that belonged to SCERA, the research wing of the SGA. Just to recap, it wasn't SGA money, but it was money that belonged to a wing of our student government.

Why these people are unable to put together that SCERA money is their money, I don't know. Probably because the SGA leadership is attempting to hide behind a minuscule technicality in attempt to cover up their ridiculous blunder. Point is, if members of the SGA felt guilty and were afraid enough to come down here crying, the kind of thing that we, as a newspaper, can't report, doesn't that hint that maybe they knew they did something wrong? And now they pretend like what they did doesn't even matter.

But that doesn't alleviate issues on the brand new Greek representatives in the SGA. Clearly, they ran out of spite, which they deny, and ran together as a pack, which they deny. The vote totals for the candidates were so similar, it's almost painfully impossible to not admit that what they did amounts to collusion. Of course, the minute they hear collusion, they start their whining and crying; "it's not fair, we just wanted to run and participate" and boo hoo hoo. Rather than admit that what they did amounted to Machiavellian political genius, they hide behind their pathetic "we just wanted to get involved" attitude.

Last year, three Greeks ran for office; this year, thirty-nine. An accident? Some sort of participatory aberration? Bull. They ran because they wanted to get revenge on a Senate that had spited them. They should just admit it and start using their extreme voting power to control the Senate to their own ends. Hell, they should give themselves and the RSOs they participate in lots and lots of money, like the Republicans who ran the budgets last year did for themselves. It would be a brilliant decision and just as inept as anything else they'll probably "accomplish."

The problem with the SGA is just how much they constantly refuse to admit what they're doing. They don't care, nor have they ever cared, about students on this campus. They care about their egos and their friends and their RSOs and their precious ideas so much more than they care about anything else that they've somehow managed to devolve the SGA into a petty little club that, oh yeah, has $1.7 million of our money.

Almost two million is being given to these petulant little children, these babies in diapers who aren't even brave enough to admit the stupidity, the sliminess and the silliness of their own actions.

The SGA is a downright embarrassment to the ideas of decent student politics. It was last year and it is this year. The only thing left to happen is the University taking control and doing the job themselves; the Lord only knows they could do it better than its being done now.

So maybe last night was an improvement, but it's going to take a hell of a lot more than a mock meeting to fix the pathetic state of the SGA.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

write for ed/op

Alcoholic UMass? Not no more

As a third year student here at UMass, I take pride in this University. I have learned to accept its many faults.

I can accept the food at the DC that tastes like something that would be served at a soup kitchen in a third world country. I can accept fact that Parking Services is unable to do simple arithmetic, and figure out that they have given out far too many yellow lot stickers, while Lot 49 remains half empty during most of the week. And I can accept the fact that whether it is public or private, the Textbook Annex is overpriced and just plain sucks.

However, there is one issue that has really gotten to me deep down, and has driven me to write this column. This issue hit me hard, like a brick to the back of the head a few weeks ago, when I read in pages of this very newspaper that the "UMass Party Scene had gone flat." It seems that in a yearly study done by the Princeton Review, UMass failed to make the list of the Top 20 Party Schools in America for Beer or Hard Liquor. I wondered to myself which fine institutions had overtaken us in the area of partying. I discovered that Bucknell College in Connecticut and Union College in New York were the number one colleges in the categories of beer and hard-liquor, respectively. This led me to attempt to gain more information about these institutions, and made me wonder how they could have possibly overtaken us.

After much searching on the internet for info on these colleges I finally found a link to their websites off of www.budweiser.com. What I found out both troubled and embarrassed me. It seems that these two "colleges" had less than half of the population than we do, but were still outpartying us. As a student of this university I am both saddened and a little bit embarrassed at this situation. What has happened to "ZooMass"? But more importantly, how can we reclaim our past glory of being the number one party school in the nation for both beer and hard liquor? Forget surveillance cameras, forget affirmative action, this is an issue that needs to be addressed quickly and promptly before any more damage is done to the credibility of this fine institution.

Since the article was published a few weeks ago, I have seen little to no action taken by the administration to remedy this problem. Therefore I have taken it upon myself to institute a program that will rebuild UMass into the party school that it once was and hopefully get us back in the Top 20 within the next three years.

First of all, if the administration is serious about fixing this problem they must eliminate the current rules which state that no kegs are allowed in the dorms. This rule is archaic. It is high time for the University to allow us to have kegs in our room and, not only that, but kegs should be mandatory. Anyone and everyone should be forced to have a keg in his/her room at all times. Not only that, they should be forced to have two kegs. As for the other archaic rule stating that we are only allowed to have 24 beers in our rooms at a time? Abolished. And it had better be abolished now, goddammit. Everybody knows that beer is no longer sold in cases of 24, but rather in 90 packs. It is only practical that all students be allowed to bring 90 packs into the dorms.

It is also important that we make the list of Top 20 schools for Hard Liquor. I would suggest instituting a system where large amounts of vodka and other hard liquor are delivered to campus daily. The liquor should be sold right here on campus. The Franklin C-Store and Hampden Snack Bar should be converted to full-fledged liquor stores. The hassle and inconvenience of going off campus to buy liquor would be avoided and of course these stores will take the UCard, further benefiting the student. I am not sure if this is actually possible, but if it is, kegs of vodka should be sold at the stores. It will be a revolutionary way of both buying and consuming hard liquor, and is sure to get us back into the rankings for hard liquor. Similar to our award-winning Polymer Science program, UMass will truly be paving the way of the future.

However all the policies in the world will not matter if we do not have the proper personnel. Because of this, our student body needs to be made up of nothing but raging drunks. First of all, we need to weed out those few bad apples that don't drink. You know, those people that think a fun Friday night is watching some third rate comedian at "Something Every Friday." Hey, I've got Something Every Friday for you, a bottle of vodka and the toilet! Quite simply, if you don't drink you will no longer be welcome here at UMass. A new admissions program will be administered that will attempt to displace the few stranglers left that do not drink.

The current system of admissions that values SAT scores and GPA as the primary factors leading to admission will be replaced. The new system will consider only blood alcohol level as a factor. The current essay question that people applying to UMass have to answer has something to with some unimportant topic like diversity. The new question will ask applicants to discuss the craziest thing they have ever done while drunk, in 300 words or less. This system will be called "the draft." However, as everybody knows, you can't just build your team through the draft, but also by attracting the very best free agents available.

Therefore, we must attract the very best free agent drunks from other colleges. How will we go about doing this you ask? We will infiltrate other college's computer systems to compile a list of a list of alcohol offenders, and other people who have been put on the Public Safety Record and banned from the dorms. We will attempt to woo these young men and woman to UMass by promising them housing (since most have been kicked out of their dorms by their current colleges), and a steady supply of booze. Signing these high profile free agents and making smart draft choices will give us the personnel to make our system work.

Finally comes the most radical part of my plan to return UMass to its previous 24-hour a day keg party mode. We must institute a system of two-day class weeks. For argument sake, we'll call this the "two day plan." Under this system classes will run on only Monday and Tuesday. Under this system we will have two days of highly intensive learning. This will also allow for a 5-day weekend, and quite simply more time to party. Under the current system many students subscribe to the "weekend starts on Thursday" theory. Under this new system people will start saying that "the weekend starts on Monday", since Monday is now really Thursday. You following me? Now, that means that people will only attend classes on Monday, since everybody skips classes on Fridays now, and now under my system Tuesday is Friday. With only one day of classes and everybody partying so hard the whole week, everybody will be too hungover to attend class on Monday. So, basically under my "2 day plan", nobody will ever go to class and will always be drunk or high, which is sure to make us number one again.

In the highly unlikely event that my plan does not get us back to number one, I have developed a Plan B of sorts, just in case. It is highly radical, and extremely leftist, which of course means it will be accepted with open arms around here. If all else fails, I recommend that UMass secede from the United States of America. Why go to these extreme lengths, you might ask? Well, if we are no longer under US law, drug use will become legal here at UMass. This will allow us to attract the very best stoners from all over the world to our institution. (In a related story, these stoners will bring the average UMass GPA down to a point 2.) succession might be extreme, but if frigin Quebec can succeed from Canada then why can't UMass succeed from the United States? Quebec did succeed from Canada, right? Oh, I don't know, I get all my news from The Valley Advocate, so I really don't know much.

It's important to realize that this plan will not return us to ranked status right away. However, within three years it should bring us a national title, I mean return us to number one party school status. My plan will not only return us to number one, but it will truly take UMass to the next level in partying. It will also take us to the next level beyond that, and quite possibly two or three levels beyond that as well.

It's important to realize that this problem is not going to go away anytime soon without action. Our generation will be laughed at for many things, among them; N'Sync, Big Brother, and Coyote Ugly. But truly our generation's biggest embarrassment will be us allowing UMass to go from being the greatest party school in the country to a reputable institution where people don't drink seven nights a week and vandalize. It's high time (no pun intended) to do something about this and return this university to its once-great status. I firmly believe that my plan is the one and only way to get us back to number one. Thank you for your time.

Kurt Polesky is a UMass student.

KURT POLESKY

BUSH CAMPAIGN HQ
Ignore the polls, people. Things are actually all knotted up...
SUBLIBERAL... SUBLIMINAL... SUBMINIYBALL... SUBATOMICAL... SUB WITH TURKEY 'N HAM 'N ALL...
THE EDUCATION CANDIDATE

Misconceptions about the homeless

It's quite simple, really. Homelessness means to be without a home. Like most students, I've always had a home. Individuals define home in different ways, but there is a certain basic and common understanding of what a home is. Home is a place where a person can rest and be comforted. It's a place that provides a roof over one's head, warmth from the cold, and support from loved ones. I was born into a home and have never been without one or even begun to imagine what it would be like to have no place to call home. In the book "Rachel and Her Children: Homeless Families in America," author Jonathan Kozol says "shelter, if it's warm and safe, may keep a family from dying. Only a home allows a family to flourish and to breathe." There are many different explanations for how people become homeless. Perhaps they lost a job or their house burned down. Maybe they were released from prison or a mental institution and had no one to turn to for help getting their lives back together. Whatever the reason may be, the fact remains that they are without homes and often without food.

CHRISTINA FRASER

I don't need to tell you that homelessness exists in our society. I'm sure you have seen stories on television or in the newspaper and maybe you have even encountered a homeless person. There are many stereotypes in circulation about homeless people that lead people to believe the homeless somehow deserve their plight. The most common stereotype is that the majority of the homeless population is mentally ill. This stereotype exists because the portrayal of homeless people in the media often focuses on those that are mentally ill or those that have drug addictions. There are homeless people that fit this description, but it is wrong to assume that the majority of the homeless population does. It's important to break down stereotypes because they create a wall between the homeless and society at large. The homeless are also often perceived as criminals or potentially dangerous individuals. While this may be true of some of them, it is not true of all of them. These generalizations result in people not having compassion for the homeless. I don't expect people to sympathize with or to accept any justification as to why a person is homeless. What I do feel needs to happen is that people should have more compassion and should know better than to discriminate against the homeless. Homelessness doesn't discriminate. There are homeless children, teenagers, men, women, educated, uneducated. They come from many different ethnic, religious, and socioeconomic backgrounds.

I urge you to think about the homeless and to talk about the problem of homelessness because we are all affected by it and I strongly believe that no one deserves to be homeless, least of all in the United States, one of the richest nations in the world. Imagine what it would be like to lose your home and your financial security. The fact is, you never know when something might go wrong and you end up losing everything. No one, no matter how financially secure or how educated they are, is exempt from the possibility of becoming homeless. It is critical that students get involved in helping the homeless and raising awareness in our communities. You may doubt the effectiveness of one person's efforts. However, consider that something as simple as acknowledging a homeless person could make an impact. I met a homeless man who said that what the homeless need, even more than food, is someone to listen to them.

Find out about volunteer opportunities in your community and support the Student Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Campaign on this campus, brought to you by MASSPIRG (Student Union 423A). As students, we have a unique opportunity to join forces with other students who care about making our world and our communities better places to live for every person. College is the ideal time and place to make our voices heard and devote time to fighting social injustices. After graduation we are faced with finding a job, securing benefits like health care, finding a place to live and establishing financial security. This is not to say that we can't continue working for social changes but in truth, individual needs will take precedent. Take advantage of the opportunities you have right now to voice your opinion and to take an active role in a cause that you care about. My heart is devoted to helping the homeless and to combating homelessness. In my experiences, I have learned lessons unlike any learned in a classroom. If nothing else, we should reflect on what we desire to gain from our education and consider that education takes place both in and outside the classroom.

Christina Fraser is a UMass student.

Arts & Living Fall TV Preview

October 12, 2000

Fall television old favorites and new tastes

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

Well it's about damn time. The time has come when TV addicts around the world sing out in a single harmonious voice, praising the return of there favorite shows. On the same token, there is also a giant sigh of disappointment when the supposedly "hit" shows die within a week. So can you guess what the feature is about this week? Come on, guess. Here's a clue: it's about TV. I bring you my predictions and expectations for the upcoming season including new shows and old favorites for you the television viewing population.

The Returning Champs

Who do we have to thank for the late TV season? NBC and those damn Olympics, that's who. But now that they are over we can return to the regular program schedule. Hot off last month's Emmys, "The West Wing" has returned to live up to its hype as "the best show on television" (of course the source is NBC it's a little biased). "The West Wing," which won nine awards including both Supporting Actor and Actress in a Drama series as well as best overall drama debuted last week hopes to keep up the strength and momentum that the first season gave it. Also returning to NBC's line-up of "Must See TV" is "ER." "ER" one of the most popular shows in both critically circles and among viewers for the last five years is not only one of the best shows on television, but one of NBC's biggest moneymakers. The anchor of NBC's "Must See TV Thursday" has endured on of the most popular runs in recent years. For the last five years "ER" has received the highest ratings in its timeslot, figuratively destroying it's competition. FOX is bringing back everyone's favorite uppity lawyer in "Ally McBeal." Joining the cast this year will be the man who is the reason every one in southern California locks their windows at night, Robert Downey Jr.

In the sitcom categories, many of your old favorites are back to keep you laughing...ha ha ha...yeah I'm sorry that's a bad transition. "Will and Grace" will be moving to "Frasier"'s old spot on Thursday and "Frasier" will take "Will and Grace"'s spot on Tuesday. "Will and Grace," which won both supporting categories and best comedy show, comes back for it's second season, and like "The West Wing," is looking for its Emmy momentum to kick in and with their new position in between "Friends" and "ER" you can look for them to get incredibly popular in the next year. "Frasier" will hopefully be able to take its large Thursday night following with it back to Tuesday night where it originated. "Friends" will also be returning and will begin to wreck havoc on the sacred ceremony of marriage (not that they haven't done this already) with Chandler and Monica getting hitched. ABC is returning with a new season of "Spin City." However, as you probably know, Michael J. Fox retired and filling in his jittery footsteps is the one and only Charlie Sheen. That's right the Hot Shots star is back, and now he is on TV. Between Sheen and Downey I guess we should consider this part of their drug rehab/community service. Sheen will be joining the great ensemble cast of "Spin City," including Heather Locklear, who co-starred with him in the movie Money Talks. Can we expect an appearance by Chris Tucker?

CBS as begun to air new episodes of its only hit show "Everybody Loves Raymond," which won a best actress in a comedy Emmy. And of course FOX will return with "The Simpsons," "That 70's Show," "Futurama," and the upstart "Malcolm in the Middle."

New Shows

The next part of this column is dedicated to all those new shows that are coming out this fall. Complete with prediction of when they will be canceled.

NBC

"ED" (romantic comedy) – The story of a lawyer who screws up on a brief, costs his firm a hefty settlement, and goes home depressed only find his wife sleeping with their mailman. After she leaves him, he looks at his high school yearbook and sees the girl that he had a crush on. So he moves home to Stuckyville, moves in with his best friend, and begins to try and court the sweetie, who is now a teacher at their high school. While at home he buys his adolescent hang out (Stuckey Bowl) and begins his own law practice (but only after you bowl three games). Sounds dumb? While no it isn't. "ED" is filled with a good heart and smart, spontaneous writing. Its characters are reminiscent of those on "Picket Fences," are all filled with characteristics that one would find in the

Turn to FALL, page 7

New shows? a Tease of Possibility

By Scott Newport
Collegian Correspondent

When considering fall TV, arguably the most programs we are subjected too, one type of show is often left out. They are debatably as important as the shows that win awards and acclaim from television critics and ratings hike. They are the shows that are terrible, simply awful. The ones that years after their cancellation dates are simply remembered as "Oh, you mean that show the one that made my brain hurt. You know what I am talking about, and no network is without the shame of the awful sitcom "Double Class" and "Herman's Head" are the names that come to mind but there are more out there.

So the point of this is to critique the networks newest offerings to us, the viewing public. While as always there are shows out there I believe will actually make an impact on American society most of the stuff out there is crap. So, I as an assignment on those shows we believe to be of a higher standard, why not a little constructive criticism on those shows that may be short of redeeming virtue? So here are the highlights, there are by far too many to fit into this meager column.

"The Tuguise" (CBS)- I have no idea what CBS is thinking when someone pumped out this original idea at a staff meeting. "Let's redo a show that's already been redone by a movie, starring Harrison Ford no less!" No, not a good idea CBS. This is the perversion of a classic. The original is one of the finest examples of classic television, and I don't think a ratings hungry CBS will stay true to the spirit of it. Then again, I have been known to be wrong.

"Hype" (WB). This is

Turn to NEWSHOWS, page 7

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Weekend's Hightlights:

The UMass Theater department opens its first production of the season next week with Moliere's The Misanthrope. With themes of obsession and passion, akin to those Moliere faced in his own life during 17th century France, as he worked as an actor in his own plays, the play is directed by faculty member Virginia Scott. Tickets are available through the Fine arts Center box office at 545-2511. The production runs through Oct. 21.

ART

Black (Red), Sound Installation: thru Oct. 28
Work by German artist Rolf Julius
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Abstract Notions: thru Oct. 28
Work from University Gallery's Permanent Collection
Opening reception: Sept. 15, 5-7 p.m.
University Gallery, Fine Arts Center

Paintings from a Mayan Chontal Community: thru Oct. 17
Work by various artists
Opening reception Sept. 19, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery, New Africa House, UMass

Earthbound
Oct. 16 thru Nov. 6
Opening Reception: Oct. 16
Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen
Oct. 10 thru Nov. 9
Central Gallery

MUSIC

Berlin Philharmonic Woodwind Quintet
With Pianist Jon Nakamatsu
Oct. 12, 7:30 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

Fall Winds
UMass Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band
Oct. 13, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

Piano Series, Concert #1
Oct. 14, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Bim Skala Bim
Oct. 14, 8 p.m.
Skybox

Jazz Lab Ensemble
Oct. 17, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

THEATRE/DANCE

The Misanthrope
Oct. 18, 8 p.m.
Curtain Theater

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

"FTM's, Fags, Porn, and Dickplay:
A Transmasculine Film Festival
Oct. 12, 7-9 p.m.
SOM Rm. 120

OTHER

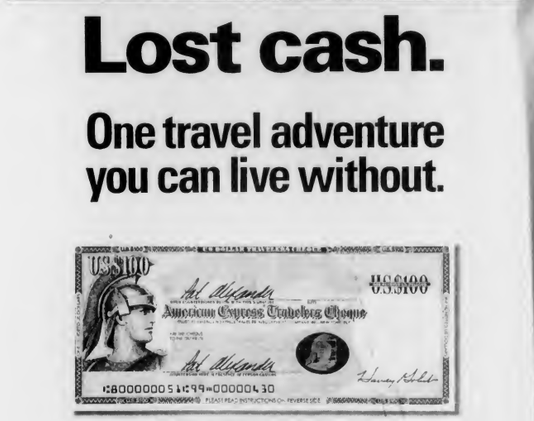
Thursday Night Dance Party
Oct. 12, 9 p.m.
Skybox

ATTENTION!

Hey, you! Yeah, you with the local event you've been thinking about printing up some posters for. The Source is here and ready to give you FREE advertising. So get yourself and detailed information down to the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center. Or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com.

COURTESY JON CRISPIN

The Misanthrope opens at the Fine Arts Center this week



Lost cash.
One travel adventure you can live without.
US $100
American Express Travelers Cheque
Travel smart.
Carry American Express® Travelers Cheques.
They're safer than cash.
Whether you're surfing Baja, backpacking Europe, or just getting away for the weekend, American Express Travelers Cheques are the way to go. They're accepted virtually everywhere around the world — at hotels, stores, and restaurants. Simply sign the Cheques and use them as you would cash.
American Express Travelers Cheques never expire. And if they're lost or stolen, they can be replaced quickly — usually within 24 hours. Pick them up at any participating American Express Travel Service location, bank, credit union, or AAA office.
American Express Travelers Cheques.
Don't leave home without them.®
© 2000 American Express TCST-00
Travelers Cheques

new shows

continued from page 5

the new sketch comedy effort from the WB network, a channel well known for its fine attempts at comedy (you saw "Unhappily Ever After," right?). The creative force behind this sketch show is a team of former "MAD TV" writers and a bunch of fairly unheard of stand up comedians. There is no greater fan than I of sketch comedy, I just have doubts as to the sustainability and profitability of a show of this sort on the WB. I have a feeling it will suffer the fate of all half-hour comedy shows, a quick and hope merciful death. I mean, we all saw "The Edge" on Fox in our high school days, and how long did it last? However, good ratings on the WB are a somewhat tricky concept, and this show may turn into the next "Kids In The Hall".

"Dark Angel" (Fox). Why Fox has the urge to kick out a sci-fi show, who knows – they did really great with "Millennium," and maybe they wanted to follow up on its success. However, it has all the characteristics of a damned program: a weak plot that the network execs hope will be covered by an attractive lead character, Jessica Alba. And she is attractive, wink wink.

"The Geena Davis Show" (ABC). This is by far the oddest offering the networks have put on the table. There is nothing to say about this. Geena Davis has a place in the movies, a place she fills well. TV, however, can be spared her presence. Maybe the thought was that if Norm McDonald could throw his proverbial hat in the ring and not make it, a different tack in the form of Geena Davis was in order. Who knows?

Picking out what will be the next hit show is a tough job. If your resident couch potato friend says he's got them all picked, maybe he does but probably not. I mean, I would have told you "The Family Guy" would be the biggest thing since sliced bread, and while it's qualits it never caught on. So maybe pre judging these shows is a waste of time.

fall

continued from page 5

Stuckeyvilles across the land. I highly recommend ED for those of you who are sick of the gritty and serious police and hospital dramas.

Prediction: A very healthy future for this show, however, a better time slot would be better for it.

"The Michael Richards Show" (sitcom) – The hugely anticipated return of everyone's favorite neighbor, Michael Richards is the first of his Seinfeld crew to return to television. Richards plays a private detective who lives and works in L.A. If you need another reason to see this show, Tim Meadows is also in it. The former SNL cast member and star of the upcoming Ladies Man movie joins Richards in their quirky cases.

Prediction: Despite the fact that the commercials aren't that appealing, just the fact that Kramer is back on TV will be reason enough for people to watch.

"Deadline" (drama) - Oliver Platt stars as a newspaper columnist (maybe there is a future for me) who writes stories not only to win the Pulitzer Prize, and with the help of his journalism class at Columbia University he sets out to help the innocent. Although it's only been on twice, don't expect any Emmy's over here.

Prediction: It will stay on at least one season because it is sandwiched between "Dateline" and the "Third Watch," which is one of the more popular shows on NBC.

ABC

"Madigan Men" (sitcom) – Gabriel Byrne stars in a comedy about a man who, according to the show press release, "is sexy but doesn't know that he is." What happened to the Gabriel Byrne from the Oscar winning The Usual Suspects? Or the Gabriel Byrne from the Coen brothers Miller's Crossing? This was the man who voiced King Arthur in Quest for Camelot? Is this how we treat actors of our time? Can't we find a role for him in some movie? Instead we put him on TGIF.

Prediction: It's TGIF, even if they don't call it that anymore. On Friday night only families watch TV and a mother won't want her twelve year old daughter watching a show about a sexy man who doesn't know that he is sexy. I give it two months at the most.

"The Geena Davis Show" (sitcom) – Putting my feelings about Wareham's hero aside, this show is terrible and it will not get better. Look for the show to end within a month and "Whose Line is it Anyway" to take its place.

Prediction: This show will die and will be forgotten by December.

Gideon's Crossing (medical drama) – Andre Braugher left "Homicide" to start a movie career, and was off to a good start with "City of Angels." But here we are less than five years later and he is the star of his own doctor show. He plays Ben Gideon, a doctor and teacher in a Boston hospital, and while most of his students and colleagues stay away and don't really know him or want to, we see that he is the voice of reason and hope in today's medical society.

Prediction: An awesome show! Not quite an "ER" because there is more emphasis on the same few patients. We understand their minds and their feelings. Look for great things to come from this show.

CBS

"The Fugitive" (drama) – I have one word: YUCK. I will not even bother reviewing it because it is the same damn show that was on a generation ago. If you saw the movie then you saw the original show and you've seen this show. Tim Daly has hit a new low.

Prediction: Failure.

Just because we say it's quality; doesn't mean it'll be on for long

I hate it when networks cancel good shows, or at least the shows that I recommend for you all to watch. Every show that I find the least bit interesting, they cancel. I rave about "Sports Night" ABC puts it on the shelf. I talk about "Wonderland" ABC gives up on it after two weeks. Putting any show on opposite of "ER" is just asking to be canceled. Give it a month at east don't give up let people get into the show. What brings this up? The debut of the fall's new season. Shows that are terrible and hold no substance will be on longer than anything that is released as a mid-season replacement, because they have everything invested in it.

I say that I'm the reason why "Sports Night" and "Wonderland" were canceled, because the week after I write in this very column commending and recommending such shows they are never seen from again. I wish it were as simple as that, if that was the case I would start saving how much I liked "The Geena Davis Show". "That 70's Show", and the entire CBS line-up. Which leads me to one of the most common statements heard today about television. The majority of shows are crap. They are. I'm a television fan and I'll be the first to admit that more than over half of prime time television is horrible. Like the presidential election we pick between the lesser of two evils.

Tube Note
with Nicholas Pizzolato

For instance which show out of the three would you watch A) "The Geena Davis Show" B) "Bette" C) "Daddio" D) "The Crocodile Hunter" or E) "Becker" Take a minute. I know it's tough. Take a couple more seconds. Stop skimming and answer this question. Hey stop sighing and do not turn to the crossword puzzle. Ok here is the answer (watch out your spilling your soda!). Now let's break this down. Becker and "Bette" are both on CBS (the mistake network) so automatically they are eliminated. "The Geena Davis Show" is gone for two reasons. 1) The original title of the show was "ABC presents Crap" and 2) Any Academy Award winning actress should not have her own sitcom. Maybe then can get away with voicing a documentary or hosting a show on the History channel or A&E. And in the most severe case produce and star in a serious drama. But never a sitcom. What's next Jodie Foster in a comedy about her and a family of marsupials living in a retirement community.

What am I looking forward too? Well despite my recent track record of recommending a show only for it to be canceled three weeks later, I'll share my upcoming favorite shows. Most of the shows that will become on my most popular list will be on NBC. I don't know why but ABC produces few decent shows and CBS is useless. "ED" I would like to highly recommend. It's not a drama, but a romantic comedy. I love a good romantic comedy series, because there are so few out there. They are either comedies or dramas, but neither contains the light heartiness that is found in the story and characters. A good show is rare but this one is genuinely good.

Despite the general corniness that surrounds it I am looking forward to "The Michael Richards Show." Not so much for Michael Richards but for Tim Meadows. For the last nine years he has been a welcoming face on "Saturday Night Live." Too bad not only to have a movie but also co-star a hit show is great. Speaking of "Saturday Night Live" the first episode was not too impressive. Since losing cast member Colin Quinn, "SNL" has gone back to the two-anchor system like they had back in the good old days of Jane Curtain and Chevy Chase. Will Ferrell is still there and carrying most of the show along with Cheri Oteri, Chris Kattan, and Ana Gasteyer. Jimmy Fallon has stepped up and filled in the space left by Tim Meadows. However, despite how terrible the show may be, I will watch it religiously. I am addicted.

I enjoyed "Gideon's Crossing" and I think that it has potential for the best show on television. Unlike "ER" it focuses on three of four of the same patients in a much calmer and more relaxed state. Does it call know, and understand, they patients? and not by medical around. Not all of the doctors interact (after which I call good. We only see Andre Braugher with the cast for a total of 10 minutes, preferring to go working on a patient or talking to the psychiatrist friend. Plus the show takes place in Boston which is reason enough for me to watch it. Speaking of Boston based shows, David E. Kelley's new show "Boston Public" is about the working of a Boston public school. Do you need another reason to watch it besides the fact that David E. Kelley's projects ("Ally McBeal", "The Practice", "Ally McBeal") are always excellent and at some point all of them have won at least one Emmy award? How about this for a reason: Irish Dinkel, the Emmy winning actor of "Perkins Pelace," the pilot of the infamous Douglas Wambenghi from the show. Having well, playing the Wambenghi version of a high school teacher, but still Dinkel rules.

These will be the shows that I watch—or try. Of course, because I'm publishing this article I expect these shows to be canceled in a month or two. And also expect "The Geena Davis Show" to sweep the Emmys next year.

What to Watch

Tonight NBC launches a new season of "Must See TV" Thursdays. "Friends" "Will & Grace" "Just Shoot Me" and "ER" will all be new episodes. And starting next Tuesday NBC's new shows will begin. It's recommend. It's not a drama, but a romantic comedy. I love a good romantic comedy series, because there are so few out there. They are either comedies

FOX new line-up will begin in two more weeks.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian columnist.

Imagination
www.collegian.com

YOU'LL FIND A HARVEST OF GREAT PRICES AT ...
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS LOCAL DOMS, LIGHT $39.99
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT $45.99
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. ALL FLAVORS $82.99
LITE & LITE ICE 30 PACK $16.49 + DEP
Budweiser / Bud Light CASE (2 BOTTLES) $17.99 + DEP
Coors Extra Gold 30 P/CK $10.99 + DEP
Bass Ale 12 PACK $10.99 + DEP
MAGIC HAT 6 PACK BOTTLES $5.29 + DEP
PABST BLUE RIBON CASE $8.99 + DEP
WINES OF THE MONTH
BUENA VISTA CALIFORNIA WINES $7.99
CARLO ROSSI WINES $6.99
BOLLA PINOT GRIGIO $9.99
BERINGER FOUNDERS' ESTATES $15.99
PEPPERWOOD PINOT NOIR $5.99
FOXHORN WHITE ZINFANDEL $4.69
SKYY VODKA $19.99
SEAGRAM'S GIN & LIME GIN $14.49
CANADIAN MIST $13.99
BALLANTINE SCOTCH $20.99
GOSLING BLACK SEAL DARK RUM $10.99
EMERALD SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor Ask For Details
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 10/12:00 THRU WEDS. 10/18:00

FREE EVENT

Ready for law school?

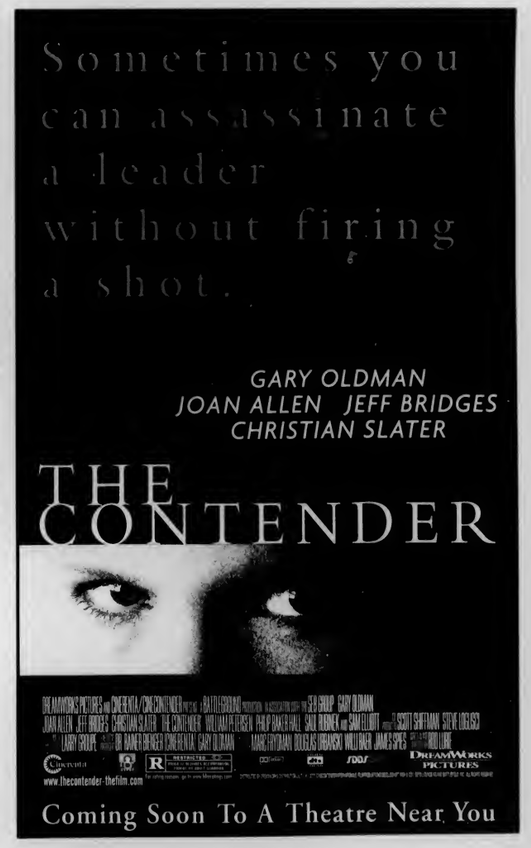
Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.

Wednesday, Oct 18th 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass

Presenter: Noted author & legal expert, Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD

To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.

Alumni Association
sponsored by:
KAPLAN
barbri BAR/BRI



Mayer's Million Year Mind a Significant Other

It didn't take our reviewer a million years to write a review of Peter Mayer's new album

PETER MAYER
Million Year Mind
Bine Boat

Folk artist Peter Mayer gets his fourth album off to a jerky start with "Ball," a piece of sonic soup, writing meaningless but ultimately bland music combines with bad points to make itself an ineffective but ultimately bad song. "John's Garden" takes it up a notch with a charming but of pumpkin allusions wrapped around a traditional ballad mixed of thoughts, but there's still very little to catch your attention.

The centerpiece of each of Mayer's compositions is the acoustic guitar picked and strummed with competent skills, aplomb and supported by the percussion of Marc Anderson with a team of other musicians adding other subtle ingredients to the mix, such as bass, mandolins, cellos and harmonicas. Nothing in the music falls outright but then nothing in the music takes any chances. The songwriting is squalls tame, relying on tradition more than innovation and altogether it sounds like Mayer is simply writing either people's songs James Taylor and Peter, Paul, and Mary just to name the big ones.

The world of east coast folk music is an exciting and diverse one, and considering such a context, it's difficult to see Million Year Mind as anything worth spending your time or money on. (David Troupes)

KINA
Kina
Dreamworks

What do you get when you mix the passion of Alanis Morrisette, the soul of Lauryn Hill, and the vocal talents of Tina Turner? You get this vocal thrill girl Kina. In her self titled debut, Kina breaks new ground in creating a sound that can only be described as soul-rock.

You may have heard 'Girl From the Gutter' on the buzz-up on MTV, but that's just an appetizer for an 11 course meal of sonic delight. "I Love You" makes the love song cliche new and exciting by adding something that has been missing for a while and actual sense of love. On "Mama" one of the most uplifting songs of the year, Kina not only acquires girl power... but "self her true forte-gritiness with the blues-inspired "Hurts So Bad" about love lost and making us ache with lines like "Never had to remind him cause he always knew/ And the only kinda he breathed was the air I blew."

Kina has a voice that commands your attention, and you should pay attention. This genre-defying CD is just the beginning of what looks to be a career that will never go back to the gutter. (Lenny Holston)

TITAN
Elevator
Independent Record

Chances are you've eaten a peanut butter and jelly sandwich. Right? Even if you didn't like it, ever thought about who the hell decided to put the two ingredients together? The same question applies to Mexican electronic outfit Titan. Founded by Jay de la Cueva, Julian Lede and Emilio Acevedo in the early '80s, Titan's sound is an intriguingly "peculiar" mish of strange synth loops, drum machines, funked-out electro bleeps and vocals that seamlessly blend English and Spanish. On Elevator, the group stuffs their Mexican and Latino influences into a suitcase and literally makes a run for the border.

The disc comes across like a Mexican Beastie Boys cover band trying to make songs while simultaneously playing a game of Centipede on their Atari. The collaboration is at times a perfect blend, at others a semi-tedious mess of noise. The track "Cotazon," Titan's remake of Carole King's song of the same name, introduces a smooth and swanky horn loop, while a mellow female chorus croons, "Yo te quiero, mi corazon." The track emanates with a hip, seductive vibe, never forcing you to listen, instead drawing the listener in with its exotic siren song.

Other tracks like "1, 2, 3, 4" get you grooving, then taper off into something resembling the theme of a cheesy TV detective show. Titan's problem on tracks like this one stem from their innovative qualities. Instead of pleasing, these same qualities leave you stranded, waiting for the intro's groovy loop.

"La Frecuencia del Amor" begins with an eerie squiggle of mesmerizing electro sounds. As it progresses the rhythm picks up, steadily pushing you towards its retro-organ crescendo, then blasts right through, fueled by the momentum of a distorted guitar loop. The song pushes ahead towards unknown musical boundaries and Titan seems to be much the same, unafraid of what musical oddities might lie ahead. (Jeremy Kressman - UWire)

CHARLIE IN THE BOX
Please Don't Pet Me, I'm Working
Meeka Saline Music

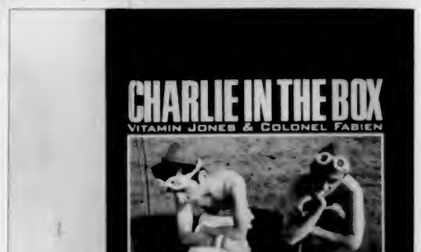
The nine tracks of Please Don't Pet Me I'm Working, the second album from acoustic popsters Charlie in the Box, play more like a songwriter's sketchbook than a complete album, more a look at things to come than a destination in its own right. The CD kicks off with "Bye Bye" an inviting acoustic tune which manages to steer clear of comparisons to mainstream pop acts through its lack of polish; so often on this album the band is happy to let a song rest on its own merits, instead of packing it full of expected production techniques, and this always works out the song's benefit. The second track, "Angeline," is piece of darkly twisting rock, with a forceful central riff and vocals whose roughness and disregard for convention make them all the more interesting.

After the skeletal "Broken Laces," we move into a series of more traditional pop songs, the highlight being "Overdrive," softly turning with organs and warm electric guitars.

Of particular note is the eighth track, "Beach Song," an improvised song about a day at the beach featuring such addibed silliness as, "I got sand in my sandwich but the ice cream man is here. He sells dope out of the back.. I ain't talking no crack, strictly goolballs and powdered stuff."

Unlike so many other young bands Charlie in the Box manages to combine its influences into a sound both diverse and uniquely their own, and they to do with confidence and a sense of humor. Please Don't Pet Me, I'm Working will have a difficult time finding an audience because of its timid length and the general lack of an inviting entry point – there are no bad songs on the album, but there also aren't any obvious radio singles. In the realm of underground music, however, it seldom gets better than this. (David Troupes)

significant others



See review above of this cleverly titled sophomore effort

DRINK UP LOG ON YOU COULD FLY FREE!
Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html to see if you're a WINNER!
You could WIN FREE Tickets anywhere Southwest Airlines Flies!
southwest.com a symbol of e-freedom
Available on specially marked Coca-Cola Bottles/Cans inside campus vending machines.
HOW TO PLAY
1. Detach Official Game Piece from Coca-Cola bottle/can.
2. Go to southwest.com/drinkupflyfree.html and hold your Official Game Piece up to the Official Decoder Gameboard on-screen.*
3. If your Official Game Piece reveals a winning message, you win the prize specified (subject to verification). See Official Rules for claim info.

It's not too early to get started on spring and summer co-ops and internships
Internships and Co-ops can help you...
• Establish professional contacts
• Learn job skills
• Build personal & professional confidence
• Earn money &/or academic credit
• Apply academic theories/knowledge to the work world
Take the first step, go to a Field Experience WelcomeSession!
It's 40 minutes that could change your life!!!
Monday's
1:30-2:10 pm 114 Stockbridge
3:00-3:40 pm 103 South College
Tuesdays
10:00 -10:40 am 1334 Lederle GRT
1:00 -1:40 pm 114 Stockbridge
2:00 -2:40 pm 8 Isenberg SOM
3:00 -3:40 pm 103 South College
Wednesdays
2:00 -2:40 pm 1322 Lederle GRT
3:00 -3:40 pm 13 Isenberg SOM
3:35 -4:15 pm 274 Bartlett
Thursdays
11:15 -11:55 am 274 Bartlett
3:00 -3:40 pm 103 South College
3:35 - 4:15 pm 211 Marston
For more information, call the Field Experience Office 545-6265 or see our web site www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

ARTIST PROFILE

Munroe a worldly skater

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

Name: Allyn Munroe
Major: Nutrition
Year: Junior
Age: 23
Art: Performance Figure Skating

Allyn Munroe, a 23 year-old junior nutrition major, has been ice-skating for 15 years, starring in professional ice skating shows and touring with Disney on Ice. During her touring, she has performed all through the US, as well as in Mexico, Canada, Puerto Rico, Korea, Japan, Egypt, Europe and Scandinavia. She loves the performance aspect of ice-skating and currently teaches at the Greenfield Skating Club. The Collegian spoke with her about her performances, travels and career goals.

COLLEGIAN: How did you first get interested in skating?

By one of my mother's friends. She was a nurse and my mom's a nurse and they were always talking about it. Her little girls had started skating and they just loved it; they were going through the program, so it was just one of those things where my mom was like, 'oh, won't that be cute to be on skates.' So I went and I really picked it up quick and really liked it. And it just went from there. It was something that I excelled at really quickly so I was reinforced; people were saying, 'you're good, you're doing well, keep going.' And I did, I just loved it, and always loved watching the sport.

COLLEGIAN: What age did you start figure skating?

I started figure skating at the age of eight with group lessons with my older sister. And I did group lessons till I was 10 with the North Shore Skating Club. And then at 10 I decided to go privately, so I had a private coach and I trained with private coaches until I graduated from high school. Junior year in high school, I had a couple of older friends skating and they had always gone up and joined ice shows and they'd come back and talk about them, and how exciting it was. And I remember thinking, 'that would be something I'd really like to do.' So I found out about auditions and I went into Boston Garden and skated for Disney on Ice when they were in town. And they said, 'we really like you, but you need a high school degree. So come back next year.' So I went back my senior year and they said, 'we totally want you, but we place people by height, so when we have a position for someone who's 5'9 we'll give you a call,' and it just ended up happening that in May of my senior year they called and said, 'we'd like you to join us in Mexico in a month.' My plan was to only skate for them for a year and then go to college, but other things arose, like they offered me a principal role in the show and overseas tours; so I was like, 'I can't pass this up.' So I ended up doing It for three years. And that's why I'm a 23-year-old junior.

COLLEGIAN: Did you like the performance aspect of skating best?

I did. The club I was with – the North Shore Skating Club – they were very into competitive skaters; you have to take tests and things like that. And in high school It got to the point where I just didn't like competing anymore because it was really pressure-filled. And I didn't like it at all. And I started to turn towards the artistic aspect of it; I would do more artistic competitions and do more show numbers rather than the more hardcore jump and spin stuff. And so that's what I really liked about it. I didn't like the competitive part but I really liked the artistic part of it. And so I joined Disney and I was chorus skater for one year and then I got bumped up to a principal role of the Evil Queen in "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." And it was really artistic – it was more of acting on ice then it was just straight skating.

COLLEGIAN: Did you actually sing?

We had to lip-sync. Which was cool, because we were in a different country each time, so they'd give us a tape the week before and we'd sit there with the script and we'd be like 'blah blah blah' and they would say, 'if you don't know the words just say "banana,"' so we'd be like, 'banana banana banana.' But it was fun, it was great. Even as a chorus skater we had to learn all the songs. Like I can still sing our opening number in Japanese because I was there for seven months. It was great, great fun.

COLLEGIAN: How do you think traveling all over the world and seeing other cultures affected you?

Well, I'm extremely open to anything. I mean, not only was I going to different countries and learning different cultures, but the whole cast of skaters were from all over the world. Disney on Ice was an American company but the majority of the skaters were Russian and Canadian. And on my tour, out of 35 skaters there were only 5 Americans. So I was learning how to live with other people's cultures because we'd room with someone else in the hotels and things like that. I'm just pretty open to anything.

COLLEGIAN: Did you miss home a lot?

Oh yeah, my parents will tell you that my first year was really tough – I'd call home and cry all the time. But I mean, as I got more into it, the people I was skating with I ended up making such good friends with, and they ended up being my family when I was on the road. And we had to spend holidays on the road, so we'd go out and buy little Christmas trees for our hotel – the hotel didn't like that, but we totally made it our family.

COLLEGIAN: Do you have any favorite stories from your travels?

When we were in Japan, we didn't know the language that much. And outside a lot of their restaurants, they have cases with wax figurines of all their dishes that they serve. And so we'd go into the restaurant, and we'd sit down, and then the waitress would come over, and we couldn't say anything, so we'd like take them by the hand and lead them outside the restaurant and like point at the wax, saying, 'one of these.' I remember that, that was pretty funny.

COLLEGIAN: How hard is the training, to keep up with it?

Well, with a professional ice show I know the beginning of a tour is totally crazy. Like when I joined [Disney] in Mexico we had five days to learn the entire show, which is a two hour show, and we were working like 14 hours a day. And they wouldn't zamboni the ice so we were basically skating on snow because we were so pressed for time. And I know when I went back to a show this summer I hadn't skated a professional show for like a year and I remember doing the choreography and learning the show and I was like, 'I can't believe I've forgotten how crazy this is.' I was so tired, so that part was tough, but once you get going and you're touring you don't really have to train that much because you're skating so much.

COLLEGIAN: What do you want to do for your career?

I would love, when I get out of school, to coach, and maybe do a couple professional shows. So I would do professional shows again; I wouldn't do a big Disney-type tour just because I don't want to be away from home that long again. And the show I did this summer was really hard. But there are smaller shows out there, like weeklong shows here and there, so I would love to do that. But I would like to coach, like I'm coaching now in Greenfield and I really like it, and I would do something like that. But also my major is nutrition and I got into that because being on the road with a lot of girls, I saw a lot of girls who have eating disorders and problems like that, and I'd maybe like to take my nutrition degree and go with that, into sports nutrition or something like that.

COLLEGIAN: Would you describe yourself as a Nancy Kerrigan, Tonya Harding or Oksana Baiul type?

Oh, I don't know if I would describe myself like them. They all sound so bad these days. A figure skater idol I really like is Kristy Yamaguchi. Because you have your Nancy Kerrigan and she's a good skater, but everyone thinks she's a snob. And Oksana Baiul has had all those difficulties after she won the Olympics, and Tonya Harding, everyone thinks of her as a bad person too. But Kristy Yamaguchi, she's just all around great and hits all the great aspects of figure skating. She's an artist and an athlete, she's graceful and she's strong. I wouldn't say I'm like her, because I'm not as good as her, but I definitely look up to her. All around she seems like she's happy, and I'm an all-around happy person, so I think in that way we're alike.

COLLEGIAN: Do you ever go on ice skating dates and just show off?

Actually, you know what's funny, is that they have public skating at the Mullins Center on Friday and Saturday nights. My friends just like to go public skating and its crazy because you're at UMass and you think, it's the weekend, people have better places to be, but the public session is so crowded. So I go with my friends and it's fun and I always help the ones that are having trouble. But no, I don't show off, because with the public sessions you're not allowed to jump or anything because it is so crowded.

COLLEGIAN: What music is currently in your CD player?

David Gray. He's a new British artist; two of his songs are on the radio now. He's kind of like a male Macy Gray.

COLLEGIAN: Stop & Shop or Big Y?

Big Y. Even though they don't take P.O.'s anymore.

COLLEGIAN: Pinnochio's or D.P. Dough?

Pinnochio's.

Traveling Matt set for CD release

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Traveling Matt is one of the most accomplished UMass bands in recent history. Last May, they won the Southwest Battle of the Bands, which gave them a chance to open the 2000 Spring Concert at the Mullins Center. The band says that it was then first legitimate rock concert, and just one of the many goals they have already managed to achieve.

Traveling Matt is made up of five UMass locals. Justin Schwenk and Daniel Storch play guitars and vocals, Colby Kuzontkoski takes on the drums and percussion, Keith Uth plays bass and piano, and Joe Sparkes cuts loose on the saxophone.

The band, which exhibits a strong Dave Matthews influence, claims to be ever changing, and starting to find their own sound. They have used the other bands that they have been privileged to play with as lessons in how to perform live music, especially UMass jam band Tave Hu. "Not being on stage," Sparks said, "and watching the other band lets you observe them and say, 'I like that. How can we incorporate that into what we do?'"

With the release of their first studio album, Stories For a Day, which took almost two months to produce, tomorrow night at the Iron Horse, the band is able to display the progress they have made across their two years playing music together.

About the album, Schwenk says, "You still feel a really earthy vibe, but start to see a progression of how our writing is changing. It sounds really good on CD." The rest of the band was just as confident about the way their music comes across in the studio.

Sparkes says, "The album is a great chance to put our music under a microscope, instead of just going to a show, seeing us perform and never seeing us again." Kuzontkoski chimed in with, "We were able to use the album to add a lot of things to what's normally just the five of us."

The determination in the band was perhaps best summed up by Uth, who said, "Our goal with the album was to put out one of the best local band recordings we could, and make it sound as professional as possible. It brings out the best and more of what we do."

Traveling Matt also took time to recognize the local music scene at UMass. Schwenk commenting on the sense of camaraderie among local bands and the number of good, friendly people the band has been fortunate enough to meet.

Storch proclaimed, "The problem is that there are not enough local bands in the area, and that – kind of sad. There are not that many bands and not enough people come out and watch the shows. We really want people to come see us play, and I know other bands say the same thing."

Tomorrow night's CD release event will be one of the highlights of the band's young but promising career. The party promises some interesting surprises and guest and starts at 10 p.m. Doors open at 9:30. The band plans to sell copies of the new album after they play. Tickets are $6 at For the Record in Amherst if purchased in advance, and $8 at the door.

"We're really hopeful for the future," Uth said. "We've set a lot of goals and achieved them all. So we keep setting more goals and hopefully things will work out."

Zippers swing into Ballroom

SQUIRRELL NUT ZIPPERS
Bedlam Ballroom
Mammouth Records

By Krish Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

When they got significant airplay in 1997 with their single, "Hell" it was easy to mistake the Squirrel Nut Zippers for a swing band. They arrived around the same time as bands like Cherry Poppin' Daddy's and The Brian Setzer Orchestra and swing was the thing to do. But the Squirrel Nut Zippers are not a swing band.

Their 1998 release Perennial Favorites was a sure indication of that. Again, the album's most radio friendly song "The Suits Are Pickin' Up the Bills" had the tenor of swing, but one listen to the rest of the CD assured that they were simply too eccentric to be another group of musicians in zoot suits singing about alcohol and women.

Bedlam Ballroom, their latest release, picks up the musical progression where Perennial Favorites left off. But now It seems the entire band has their act more together and they aren't wasting their time on silly, experimental tracks like "Evening at Lafitte's" and "It's Over," as seen on the latter half of their last release. Bedlam Ballroom is cleaner, tighter, and a much clearer declaration of a rich hybrid of sounds.

Those sounds, mixing jazz, blues, Southern roots, rag – and yes, some swing, resonate right from the album's start in a compelling rhythm section opening the first track, "Bedbugs." The song's chorus "Don't let the bedbugs bite ya," upheld by a vibrant horn arrangement exemplify the band's tendency to not take themselves seriously, despite their obvious talent. Appropriately, they are a group of friends who came together musically after years of dinner parties, living room improvisation and smokey club shows – for the fun of it.

More than others, this album gives vocalist Katharine Whalen a lot of front time. The second track "Babs Wants a Diamond Ring" is her first appearance and her classic Billie Holiday character and ease sound better than ever. Unfortunately, this song isn't the best use of her talents, but in a later, slower track, "Hush" the real power of her jazz background is highlighted. In the same song we get our first real taste of the band's newest member, Reese Gray, on piano, adding another layer to the already copious combination of instruments that make the Zippers.

The title track is signature Squirrel Nut Zippers. It's energetic goofy, and there's a lot happening very quickly, but the musicians skills are undeniable. It's not for the absence of vocalist Jim Mathus, this would be their next radio song – maybe. Bedlam Ballroom, comparatively, is less likely than previous albums to gain Top 40 attention. Not because it's inaccessible or unworthy. Because, while every song is pleasant, not a single one is catchy. A mixed blessing, I suppose.

Other outstanding tracks "Don't Fix It" and "Missing Link" show off individual talents with the opportunities to solo extensively. "Don't Fix It" rolls delightfully into a charming little tune, more about mood than using their instruments with more than anything else. A surprising and unbunch brilliant choices to use a Latin rhythm in "Missing Link" sets a fine back beat for solos by Jim Smith tenor saxo Andrea Ford trumpet and Jc Wilenbrock trombone.

Thankfully unlike Perennial Favorites, Bedlam Ballroom chose on a high note with "Do It This Way," another typical tune for the band. With lots of fun's tricks on horns and various auxiliary instruments filling the song as much as possible, Jim Mathus' unique lyrical skills complete it.

The Squirrel Nut Zippers have the distinction of being one of the only bands to be successful in keeping something from the past alive and evolving. Though all of their albums have had their respective lapses into over emulation particular sounds (see: too definitively swing or too definitively sake), parts of their work has risen above this. When the band really achieves a fusion of sounds, it's a vibrantly hilarious result. Bedlam Ballroom illustrates this enough to mark it as another success for the band and another collection worth checking out.

Do you like to dance? Learn some Swing?
Fall into Swing
Presented by UMass Ballroom Dance Club
Where: Campus Center Auditorium
Date: October 12th, Thursday
FREE Beginner Swing Lesson 7:00 pm - 8:00 pm
Open Dance from 8:00 pm - Midnight
FREE Refreshment
FREE Demonstration by the UMass Ballroom Dance Team

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Attention: Science Majors
Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare
College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
▶ First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
▶ Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
▶ Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area
College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
▶ Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
▶ Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
▶ Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree
For more information and an application:
▶ College of Chiropractic
1-888-UB-CHIRO
e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/chiro
▶ College of Naturopathic Medicine
(203) 576-4108
e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy
UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT
DIVISION OF HEALTH SCIENCES

Elastica brings great Karma and Peaches to Boston

ELASTICA
Karma Club
Oct. 7

By Shawn Ilinitch
Collegian Staff

(BOSTON) – Sometimes the wait is worth it. For the packed house Saturday night at the Karma Club on Lansdowne Street, that seemed to be the case.

After taking a 5-year break, Elastica is back, with a new album and new members. Their show in Boston was their last in their brief American tour.

The show began with opening act Peaches and Gonzalez. Armed with only two microphones and a beat box, the pair walked onto stage with "Night Clubbing" playing in the background, and Peaches started to strip to her underwear while Gonzalez loosened his hot pink shirt. To get started, each decided to shave. While Peaches fand some members of the audience) shaved her legs, Gonzalez shaved his face. When they had finished, it was time to get their "show" was ready to get started.

What followed seemed to be an hour long X-Rated Saturday Night Live Skit. As stated earlier, the only instrument they had was a beat box. While each took their turn rapping, the other would do a wild and uncontrollable dance.

"We're not futuristic," Gonzalez, or Gonzo as we learned to call him, said, "we're two washed up entertainers from Canada here to entertain us, and you with our songs and dances."

"We're here to fuck music up the ass," he added, while his partner rode around on one of the concertgoer's shoulders.

They received mixed reactions from the crowd, who sometimes seemed annoyed at their lack of purpose and deafening volume of the bass coming from their beat box.

The crowd did perk up, however, when they invited their "security" to come on stage for a song. Soon, they were joined by a woman dressed in only Spiderman underwear, a green army jacket, and a wool hat fitted to be a mask. The security was Justine Frischman, lead singer of Elastica.

After the hour-long act of comedy, Elastica was ready to take the stage. "Cheers," Justine said, as she smiled at the crowd.

The band kicked things off with an unidentified new song, and quickly followed with a good mix from both their new album, The Menace, and their debut, the self-titled Elastica.

"We didn't know this song was big in America..." Justine tried to say before being interrupted by Mew, the new keyboard player and backup singer.

"Of course she did," Mew sneered, as they began their cover of "Da Da Da," the song made popular by the Volkswagen commercial.

After covering the Pixies' "Change," the band wrapped things up with "Connection," the single that gave them most success in 1995, the year that their debut album was one many critics sop list.

The returned to give the audience a three song encore, kicking it off with "What I Want," sounding a lot like a slow Moby song. They then added "The Bitch Don't Work" before ending things with "Waking Up."

Fans seemed pleased with Elastica's set, although many wished Peaches and Gonzalez didn't play for a full hour, the same length as Elastica did.

Frischman added, "I promise it won't take 5 years again," referring to the time between the first two albums, "if it does, I won't even bother."

COURTESY JURGEN TELLER

Elastica brought their lesser-known but terrific sound to Boston this past weekend. The band was accompanied by some unique opening acts.

The war is over and the bums lost. And even though that's the whole truth, the Collegian is still here for you. Doesn't that make you feel better? Of course it does.

Vapor provides Orgy of sounds

By Kevin Hosband
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

ORGY
Vapor Transmission
Warner Brothers Records

(U-WIRE) – "Welcome to the Andro System" greets a computerized voice on the opening of Vapor Transmission, the latest product from the fuzz-heavy glam-rockers known as Orgy.

From the opening soundscape of futuristic sequences and countdowns to the final fuzzy riff, this band's sophomore effort takes on real world situations with a spaced-out sound.

For those who don't know, Orgy first popularized themselves with the world of rock in trendy fashion with the cover of New Order's "Blue Monday)," on their debut album, Candyass.

Although Candyass was a fairly innovative album that reintroduced America's youth to the glossy world of glam, it seemed to be more of a cybernetic rock experiment.

Vapor Transmission, on the other hand, has Orgy turning their glittered cheeks towards a more mature sound. In fact, the album almost portrays itself as a concept album.

Songs like "The Odyssey" and "Fiction (Dreams in Digital)" seem connected, but on the whole the concept seems incoherent and hazily defined.

Despite this, there are some catchy gems on the album including "Opticon," which transcends a visit to the 1980s and also provides a lesson on the benefits of using ProTools.

Then there's the poignant "Eva," a song that pays tribute to producer Josh Abraham's mother who recently passed away. It was her garage that provided the rehearsal space when Orgy first formed.

"Eyes-Radio-Lies" is a song that addresses the Orwellian idea of having eyes in the radio, invading our privacy and watching our every move. Perhaps the real invasion here is the skull-piercing frequencies created by the handy guitar work of Amir Derakh and Ryan Shuck.

In fact, the music is what makes this album, not frontman Jay Gordon's droning alt-rockish voice. Although this guy can sing, his minimal range gets boring after the first few songs.

On "Saving Faces," guitar sounds are bouncing in all directions like lasers in a room full of mirrors. Sonically, this is cool, until the same thing happens on "Re-Creation," no pun intended, and then again on "Chasing Sirens."

Orgy is a visual band sporting glam-rocker outfits and hairdos along with sci-fi guitars. This band is simply mesmerizing when performing live.

Unfortunately, that kind of energy is hard to package in a plastic case. So until technology finds a way of selling music audio-visually, Orgy will remain a 30th Century band waiting for the rest of the world to catch up.

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instruction video
FREE
FREE, no charge. Nothing to buy. Just a great chance to learn how to meditate.

Why Not...
Do Something Cool?!
getthatgig.com

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
Amsterdam Athens Barcelona Berlin Boston Budapest Buenos Aires Cancun Copenhagen Dublin Florence Frankfurt Geneva Honolulu Istanbul Jerusalem Johannesburg Lima Lisbon London Los Angeles Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Montreal Munich Nice Oslo Paris Prague Rio de Janeiro Rome Santiago Stockholm Sydney Tel Aviv Tokyo Vancouver Vienna Zurich
studentuniverse.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
REGISTER FOR WEEKLY PRIZES
Sauze Gold Tequila 750 $11.99
Guinness 6 Pack $10.99+Dep
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack $9.99+Dep
Bass 12 Pack $11.99+Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs $10.99+Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack $8.99, 6 Pack $6.99+Dep
Spatan Lager 6 Pack $5.49+Dep
Visit the Two for $9.99 International Wine Section
Stop by on Oct 12 & 13 for Magic hat Beer Tasting Between the hours of 5 & 8 P.M.

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
EXPLORE THE WORLD'S RELIGIONS while earning college credit

• Study for a full academic year in Taiwan, Thailand, India and Israel
• Earn up to 30 undergraduate credits
• Pursue your academic studies of religion, anthropology, and international studies through readings, lectures and participation in religious and cultural rituals and activities
• Experience life in a Buddhist temple, a Tibetan monastery, a Hindu mission
FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
(631) 287-8474
e-mail: fw@southampton.liunet.edu
www.southampton.edu/fw
239 Montauk Highway • Southampton, NY 11968
GLOBAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL CHANGE

football

continued from page 12

lost their chances of gaining back-to-back National Titles. The road, however, will not be easy. They still have games against red-hot Clemson and archrival Florida. That is a disadvantage. But, the advantage is that they play both teams at home. Tallahassee is one of the most difficult places to play in America and it will make the task harder for both the Tigers and the Gators to beat the 'Nolet.

For Miami, there are signs that lead to a potential showdown against second ranked Virginia Tech on November 4, but they have a lot of work to do before hand. They still have to win at Temple and at home against Louisiana Tech. Although those are not two of the most dangerous teams in college football, after what happened to the 'Canes against East Carolina last season ta 24-20 loss the week before the Florida State game) anything is possible. If the 'Canes are able to get by the Hokies, then they still have Big East games against Pittsburgh, Syracuse and Boston College, and although BC has not played stiff competition this year, they did have the 'Canes down 28-0 in the third quarter last year.

As for this year, the upsets in College Football have been numerous each and every week this season. These upsets have made this an enjoyable college season so far. However, the upsets are not over yet. By virtue of that, the National Championship picture is still wide open. By virtue of their win on Saturday, the Hurricanes got by the bouncer and joined the party. And even with a loss, FSU has not been pushed out the door yet. And hopefully for FSU fans, this will be the last time the words "WIDE RIGHT" will ever come up in conversation.

Besides, ripping out all those dictionary pages takes a lot of time.

David Rose is a Collegian columnist.

All the way around the athletic horn

By Eric Soderstrom, Matt Brady, Jaret Barr, and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

This is the inaugural "Dritte und Vierzig Acht über den Zustanden" (better known to English speakers as "Third and Forty-Eight Across the Nation"), a summary of national collegiate sports news. Sure, it isn't an update on Nebraska's football team or the ever dominant Banana Slugs from UC-Santa Cruz, but all quotes are absolutely real and acquired by our crack staff of reporters.

And these are athletes who actually care enough to participate, so why shouldn't they get a little coverage?

Tennis

After a tough loss to arch-rival Barry College, Pacific Hawaii University's head coach Henry Somerville said that his team was trying "to build the middle. We've got a couple of recruits that fill the bill."

According to Somerville, his Sea-Warriors lack a franchise player this season, but added that the difference in his top four starters wasn't that significant. Somerville also said that his squad was a lot more "respectable than it had been" and would be looking for blood against BYU-Hawaii.

As if that wasn't enough, the wild world of tennis got even wilder on Sunday when South Alabama beat host Stanford 26-20 in the final of the WingspanBank.com /WTT National Collegiate Tennis Championships at the Taube Family Tennis Stadium in California.

NCAA Wrestling

The NCAA Division I world was taken aback on Tuesday when it was announced that Mike Mena has been named assistant wrestling coach at Indiana University.

Mena, a four-time All-American at Iowa, spent his last three years as a member of the Hawkeye Wrestling Club. Mena has also dedicated many of his hours to coaching at his very own wrestling school. The 26 year old has guided many of his students to state and national titles.

Soccer

On the Division III men's soccer front, The Brooklyn Bridges played tough but lost to Baruch College on Friday, October 6. It was a hard fought game. The team's record was not available at press time.

Women's Hockey

Women's hockey is changing, thanks to the announcement that the ECAC, at both the Division I and III levels, will split and form two leagues for each division beginning in 2001-02. In addition, a new Division III league, to be named later, will also commence with the accumulation of six schools from Western New York and Pennsylvania.

Archery

Let it be known that the NCAA Columbia Women Varsity Archery Team practices three times a week during the academic year, 7 P.M. to 10 P.M. on Mondays and Wednesdays, and 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. on Saturdays. During the spring outdoor season, practices are held outdoors on Saturdays and Sundays when the weather permits.

Football

Last week, Bandon Murphy of McKendree College in Illinois and Jeremy Auch of Minot State in North Dakota were named NAIA Football Offensive and Defensive Players of the Week, respectively. The honors were well deserved.

Boomerang

If you didn't already know, the World Boomerang Association was formed in 1991 as a small organization with a President and three Vice-Presidents. The function of this association has been to direct international competition efforts and to make decisions on international rules and team participation. These guys are good.

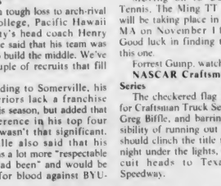
Table Tennis

Moving on to USA Table Tennis. The Ming TT RR Open will be taking place in Waltham, MA on November 11 and 12. Good luck in finding tickets for this one.

Forrest Gump, watch your ass.

NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series

The checkered flag is in sight for Craftsman Truck Series leader Greg Biffle, and barring the possibility of running out of gas, he should clinch the title this Friday night under the lights, as the circuit heads to Texas Motor Speedway.



Biffle leads second place man Mike Wallace by 290 points with two races to go, and can clinch the title by earning only 80 points. In layman's terms, Biffle only needs to finish 27th or better at Texas to win his first title. This should be a cakewalk, as his worst finish this season was 14th. Last season, he only finished eight points shy of winning the title. As for the future, Biffle is to move on to the Busch Grand National Series, where he will remain with Roush Racing.

Skiing

In a stunning turn of events, the NCAA has decreed that the 2002 National Collegiate Men's and Women's Skiing Championships will be held at the University of Alaska Anchorage, just nudging out its closest competition: the University of Texas at El Paso and Central Florida.

Mt. Alyeska will be the site of the alpine events and Kincaid Park will be the site of the Nordic events. The championship will be held over four days, from March 6-9.

It is the first time that UAA will host the events since 1987.

Volleyball

The St. Olaf women's volleyball team shot up in rankings to ninth place in the third AVCA (American Volleyball Clubs of America) Division Poll of the Season. The Oles move to 3-1 in the MIAC after defeating a tough St. Mary's University to gain a three-way tie for first place in the conference.

Their next match is against perennial MIAC power Bethel College.

Canadian High School Water Polo

Division arch-rivals Moose law and Thunder Bay battled to a 1-1 tie in a bitter struggle under the lights at Moose Jaw's outside pond. Although going two overtimes, both teams escaped the certain freezing death that waited for them had they attempted to keep playing.

(Ok, not that last one.)

Mancini's domination a welcome addition for UM

By Glen Straub
Collegian Correspondent

All the way from the outskirts of Milan, Italy comes a woman ready to take the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team to the pinnacle. She has the skills of Lindsey Davenport and the looks of Anna Kournikova – her name is Francesca Mancini and she is the number one player for the Minutewomen squad.

After UMass' win over Dartmouth College yesterday, the 19-year-old freshman upped her personal record to 9-0 in singles play. Only one word can describe Mancini's play of late – unbelievable. She defeated Dartmouth's number one player, freshman Arden Fredeking, in straight sets (6-4, 6-2). This is no rarity for the rookie in this early season, in the nine matches she has won, she has beaten all of her opponents in straight sets.

However, the great start to the season is no surprise for Mancini.

"It has been very exciting," said Mancini. "I have noticed that the players in America hit a lot harder than European players, so I have had to adjust."

"My forehand is the strongest part of my game and it has helped me a lot recently," she added.

Adjusting to the American tennis game has not been the only thing she has had to adjust to here at UMass.

"Everything is different here," Mancini said.

Mancini was born and raised in a small town right outside the large, beautiful city of Milan called Vimercate. There, at the age of six, her tennis-playing parents taught her how to play the graceful game.

"Since I lived only twenty minutes away, I practiced in Milan everyday in order to perfect my game," she remarked.

At the age of 11, she started to play in some tournaments in Milan because her town did not hold any tennis events. She even came to Florida for a tournament at the age of 12. Every year she competed in the Junior Italian Championships as well – having her best finish at the age of 14 years old – when she lost in the finals.

"I played pretty well, [but] my opponent was a little better," she said. "It was a great experience though."

The question everyone must be asking is how did UMass find a talent such as hers and how was it able to bring her to this institution? Well, the answer is that Mancini found UMass.

Before going to school here in the United States, Mancini and her family moved to Canada for two years.

"I knew I wanted to go to school in America. I really wanted to go out west, like California," she said.

However like most mothers, Mancini's mother wanted her daughter to be closer to home.

"I emailed Coach Judy Dixon, then she called me, and from there everything worked out," she said. "I tried to get into Boston University as well, but I liked UMass more."

"We are very lucky to get her," said Coach Dixon

After witnessing her stellar play in the past couple of weeks, Dixon has no regrets bringing the young phenom to the Maroon and White's program.

"She has been completely amazing," coach said. "She has the chance to become the first ever nationally ranked player for the UMass women's tennis program. I have a lot of confidence in her."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Francesca Mancini has been instrumental in the success of the UMass women's tennis team this year. The Milan, Italy native has yet to lose a match this season, filling the role of first singles.

Dixon believes that Mancini is at least in the Top 16 of the region.

Coming over to an American university has been a drastic change for Mancini. According to her, there are many differences in all aspects of school life here that differ from Italy.

"I like the school system here, it is very different form Italy," she said. "In Italy we don't have sport teams in our school and no campuses. It's different but I like it."

In Italy and most of Europe, tennis players are members of clubs run by organizations, similar to soccer clubs. As is the same for any foreigner, Mancini says that the language has been hard to adjust to.

Despite being over 2,000 miles away from home and in a foreign territory, Mancini has not shown any weaknesses on the court this season. She has shown utter dominance.

"My favorite professional tennis players are Pete Sampras and Monica Seles because they both have a positive and confident attitude on the court," she said. "I feel that I am similar on the court because I am confident and always want to win."

Her confidence on the court has resulted in her winning streak. For her achievements, she will be going to the NCAA regional at William and Mary College in November.

Tennis is a big part of Mancini's life and it is very time consuming, however she has been able to find some time to enjoy regular college life here at UMass.

"I love my team, we get along so much. I love to hang out with them," she said. "The parties are a lot of fun here at UMass."

A lot of people would agree with her on that, no matter what country they are from.

soccer

continued from page 12

the biggest thing since then has been getting stronger and more agile."

However, in the preseason, things took another turn for the worse for the Colorado native, as she battled a bout with mono that limited her effectiveness at the time.

Once the regular season began, she managed to start nine of the first 10 games, recording six points during that span. But then, she sprained her MCL in a loss to Arizona State on September 24. Ironically, Machamer still does not know when the injury occurred during the game, only that there was swelling in the leg the following morning. Since then, she has not played for the Minutewomen.

"I didn't notice it until the next morning," she said. "Now I'm just trying to rehab it and make it stronger. Hopefully I'll be back this weekend."

"It's just frustrating to have to go through rehabbing again," added Machamer. "Just when I seemed to be fully healthy, I have a setback like this."

Through it all, however, Machamer has remained one of the hardest workers on the team. A steady tactical player, she has been representative of hero by her coach for all of the adversity that she has had to endure.

"I love underdogs, and she certainly fits in that mold, having to come from so far back, so many times," Rudy said. "To me, that's what a real hero is. It's not the person who has it laid out on a platter for them and then does great. It's person who has been knocked down, then gets back up, gets knocked down again, and still gets back up. That's Kat Machamer she's a true heroine."

"She's suffered through so many things here," added Rudy. "In a way, she's a real student-athlete and a real survivor. She's an excellent student who has had to go through so much while she's been here. Despite all of that, she's one of our hardest workers in the weight room, and she's trained her derriere off. Even in pain, she still pushes herself to the limits."

NFL

continued from page 13

"NFC Norris" Buc coach Tony Dungy, the mastermind behind the dominant Viking defenses of the early 90's, told his team beforehand that only a perfect game on both sides of the ball would beat Minnesota; what even he failed to foresee was that it would only take Culpepper two big plays (one running, one passing) to prevail.

After hype machine Keyshawn Johnson handed Minnesota the ball at the Buc 27 on Tampa's first play from scrimmage, DC needed exactly one carry to reach the endzone and draw first blood for the Vikings. Later, when Dungy's crew had managed to return a blocked Gary Anderson field goal attempt and grab a late lead, it took a single 42-yard Culpepper rainbow to Moss to bury the Bucs.

The Tampa defense is ranked third in the conference, behind only New Orleans and Washington. It finally made Culpepper look mortal on Monday night, containing him on the ground and keeping the pressure on (35 yards rushing, six sacks, one interception) and it still didn't matter. It came down to whether or not the young giant could make the big plays when they really counted, and that is precisely what he did.

There is no denying that the Rams are consistent, talented and explosive. They are the defending Super Bowl champs, and a solid pick to repeat this year. But don't be surprised if the Culpepper-led Vikings take over as the king of the NFL mountain before the year is out. Minnesota currently boasts the No. 4 offense in the conference, and its seventh-ranked defense is improving week in and week out. The St. Louis offense may be tops in the NFC but its defense is ranked No. 13 with only San Francisco below it.

And the Vikings are a lot bigger of a thrill to watch. That's assuming, of course, you can stomach the color purple.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist

UMass makes history in triumph over Dartmouth

By Glen Straub
Collegian Correspondent

For the first time in school history, the Massachusetts women's tennis team defeated Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire yesterday. Not only did they beat the Ivy League school, they dominated throughout the meet, winning 7-2, improving to 4-1 in dual match play.

Coach Judy Dixon was ecstatic over the milestone in UMASS women's tennis history.

"It's just an amazing step for the program, we have never fared well against this team," she said. "We used to feel like just getting a couple of points was a moral victory, but now we feel we are at their level."

The Minutewomen went five for six in the singles matches. Highlights on the day included freshmen Iafra Depontes and Francesca Mancini winning their matches in straight sets.

Dixon was particularly impressed with Depontes' play on the day, winning the number three singles match (6-1, 6-2) over Dartmouth freshman Christine Miller.

"She was fantastic. She played one of the best matches of the season for her," Dixon said.

Juniors Helena Horak and Lindsey Gillock, as well as freshman Susan Hyams, were all victorious in their matches as well.

"Our team is very tournament tough, they have played very well when it counts," coach said.

The UMass squad wrapped up the 7-2 victory by winning two out of three doubles matches.

"Francesca and Iafra really have become a great team," said Dixon after her number two doubles tandem won their match 8-2 over Dartmouth's couple of Arden Fredeking and Michael Rozaz.

"The freshmen have really been pulling the upper-classmen," Dixon remarked. "Normally the older players take the younger players under their wing, but with this team it has been different."

The young and old of the UMass women's tennis team look to continue their hot streak when they travel to the Big Apple to face another Ivy League foe Columbia University on Oct. 27th.

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe.com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon
Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

CONNECT > EXPLORE > DEVELOP > ENCOUNTER > DISCUSS > LEARN > EXCHANGE > TEACH WORK/STUDY SCHOLARSHIP TO GERMANY!!!
CONGRESS-BUNDESTAG YOUTH EXCHANGE FOR YOUNG PROFESSIONALS
Scholarship year includes:
Intensive language training, Professional training, Five month paid internship, Placement in a host family, Living costs while studying, Cultural seminars(3), & International transportation
Deadline: 12/1/2000
Are you a US citizen between 18 & 24?
Have you met your career goals, related experience, & HS diploma?
Check it out! www.cdsintl.org

Thai Corner
Please Join us for our anniversary
SPECIAL MENU
10/23-10/31
Thank you for your support
We are going into our third year
31 Boltwood Walk
Amherst, MA 413-253-1639
Mon-Sat 11:30-3 &5-9
Fri&Sat till10•Sun 5-9

Sponsored by University Health Services
Fall 2000
Eating Disorder Programs
• Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals - with Nutritionists, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. - - Confidentiality Assured. Call 577-5314, General Medicine 2
• Eating Disorder Informational Sessions
Facilitated by a UHS Nutritionist, these drop in sessions will include a video and discussion about eating disorders, where to go for help and learn how to help a friend. Registration is not required for these sessions that will meet 4:00 - 5:30 P.M. on Sept. 13, Oct. 16, Nov. 15, and Dec. 11 in room 302 at University Health Services.
• Residence Hall Workshops
Body Image and Understanding Eating Disorders Workshops are available upon request. Contact your Resident Assistant to schedule a workshop.

A HARD DAY'S BRUNCH
The Fab Four Do It Again!

MAPLEWOOD FARMS RESTAURANT, BREWERY & MARKET IS PROUD TO ANNOUNCE WEEKEND BRUNCH!
SATURDAYS & SUNDAYS
10:00 AM - 3:00 PM
413-256-3276 • 138 BELCHERTOWN ROAD, AMHERST

it's not web radio,
it's not streaming audio,
it's not an MP3,
it's ClickRadio.
CLICKRADIO

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6 Special Offers
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS
I invite you to use the Eye Care Services

Frederick H. Bloom O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Duo successfully battles through adversity

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

In an age of bigger, stronger athletes, there has been one serious injury that seems to pop up time and again like a recurring nightmare – the dreaded torn anterior cruciate ligament.

For an athlete who suffers this damage to his or her knee, an unwanted future lies ahead. Surgery is the first step, while intense rehabilitation looms in the weeks following the procedure. In most cases, the athlete misses anywhere from nine months to a full year before taking the playing field once again.

Unfortunately for Martha Conover and Kathleen Machamer, they know all too well what it is like to have to recover from this major knee trauma. This pair of players for the Massachusetts women's soccer team endured the setback in the months prior to coming to Amherst as freshmen.

Since that time, however, each has made a fierce commitment to return to their old form, while also making a contribution to their club in the process. This season, though, the pair has been back at full tilt for the Minutewomen.

"I don't think that there are any players that we have in this program who have worked harder to get back to health than those two," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "Both of them who are wonderful kids, as well as smart, intellectual people. They are going to do very well in life."

But the road to recovery wasn't all peaches and cream for Machamer and Conover. Each player has recovered partially from its original injury, only to face a second setback along the way. However, through hard work and dedication, both Conover and Machamer have had a positive impact for UMass this season.

A return to glory

Conover had to sit out all of the 1998 season after suffering an ACL injury to her left knee during the spring of her senior year of high school. At first, she only tore the ligament partially when she became entangled with another player. However, a few months later, the junior midfielder completely tore the ligament while rehabbing it.

As a result of those incidents, the Liverpool, NY native was forced into the role of a spectator during her first season as a member of the Minutewomen. In the process, that made the transition from high school to college even more difficult for Conover.

"It was really tough," she said. "A lot of things changed, especially when I got to school. Soccer was always how I defined myself. Because I wasn't playing, I had to find a new way to make friends and interact with people."

"Everyone wants to be a part of the team and help the team win," added Conover. "But my freshman year was such a disappointing year. It was nice to be able to come back and contribute."

Last year, Conover finally made her way back into the UMass lineup. A starter in 10 of 17 games, she scored seven points on the season. Ironically, both of her goals were game-winners, those coming against Alabama-Birmingham and St. Joseph's.

This season, the versatile midfielder is one of only four players to have started all 13 games. To her credit, she has four points on the season thus far. However, her contribution to the club goes much deeper than what shows up on the stat sheet.

"Last year Martha got back part of the way," Rudy said. "But this year, she's really stepped up. She's trained as hard or harder than anyone out there this year. Her work rate and commitment puts her superior to many of the other central midfielders. I can say that she's been our most complete central midfielder all year long."

Said Conover: "I just want the team to be successful, so that's why I'll do whatever the team needs. I think that my role on the team is to distribute the ball and let the forwards get goals."

Nevertheless, Conover continues to prove time and time again that she is a selfless player who has the best interest of the team in her sights at all times.

"She's not the type of player who needs all of the accolades and awards," Rudy said. "She's a player who doesn't want you to pay her compliments if she doesn't deserve them. That's quite refreshing in today's society."

"Martha is a pragmatic realist who knows when she's played well," added Rudy. "But even a poor game in her mind is a very good game for other people. That's because of her work rate and commitment. She might be the one player on the field that is irreplaceable."

Even the junior herself acknowledges that she has reached this point in her soccer career because of her hard work and dedication – both in times of well being and those of adversity.

"Physically, I have decent speed and decent quickness, but I'm little [size-wise]," Conover said. "What makes me able to play at this level is my intensity and work rate."

The measure of a true hero

Machamer has been a passenger on a three-year journey that has been filled with its share of twists and turns.

As a senior in high school, she was arguably the top player in the state of Colorado. Then, before her days at Cherry Cheek High came to a close, she committed to UMass. However, she tore her ACL and medial collateral ligament [MCL] prior to arriving in Amherst, thwarting her chances at even suiting up in Maroon and White as a freshman.

From there, Machanter underwent a year of rehab before finally making her debut in the fall of 1998. She scored the game-winning goal in a win over Colgate that season before doing the same against Fordham last year.

But the junior still was not at full strength just yet. During the off-season she made continued strides to get back to 100-percent, and all seemed to be well once again.

"I think that getting stronger was a big part of it," Machamer said. "That and getting used to using my knee again, doing things like cutting and turning. At first, it was awkward, but

Turn to SOCCER page 11

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Martha Conover and Kathleen Machamer have both battled back from major knee injuries to provide veteran leadership for the UMass women's soccer team.

Seminole missed FG nothing new to fans

"WIDE RIGHT," those two words have been ripped out of every dictionary on the campus of Florida State University.

"WIDE RIGHT," the two words that have cost Bobby Bowden two national championships in the early 1990s.

And, as the year 2000 hits, the words, "WIDE RIGHT", might have cost Bowden and the Seminoles a chance at a third title.

Miami's 27-24 win in the Orange Bowl on Saturday brought more excitement than any other collegiate game this season. It is one of the greatest games that has ever been seen. Granted, some of the execution during this clash was not at its highest level, but the intensity level between the two schools was at its highest since Gino Torretta and the 'Canes defeated FSU in "WIDE RIGHT II." In 1992.

Running the option
with
David Rose

For the 'Canes, it is the biggest victory for their program in Butch Davis' six years as coach. Miami finally displayed its title form of years ago, after five years of rebuilding from NCAA sanctions that stripped the school of 31 scholarships, and moved up to number four in the Associated Press Poll.

It was a coming out party for Miami quarterback Ken Dorsey. With alums Bernie Kosar and Jim Kelly watching, the torch was passed to Dorsey on the game winning drive. He picked the 'Noles defense apart for 328 yards and two touchdowns. His patience on Saturday was key to the 'Canes success, as he drove his team 68 yards in under a minute and threw the game winning touchdown pass to Jeremy Shockey.

What was more shocking than Shockey making his first collegiate TD a memorable one was the way Florida State played on Saturday. A week after taking the number one spot in the AP poll from Nebraska, they did not look like the number one team in the country. What was particularly troubling was what the defense played on the last drive. They played a prevent defense, and the only thing that accomplished was preventing them from winning. 448 yards of total offense allowed is not acceptable for a team that had given up just 45 points in five previous games.

As for the FSU offense, they showed great heart after falling behind 17-0 at the half. QB Chris Weinke passed for 496 yards. He threw three touchdown passes, two of which came within a span of two minutes in the fourth quarter to give FSU a short lived 24-20 lead.

However, he also had two costly interceptions, both of which came inside Miami's five-yard line. On Saturday, the 'Noles made mistakes that are not normally associated with a Bobby Bowden team. They took eight penalties and made poor decisions in the Miami red zone and paid the price for it later. They were inside the Miami 20-yard line five times. The results were a touchdown, a field goal, an interception, a turnover on downs and a missed 22-yard field goal.

And speaking of the field goals, Sebastian Janikowski might have been hung over while making most of his kicks last season, but at least he made them. The 'Noles have found no replacement, and it played a huge role in this game. Kicker Matt Munyon missed the 22-yarder, pulling off one of my golf shots in the process, FORE to the left. He is 3-8 in field goal attempts on the year and has been shaky on extra points as well. However, he will be most remembered for going 0-1 in the Orange Bowl on Saturday on game-tying kicks.

For the 'Noles, although this was a tough loss, they have not yet

Turn to FOOTBALL page 10

Sports Spotlight

Anke Bruemmer - Field Hockey

Class: Junior
Major: Sport management
DOB: 4-30-79
Age: 21
Zodiac Sign: Taurus
Hometown: Koeln, Germany
Favorite Food: Italian
Favorite Junk Food: Chocolate chip cookies
Favorite TV Shows: Ally McBeal, Jeopardy
Favorite Movies: Pretty Woman, Remember the Titans
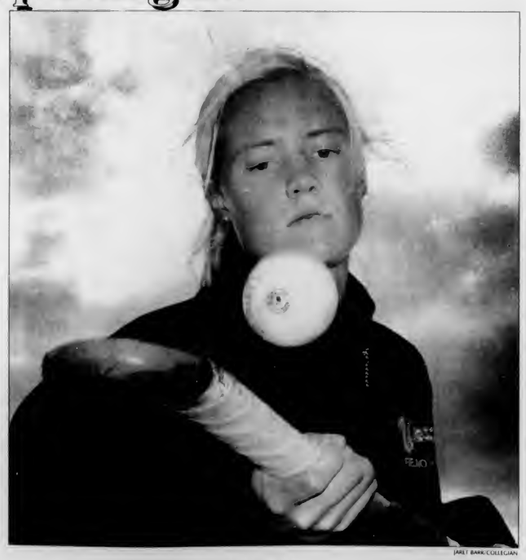
Favorite Vacation Spot: Juist, an island in the North Sea
Favorite Class: Sport Law
Favorite Professor: Dr. Carol Barr
Favorite Music: Soul/ R&B
What would you save in a fire: My pictures
Are you a righty or a lefty: Right, but I brush my teeth and doodle with my left
Describe a funny experience during your time at UMass: While at a hotel in Philly, in town to play St. Joe's and Temple, my friend was hit on by Allen Iverson
Career Ambition: I'm not sure yet, but I want to travel
Sports Rituals: I never warm up in my game shirt. There's my pre-game shave and, of course, lucky underwear.
Athletic Honors: A-10 Player of the Year 1999; A-10 Player of the Week – three times; A-10 Rookie of the Week – four times



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Anke Bruemmer

Born and raised in Germany, Anke Bruemmer began her field hockey career at the age of six. She started playing because her older brother, Martin, played and she stuck with it because her teammates became like family to her.

When Bruemmer started her college search she had two requirements: Division I athletics and a sport management program. She did not apply to any schools in her native Gennany because the only option in a sports related field was physical education. She knew that she didn't want to study that.

Since she lived so far away, she never saw any campuses and had to overcome culture shock when she arrived here in Amherst. Because she had spent a year during high school in Maine, Bruemmer had no problems adjusting to American culture. The shock was American college life.

She speaks four languages: German, English, a bit of French and Spanish. She has traveled all over Europe and spent a month apiece in Spain and France on student-exchanges.

After Bruemmer earns her sport management degree next spring, she plans to take a year off to travel. She has her sights set on Australia and New Zealand. Afterwards, she wants to return to Germany and play club hockey again and find a job that allows her to travel.

Bruemmer has no idea what direction she wants her career to go because with every class she takes she becomes interested in something new. Right now, she's most interested in event management, but is also thinking about sport marketing.

For now, she is focusing on finishing penalty corners and helping her team reach the NCAA Tournament.

—Julie Robenhymer

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Thursday, October 12, 2000 13
Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Marathon victory II

Minutewomen outlast Providence in strokes

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It's come to the point where a close game result does more than overstress the seasonal theme for the Massachusetts field hockey team. Right now, it's a never-ending story. Fortunately, for the Minutewomen it's been a predominantly winning chronicle.

And the thirteenth chapter ended yesterday afternoon when the Maroon and White (10-3) was taken to the absolute end – and then some by host Providence College (4-11) on the grass of Hendricken Field. In the finish, No. 9 UMass narrowly escaped the four-overtime Friar pestering with a 1-0 victory.

"It's tough," senior Kristen Schmidt said. "But you just have to take the win."

Like seven days prior versus Boston University, this match came down to penalty stroke periods – two of them, yet again. And once more, like a week before, the Minutewomen's hopes all came down upon the pads of goalie Zowie Tucker.

Tucker made two saves in both the first and second halves, a couple more in the second overtime and stopped the last eight consecutive Friar penalty strokes of the game to grab hold of her sixth shutout of the 2000 campaign.

"I don't want to lose in overtime," Tucker said. "And I don't want lose on strokes. It's my job and it's what coach expects me do."

"She's great," Schmidt said. "We almost assume she's going to save everything. I have all the faith in Zowie, but game days are supposed to be days off for goalies. All the shots are supposed to come at her in practice."

It's just frustrating that we can't put any in for her."

With nothing ado in the first set of strokes, UMass was finally able to get one past Providence's goalie Heather Tattersall in the second series of penalty strokes.

On UMass' first attempt of the second stroke stanza, Schmidt put one by Tattersall to give her team the quick advantage. Senior Lucy Koch followed Schmidt's tally with one of her own, and senior Patty Robinson scored on the subsequent and third attempt, ending the stroke fight at 3-0 in favor of the Maroon and White.

During the game, the Minutewomen took 14 shots on goal and were granted 13 penalty corners. But it was to no avail. Missed opportunities, including a failed Schmidt penalty stroke opportunity in the second half of regular play, haunted the UMass offense, sending the team to its second overtime battle in three games.

"We're No. 9 but we're not playing like a top 10 team," Tucker said. "Our offense is struggling and it's in the back of our minds. We just need to shoot early and on target."

"We want to score," Schmidt said. "We're just not making the right decisions. We have to be more aggressive in the circles."

The Minutewomen begin Atlantic-10 play on Saturday, Oct. 14, when they travel to Temple to face off with the Owls at 12:00 p.m. UMass plays St. Joseph's the next day at 2:00 p.m.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Patty Robinson's goal on the third penalty stroke attempt was vital for the Minutewomen in yesterday's victory over Providence.

Minutemen fire blanks; Late goal clinches loss

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE – As the late afternoon sun set over Cambridge, so ended the hopes of a Massachusetts victory.

As the Minutemen took the pitch Wednesday afternoon, they were looking to build on an eight game unbeaten streak. On the path to victory the Maroon and White found a rock solid Crimson stained wall blocking their way. This barrier, otherwise known as the Harvard University defense, managed to completely shut down the visitor's attack, a feat accomplished by only two other teams the entire season.

While the Crimson celebrated a 1-0 victory, UMass left the field in defeat for the first time in nine games.

"We didn't come to play," said Coach Sam Koch after the contest. He also added that this game would hopefully be a "wake up call" for his team.

The first half of the contest was as it often is, uneventful. Each team traded few chances, with UMass' junior goaltender Bryan O'Quinn making a couple outstanding saves.

The second half, on the other hand, was much the antithesis of the first. Better ball movement by both teams as well as a wide-open field led to more scoring chances and the eventual game-winning goal.

Harvard came out with a level of intensity above that of the Maroon and White. Although they did not capitalize, the Crimson had a few excellent opportunities to score in the beginning of the half. Less than two minutes into the frame, Harvard earned a free kick from 30 yards out. The ball was sent into the box where it was deflected to a perfectly positioned O'Quinn. The Maroon and White defense was tested again minutes later when an HU cross had to be cleared by freshman midfielder Andrew Colwell.

The Crimson continued the pressure with a corner kick at the 35-minute mark of the half. The corner was uneventful however, as a Harvard striker placed a one touch shot over the bar.

UMass had a series of chances in the following ten minutes, but they were unable to find the net leaving the door open for a Harvard counter.

With 33 minutes left in the half, Colwell's long throw was cleared out by the Harvard defense. Two minutes later, UMass midfielder Yuri Morales brought the ball down the left flank, then centered the ball to striker Fred Kinateder who had his one-time shot blocked by a defender. Only moments after that scoring bid, Kinateder got involved again as he found lured Weinryt open on the far post. Weinryt misjudged the ball and could only helplessly watch the ball sail harmlessly out of bounds.

Minutes after the UMass attack, O'Quinn was called upon again to repel the Crimson attack. The junior was up to the task though, as he made a remarkable save on a point blank shot. With 28 minutes remaining in regulation, Harvard sent a cross into the box. O'Quinn followed the ball across as it bounced through the area. With the goalie moving to his left, a Harvard forward streaked in and headed it to O'Quinn's right. The UMass keeper stopped dead in his tracks and leapt to his right, barely grasping the ball in his outstretched hands. A remarkable stop by the junior saved the game for the Minutemen, for the time being at least.

Coach Koch said after the game that "O'Quinn made some nice saves," five in all, that kept UMass in the game.

Massachusetts had another golden opportunity to score with under 20 minutes to play. O'Quinn got involved in the offense this time, sending the ball long to Morales. The sophomore then played a ball square across the field to a streaking Jeff Deren. Deren dribbled across the 18 yard line and sent a through ball to a Weinryt who one-timed a blast just over the cross bar.

The arrow to the heel for the UMass soccer team came in the 15th minute when Harvard's Matt Edwards beat a defender and crossed the ball into the box. The bending ball enticed O'Quinn enough to draw him out of position. The ball found Ryan Kelly on the far post who, with the UMass keeper out of the way, headed it into the back of the net.

Harvard "scored on a nice play" said Coach Koch after the game. The goal broke the back of the Minutemen since it came so late in the game. UMass was unable to mount a significant counter attack as Harvard took the victory, dropping the Minutemen to 7-4-2 overall.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

It was a hard fought game for Jeff Deren, Benny Hoffman and the rest of the Minutemen, but the big guns failed to find the net in a 1-0 loss.

Left Coast challenge looms large for Minutemen

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Back in the days of the California Gold Rush, men would go west looking to strike it rich. But in order to succeed, they would have to brave some of the most difficult conditions that they had ever seen. Now, 150 years later, another group of men head west looking to prove themselves against some of the best competition they have ever seen.

The Massachusetts men's water polo team heads out to the Left Coast to take on three of the top 12 teams in the nation. The Minutemen (16-3 overall, 6-0 CWPA) head out to California to take on three teams, starting with the ninth ranked Pepperdine Waves on Thursday. UMass, who jumped up one spot in the rankings this week from 12th to 11th, are the only team in the top twelve not to call California home.

Following the game with Pepperdine, the Minutemen head to Long Beach to do battle with No. 10 Long Beach State on Friday and close out the western adventure with a visit to No. 12 Loyola Marymount.

UMass, who heads into this crucial three game swing on a four game winning streak, will once again look to top scorers Carlos Ramos and Adam Moore to set the tone up front for the Minutemen. Moore and Ramos, a pair of juniors, have amassed 70 goals and 106 points between them so far this season. This past weekend, the Minutemen scored 41 goals in three victories with Ramos collecting ten of those tallies. At the other end of the pool, junior co-captain goalie J.R. Vanderwall pushed his season save total past the century mark to 128 with 12 saves in the match a 15-10 win over Brown and 12 more in a 11-10 triumph over then No. 20 Iona.

UMass will start their West Coast swing when they head to Malibu to take on Pepperdine (15-4). The Waves head into the match on a three game losing streak, but are 1-0 at home this season after winning their season opener over UC Santa Barbara back on September 9. Despite their recent struggles, the Waves will be sure to put up a fight against the surging Minutemen, who have won 14 of their last 15. Pepperdine is led by junior Greg Lonzo, who leads the team with 23 points, while sophomore goalie Michael Soltis is the defensive key for Pepperdine. Soltis comes into this match with 43 saves and a 5.42 goals-against average in 7 games this season for the Waves.

The very next day the Minutemen head south to take on Long Beach State. The 49ers (7-3) are on a four game winning streak that has seen them jump to 10th in the polls. If Massachusetts coach Russ Yarworth wants to get out of town with a win, his men will have to shut down the 49ers own dangerous duo of juniors, Chris Seegsman and Justin Iewell.

Lastly, the Minutemen head to LA to take on the Loyola Marymount Lions. Loyola defeated La Verne 8-6 on Wednesday to improve their record to 9-5. Senior Aaron Fisberg scored 3 goals for the Lions to increase his season total to 33. Sophomore Kevin Witt has also been dangerous up front for Loyola with 30 goals and 17 assists to his name this season.

If the Minutemen want to challenge for the national title this season, then they are going to have to show that they can hang with the best in the business. And this is the weekend that they get that shot.

Countdown to Midnight Madness:
ONE DAY

Perfect Vikings look more and more like NFL's best

Purple is a tough color to wear. It clashes with just about everything, it's very tough to accessorize and many consider it just plain obnoxious. Larger folks who wear purple subject themselves to "Grimace" jokes; tall people in purple instantly become "Barnies."

But when it comes to the National Football League, purple is all the rage this year. After a perfect 5-0 start involving three huge divisional wins, the Minnesota Vikings have gone from being the 2000 season's biggest question mark to its undisputed exclamation point.

Sure, the weekly fireworks display that is the St. Louis Rams continues to explode on hapless defenses, but fans are used to and even a little sick of that by now. The Vikes offer an equally exciting show with much brighter, and bigger, stars. And given that most major sports publications predicted Minnesota to finish no higher than third in the NFC Central, the unprecedented success of Denny Green's troops has definitely made for a better story over the first six weeks of the season than the ritualistic Rams.

Of course the biggest story coming out of the Metrodome this season is the emergence of quarterback Daunte Culpepper. By now everyone has heard a million different versions of how Green should have chosen Jevon Kearse with his first pick in the '99 draft, but instead took a gamble on DC that has since made him look like a gradiron genius. But how much of a gamble was it to grab a 266-pound QB with the agility of a tailback and a rocket launcher of an arm? He has matured faster than most expected, but he did spend all but a few snaps of last season in a baseball cap on the sideline, studying harder than he probably ever did at Central Florida.

The league is also moving every year toward larger and more athletic players at the signal caller spot. Philadelphia's Donovan McNabb and Tennessee's Steve McNair are each 6-foot-2 and 226 pounds, while Colt sensation Peyton Manning is 6-foot-5 and 230. Gone are the days of elusive little field generals dodging blitzes and throwing on the run; today's QBs are more likely to tuck the football and plow straight through defenses. And whereas this technique was made thrilling by the likes of Randall Cunningham (who pioneered it), it is doubly entertaining with Culpepper for two big reasons: his wideouts.

Inside the NFL
with
Adam White

It is another well-known fact that Cris Carter and Randy Moss comprise the most talented tandem of targets in football. Carter is quite possibly the greatest possession receiver ever to play the game, and Moss has the potential to be the deadliest deep threat ever if he can stay focused and improve his work ethic. Both have proven that they can't be covered one-on-one. Moss spent his rookie season torching single coverage and Carter put up one of his best seasons last year when defenses began keying on No. 84 instead of him.

That's where Culpepper's penchant for running the ball makes him such a joy to watch: even the league's best defenses haven't found a way to contain him without freeing his receivers. Blitz him, and he kills you by running out from under your pressure. Shadow him, and he stands in the pocket and fires away. Take away his deep threats and he'll shred you underneath: zone him and he'll chuck it up for his leapers without hesitation.

Chicago tried to ground the Vikes in Week One by nickel-and-diming the wideouts to death; Culpepper and tailback Robert Smith gladly took to the turf for 182 rushing yards between them.

Defensive menace Miami stacked the front in Week Two and forced DC to take to the air; 355 passing yards later the Fish probably regretted that decision.

Our beloved Patriots thought they had a scheme to stop the enfant terrible in Week Three, blitzing him outside while relentlessly doubling Moss. But Culpepper calmly stepped up and locked in on the masterful Carter, with whom he connected seven times over the course of the win.

In Week Four, Culpepper was finally kept off the weekend highlight reel, thanks to a Minnesota bye.

Week Five for Detroit vowed not to let the young gun beat them on their home turf, using a seemingly perfect balance of inside pass rushing and shifting coverage to confuse him. And while Culpepper may have been kept somewhat in check by the tactic, his teammates certainly appreciated it: Smith high-stepped his way to a 134-yard day and Moss went airborne for 168 yards and three TDs.

Gang Green got its biggest challenge of the year on Monday night, when Tampa Bay invaded the Metrodome with hopes of reestablishing itself in the

Turn to NFL page 11

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Wanna be on TV? UVC meeting Oct. 11 6:30pm. Student Union. Anyone interested in TV Production be there!

AUTO FOR SALE

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

1990 Acura Integra GS. 2dr, manual, 108k, sunroof/cd/power. $4895. Call 546-5854

86 Honda Accord LX, new tires, exhust. Great car 159k. $2300 o/b/o 256-1952

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

LAPTOPS for only $599, warranty included + delivery. Email:laptopworldwide@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Unscented/nonsmoker needed for errands, etc. For 4hrs per week, at $10.12 per hour. Car required must be reachable by phone. 413-323-9133

We'll pay you to listen to the radio. Need someone to listen to local radio stations and report on what heard. EOE Call 413-586-7400 ask for Sean Davey

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Data Processors + Typests Needed High income potential. Flexible hrs. Basic computer skills required. Sales positions also open. 1-800-782-0817 or 941-351-5514 or www.thelawclub.com

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Dishwashers Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

Drivers Wanted Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Assistant/Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Your Ad Could Be Right HERE!!

ENTERTAINMENT

Anything for Dollar party at The Pub. Sat. Oct. 14 $2.00 20oz drafts and spinning the best in hip-hop + house DJ DK. 1st affair. 21 to drink with valid ID. Free until 10:30

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAPER! Season passes from $299. All East Passes $355 before 10/15 Call Michael 237-9847

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

G.E. Dorm Refrigerator works fine $60 Tel. Northampton 584-3364

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 Guys looking for roommate in four bedroom Rolling Green Apt. $300 a month incl. utl. Call 253-4014 ask for Steve, Jim, Justin

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY... GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need to Advertise? Advertise with the BEST!! Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN International
14	UMass Academic TV
15	WB/New Haven
16	Sundance
17	The Learning Channel
18	UVC-TV19
19	ABC/40 Springfield
20	Cornel to Cornel
21	NBC/22 Springfield
22	CNN Headline News
23	CNN
24	CNN Fn
25	CNN Si
26	TBS
27	BET
28	College TV Network
29	Univision
30	Comedy Central
31	Cartoon Network
32	TV Land
33	C-Span
34	ZDTV (Tentative)
35	Bloomberg Financial Network
36	History Channel
37	HSCN Programming
38

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 12, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scenic Rail Journeys		Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wall for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours "Enemy Within" (N)		City of Angels "Leg Ente" (N)		Diagnosis Murder (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours "Enemy Within" (N)		City of Angels "Leg Ente" (N)		Diagnosis Murder (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Charmed "Magic Hour" (N)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Homecoming" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "It's About George"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Tonight Show
WVIT	9	10 News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Homecoming" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Major League Baseball Playoffs: National League Championship Series Game 2 – Teams TBA						News	Frasier
WWLP	22	22 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Homecoming" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	DoctorCell	Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"		Grafters (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	28 News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Med Adv. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★★ "Dodgfinger" (1964, Adventure) Sean Connery, Gert Frobe					★★★ "Dr. No" (1962, Adventure)		Sean Connery
A&E	25	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Animal Instinct"		Biography: Ronnie Milsap		Murder One "Chapter Five"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Poison Ivy"
CNN	29	23 Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)	Crossfire		World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★ "Forty 4" (1981, Comedy) Dan Monahan, Mark Herrier.				Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	49	Wild Discovery: Web		Wild Discovery: Lowland		On the Inside "The Reel LAPD"		Hospital (N)		Into the Unknown		Justice Files "Custody Wars"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Coll. Football	College Football: West Virginia at Virginia Tech. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Delta Burke"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Attention of Front" (1991, Drama) Kelsey Segal				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Cribs	TRL (In Stereo)		Britney's MTV Moments (In Stereo)				Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Undressed	Undressed
NICK	34	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Nick News (N)	Facts of Life	Bradys Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Facts of Life	Bev. Hillbillies	All in Family	Jeffersons
SCIFI	45	Sliders "The Prince of Slides"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Tales-Crypt	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	52	28 Mike Tyson Story		Operation		Paramedics "Desert Fever" (N)	48 Hours			Pyramid of Doom		Paramedics "Desert Fever"
TNT	53	ER "Loose Ends" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Collateral Damage"		★★★ "The Apostle" (1998, Drama)		Robert Duvall, Farrah Fawcett.				"Sixty" (2000) (In Stereo)
USA	55	Weiker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Going After Francesca"		Nash Bridges "Patriots"		"Crocodile" (2000, Horror) Mark McLaughlin, (In Stereo)				Strip Poker	Martin
HBO	59	(5:00) "Search-Bobby"		Reel Sports		Inside the NFL (N)		★★★ "P.O.W." (1996, Suspense) Bryan Brown, (In Stereo)				G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	60	(5:00) "I Love"	★★★ "I.Q." (1994, Comedy) Meg Ryan, "PG"			"Price & Cons" (2000, Comedy)		Larry Miller, "PG"			★★ "Body Parts" (1991, Horror) Jeff Fahey, "R"		"Security"
SHOW	65	★★½ "The Out-of-Towners" (1999, Comedy) Steve Martin, "PG-13"				"Hendrix" (2000, Drama) Wood Harris, Dorian Harewood.				Rude Awaken.	Jimi & Sly: The Skin I'm in		"Illicit Lovers"

Dibbert By Scott Adams

WHAT THE WORK-AT-HOME PERSON SAYS
DON'T DISTURB ME UNLESS THE HOUSE IS ON FIRE.
WHAT THE REST OF THE FAMILY HEARS
I AM YOUR SERVANT. MY SPECIALTY IS KILLING SPIDERS.
WHAT THE SPIDERS HEAR
THE HOUSE IS FULL OF WOUNDED FLIES
www.dilbert.com

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SIR, ILLINOIS' GOVERNOR HAS POSTPONED ALL EXECUTIONS BECAUSE HIS STATE'S JUSTICE SYSTEM WAS "FRAUGHT WITH ERROR."
GIVEN THE TROUBLING STATE OF JUSTICE FOR THE POOR IN TEXAS, WOULD YOU CONSIDER YOUR OWN MORAL TORTURE?
NO
AND I'LL TELL YOU WHY — AS HAMILTON ONCE SAID, IT'S BETTER TO HAVE A FREE BAND INNOCENT MAN PUNISHED THAN TO HAVE OVER GUILTY MAN GO FREE!
WASN'T THAT JOHN ADAMS?
AND DIDN'T HE SAY THE REVERSE?
LOOK, THE IMPORTANT THING TO ME SAID IT!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO ARE YOU PSYCHED ABOUT THE NEW JOB?
I GUESS, SO. BUT I'M ALSO A BIT WORRIED.
I'LL BE DEALING WITH BUILDING SUPPLIES ALL DAY LONG! WHAT IF I BECOME SO BORING, ONLY INCREDIBLY DULL PEOPLE WILL HANG OUT WITH ME?
I MEAN, HOW MANY PEOPLE CARE ABOUT THE ADVANTAGES OF PLYWOOD VS PARTICLE BOARD? OR PVC TUBING VS
SO DONT JUST LEAVE ME ON THE EDGE OF MY SEAT. WHAT IS THE ADVANTAGE OF PLYWOOD VS PARTICLE BOARD?
THE HOUSE DEPOT

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

Tray, what are you doing out in the rain?
The fleas don't like it.
Hey look! How cute.
We got you an umbrella, Tray!
I don't WANT an umbrella

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

I'VE WATCHED TIGER WOODS. HE'S NOT SO TOUGH. WHAT HAS HE GOT THAT I HAVEN'T GOT?
DISCIPLINE... DRIVE... DISCIPLINE... CHARACTER... DISCIPLINE...
AND YOUR POINT IS?
www.hedgeweb.com

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may have to surrender to someone today in order to end something of a private war – but you can do so in an amicable way, certainly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – A combination of time and physical resources must be right today for you to take full advantage of a door that has just been opened for you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) –Be precise in your communication with others today. Leave no room for misinterpretation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Irritations are unavoidable today, but you can use them to your advantage in the long run and discover an open door on the horizon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Opposites do indeed attract, but today you'd better mix and mingle with those who share your ambitions and outlook.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Work with imaginary forces today and you'll arrive at an idea that may well send you off in a new and highly successful direction.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're being a little too fickle. It's time to accept a little more of that which usually rubs you the wrong way today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your focus must become sharper and more specific today. Though you understand the big picture, you may be missing some of the details.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Control your ego today, or you're sure to bring upon yourself a little too much criticism. Try to make friends today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't object to the plans of youngsters today. Rather, it would be best for you to guide them carefully along a more sensible path.

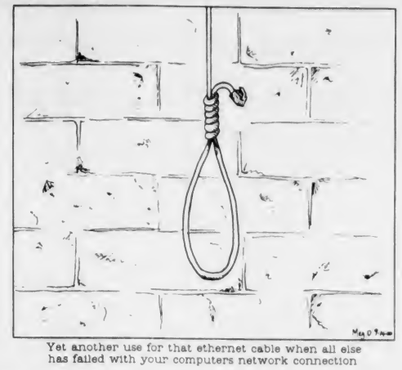
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Physical coordination and stamina will both be required today, and you must be willing to focus entirely on the completion of a single task.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22) – Study the effects of your own interaction with others today. You have a great deal to learn about how such dynamics affect your progress.

Amherst Weather

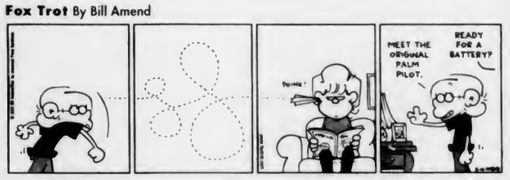
Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 68 LOW: 35	HIGH: 65 LOW: 42	HIGH: 66 LOW: 43

Frosh By Megan Orosz



Yet another use for that ethernet cable when all else has failed with your computers network connection

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

EXCHANGING INFORMATION THE OLD WAY, THE TWO GUERILLA LEADERS, "CHE" AND BOBO, MEET IN HAVANA

© 2000

Quote of the Day

"Everbody loves a joke but no body loves a fool."

–Billie Joe Greenday

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Shepards Pie

Fish Munchies

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (Berk& Worc)

Falafel Burger (vegan)

Dinner

Chix with Pecan Dijon Sauce

Beef & Shrimp Lo Mein

Veggie Lo Mein (vegan)

Black Eyed Peas Jambalaya (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jorel Barr
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Basque
Production Staff	Sarah Wingardner, Jasmine Trabels

ACROSS
1 Farmer's place
5 Exclamation —
10 "I'm relieved!"
14 Henri's girlfriend
15 Not deserved
16 Start again
17 Cherry variety
18 Dole makers
19 Actor Ken —
20 Ice pellets
22 Try
24 Tipper or Laura
27 Kennel noise
28 Uncultivated flower
32 Pleasant tune
35 Savings-plan gifts.
36 Tavern sign
38 Eagle's lair
40 "The Georgia Peach"
42 Absorbent cloth
44 Female sandpipers
45 Bend them!
47 Piggens
49 Jungfrau, e.g.
50 Satisfy one's thirst
52 Whiskey drink
54 Feast
56 Civil disturbance
57 Prickly weed
60 Hunt illegally
64 Shout of glee
65 Ran the car without moving
68 Woodwind
69 Paddles cousins
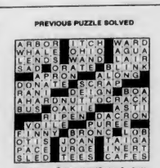
70 String quartet member
71 Thin
72 Granny, e.g.
73 Clean the slate
74 Lampreys

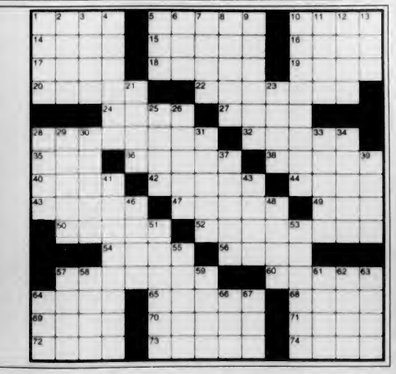
DOWN
1 Pats gently
2 Actor Jannings
3 Border
4 Old story
5 New pet
6 Singer Yoko
7 Thought
8 Zany
9 Analyzed
10 Quicker
11 Assist
12 Work on "Time"
13 Came in first
21 Pro source
23 Director Kazan
25 Western st.
26 Senator Ketcuver
28 Lantern part
29 Golf clubs
30 Classify
31 Dirt
33 Footstep
34 Traffic sign
37 Earlier
39 Glimpse
41 Most decorated
43 Abominable Snowman
46 Empire Aspen
48 Pauses
51 Lure
53 T. E. Lawrence portrayer
55 Church official
57 Eraser said — done
58 Dell buy
59 Miles Cinders of the comics
61 Busty as —
62 Ember
63 Coop dwellers
64 Stir-fry pan
66 Overhead trains
67 Female rabbit

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10-10-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

MAGIC HAT PROMO THURSDAY NIGHT PRIZES AND GREAT STUFF!
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



OFFcampus ONline

www.masslive.com/offcampus

3 students
1 Web cam
24/7!

Three UMass seniors are sharing their final year of college with the world.

Meet Deanna, Ruth and Laura

MassLive.com's Web cam is...
in their apartment.
Now you can get a real–life look at their lives!

OFFcampus ONline:
It's the coolest show on the Web.

For Real!

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com
GET ON IT!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

Friday in Arts brings a report from the Word of Mouth tour as well as Kurt Polesky's incessant ramblings.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Eric Boss and the UMass football team take on Maine this Saturday. Turn to the back page for the game's preview.

SPORTS p. 16

Volume CVII Issue 27 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, October 13, 2000

Annual Polkathon kicks off, leading WMUA fund drive

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Correspondent

In hopes of raising $22,000 to support the "radio voice of UMass," WMUA 91.1FM, the station will begin its annual weeklong, on-air Fund Drive tomorrow with a 15-hour Polkathon, starting at 6 a.m.

WMUA, a federally licensed broadcast facility serving the Connecticut River Valley of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont, will receive $30,000 from the Student Government Association this year, according to the official Fund Drive flyer. However, this figure covers only about half of the station's operating budget. WMUA is left to raise the remaining costs through underwriting and this week of fundraising.

During Saturday's marathon, listeners can call (413) 545-FM91 to request songs. Also at that time and throughout the entire week, pledges can be made to the station by calling (413) 577-3000. As a new bonus to the Fund Drive, listeners will also be able to pledge through the WMUA website at www.wmua.org/pledge/.

"We're excited about this new aspect of the drive because the site will allow our listeners who are out of the state to also make donations," Fund Drive Director Pamela Gorczynski stated.

Using the basis of last year's drive, Gorczynski expects the station to raise half the money during the 15-hour Polkathon. She indicated that different prizes will be awarded for various donations. For example, someone who pledges $15 will receive a tote bag. Someone who contributes $20 will have a choice of either a CD or a CD case. For $25, someone will receive a T-shirt.

Gift certificates will also be rewarded. However, the type of certificate will depend on the amount of the donation. Gorczynski said that the money raised during the drive will be used to buy, fix and upgrade equipment, such as microphones and CD players. For example, the station put a down payment on a new transmitter to replace the current one on Dickinson dormitory at Orchard Hill with last year's funds of over $21,500.

General Manager Daniel Barowy explained that WUMA took out a loan of $25,000 to fully pay for this transmitter, which is currently in storage. The station needs to pay back $5,000 of their loan this year. As soon as that bill is paid and their building permit is issued, installation by Southern New England Telecommunications can begin. Barowy explained that the station plans to acquire the money for the loan from the funds raised during this year's drive and hopes that the equipment will be operational soon.

He also anticipates that more than 700 listeners will call the station to make a donation. With more than 600 pledges, last year's drive collected the most money ever raised at WMUA. Station officials hope to set a new record this year.

Barowy explained that the station is targeting everyone in the Pioneer Valley, college students and local community members alike.

Publicity Director Chris Lind remarked, "We aim to gear our attentions toward college students in hopes that they will support this drive. However, we really hope to hear from anyone and everyone who listens to our station."

He said that the station is trying to acquire the public's attention by hitting the print media hard. "We've posted flyers in downtown Northampton, downtown Amherst, around the UMass campus and in all of the dorm buildings," Lind commented. According to him, table tents will be set up near each of the Dining Commons next week to promote the drive.

He added, "We'll also be giving out some promotional stuff to entice our listeners to pledge."

As a non-profit radio station, WMUA is not permitted to air paid commercials, but the station can receive donations from businesses. In return for the donation, the DJ's give the businesses a 30 second on-air thank you that also mentions what the businesses have to offer their customers.

Underwriting, as this process is called, slightly increases in demand throughout the annual Fund Drive week. Even so, the demand is not great enough to acquire all the station's funds, Lind noted. "If it was, we wouldn't need the fundraiser," he said with a smile.

ANNA WITKOWSKI/COLLEGIAN

Festival of huts

UMass Jewish students gather inside the sukkah at the Hillel House courtyard. Friday marks the beginning of the holiday of Sukkot, during which the sukkahs (huts) are built outside the houses to remind Jewish people of the huts built by Israelites wandering around the desert during their forty-year-long Exodus from Egypt. The festival is centered around living and rejoicing in the sukkah for the duration of the holiday.

Navy ship bombed, five sailors killed off Yemeni coast

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

While the world focuses their attention on yet another conflict in the Arabian Peninsula, another tragedy has taken precedence in the region.

At 3:15 a.m. Eastern standard time yesterday, the United States Navy destroyer Cole, a warship on a refueling stop at the Port of Arden, was bombed, crippling the ship and causing the deaths of five sailors, injuries to 36 and leaving 12 still missing.

The explosion left the ship with a gaping 20 by 40 foot hole in its side, causing major flooding and damage to the engine room and deck. After the bombing, the crew struggled even to keep the boat afloat.

President Clinton called the bombing a deliberate act of terrorism, a suicide attack, and intends to find the perpetrators and hold them responsible for the death of the Americans.

Attorney General Janet Reno has already dispatched special Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and is treating the event as a very serious criminal act.

Apparently the fire came from smaller boats in the harbor loaded with explosives and on a suicide mission. The New York Times referred to the boat as helpless, "like the equivalent of a Ryder truck packed with explosives pulling up to a target."

The Cole is an Arleigh-Burke class destroyer and is one of the most sophisticated warships in the U.S. fleet. Based out of Norfolk, Va., it is equipped with high speed missiles and cannons designed to protect itself and other vessels from air attacks and missiles.

However, all the fancy weapons and radar were not enough to save the fated ship from an attack that was apparently premeditated and planned. U.S. officials believe that the event may have been planned many months ago, because it apparently depended on specific arrival information of the ship.

The ship was planning on a limited stop in the Port of Arden on its way to the Persian Gulf where it had a legitimate mission. The Navy notified the Yemen government days in advance, confirming a specific security procedure for the vessel.

Officials believe that the bombing is not linked directly to the present conflict in the Middle East, but did express their suspicion of Islamic Radical Organizations that may be linked to the exiled Saudi terrorist Osama Bin Laden.

Bin Laden has been held accountable for the bombings of American embassies in Tanzania and Kenya in 1998. The United States retaliated 15 days later with air strikes in Afghanistan and the Sudan.

Information for this piece came from a New York Times article.

Debate reveals more similarities than differences

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

In a presidential debate with a heavy concentration on foreign affairs, Al Gore and George W. Bush presented the nation their views on the role of the United States in the world, racial profiling, gay marriage and hate crimes in Winston-Salem, N.C. Wednesday night.

In a "sit-down" debate format with far fewer heated exchanges than last week's debate in Boston, moderator Jim Lehrer first focused his questions on what the candidates' foreign policies would be if elected President.

George Sultzner, professor of political science at the University of Massachusetts, attributed the increased civility of Wednesday's debate to "the reaction of the American people to the first debate, and the civility practiced at the vice presidential debate."

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

When asked about gay rights at Wednesday's debate, Republican presidential candidate George W. Bush replied he is in favor of equal rights, but not special rights.

The candidates generally agreed with each other's positions on what United States foreign policy should be in many of the world's troubled areas. Both candidates declared their support for Israel and both called on Palestinian chairman Yasser Arafat to end the violence in Israel.

"I would call on Arafat to have his people pulled back. I'm going to stand behind Israel," Bush said. Gore agreed, "We need to insist that Arafat send out instructions to halt some of the provocative acts of violence that have been going on."

The candidates disagreed on U.S. policy toward Iraq, with Bush accusing the Clinton administration of not acting strongly enough to break Iraqi president Saddam Hussein's grip on power. When Lehrer asked Bush if he thought the Clinton administration's policy toward Iraq was a "failure" Bush said, "I do."

Gore retorted, "[The Gulf War] was not finished in a way that removed Saddam Hussein from power; that was the situation when I got there, and we continued and still continue the sanctions that were in place."

Bush responded, "I want them to be tougher sanctions."

The candidate's agreement also divided on the role of the U.S. military in the world, with Bush criticizing what he characterized as "nation-building missions" pursued by the Clinton administration in Somalia and Haiti. Gore blamed the U.S. failure in Somalia on the Bush-Quayle administration.

"Somalia was, I think, ill considered," Gore said. "But the mission was started during the Bush-Quayle administration."

Bush responded, "Somalia started as a humanitarian mission and ended as a nation building mission. I don't think our troops ought to be used in nation building. I think our troops ought to fight and win wars."

The candidates agreed that U.S. military forces should not be overextended in the world. When Bush was asked where the military is overextended, he suggested that he would bring the troops home from the Balkans and Haiti. Gore said that he would prevent overextension of the military through increased spending.

"We can't allow ourselves to be overextended," Gore said. "That's why I propose twice as much more military spending than he [Bush] does."

The tone of the debate was markedly different than that of the first presidential debate held in Boston last week. Gore refrained from sighing and averting his gaze from Bush – behavior that many said hurt him in the first debate.

"Gore managed to come across as all wound up without any substance [in the first debate]."

Turn to DEBATE, page 3

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Discussing the issue of gay rights at Wednesday's debate, Democratic presidential candidate expressed his desire to find a way to allow some form of civil union for gay couples.

Greek men volunteer in Amherst

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Correspondent

It's Friday night — what are you going to do? There's something going on everywhere, on campus, off campus, even down the hall. Why not take a stroll down the famous frat row — something must be going on down there. There's always a party. But wait is that all fraternities do, throw parties?

After talking to Delta Sigma Phi President Jamaal Dias, I was sure to see that fraternities offer a great number of benefits to both UMass students and members of the surrounding communities.

As new students arrive on campus, most come bearing mixed emotions; they are excited about the future, but at the same time scared to death. A campus with over 18,000 students often makes most newcomers feel overwhelmed. Some turn towards Residential Academic Programs, others join learning communities, but some decide to give Greek life a try.

Becoming part of Greek life helps students to get involved socially. Many Greeks find that deciding to pledge a fraternity makes the campus smaller and much more personal. Students attend various events, and bond with the brothers. It makes them feel like they are part of a group, and it's a huge part of the college experience. A new student many feel more comfortable walking around campus and seeing a familiar face.

"The brothers share one common bond ... and they are your friends for life. It's a secret tradition you all know and share," Dias says. Fraternities can also be very helpful to that young, shy, bashful youth. With all of their activities and events, it's easy to become close to the brothers, and that shyness disappears. Fraternities can play a crucial rule in opening students up as they adapt to all of the changes in their new college life.

So what do fraternities do for non-Greeks? The answer is plenty. The brothers at Delta Sigma Phi are heavily involved with the March of Dimes, an organization that strives to improve the health of babies. They also contribute their time to the America Heart Association, whose goal is to reduce disability and death from cardiovascular disease and stroke. They donate much of their time to the Newman Center, the University's Catholic student center as well. The brothers donate their services to their annual phone-a-thon, and offer a helping hand whenever needed.

Often times, they organize their own events, researching ideas on the Internet, or by participating in events arranged by the Greek Affairs office. Certain events require all the brothers to attend. Most of the time brothers are encouraged to participate, but they usually choose to help out on their own. Currently, Delta Sigma Phi is organizing an event to clean the town of Amherst.

To directly benefit UMass students, fraternities teach valuable life rules: teamwork and responsibility.

"Fraternities are not all about drinking and meeting girls; it's about being positive towards UMass and the community," Dias said. Becoming part of a fraternity helps make people more goal-oriented, and able to manage their time effectively. It helps communication and public speaking skills, and boosts levels of confidence.

Fraternities also provide things for people to do. "It makes UMass a smaller school within a big school, which is the best of both worlds," Dias remarked.

Deciding to pledge a fraternity can also be beneficial in the long run. Companies often look for strong leadership skills, public speaking skills, and dedicated responsible individuals. The connections made at a fraternity help brothers out in the real world, where they focus on career development, and usually have strong alumni networks. Often, brothers have job offers before they even graduate.

According to Dias, it is easy to see that fraternities are a huge benefit for students and the community. While fraternities do make mistakes, he commented, their errors often get exploited and turned into an enormous scene. "Everyone makes mistakes," Dias said.

As for Delta Sigma Phi, Dias sees the fraternity prospering greatly and becoming much bigger members-wise. He is confident that Delta Sigma Phi will produce leaders who are ready to take on positions of responsibility, and who will continue to help the town, the Greek community, and UMass students.

Psych Services develops programs for community

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The recent targeting of anxiety as a major contributor to the psychological problems of families has led to an expansion in programs at the University of Massachusetts Psychological Services Center.

The new developments include offerings in a variety of group services aimed at helping parents and children cope with the stresses of family life.

"We've tried in the past to expand services for adolescents," said Joanne Hutchins, a staff assistant for Psychological Services.

Hutchins explained that due to the increase in faculty at the center, extra services were added targeting youth.

"We feel that it is a need that we could never meet," she said. "Now we can."

One group service that is being offered to families at the University is a parenting group for parents of children with attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorders (ADHD). This group is aimed at helping parents to better deal with raising a child with this type of condition. The group focuses on children between the ages of six and 12. There are 10 sessions available on Thursdays between 6 p.m. and 7:15 p.m.

Parents of pre-school children who wish to build a more positive relationship with children that have problems with defiance and aggression can receive help in a group session as well. This group is offered on Mondays starting Oct. 23 and run from 6 to 7:15 p.m.

There are also groups that are aimed specifically for adolescents and teens. One anxiety group available is designed specifically for children between the ages of nine and 12 who need help coping with anxiety, stress and worry. There are 15 sessions offered on Mondays between the hours of 6 p.m. to 7:15 p.m.

Another group organized to deal with issues facing youth is a adolescent stress and coping group. This is for teen-agers between the ages of 14 and 17 that need help with stress reduction. The sessions are offered 15 times on Mondays between 6 p.m. to 7:15 p.m.

These groups begin meeting in late October and include about 10-15 individuals. Each group meets for a set number of sessions and will be led by a doctoral student in a child-clinical psychology program, and will be supervised by a licensed clinical psychologist and an assistant professor working for the University.

In addition to these programs, there are also individual services that are being offered to anyone in the community that is experiencing problems with anxiety, depression, ADHD, children's behavioral problems, marital conflicts, parent-teen conflicts and stressful life events. These individual services are offered on a sliding cost scale. The fee for group services is $15 per session per individual. For more information on any of these programs, call 545-0041.

Hate crimes an ignored issue in Utah legislature

By Genevieve Sehy
Daily Utah Chronicle (U Utah)

(U-WIRE) SALT LAKE CITY — The Associated Students of the University of Utah covered campus with signs this week reminding students of the Oct. 18 voter-registration deadline.

But Utah senators said Tuesday they want students to remember to vote on something besides a proposed tuition hike — hate-crime legislation.

Representatives from both the Democratic and Republican parties spoke on the importance of hate-crime legislation during the Women's Resource Center's power luncheon in the A. Ray Olpin University Union East Ballroom.

The five panelists emphasized the need for university students to become aware of the hate crimes in Utah, but students' opinions on the importance of such legislation varied.

"I think everyone should be held accountable for their actions," public relations major Katherine Austin Tullis said. "If putting hate-crime legislation into law to show people there are other ways to handle problems, I would absolutely vote 'yes'."

Tullis said no one should have the right to hurt others based on such things as sexual orientation, gender and disability.

Others agree with Tullis but think the issue is more complex. Communication major Keegan Hill said he would initially support punishment for people who commit hate crimes, however, this decision would require more law enforcement and more money.

"Hate crimes are hard to prove because they deal with personal feelings," Hill said. "Getting the perpetrator to admit to the crime is going to call for more investigation and more tax dollars."

Hate crimes based on race, religion, national origin, gender, disability and sexual orientation have increased over the past three years.

The FBI reported approximately 8,000 hate crimes in 1997. Panelist and Utah State Rep. Jackie Biskupski, D-Salt Lake, said more than 1,100 of those were related to sexual orientation.

Turn to HATE CRIMES page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanne Gorlinski Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jarret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargenta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

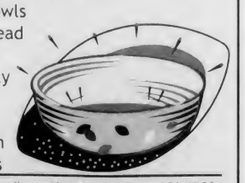
HAPPY, HAPPY FRIDAY THE 13TH FROM THIS LITTLE BLACK CAT AND YOUR FAVORTIE RANDOM CATASTROPHE FOLKS AT THE COLLEGIAN.

It's about that time...

SOUP er BOWL
Grand Opening
Clam Chowder Special every Friday
• 10-12 Different soups daily Including chilis and stews
• Bread bowls
• Fresh bread
• All made fresh daily
• also a limited selection of salads



96 N. Pleasant St. (Next to CVS) 253-1855

It's Cozy Time.

ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

■ debate

continued from page 1

said Eric Einhorn, professor of political science at UMass. "All of Gore's mannerisms without any substantive attacks made him look angry."

The discussion was more free flowing and civil without any notable angry exchanges.

"The sit-down style is more conversational and less confrontational," Einhorn said. "But I'm sure Gore was given orders to keep his tendency to attack under wraps."

The candidates found common ground on domestic affairs as well, agreeing that the practice of police departments targeting minorities, known as racial profiling, is a serious problem. Gore indicated that he would sign an executive order to end racial profiling in federal law enforcement and would support legislation to end the practice elsewhere. Bush said he would first delegate responsibility for reducing racial profiling to "local folks" and if the situation did not improve, there would be "federal consequences."

The discussion of racial profiling led the candidates into an argument over hate crime laws in Texas. Gore accused Bush of failing to support a hate crime legislation that was supported by the family of James Byrd, a black man murdered in a racially motivated attack. Bush responded that there was a hate crime law on the books in Texas and that the three men responsible for the crime would be executed.

"There is no penalty greater than death," Bush said.

Reports today said that one of the three responsible for Byrd's murder received a life sentence, with the other two sentenced to death.

Gore attempted to show a difference of opinion on gay marriage between Bush and his running mate Dick Cheney.

"I think we should find a way to allow some form of civil union," Gore said. "My position is closer to the Cheney-Leiberman position than Governor Bush is."

Bush answered, "I'm not for gay marriage. I think it's a sacred institution between a man and a woman."

Gore questioned Bush on gay rights as well, challenging Bush to support a law preventing the firing of people due to their sexual orientation.

Bush responded, "I'm in favor of equal rights; I don't favor special rights."

Gore went on the attack during an exchange on health care, challenging Bush's record on health care in Texas.

"Texas ranks 49th in the nation for children with health care coverage, 49th with women, and 50th with families," Gore said.

Bush retorted, "We spend 4.7 billion dollars a year on the uninsured in Texas. We're doing a better job than at the national level."

Gore went on to question Bush's priorities, saying that Bush opposed a measure in Texas to protect the uninsured while declaring the need for a tax cut for oil companies "an emergency."

On the environment, Gore said that the 21st century will see the consequences of global warming and that the U.S. needs to take a "leadership role" in developing new environmentally sound technologies.

"I want to be able to tell my grandson that we didn't turn away from the evidence that we were doing some harm," Gore said.

The final presidential debate will be held in St. Louis on Oct.17. The third debate will be held in a "town-meeting" forum with the candidates questioned by audience members.

COURTESY JAKE ABERNATHY

Practice session
A student practices his trumpet by the Fine Arts Center.

■ hate crimes

continued from page 2

"There has been a 14.3 percent increase in sexual-orientation hate crimes alone," Biskupski said.

The murder of Matthew Shepard in Wyoming based on his sexual orientation is a perfect example of a hate crime, she said.

Biskupski said Wyoming was given the opportunity to vote for hate-crime legislation after the Shepard case. The state's voters, she said, rejected implementation of such legislation.

Federal protection is given to victims of racial, religious and national origin crimes.

Biskupski said nothing is being done to protect those who have suffered gender, sexual orientation and disability crimes, though.

"43 states have laws against hate crimes," Biskupski said. "21 of the 43 exclude laws against sexual orientation crimes."

As the law stands now, Utah State Sen. Pete Suazo, D-Salt Lake, said there is no effective hate crime law in Utah.

"We need to be frank," Suazo said. "This is the fourth year the Senate has been trying to pass hate-crime legislation, but the Utah House of Representatives is too conservative," he said.

There are three main hate groups in Utah — the National Alliance, the Neo-Nazi Nationalist Organization and the Aryan Group.

Suazo said these groups are formed with a "White-America-is-being-threatened" philosophy.

"Swastikas on buildings and cars and burning crosses on lawns of interracial couples are some of the hate crimes seen in Utah over the past year," Suazo said. "The main goal of these groups is to threaten peace and harmony in entire communities."

Along with vandalism and violence, hate groups are dispensing information in high schools and mailboxes to relay their message of hate.

"These groups have code words that create fear and hate," Suazo said. "They are trying to make an impression on the younger population."

Utah State Rep. Susan J. Koehn, R-Davis, said there needs to be more pressure to encourage hate crime legislation.

"The way to be more aggressive in hate-crime legislation is to increase education," Koehn said. "We need to instill tolerance and understanding in our culture."

Koehn said there need to be consequences based on the inability to get along.

"We still have a long was to go before we can enjoy the inalienable rights of freedom, equality and justice," Suazo said.

Election results to affect abortion law

By Ryan Trost
Daily Egyptian (Southern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) CARBONDALE, Ill. — With the possibility of the next president of the United States appointing two to three judges to the Supreme Court, abortion laws could potentially revert back to pre-1973.

Since the landmark Roe v. Wade Supreme Court case in 1973, women have had the legal right to have an abortion in the United States. In the years following the 2000 election, the possibility of the Republican presidential candidate backing an amendment to ban abortions is a real possibility.

Democratic presidential candidate Al Gore has said he will always defend a woman's right to choose. He considers the upcoming election a possible turning point in abortion rights.

"The next president will nominate at least three and perhaps four justices to the Supreme Court. And so, November's presidential election will also decide the future of the Supreme Court and, in turn, will decide whether or not we keep a woman's right to choose or see it taken away," Gore told the Washington Post.

Republican candidate George W. Bush said he would support a constitutional amendment banning abortion — except in cases of rape, incest and when the woman's life is in jeopardy. Bush agrees that Supreme Court appointments could affect abortion laws.

Bush said he would use current justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, both abortion-rights opponents, as models for any judicial appointments he would make if elected.

"The voters will know. I'll put competent judges on the bench, people who will strictly interpret the Constitution and will not use the bench to write social policy. I believe in strict constructionists," Bush said in the Oct. 3 presidential debate.

Gore and Bush have such differing views on abortion that, for many abortion rights and anti-abortion activists, choosing the next president will be a one-issue debate — whether the candidates are for or against abortion.

Robin Orvino-Piouls, a Southern Illinois University doctoral student in journalism from Paducah, Ky., said the abortion issue will have an impact on the election and her vote.

"I believe a woman should have a choice in whether or not they can have an abortion," Proulx said.

Ann Polka, pro-life coordinator for the Belleville Catholic Diocese, said her beliefs begin and end with the abortion issue.

"Abortion takes away the most basic right we have, and when we don't have the most basic right — the right to life — then no other rights matter," Polka said.

For the rest of the country it might not be so simple, but where the candidates stand on specific abortion issues could be important. Gore has said women, not government, should have the right to decide, and supported the approval of RU-486, a drug that causes abortions up to 49 days after a woman's last menstrual cycle, citing the Food and Drug Administration's thorough studies into the safety of the drug.

Bush has said every child, born and unborn, should be protected. Bush said in the presidential debate on Oct. 3 he was disappointed in the approval of RU-486 because he worried the pill would cause more women to choose to have abortions. But he said he would not ban use of the drug as president because he did not think he had that authority.

Currently 24 states, including Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, have ruled that late-term abortions — abortions performed during the third trimester — are illegal. The Supreme Court has ruled that states cannot regulate first-trimester abortions; states can regulate but not ban second trimester abortions and states can ban third trimester abortions.

"Partial-birth abortion" is a procedure that both presidential candidates oppose. The U.S. House of Representatives and Senate have passed a bill making late-term abortions illegal. However, President Bill Clinton vetoed the bill because there were no provisions to save a woman's life if her health is seriously at risk during the last trimester of her pregnancy.

Gore has wavered in his stance on abortion since his position as a congressman in 1987 when he said abortion was "the taking of a human life." Gore has retracted his 13-year-old statement to the Boston Globe, stating, "Yes, my position has changed. I strongly support a woman's right to choose."

Bush's stance on abortion law is also shaky because he said he endorses the Republican plank for abortion, which supports a constitutional amendment banning all abortions including rape, incest and the health of the mother.

www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com www.dailycollegian.com

"THE COOLEST AND FUNNIEST COMEDY OF THE YEAR!"
Shawn Edwards, FOX-TV
"OUTRAGEOUS... FUN... See it with someone you love...to laugh with! Bring a date, or two, to see 'Ladies Man'. Tickle your funny bone. Smooth, cool and the funniest film of the fall." Jeff Menard, FOX-TV
"ONE FUNNY DUDE! A FUNNY FILM! This movie is real cool!" Mae Perkins, CNN-TV
"AUSTIN POWERS WITH MORE HEART! Funny stuff!"
"LOVE IT! Furiously funny!" Patty Spitler, CBS-TV
THE Ladies Man
PARAMOUNT PICTURES
R
STARTS FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13
NO PASSES
SHOWCASE CINEMAS EASTFIELD MALL
MEGA CINEMAS SPRINGFIELD PLAZA 16
SHOWCASE CINEMAS WEST SPRINGFIELD 5-15

dream it up

Imagine an internship with one of the most exciting companies in the world. Where friendships grow. Opportunities are made. Futures begin. One experience - a thousand reasons why. The Walt Disney World College Program.
Get ready to Dream It Up!

Attend the presentation for more info and to interview.

DATE: 10/16/00
TIME: 7:00pm
LOCATION: School of Management Room 120

Walt Disney World
COLLEGE PROGRAM
wdwcollegeprogram.com

IF YOU BUILD IT THEY WILL COME
Well we did at the Collegian. And we know you will come too.
More info to follow....

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A kick in the pants for sports and justice

Sports fans concerned about the precedent set by the Marty McSorley verdict now have a new and equally disturbing decision to ponder.

A Greensboro, NC jury ruled yesterday that Duke University must pay $2 million in punitive damages to Heather Mercer, a '98 grad who tried out for the school's football team as a placekicker but was cut. Mercer's lawsuit against the University of gender discrimination in its decision to cut her, while Duke officials contend that she simply wasn't talented enough to compete on the Division I level.

The jury's decision creates a precedent even more dangerous to the integrity of sports than the McSorley verdict. While the Vancouver decision creates legal recourse for players involved in accepted actions within the sport, the Mercer ruling allows a litigious route for people who don't even play the sport to take. And closer examination of the situation at Duke proves that the jury's verdict in Greensboro has more to do with politics than it does football.

Six other Duke placekickers, as well as several members of the team's coaching staff, testified during the trial that Mercer simply didn't have the skills to compete at such a level of competition. The fact is that such a situation isn't uncommon at all in college football, especially in the ultra-competitive atmosphere of Division 1. Thousands of players are cut nationwide every year for not having the necessary skills to cut it on their respective teams. For that matter, most professional athletes have a clause written into their contracts stating that they can be released if they do not possess the talent to perform as expected.

So what makes Heather Mercer's situation different? She claims that her kicking skills were ample for such a position, and that she was "comfortable" placekicking from 43 yards away in practice. But what about on a bad snap, a busted play when the ball becomes live and she becomes a playmaker? Would Heather Mercer be "comfortable" tucking the football and running for the endzone with men hundreds of pounds heavier than her bearing down on her the whole way?

But still the jury ruled that Duke wrongfully cut Mercer. And in doing so, it opened a proverbial Pandora's Box of possible future situations involving cut athletes and discrimination charges. A great number of the placekickers in the NFL are foreign, for example. Most have honed their kicking skills in countries where soccer is the predominant sport among young people. So the Hunter at Orlando Mare or a Sebastian Janikowski is no longer getting the job done and is cut, what is to stop him from filing a discrimination lawsuit? For that matter, consider all the foreign athletes in all the major sports. There must literally be thousands, especially if you count Major League Soccer. Why couldn't any single one of them file for discrimination if cut?

Mercer didn't necessarily prove that she belonged, talent-wise, on the Dukesquad. So neither would any other player, right? And such a situation wouldn't just be confined to foreign players. Any mixed-gender sport is an obvious arena for such litigation, as are any sports where there is any minority representation of any kind. Even age could be grounds for a cut player suing, especially an older player cut for no longer being able to perform. The jury in the Heather Mercer case has made a serious mistake in its verdict yesterday. Let's hope it's not a spark that will set off a blaze of litigation that burns down the already flammable world of sports.

Give credit to others

EMILY VACANTI

"The reason that I'm writing about my positive experiences with both the faculty and administration is because all that I ever hear people talk about is how bad both are. I know from personal experience that if you find the right people to help you out, it can make your world 100% better."

As a change from my usual column of ranting and raving, bitching and complaining, I'm changing my ways and for this column I'm giving credit where it is deserved. My first shout out is to my editor. After that, well you'll just have to see.

My close friends have all heard my opinion of my editor Rob Schulze when I'm pissed at him, but when I'm venting I'm not giving him the credit that he rightfully deserves. He puts up with my rants and actually has stood up to me. Most people just walk away and soon learn that that's not the end of it. Rob knows me better than that. He confronts me, civilly, and deals with me right then and there. Because of him I've become much more tolerant (not to mention less hitchy). No matter how much I've complained about him -- which is a lot -- he's really pretty cool.

That also goes for the rest of the staff that I know. Some people wonder why I'm down here as much as I am when I don't have many articles or columns in the paper. The reason is that I respect almost everyone down here (how many people can say that about the people that they work with?) as well as absolutely adore some of them. Unfortunately, I didn't get many people's permission, so I can't print their names, but those of you whom I respect should know who you are (Adam White, Melissa Hammel, Ryan Benharris, Boo Downs, Adam Martignetti, Jaret Barr and Dan Santella (photography), to name a few -- I got their permission). This list should also include the copy editors and night editors who see me down here in the middle of the night working on something totally arbitrary that may or may not be for the Collegian (thank you to all of you who put up with my constant venting and bull. I don't know how you guys do it). Most everyone down here are very hard workers with bright futures, as long as they stick with it.

Anyways, as I promised, I'm writing a positive piece today. No venting. This column is a shout out to all of those who have been amazing to me. In, say, the past six months. Again, you all know who you are. The reason that I'm shouting out to all of you is because I don't think that I would be here if it wasn't for you guys. So I'm dedicating my 22nd birthday, as well as the whole year, to all of you. Besides the Collegian staff who have gotten me through the tough times, there are those of you who are my normal friends (Stacy Kendall, Brian Corbin, George, Dave, Daniel, Trenks, Brownie, Charlie, Justin [M.I.], etc.). After all that you all have helped me through, I'm not going to let you down now.

All of you have also succeeded in helping me make it through various semesters, including with my classes. As my shout out to you, I have a gift for all of you that I hope you will be able to use at some point. I'm going to give you my shoulder for support. In the past, I haven't been able to. Now I can. And I can't thank you enough for doing this for me.

The second part of my column is giving credit to those faculty and administration that deserve it. My experiences over the past three years have been good as well as bad. Oddly enough, those experiences that are good outnumber those that are bad. I honestly believe that you get out of UMass what you put in, as long as you find the right people to put in with. I know that sounds extremely odd, but I'm going to give you an example to make it easier. My first two years here consisted of bad social experiences, a few bad divisions, and a terrible R.A. (note: he was terrible because he ignored 99% of the issues on our floor. He was present on the floor all of the time, yet he was about as responsive as a brick wall). My other R.A. in those two years was great. He couldn't have done his job better. Anyways, after those experiences, I decided to shop around the faculty and administration and was given the joy of having Professor Elizabeth Petroff for the second time, as well as the guidance of Dean Hanson.

Professor Petroff is an example of how a professor should be. She's always open to new ideas and always willing to help you out in every way possible. She's one of the main reasons that I'm still on this campus. Professor Petroff is an excellent teacher, as well as an amazing person. If you have a chance to take a class with her I recommend it (Comparative Literature department – I first took 122 with her). She is also the main reason that I'm a Comparative Literature minor.

Dean Hanson has also helped me. She has helped me so much with different aspects of my academics that I'm forever grateful to her. She's consistently helping me to find the best way to graduate while helping me to realize what I can and can't handle. As one of my several advisors, she has been phenomenal. Thank you.

The reason that I'm writing about my positive experiences with both the faculty and administration is because all that I ever hear people talk about is how bad both are. I know from personal experience that if you find the right people to help you out, it can make your world 100% better.

I know many people that say that there isn't anything that UMass doesn't screw up. I have to agree with the fact that UMass has a habit of making multiple different mistakes (like the semester that I "pre-registered" for a legal studies class and was given a dance class. How the hell can UMass explain that?), but if you deal with the right people, then your luck will change.

One tried and true way of doing this is not going to Whitmore when you're pissed off. You will leave even more pissed off. There's no doubt in my mind about that. So before you go, cool down. There are a couple of Registrar workers that are very personable and easy to deal with. If you go in and ask them what happened instead of screaming at them or speaking in a very heated voice, they will gladly help you, point you in the right direction, and possibly even completely solve your problem. Same with housing. The director of housing has been great every time that I've had a problem. They will help you as much as they can. Just approach them calmly. This is really the best way of dealing with anyone on campus, or in the "real" world for that matter. Just cool down and approach calmly. Act like you just smoked (totally mellow). Everything should indeed go smoother.

Again, thank you to everyone that has been there for me in the past six months or so. If you know someone that deserves appreciation but never seems to get any, give it to them. From someone who has given as well as received a ton of it, I can tell you that it's appreciated. Have a good weekend!

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist

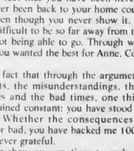
Letters to the Editor must be typed and must include the name, address, and phone number of the writer. Submit one today!

Thinking of our folks



DAVID ROSE

Parents weekend is upcoming and during this time of the year, I feel that I need to give props to the two people that will never get enough credit: my parents.

They have been together since '75 when Disco was starting to become popular, Carlton Fisk was waving his arms fair, my mom's hair was shoulder length, and dad, well, you had hair.

They came from distinctly different backgrounds: my mom lived in Greenport, New York during her childhood years with Italian and Norwegian decent, a stone's throw from her school that went grades K-12. My dad was from Antigua in the West Indies, a place not known by many, but a place where he lived for 25 years. He claims that he had to walk back and forth an hour to get to his school. (If I ever go to Antigua, I'll get the real story.)

They have had three kids: all three in college, a daughter, Anne, who graduated from UConn in May, and two sons that are going stronger than they ever thought they could in college. One, Colin, goes to BU and the other idiot is writing this right now.

Through 20 years of my life, I have committed one sin: I have never fully appreciated what they have done for me. That was until this weekend.

I do not know why it took this long to fully appreciate what they have done for Anne, Colin and me. I think that I am guilty of something that a lot of kids are guilty of: taking what parents do for granted. But after this weekend of staying home and just spending time with them, I finally fully appreciated all their hard work. I saw the pride in their eyes knowing that through all the times of torture that we put them through as children (not literal torture, but I'm sure parents know what I am talking about) that they had not decided to trade one of us back. But all kidding aside I find them incredible for the following reasons:

Mom: I appreciate everything that you have given me: a chance to learn and prosper.

I appreciate all the times you were there for me, even if the thing I did was wrong.

I appreciate the fact that you told me that what you were doing was the best for me. Even though I might have disagreed with it then, I see what you mean now.

I appreciate the fact that you have instilled a never give up attitude in me. There were some situations up here in college during my first year that I wanted to give up and go home. But I remembered your attempts at cooking new things. Granted, some of them turned out to be disasters, you never gave up trying. Something as little as cooking has given me strength to go on and try things, even if I don't get the hang of it at first. For that I'm grateful.

Dad: No matter what, whether or not I agree with some of things from the past that we were at odds for, I understand, finally what the point you and Mom had when you sometimes had to be stricter than I thought you had to be: you wanted to give the best to your children. I know it is a simple thought, but sometimes I just didn't understand. Now, I do.

I appreciate the fact that you have been here for 25 years, and have never been back to your home country to see your family. Even though you never show it, I know that it must be so difficult to be so far away from the people you love, and not being able to go. Through whatever struggle you have, you wanted the best for Anne, Colin and me.

I appreciate the fact that through the arguments, the fights, the misunderstandings, the good times and the bad times, one thing has remained constant: you have stood behind me. Whether the consequences of my actions were good or bad, you have backed me 100% and for that I will be forever grateful.

Though we never show our emotions to each other, I get the point when you use to call me a bamboo stick for being so skinny, that you would need a radar gun to find me. (Not that anything has changed.) We laugh about our sarcastic jokes about each other, we laugh at sarcastic jokes we make about others. Even though you say that some points that I get everything from mom's side of the family, like her cooking, in a lot of ways I am just like you, which for both me and you is a scary, but happy thought.

And mom and dad, I appreciate the fact that for whatever reason, you have put up with a wise ass like me for 20 years.

I hope everyone is in the same situation that I have: to have parents that they would not trade the world for, no matter what happens. I am sure that, just as I have in my memory bank, you have your own distinct stories about your parents. Sometimes those stories can be good, sometimes bad, and in some cases, like mine, a crazy sprint through life. No matter what, they are your parents.

As Family Weekend is approaching, I hope everyone takes time out, just five minutes out of this weekend to appreciate your parents. Even if your parents are not coming up to campus this weekend, think about them and everything that they might have done for you. Mothers and fathers getting paid nothing to do the most important job in the world: raise a child to become successful. In whatever way it takes for you to do so this weekend, or at some point in the near future, tell your parents these simple words that I am about to tell mine:

Mom and Dad: Thank You, Much Love to You.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist.

TV, games, and evil

JASON TOCCI

"The transmission of evil from our childhood was much more subtle and subliminal than the blatant corruption you see today. Did you even notice that the third Mario title was 'Satan Mario Brothers'?"

I've been hearing a lot lately about how modern entertainment is unsafe for our children," Television and video games are filled with gratuitous sex and violence, which could potentially damage kids. But that's got me thinking: how safe was entertainment when we, so-called "children of the 80's," frolicked in the sunny fields of youthful innocence? The more I think about it, the more I become aware of the evil that Nintendo and Saturday morning cartoons didn't want us to notice. It's spooky.

Consider video games for a moment, like Atari. Sure, Atari seemed pretty innocent, but look a little deeper. Ever play "Centipede"? The game preaches nothing less than bug genocide, tallying points for something no different than pulling the wings from flies. "Spaced Invaders"? Those little aliens sure look like the devil to me. Why do they keep swooping down at you? They're fallen angels, I tell you. And what about that game "Asteroids", where you shoot at rocks in space? It's clearly a symbol for the individual as an "island," with no form of intellectual/spiritual fulfillment or meaningful social interaction, only engaging one's own primal "id" impulse to destroy everything within sight. Those graphics were vague for a reason: Atari didn't want you to know what it was pushing on you subliminally. But now I'm starting to see the full picture. Yeah.

Don't forget Nintendo, though. It picked up right where Atari left off. In "Super Mario Brothers", children played the role of an adventurous Brooklyn plumber. Seems harmless, doesn't it? Maybe if the goal were to clean pipes and toilets, kids could have avoided sinister influences and received practical knowledge to boot -- but no, the goal included running after little mushrooms to lend you power. The mushrooms made you bigger, changing your perceptions, like drugs. They were magic mushrooms, no doubt. I watched kids rushing at breakneck speeds just to catch that little shroom gliding away across the brick floor; I bet those same kids grew into alienated junkies. And the mushrooms that gave extra lives contained an added dangerous message: immortality. This turns into the hunger for unholy powers later in life, immortality through joining the legions of undead. I'll wager that those young folks who today paint themselves up, dress all in black, and pretend to be vampires were the same kids who knew where all the extra life mushrooms were hidden. They had to know what man was not meant to know. They had to unlock dark secrets.

The Sega Master System and Turbografix 16 were two other video game consoles of the 80's, but they were boring and nobody liked them anyway. No harm done there.

Cartoons, of course, were no better than video games. "Popeye" clearly taught the message that "violence is the answer." There's not a problem in the world that can't be solved by beating a bearded sailor senseless. But that's only where it starts: like "Super Mario Brothers", "Popeye" encouraged drug use. You think that was spinach he was eating? No way. Eating vegetables takes a long time to take effect and make you powerful. That man had instant gratification, some powerful steroid, and that's probably what his disciples crave today.

In the cartoon "Voltron", the good guys always waited until they got kicked around before they made the big robot. All this does is encourage kids not to live up to their full potential immediately, to procrastinate, because they always end up winning. It would have been more appropriate if another group of kids existed so viewers could compare and contrast. That group would get off their duffs and beat the bad guy, while the procrastinators had their flying robots torn to scrap metal, and the defeated lazy-asses drifted, motionless and silent, into space. That'll teach 'em.

"Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" beats out even many of today's television programming when it comes to gratuitous sexual content. Four man-shaped turtles on the brink of adolescence, brandishing clear phallic symbols as weapons, living naked and grappling together in the dark sewers ... need I say more?

"Shazam", the cartoon about two kids who could summon a genie by touching their two rings, just encourages stupidity. Come on here, kids. You know you're going to get separated by the bad guys before the end. Just decide which one of you gets both rings. Or even better, just summon the genie before you get locked in separate cages and be done with it. Little procrastinators, you should be jettisoned into space like those "Voltron" kids.

"Scooby Doo" had people dressed up as monsters, which trivialize the danger behind dark spirits of the night. Children should beware demons, not chase them around in a psychedelic minibus, for the unholy creatures of the night can eat their very souls. Let us not also forget that "Scooby Doo" starts with the same letters as "Satan Devil".

While it is true that Scooby Doo had some spin-off series with real ghosts and monsters, these (like the Sega Master System and Turbo Grafix 16) sucked, and nobody watched them. Again, they don't need to figure into the argument.

The transmission of evil from our childhood was much more subtle and subliminal than the blatant corruption you see today, and so it affected us on a deep psychological level. Did you even notice that the third Mario title was "Satan Mario Brothers"? I bet you did not.

What can we do, then? Nothing short of childproof the world for the next generation, hunt down evil wherever it hides, take it off the airwaves and out of the stores. Or better yet, it would cost a lot less just to lock our kids in the basement, or in boxes. Keep them in separate boxes, though, so they don't try to summon a genie with magic rings or anything. That ought to do it.

Jason Tocci is a UMass student

We'd sure like to hear what you have to say.

J5, Dilated spread Word of Mouth to Pearl Street

WORD OF MOUTH TOUR
Featuring Jurassic 5, Dilated Peoples, The World Famous Beat Junkies, and Hosted by MC Supernatural
Pearl Street
October 10, 2000

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Unity, support, family, consistency, talent, history – all of these elements combined to make for an illuminating night of hip-hop as the Word of Mouth Tour rolled through Pearl Street in Northampton Tuesday night. It was a night that looked at hip-hop's past, present, and future, and explored what the genre could be, should be, was, and what it may become. What wasn't on display for the full house of faithfuls and newcomers, backpackers and casual fans? Any mention of fresh Bentleys, album sales, ice, ballers, or the dogs being let out. Why? Because as the crowd would have told you if the Rock and Wyclef didn't beat them to it, it doesn't matter.

But it does matter, and even if bling rap is not the particular style of hip-hop J5 preaches, they realize its presence and (diminishing) value; therefore Chali 2Na ended the night with a heartfelt call for unity in the hip-hop scene. Looking out over a sea of raised two-finger salutes, he foresaw outside forces trying to divide the community, capitalizing on the internal divisions between the drastically different and often clashing styles of hip-hop. He realized the need for the opposing factions to come together in the interest of strength, preservation, and unity.

Confucius would have been proud of the Word of Mouth Tour (trust me), since J5 doesn't just talk about unity, they truly lead by example, assembling a tour that is a mecca for hip-hop fans and a solid blueprint for how a tour of any type of music can be run successfully. From the moment the host of the evening, MC Supernatural, took the stage, there was a complete lack of any division between the crowd and the performers, and between the performers themselves. The result was the creation of a living, participatory atmosphere that did what many concerts fail to do, namely remind the audience why they took off their headphones and got off their ass to attend a live show.

Turntablism made its presence felt throughout the show, but at no point more convincingly than the opening set by the Beat Junkies. Bringing nothing but respect for the relatively young music form, founding member J-Rocc, DJ Babu from Dilated Peoples, Rhettmatic, and Shortkut from Invisible Skratch Piklz lit up the turntables individually, but their best moments where when they worked together. Shortkut stuck around for a great story-telling scratch set with J5's Cut Chemist that led into an amazing freestyle set from MC Supernatural. Arguably the most responsive act from the crowd that night, Supernatural had some wildly creative rhyme schemes where he would create a freestyle rap based on words or items the crowd presented such as a massive blunt or an apartment key. Other segments found the MC changing his flow according to the color of the lights (including an impressive underwater garble for blue) and drifts mimicking the style of popular rappers like Xzibit and Notorious B.I.G. the best being a humorously faithful rendition of DMX's infamous "Prayer" confessionals.

"Annihilation" was the opener for Dilated Peoples, and an appropriate description of the wake left after the Los Angeles' crew's blazing set. Irrsience and Evidence, backed by the muscular scratches of DJ Babu, kept the energy high through cuts from their long-awaited debut The Platform such as "No Surrender" and "Service." After a personal, anti-war solo verse from Irrsience things really picked up, producing intense crowd response for the best of Dilated past and present. The sleek title track and the jumpy "Fat Drums Pop" stood proudly next to classics like "Triple Optics" and "Work the Angles."

Jurassic 5, in addition to keeping excellent company on the road, has one of the most diverse and rewarding live shows currently available. Arriving at different points in their set, one could find breakdancing, DJ battles, swing dancing, or DJ Nu-Mark pounding away a live drum solo or plucking a five-foot-long Eastern stringed instrument. This is all, of course, in addition to verbal gunfights courtesy of Mark Texas, Akil Zulu-ker, and crowd favorite Chali 2Na. Borrowing heavily from their debut full-length Quality Control, "The Influence," "Great Expectations," and "Jurass Finish First" were all well received, but often stringed so tightly together that the audience begged for breathes and often took one during a song. "Quality Control," as well as off LP gems like "Concrete Schoolyard" and "In the Flesh" were met with a sea of outstretched (eye-level) arms waving, and vertical bouncing.

Exemplifying the unity spoke of earlier, J5 brought out everyone on the tour for a massive closing freestyle highlighted by Supernatural – check name introductions and Mark "Scratch" Ill Wizard's odd incorporation of Backstreet Boys' "I Want It That Way" – only to reproducing intense crowd response for the best of Dilated past and present. The sleek title track and the jumpy "Fat Drums Pop" stood proudly next to classics like "Triple Optics" and "Work the Angles."

Jurassic 5, in addition to keeping excellent company on the road, has one of the most diverse and rewarding live shows currently available. Arriving at different points in their set, one could find breakdancing, DJ battles, swing dancing, or DJ Nu-Mark pounding away a live drum solo or plucking a five-foot-long Eastern stringed instrument. This is all, of course, in addition to verbal gunfights courtesy of Mark Texas, Akil Zulu-ker, and crowd favorite Chali 2Na. Borrowing heavily from their debut full-length Quality Control, "The Influence," "Great Expectations," and "Jurass Finish First" were all well received, but often stringed so tightly together that the audience begged for breathes and often took one during a song. "Quality Control," as well as off LP gems like "Concrete Schoolyard" and "In the Flesh" were met with a sea of outstretched (eye-level) arms waving, and vertical bouncing.

Exemplifying the unity spoke of earlier, J5 brought out everyone on the tour for a massive closing freestyle highlighted by Supernatural – check name introductions and Mark "Scratch" Ill Wizard's odd incorporation of Backstreet Boys' "I Want It That Way" – only to reproducing intense crowd response for the best of Dilated past and present. The sleek title track and the jumpy "Fat Drums Pop" stood proudly next to classics like "Triple Optics" and "Work the Angles."

Dilated Peoples were among the many highlights at the recent Word of Mouth Tour stop in Northampton.

Dr. Dre simply couldn't be happier.

COURTESY OF WIREIMAGE.COM

Collegian Boy Band Expert weighs in on the latest from the evolving scene

98 DEGREES
Revelation
Universal

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Boy Band Expert

The proverbial yellow snow of boy bands, 98 Degrees, returns with their latest offering, Revelation. In an attempt to separate themselves from other pop acts, 98 Degrees debuts their new sound of hardcore speed metal on this album. Quite simply, this isn't your little sisters' 98 Degrees anymore. Just kidding! This is the same 98 Degrees you've come to know and love (or hate) on Revelation. The muscle-bound foursome: Drew, Nick, Justin, and Jeff have long been thought of as the more manly boy band, lacking the pizzazz of the Max Martin produced Backstreet/Nsync/Britney crew. On this, their third album, 98 Degrees enlisted the help of their own super shit Swedish producing team of Andres Bagge and Arnthor Birgisson. The result is a sound that is far slower, harmonic, and in many ways boring when compared to their dance track-happy counterparts in the pop world.

Overall, the album is basically what fans have come to expect from the Cincinnati based quartet. However, the album's first single "Give Me Just One Night (Una Noche)" is a Latin flavored dance track that injects a bit of life into the usually bland group. If you listen to such super duper stations as Kiss 95.7 or 101.3 you have most definitely heard this track, which has already hit Number 2 on the Billboard Hot 100. One problem though, none of the members of the group are Latin! But they do give them a hit single I guess that's all the matters. Note to self: Change last name from awful Polish name to Rodriquez and join boy band.

The rest of the album is mix of slow R&B-style ballads, and a few medium tempo' overproduced pop songs that sound slightly more mature than typical teen pop fare. Two of the album highlights, "Yesterday's Heart" and "The Way You Do," show off the group's vocal harmony. "Dizzy" is a funky sounding track which apparently was inspired by the Goo Goo Dolls album Dizzy Up The Girl, seriously.

The true measure of these types of pop albums is the number of radio hits they produce. When listening to Revelation it's hard to pick out another song which will be a huge radio hit, which is an inherent problem with this album. There are certainly a few tracks that have potential to become hits. However, for the most part the album is lacking that one song that will become a pop classic in the "Bye, Bye, Bye," "I Want It that Way" mold. To their credit, the "band" members did co-write eleven of the thirteen tracks on the album (word has it that it was "the hardest thing they ever had to do"). However, the results of their DIY attempt are marginal at best. Unless you are some mega crazed 98 Degrees fan, I can't imagine anyone could seriously get into this album. Although I'm sure Revelation will go multi-platinum, 98 Degrees will have to settle for bronze in the boy band world.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
U-SAVE
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Read Collegian Arts

Primordial Sound Meditation
A program developed by
Deepak Chopra, MD
Learn the Personal Mantra which makes Meditation Easy and Effective. Discover the Silence which develops Inner Peace and Activates the Power to Create the Life you Desire.
Classes now forming in Northampton
For information call
1-888-270-2031

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Beer, Wine, Liquor, Lottery, Cigarette, Phone Card
REGISTER FOR WEEKLY PRIZES

Sauze Gold Tequila 750	$11.99
Guinness 8 Pack	$10.99+Dep
Dinkel Acker 12 Pack	$9.99+Dep
Bass 12 Pack	$11.99+Dep
Sam Adams 12 Packs	$10.99+Dep
Magic Hat 9 Pack $8.99, 6 Pack	$5.99+Dep
Spatan Lager 6 Pack	$5.49+Dep

Visit the Two for $9.99 International Wine Section
Stop by on Oct 12 & 13 for Magic hat Beer Tasting Between the hours of 5 & 8 P.M.

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
FREE
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy - just a great chance to learn how to meditate

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am
in the Jones Library Conference Room
MERCYhouse
www.knowmercy.org
43 Amity Street
Downtown Amherst
It's a Church!
374-7532

radical christian WORSHIP
real teaching. real praise. for real life
Agape Community Church
47 East Street Hadley
10-noon
413-253-7079 • www.agapecc.org

Boot Camp.
ZANNA
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

LIVE MUSIC!
at McMURPHY'S
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15
10 pm - 1 am
NO COVER CHARGE!
POSITIVE ID REQUIRED

I've Fallen and I can't get up

By James Schaffer
Collegian Correspondent

With the new released of The Exorcist I was inspired to pick another demon possessing horror flick. This movie is no way near the level of The Exorcist, but instead is an interesting and intelligent look at how Evil of Days or Stigmata should have been. With Denzel Washington, John Goodman, and Donald Sutherland, the movie Fallen looks at the all-too-common story of Satan coming to earth to destroy all that is good. In most movies he does this by possessing the body of an unsuspecting soul and attempting world domination. We've seen this done in numerous films and usually it is done with no originality.

However, this film has a totally different approach to the theme. It is on a much smaller scale than world annihilation, looking at just the attempt of corruption and blight against one person. Without giving away everything but the ending here is the lowdown:

The supporting cast is excellent and the movie provides some dry and dark humor. Goodman is warm comforting partner loosen in the NYPD and Sutherland his older, wiser, demanding boss. Lieutenant Stanton. The cast of lesser-known names is nothing incredible but good for the film. Without a doubt Denzel steals the entire movie with his incredible powerful acting. His facial and verbal reflection of words make him a compelling person to listen to, and almost impossible to ignore. He is the character, leaving any identity of himself out of his films.

This movie has an eerie similarity to the film Seven starring Brad Pitt. The lighting is dark and depressing. The shots are either at nighttime, during the cold rain or in a small dimly lit room. You will not feel warm and cozy watching this, instead every moment that passes you get more and more sick of depression and frustration. Nothing goes in Washington's favor instead it is a downward spiral to hell for this character. A thriller isn't supposed to be nice.

Denzel Washington plays hard-nosed New York City detective John Hobbes, a man responsible for imprisoning and assisting a famous serial killer Edgar Reese. Using religious aspects beyond our way of thinking, an evil spirit possesses Reese. The film goes into great depth to explain all of the small religious aspects, revisiting the concept of Holy War. This spirit is a fallen angel that combines itself with Reese's soul, with the one objective of revenge upon Hobbes.

After Reese's execution this evil soul has the ability to pass from person to person through the air and by touch. However, it is similar to a living entity. When someone dies it only has one breath to find another host, or it's all over. The spirit has spent its entire existence, from the early times of man to the present, invading the minds of people. Death is not an option. The fallen angel uses this ability to track and manipulate Hobbes' life.

The Rolling Stones song "Time is on My Side" is played throughout the movie and used as a physiological bomb on Hobbes. People pass him on the street and sing the tune "Time-is-on-my-side, its-on-my-side." His co-workers too, and most importantly Reese, sing it to Hobbes at his execution. The battle between Reese and Hobbes is a devilishly awesome psychological thriller.

The torture is everywhere. This spirit rejuvenates the murder rampage that got Reese the electric chair by using unsuspecting civilians as accomplices. Possessing their bodies, he takes over their minds and murders using the exact style he did while alive. So questions arise: was there a second man helping Reese? Was this a copycat killer? Was Reese the right man?

The case is re-opened, the mystery begins, and it seems Hobbes is the only one that doesn't know what is going on. All rules are out the window, and anyone is game in this film. Who says the protagonist is the good guy?

If you don't want to pay nine dollars to watch The Exorcist at the West Springfield cinema, have your own little touch with the devil in your room. This movie is available on old fashion VHS and DVD. It is rated R for violence and language so if you have any issues with a little blood and guts I might suggest you pass this one up. Along with the blood and guts it will take a little bit of time out of your beer drinking weekends, clocking in at a minute over two hours. Hey, I only promised it be shorter than last weekend's pick, and the article too!

Minutemen aim to extend four-game streak

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Perfection is a goal that all teams strive for but few achieve. Perfect is something the Massachusetts tennis team has been through four matches in this 2000 campaign.

UMass travels to Storrs, CT this weekend for the UConn Invitational. It plans to leave the campus with an extended four game winning streak. The Minutemen are currently 4-0 on the season with in-state rival Boston College representing the only squad able to earn a point against UMass.

All the Maroon and White lay siege upon Storrs this weekend, the key victors will once again lie in the play of its top three singles players -especially the leader Steve Prisco.

Prisco has won all four of his matches this year, each against the other squad's top player at the No. 1 singles spot. Prisco has been the calm and consistent force for the Minutemen this season, winning all his matches rather handily, only losing two sets the entire year.

Following Prisco, slotted at second singles, is Todd Champeau. Champeau is 3-1 on the season with his only loss of the campaign coming at Chestnut Hill. Champeau bounced back quickly, however, exacting his revenge on Central Connecticut State, winning in straight sets, 6-3, 6-1.

Brent Davis has been a standout this year, fulfilling his promise at third singles. The freshman has placed more like a season veteran with a 4-0 record on the year, marked by a 2-6, 6-2, 6-3, comeback victory at Boston College.

When this tennis triumvirate pulls out its matches it seems to set up the rest of the team for domination. In the only match this year, in which all three of the top singles players did not win, BC was almost able to come away with the victory. In the other three matches against Hartford, BU and CCSU the Minutemen swept all six singles matches as well as the doubles points.

Aron Gortman, Will Shaw and Rory Theis have been strong all year in the bottom half of the singles lineup - so there's no reason why it shouldn't continue. Theis did drop the other singles point at BC but he won his next match. Other than the match with the Eagles, UMass' singles record remains unblemished.

The team goes where its top players go, so when Prisco, Champeau and Davis are victorious, the remainder of the squad will follow suit. Prisco will be steady on course as usual and Champeau looks like he has totally gotten over his one loss on the year. If Davis can continue to mature and play above himself then UMass will have a solid chance at leaving Storrs, undefeated record intact.

Minutemen bring muskets south

By Matt Cracker
Collegian Staff

Hoping to avoid any lame duck comparisons this weekend, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will attempt to give a capital performance against the Colonials in Washington, D.C.

The Minutemen currently stand at 7-4-2, 3-0-1 in the Atlantic 10, as they head into this Sunday's game with George Washington University, 7-2-2, 4-0 in the A-10. Adding greater importance to their match up, both UMass and the Colonials are undefeated and amongst the top squads in Atlantic 10 play this season. This is a crucial game for both programs as they are both in contention to stand alone atop the A-10.

Although fresh off a loss to Harvard University last Wednesday, in which the Maroon and White walked away with a 1-0 defeat, UMass is fully prepared for the competition of its Atlantic 10 rival G.W. and will take nothing for granted.

"It was a wake up call for us," Head Coach Sam Koch said when asked about the Harvard loss. "We have been winning a lot of games and not really playing well. We didn't start to play well until they got that goal on us."

Attempting to help get UMass back in the win column against the Colonials will be sophomore duo Jeff Deren and Yuri Morales along with junior Fred Kinateder. Deren has been the biggest threat for the Maroon and White for opposing goalies this season with six goals to his credit. Morales only has two goals, but has been key in the set up of many scoring opportunities for UMass, recording five assists in his efforts.

Kinateder has tallied one assist and three goals, two of which he delivered during last weekend's 4-2 victory over Saint Joseph's University, and was last season's second highest scorer for UMass with ten goals and three assists.

However, breaking through the George Washington defense and finding the back of the net may be very difficult for the Minutemen on Sunday. The Colonials are on a four game winning streak and have only allowed one goal during Atlantic 10 competition this season.

"They are 4-0 in the conference, enough said," remarked coach Koch. "They are a solid team."

Helping earn G.W. its reputation as a powerful team in the conference is English import sophomore Matt Osborne. Osborne has been explosive for the Colonial offense, netting goals in his last six straight appearances. He is currently the leading scorer and point man for the George Washington squad with ten goals, his last goal being a golden one against Fordham University to seal a 1-0 win over the Rams in overtime. Yet, as important as Osborne has been for the Colonials, goalkeeper Nick Parypinski may be even more of a force to be reckoned with. Parypinski has blanked the opposing offense in five games this season, posting a .87 goals against average, .33 in the A-10.

UMass will see and attempt to quell the strength and depth of Colonials at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday at the South Riding fields in Washington D.C.

XC teams go to New England tourney

By Kevin Stone
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross-country squad will compete in the New England Championships today in Boston on the world famous Franklin Park course. Placing twelfth last year, the Minutemen are of 43 Division I, II, and III teams at the meet.

"This will be a good mid-season test for the team," Head Coach Ken O'Brien said.

The squad was plagued with injuries through the first three meets, which meant that key runners including Dave Prasse and Brendan Sullivan were out but both will compete in today's race.

"The injured kids are returning and I'm seeing the team gain momentum," O'Brien explained. "We're still not 100 percent but at least we've got some major pieces of the puzzle back."

The Minutemen's strength lies in their modest depth and their experience. At the team's last meet, the Meet of Champions on Saturday, Sept. 30, the first four runners for UMass were juniors or seniors.

Senior Mike Fleck indicated he hopes to beat A-10 rivals the University of Connecticut and the University of Rhode Island at the meet. With more members of the squad healthier than they have been all season, Coach O'Brien expects the team to fair well against its competition, which includes seven top 25 teams in their divisions.

"I like the fact that if we are healthy, we will have five or six kids competing who have been to this meet in the last few years," O'Brien said.

The current juniors were a big part of the varsity team as freshmen. I was a little uneasy during the first three meets when we were missing a runner, but I'm more optimistic (now), I expect (the team) to run to its full potential. We should be able to improve on our 12th place finish."

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

As Mercury would flee the mighty Titans while delivering his news to Olympus, so does the Massachusetts women's cross-country team have New England nipping at its heels as it attempts to deliver a victory this weekend in Boston.

The Minutewomen go into the state capital this weekend looking to stake a claim as the best in the area as they compete in the New England Championships.

The Maroon and White look to improve on an 11th place finish in the Meet of Champions hosted by Iona University on September 30. The top finisher for UMass was junior Kristin Cisowski who crossed the line in 39th place with a final time of 22:05. The next best time for Massachusetts came from freshman Molly Ketschek who finished at 52nd with a time of 22:21.

If the Minutewomen hope to finish on the top half of the board in Boston than they not only need a top finisher but they need a solid effort from the whole squad.

Cisowski has been their top runner in the last two races, as she placed 13th at New Hampshire. UMass will need senior Melissa Henderson to have a good race if it hopes to compete with the rest of New England.

If Cisowski gives her usual strong performance then the door will be open for the rest of the team to step up. Henderson is a senior and a leader but she cannot be alone. UMass will only benefit from strong performances by Katherine Blais as well as Rebecca Aldrich.

A strong team effort coupled with an outstanding individual performance could lead to the Maroon and White's most successful finish of the season.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
.....Coming Soon...

NFL Week 7 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	5-8-1 (36-32-3)	7-6-1 (35-33-3)	8-5-1 (38-30-3)	7-6-1 (33-35-3)	6-7-1 (33-35-3)
NY Jets @ New England	New England by 3	NY Jets	NY Jets	New England	New England	New England
Baltimore @ Washington	Washington by 3 1/2	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore	Washington
Carolina @ New Orleans	Carolina by 1	Carolina	Carolina	New Orleans	New Orleans	Carolina
Cincinnati @ Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh by 8	Cinicinnati	Cincinnati	Cincinnati	Pittsburgh	Cincinnati
Oakland @ Kansas City	Kansas City by 2 1/2	Kansas City	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Kansas City
Atlanta @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 18	Atlanta	St. Louis	St. Louis	St Louis	Atlanta
Dallas @ NY Giants	NY Giants by 4	Dallas	NY Giants	NY Giants	NY Giants	Dallas
San Diego @ Buffalo	Buffalo by 10	Buffalo	San Diego	Buffalo	Buffalo	Buffalo
Cleveland @ Denver	Denver by 12	Denver	Cleveland	Denver	Cleveland	Denver
Indianapolis @ Seattle	Indianapolis by 5 1/2	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
San Francisco @ Green Bay	Green Bay by 4 1/2	San Francisco	San Francisco	San Francisco	Green Bay	San Francisco
Philadelphia @ Arizona	Philadelphi a by 2 1/2	Philadelphia	Arizona	Philadelphia	Philadelphia	Arizona
Minnesota @ Chicago	Minnesota by 6	Chicago	Chicago	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
Jacksonville @ Tennessee	Tennessee by 6	Jacksonville	Tennessee	Jacksonville	Tennessee	Tennessee

TRASH TALK

Two weeks in a row... the reign has begun. I now have a firm grip on first place and am poised to not relinquish it for the remainder of the season. So to all that have hung around through the first six weeks, it was nice playing with you. Sorry that it did not work out better for you. Better you lose now than later.

After an 11-3 week in week five I moved up the ladder from third to second. Last week I went a respectable 8-5-1, but had to hold off a furious rush from 'Big Daddy' Wilkinson to grab the win for the week. Sam, nice try, but I told you that Shaun King could not rally his troops and that Daunte Culpepper and the league's second best offense would roll over the league's best (on paper) defense. You should have been more faithful in the age-old adage that offense wins games and defense wins championships. Remember that it was only a single game, not an entire season.

Now to pick on my roommate, the White Shadow. You are slipping brother, and I do not know why. You were doing so well, but the last two weeks—oh how the mighty have fallen. If you picked the Patriots more often we would be tied, but instead you incessantly go against the Foxboro faithful (why, I do not know) and it kills you. I pick the Vikings most of the time, not because I like them, but because I am smart. You should not spite yourself just because you hate the hometown heroes.

A-ha you Benson. I really have no clue of the planet you have been living on. You are down here at the paper every day writing some sort of column and professing your knowledge, but when it comes down to the nitty-gritty you cannot come up with the pick that puts you over the hump. At least Miami beat Florida State—oh wait, they lost to Washington. No national championship for them either. You should go and buy another alternative Randy Moss or Charles Woodson jersey, it might get you another win per week or you could not impress the White Shadow.

Scarecrow, last week's thrash talk was a little harsh. I gave you the business without just cause. So I am going to recant my comments and credit you for another 500 week. All you need is a few weeks when you go one or two games above that mark and then you can compete for second place. By then first will be so far out of reach even Las Vegas could not get back into the game.

Locks of the week...

Oh course I'm going with the Pats giving three to the Jets. We traded a draft pick for Bill Belichick and gave them a game in NY, but the Pats are back and ready to draw blood. Pats in a route.

Last week I said that Amherst High could give the Bengals a game. This week I am going to pick Cincinnati. Pittsburgh cannot win three weeks in a row.

Lastly, I am going to take Jacksonville. Tennessee is virtually unbeatable at home, but this is must win for the laguars. Tom Coughlin will get his lags together and Mark Brunnell will finally have a game that he can write home about.

Bryan Smith

It all begins Tonight...
Midnight Madness
at the:
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Doors Open @
10:30 p.m.
FREE!
UMass

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

UVC Workshops Learn about video shoots. Oct. 16, 7-9pm student union orientation & cablecasting FREE!

AUTO FOR SALE

89 VW Golf 112k, 4dr, maroon, auto, sunroof, cd, perfect condition. $2900 253-2443

1988 Ford Festiva 155K miles. Excellent condition! $700/obo 413-665-7725

88 Saab 900 5spd. blue $1900 obo Mike 413-772-2686

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

CHILDCARE

1990 Acura Integra GS. 2dr, manual, 108k, sunroof/cd/power. $4895. Call 546-5854

86 Honda Accord LX, new tires, exhust. Great car 159k $2300 o/b/o 256-1952

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

LAPTOPS for only $599, warranty included + delivery. Email:laptop-worldwide@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Unscented/nonsmoker needed for errands, etc. For 4hrs per week, at $10.12 per hour. Car required must be reachable by phone. 413-323-9133

Personal Assistant/ Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

EMPLOYMENT

We'll pay you to listen to the radio. Need someone to listen to local radio stations and report on what heard. EOE Call 413-586-7400 ask for Sean Davey

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Dishwashers Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Drivers Wanted Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

ENTERTAINMENT

Anything for Dollar party at The Pub. Sat. Oct. 14 $2.00 20oz drafts and spinning the best in hip-hop + house DJ DK. 1st affair. 21 to drink with valid ID. Free until 10:30

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAPER! Season passes from $299. All East Passes $355 before 10/15 Call Michael 237-9847

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

G.E. Dorm Refrigerator works fine $60 Tel. Northampton 584-3364

FOR SALE

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

FOR SALE

93 Kawasaki Ninja 600 Looks and runs great! Asking $2995 BUT NO REASONABLE offer refused!! Call 575-7266

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 Guys looking for roommate in four bedroom Rolling Green Apt. $300 a month incl. utl. Call 253-4014 ask for Steve, Jim, Justin

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreak direct.com

TRAVEL

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need to place an AD??

The Daily Collegain Classifieds has all your answers!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Ch.
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 International
15 UMass Academic TV
16 WB/New Haven
17 Sundance
18 The Learning Channel
19 UVC-TV19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
21 Gavel to Gavel
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN Headline News
24 CNN
25 CNN Fn
26 CNN Si
27 TBS
28 BET
29 College TV Network
30 Univision
31 Comedy Central
32 Cartoon Network
33 TV Land
34 C-Span
35 ZDTV (Tentative)
36 Bloomberg Financial Network
37 History Channel
38 HSCN Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 13, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Well St. Week	Debating Our Destiny: 40 Years of Presidential Debates				See Jane Run	Mark Russell
WFSB	3	3 News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "Jump Start"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4 News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "Jump Start"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5 News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigan Men	20/20 (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Grosse Pointe	Popular "The Sweetest Taboo"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 3 – Teams TBA				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven	Goodbys	Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 3 – Teams TBA		News		Friends	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 3 – Teams TBA						News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Fresier	Seinfeld	Friends	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Freekylinks (N) (In Stereo)		News		Fresier	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Major League Baseball Playoffs: American League Championship Series Game 3 – Teams TBA				Vicar of Dibley (The Games		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In (N)		20/20 (N)		News	Midnight Med.
WGGB	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fresier	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm (N)	Madigan Men	Fresier		Spin City	Spin City
WSBK		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fresier	"Body-Count" (1996, Suspense) David Caruso, Ian Sterling					Mad Abt. You	Spin City	"A View to a Kill" (1985) Roger Moore
WTBS		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Diamonds Are Forever" (1971, Adventure) Sean Connery, Jill St. John.
A&E		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Mary, Queen		Poirot "The Double Clue"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Strein v.Money	Saturday Night Live		Toothbrush	Whose Line?			Late Night	Cary Elwes.
DISC		Wild Discovery		Wild Discovery: Rats		On the Inside: Motorcycle		News	Explore Our	Storm Warning! (N)		Justice Files
ESPN		Sportscenter		Auto Racing		Auto Racing: NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series – O'Reilly 300				NFL Films		Sportscenter
LIFE		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Lynda Carter		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Perfect Mother" (1997, Drama) Tyne Daly, Ione Skye.				Once and Again "Letting Go"
MTV		Direct Effect	Lyricist	Senseless	Jackass	Limp Bizkit (N) (In Stereo)				Fear (In Stereo)		Jackass	Senseless
NICK		Pinky & Brain	Noah Knows	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	U Pick Nick					Gilligan's Isle	Brady Bunch	All in Family Laverne
SCIFI		Friday the 13th: The Series		Babylon 5 "Sky's and Portents"		Invisible Men "Tressas"		"Nostradamus" (2000, Science Fiction) Rob Estes, Joely Fisher.				Invisible Men	Tressas
TLC	28	Harrison Ford: America		Operation "Cross-Eye Surgery"		Wild Drivers		Ancient Technologies		Mysteries of the Bible		Wild Drivers
TNT		ER "Such Sweet Sorrow"		Pretender "Hazards" (In Stereo)		"A League of Their Own" (1992, Comedy) Geena Davis, Tom Hanks.				"The Incredible Shrinking Woman" (1981)
USA		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Code Grace"		"Spiders" (2000, Science Fiction) Lara Flynn		Boyle (In Stereo)		Strip Poker	Martin
HBO		(5:00) "Crocodile Dundee II"		inside the NFL		"Deep Blue Sea" (1999) Thomas Jane.		"Bedazzled"		"The Last of the Finest" (1990, Drama) Brian Dennehy.
MAX		(5:00)		"Jakob the Liar" (1999) Robin Williams. (In Stereo)		"Sleeping With the Enemy" (1991)						Bedtime
SHOW		"Racing With the Moon" (1984, Drama) Sean Penn.				"Payback" (1999, Suspense) Mel Gibson. (In Stereo)				Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits	The Beholder	Beggars

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SMELL THAT? ONE OF THESE TUBES OF GLUE IS LEAKING.
YOUR JOB IS TO FIND OUT WHICH ONE AND REMOVE IT FROM THE BIN.
SNIFF SNIFF
SNIFF SNIFF SNIFF
45 MINUTES LATER
SO ANY LUCK WITH ?
I THE HILLS ARE A-LIVE WITH THE SOUND OF MU-SIC!
TRU-BOND EPOXY

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

MIND IF I DON'T MENTION I WAS COMING?
NO AND I DOUBT HE TOLD HIM DUKE. BITCHER
OH, WELL CAN I TALK TO HIM?
HOLD ON. I'LL SEE
SIR, ARE YOU IN ANY KIND OF SHAPE TO TAKE A CALL?
OF COURSE I AM!
ARE YOU SURE?
OF COURSE I AM!
POSITIVE!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I'D LIKE YOU TO LOOK AT THE FIGURE ON THIS PAPER
OK
WHAT IS IT?
THAT'S HOW MUCH I WANT YOU TO RAISE MY ALLOWANCE
AND JUST WHERE DID YOU COME UP WITH THIS - RATHER LARGE - FIGURE ?
OH, I DO MOST OF MY QUALITY THINKING IN THE OL SANDBOX
OK. TOO MUCH INFORMATION

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

TIGER WOODS PUTS ON A GOLF CLINIC AT THE EL RANCHO CAMELOT CLUBHOUSE...
GOLF BUILDS CHARACTER...
'TIS THE ONLY GAME WHERE YOU CALL PENALTIES ON YOURSELF
T'IS?
AS BOBBY JONES SAID OF JACK NICKLAUS... "HE PLAYS A GAME WITH ANOTHER THE REST OF US ARE NOT FAMILIAR."

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

PLANET OF THE APES
TAYLOR BEFRIENDS CORNELIUS & ZIRA WHO HELP HIM ESCAPE THE CITY. UNFORTUNATELY,
HE IS CAPTURED AGAIN AND BROUGHT BACK
ENJOY YOUR CAGE, HUMAN DO U HA HA!
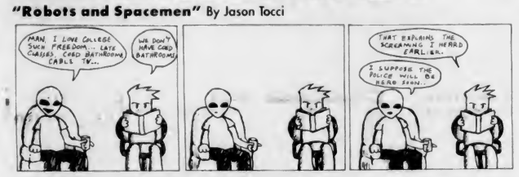
AND SUDDENLY
THE PLANET OF APES WASN'T MUCH A BAD PLACE

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbawkas

"Robots and Spacemen" By Jason Tocci



MAN, I LOVE COLLEGE! SUCH FREEDOM... LATE CLASSES. CORD BATHROOMS. CABLE TV...
WE DON'T HAVE CORD BATHROOMS!
THAT EXPLAINS THE SCREAMING I HEARD EARLIER...
I SUPPOSE THE POLICE WILL BE HERE SOON.

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — When was the last time you cleaned the lint out of your belly button? That's right, you've never cleaned the lint out of your bell's button. Today is the day to do new things.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Leonardo da Vinci once said, "I love meatloaf with barbecue sauce." Rather un-suave? Do meatloaf, Leonardo, that's just silly, it's your theory of [illegible] is ain't too hot, either!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You finally let communication break down today. You should try this new thing called email. It's like real mail, only it's electronic and done on the computer. Supposedly Al Gore invented it on the internet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You should make resolutions for yourself today. That's what others accept is known, and that's why I think don't will be forgiven in time for example, your mum knew, when you got drunk in the 10th grade but she doesn't know you vomited on her wedding dress. But she has forgiven you because she was pretty drunk too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Creative juices today. Plan to drive around Amherst around the same time that high school kids will be getting out of school, and right when they're smoking and kidding around with their mouths thrown back at them.

This is Al Gore writing. Did you see the debates? Pretty funny, eh, that George Bush hadn't been [illegible] that he'd [illegible] something. Al Gore is smarter. Al Gore is smarter than everyone. And [illegible] to Tupper. He's pretty good at bed, too.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Keep your mind on your pals for all needs today, even as you watch your songs and shout for something a little more bodily and artistic in art. Make a list.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — That which has been most elusive is likely to be clarified before this day is out. The answer to a complex question may be less before you. Complexity will [illegible] into simplicity, and simplicity will evolve all complexities. Simple, eh? It will be so after now, like a clear complex, simple idea.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Hey, so I went to the Cheese Fair the other day, and I realized, damn, I'm pretty screwed. I'm really not qualified for anything. But I got a lot of free pretzels.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Hey folks, this is George W. Bush here. In the debates the other night, my esteemed competitor Al Gore claimed that Texas was dead last of all the states in providing health care. That's just buzz, man. What he didn't mention is that we're 32nd out of all the states in education, 51st in welfare and 53rd in gun control.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You may not know just how to express yourself today, but after some careful probing, a good friend will be able to tap a well-spring of good ideas... some of these ideas will involving taking off your clothes off and parading around campus, but that's just expression, man.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Peace of mind is the only true virtue of the human soul. Graham crackers taste better on milk. Sandy is the mother of a creative mind. Pop in some more graham crackers!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Dear Jessica,

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 72 LOW: 51	HIGH: 70 LOW: 47	HIGH: 72 LOW: 45

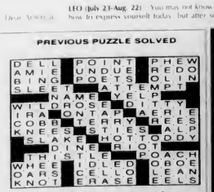
Quote of the Day

"I burned my life, that I might find
A passion wholly of the mind,
Thought divorced from eye and bone,
Esctasy come to breath alone."

—"The Alchemist" Louise Bogan

ACROSS
1 Foreshadows
6 Autograph site
10 Huge
14 Not together
15 Job-safety org.
16 Singer Murray
17 Proportion
18 Main role
19 "The — King"
20 National Park sighting, maybe
22 Waterlily
23 Has a cold
24 Adjust mathematically
26 TV add-on
29 Void
31 Self
32 Miss Piggy's affirmative
33 Neutral color
34 Almond confection
38 Out in — field
40 Toupee
42 Smear
43 Great house
46 Carol
49 Mine output
50 Neither's partner
51 Absent
52 Route
53 Torments
57 Burrows
59 Do a CPA's job
60 Train employee
65 Ignore socially
66 Golfer's cry
67 Purple-gray
68 — dark, and handsome
69 Is obligated to
70 Set
71 Comic Johnson
72 Wings
73 Opposite of save

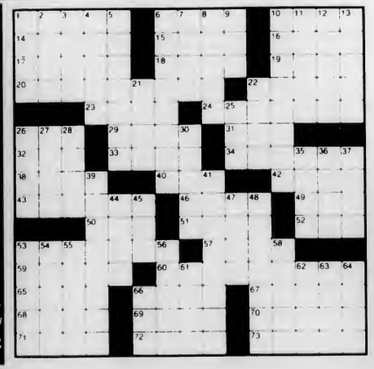
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



10/13/00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Cutting remark
2 Gemstone
3 Statistics
4 Novelist Jong
5 Adding fuel to the fire
6 Picnic food
7 On the Adriatic
8 Shrewd
9 Little boy
10 Bold
11 Elberg of films
12 Nose
13 Nervous
21 Make less distinct
22 Company emblem
25 Stimpy's pal
26 Mouse cousin
27 Prompts
28 Crack in the earth
30 Fibbing
35 Soft light
36 Atmosphere
37 Low card
39 Real
41 Benevolence
44 Praise
45 Belong to a band
47 Lady in King Arthur's court
48 Protein sources
53 Spaghetti, e.g.
54 Of the moon
55 Full-grown
56 Forbidding look
58 Rascal
61 Pitcher Hershiser
62 Inner — water toy
63 Stove part
64 Actor Foxx
66 Rival

NFL SUNDAY TICKET. EVERY GAME. EVERY SUNDAY.
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Steak & Cheese Sub

Buffalo Wings

Garden Chili (vegan) (Berkshire, Hampshire & Worcester)

Squash Bake (vegetarian) (Berkshire, Franklin & Worcester)

Dinner

Hot Wrap Bar with

Grilled Chicken

Grilled Beef

Grilled Tofu (vegan)

Thai Seitan (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician	Anna Weisfeiler
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimauli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass Bear hunting season opens

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

With the recent loss of Adrian Zullo to injury, wide receiver Eric Boss will have to take his game to the next level for the Minutemen.

H. Massachusetts football team can't wait to lose another conference game. The Minutemen will truly [illegible] down it [illegible] when they host the beat Maine tomorrow at [illegible] Injuries have left the Minutemen and [illegible] What [illegible] what have the [illegible] ths with record [illegible] er department. [illegible] Are you signed [illegible] your interest or [illegible] injured Atlantic 10 defense would be lost [illegible] to Maine by beat.

Experience by future writers of UMass/Maine previews for single-handedly taking every bear cliche there is, but there is a point here when UMass (5-2, 2-1 A-10) takes the field at Maverick Alumni Stadium for the showdown with Maine the other organizations will be about as interested as are the ridiculous [illegible] accompany them.

Here are two teams on the precipice of which has had to continue with the adversity that is college football, and they will play their respective hearts out. There will be a winner and a loser and then they will meet up.

So, bear that in mind as you consider these facts, which may or may not have some bearing on tomorrow's game.

HH GOOD

Here's [illegible] people to [illegible] win for the [illegible] town from [illegible]

[illegible] Minutemen [illegible] lead the all-[illegible] time series between the two teams 53-12-1. They have won the last two meetings with Maine, 58-17 last year in Orono and 55-34 two years ago at McGuirk.

UMass' offensive play well into Maine's weaknesses. The Minutemen proved last weekend that they can control a game with the run, using a season-high 50 rushing attempts to rack up 294 total ground yards. That doesn't bode well for the Black Bears, who have allowed 240 total ground yards and averaged 168 per game so far this season.

HH BAD

Both teams are coming off tough games – UMass got all it could handle from Northeastern in Brookline last Saturday, trailing for practically the entire game and needing a career day from backup tailback Kevin Quinlan (241 yards) to pull out a 21-16 win.

The Black Bears also had to contend with a game-long deficit against visiting William and Mary last weekend, missing a 38-yard field goal attempt with 21 seconds left to fall to 2-3, 0-2 in the A-10.

Both teams have had rough going early in this year's slate – In its three losses thus far, Maine has surrendered averages of 43 points and 527 yards per game. The Minutemen have given up an average of 41 points in its two losses. Both teams allowed Hofstra to run up 51 points out them, and both were at home at the time.

HH UGLY

The Minuteman offense is just a shadow of its former self – UMass coach Mark Whipple confirmed on Wednesday that All-American tailback Marcel Shipp will miss his second straight start tomorrow as a result of an ankle injury suffered against Hofstra. The team lost its third wideout of the year last Saturday when All-Conference selection Adrian Zullo went down with serious connective tissue damage in his knee.

Transfer quarterback Richard Lucero has been benched after throwing nine picks in his first four games, leaving backup Kelly Seibert to run a suddenly ultra-conservative offense. Fullback Pete Cariello has all but disappeared from the Maroon and White attack (three catches) and is still looking for his first carry of the season. But once again, the "bear" facts are that UMass needs to keep its winning streak rolling and Maine needs to get back on track. Those in attendance at McGuirk tomorrow should "bear" witness to a sensational conference clash between the two, as both teams will undoubtedly come in "loaded for bear."

But once the whistle blows, it will thankfully be all about the game of football. Because too much more speculation would be, well, unbearable.

Field hockey to face big test in Philly as A-10 schedule begins

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The thud of the ball hitting the back of the cage. The roar of the crowd cheering a UMass goal. These are sound the Massachusetts field hockey team hasn't heard lately. In fact, stroke periods not withstanding, the Minutewomen have exactly zero goals in the last 278 minutes of play.

This kind of offensive slump is usually the sign of an inept team. Yet somehow, UMass is still ranked No. 9 in the nation. And despite the scoring slump, the Minutewomen won two of the three games they were blanked in by also holding the other team scoreless, and then riding goalie Zowie Tucker to a penalty stroke victory.

So when Massachusetts heads down to Philadelphia this weekend to take on Temple on Saturday at 12:00 pm and St. Joseph's on Sunday at 11:00 am, the team will be looking for a break-out game. And nobody wants this more than Tucker, who has had the pressure of knowing that one goal against her could end the team's chances of victory.

However, she has been up to the task. In the last 278 minutes, Tucker has only allowed one goal off a rebound against Syracuse, and has 13 saves to her credit in the process. In addition, she has stopped 16 of 18 stroke shots including the last 15 she has faced.

Getting the offense back on track is not the only thing the Maroon and White must accomplish this weekend. Because not only are these games important for the moral of the team, they also represent the first whiff of Atlantic 10 conference play that the Minutewomen will face this year. And while Temple and St. Joseph's are not the strongest teams that UMass will play, they both are very capable of pulling off an upset on their home fields.

The Maroon and White have also failed to play up to its potential when its opponents have not been ranked in the Top 20. With respective records of 5-8 and 4-9, the Owls and the Hawks are definitely far from the nation's elite. So far this year, though, the Minutewomen have played just as well against such top teams as Maryland and UConn as they have against the Temple's and St. Joe's of the nation.

Temple heads into Saturday's game with some momentum after knocking off Philly rival the University of Pennsylvania 1-0. Senior midfielder Kacy Ziomet leads the team with three goals and four assists, while freshman sensation Bridget Moyer is tied for the team lead with three scores.

Junior forward Jessica Grisafi and senior forward Jessica Jaworski round out the offense with two goals and two assists, and one goal and four assists respectively.

St. joseph's comes into Sunday's game in much the same situation as the Owls. It is suffering through a three game losing streak, but showed that it is a dangerous team when it knocked off Delaware 3-2 in overtime on Sept. 27. Forwards Kathy Sokalski and Brett Dymarczyk are the main offensive threats with three and five goals, respectively. Sokalski also leads the team with five assists. Lauren Bradley patrols the cage for the Hawks with a 2.39 goals against average.

Minutewomen look to hold fort

Women's soccer ready to steal the axe from George Washington

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

From this point on, every game is a big game for the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

With three weeks remaining in the regular season, the Minutewomen are currently tied for first place in the Atlantic 10 with rivals Xavier and Dayton at 4-1.

However, there are also two other teams who are nipping right on the heels of the trio of clubs that reside in the top spot. Rhode Island is in second place with a 3-1-1 mark, while George Washington has posted a 3-1 record in its first four conference games.

But only four of those teams will be playing at the A-10 tournament come the first weekend of November. Nevertheless, UMass can help its cause this weekend with a win over George Washington, who visits Totman Field on Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m.

The contest will serve as a solid test for the Minutewomen, who will travel to Ohio next weekend to face Dayton and Xavier. But first thing's first this weekend – take care of business against the Colonials.

Both teams come into Sunday's game riding high on recent winning streaks. UMass has won five of its last six, while GW has claimed three of its last five tilts.

"People have been a lot more positive since we've been winning," junior midfielder Martha Conover said. "Everyone is more confident in themselves and in their teammates. One thing that I thought even when we weren't winning was that we were going to peak at the right time, and that's what we've been doing."

The Colonials are similar to the Minutewomen in the fact that they also struggled in non-conference play prior to the start of the A-10 season. Junior midfielder Erin Coppedge has been the top scorer for George Washington this season. The Annapolis, MD native leads the club with 15 points, with all of those points coming in A-10 play.

On the UMass side of things, junior Brooke Bartlett and senior Kara Ciocca are tied for the team lead with 15 points apiece. Freshman Amy Mink had a solid weekend against Temple and St. Joe's to move into the second spot on the club with 11 points, while senior Kara Green is right behind her with 10 points.

Goaltending has been one of the strengths for the Minutewomen as of late, thanks to the play of the tandem of Julie Podhrasky and Kelly Nigh. The two have combined to allow only five goals during the current 5-1 streak, including two shutouts.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Juniors Sarah Cook (15) and Katelyn Jones (13) lead UMass into Saturday's battle with the Colonials of George Washington.

Winona Ryder stars in Lost Souls. Turn to Arts for a review of the latest horror film.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

As the clock turned from Oct. 13 to Oct. 14, the UMass men's basketball team opened its 2000-2001 campaign with Midnight Madness

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 28 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, October 16, 2000

Controversial Jello to speak

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Jello Biafra, one of the most legendary figures in the history of punk music, will speak at Bowker Auditorium tonight at 7:30 p.m.. The lecture will be entitled If Evolution is Outlawed, Only Outlaws Will Evolve, also the title of his 1998 3 CD spoken word release under his own Alternative Tentacles record label. Biafra is still very active in the music scene, in addition to his spoken word career, which dates back to 1987.

Biafra, born Eric Boucher and taking his stage name from a breakaway Nigerian state in the 1960's, was the frontman of arguably the most politically and socially outspoken band of all time, The Dead Kennedys. With a band name such as that, and a debut release consisting of song titles such as "Holiday in Cambodia" and "Kill the Poor," major labels were unsurprisingly tentative about the band. This led Biafra to found Alternative Tentacles in 1980 and release the first DK album, Fresh Fruit for Rotting Vegetables, universally seen as a seminal release in music history.

The band stayed together for six years, four albums, and various singles, in the process offending many and enlightening even more. The 1986 obscenity trial leveled against the band due to the inclusion of a H.R. Giger painting reproduction of alleged offensiveness in their Frankenchrist album led to the disbanding of the band but the establishment of Biafra as a vigorous and eloquent defender of freedom of speech.

Since the demise of The Dead Kennedys, Biafra has released multiple spoken word CDs, with another on the way later this year. He has actively toured college campuses since the late eighties, bringing his relevant and often humorous social and political commentary to receptive audiences. He is a supporter of the Green Party, running against Ralph Nader, among others, last year in a New York primary. He is also no stranger to politics, having come close to winning the 1979 San Francisco race for mayor, with his policies including businessmen being forced to wear clown outfits. Topics of interest for Biafra in the past have included the obscenity trial, religion, censorship, the trial of Mumia Abu-Jamal, corruption, and a variety of other social and political issues.

Biafra has also been actively involved in the music industry, releasing collaborations over the years with D.O.A., Mojo Nixon, Pigface, and NoMeansNo. He also released two full albums during the nineties under LARD, a joint venture with Ministry's Al Jorgensen and Paul Barker.

Most recently, Biafra has been in the news following a messy legal battle with ex-members of The Dead Kennedys regarding a supposed lack of promotion by Biafra for the band's back catalogue. Both Biafra and former DK guitarist East Bay Ray were found guilty of separate charges this past May. Biafra has stated his intent to appeal the decision, calling the result of the proceedings "bizarre and potentially very dangerous." He went on to say that if the decision stands, it "will set a precedent whereby anyone whose product doesn't sell as much as they would like, no matter how successful, can sue someone for lack of promotion, no matter how much advertising was already done." After the verdict, Biafra defined the proceedings as "the ugliest thing I've ever had done to me in my entire life."

Keeping in touch with the music scene, Biafra has also made a number of appearances this year. Among them are a new EP from LARD titled 70's Rock Must Die, and a collaboration with Nottingham, England's industrial techno-punk metalists Pitchshifter on their new LP Deviant. Biafra is still the owner and overseer of Alternative Tentacles, based in San Francisco, and the music label houses like-minded thinkers such as Noam Chomsky and Howard Zinn. The label has been an independent safe haven for musical acts wishing to escape corporate control and associate with socially progressive activists for over twenty years.

Tickets for the event are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and are $3 for the UMass Community, $4 for the Five College Family, and $5 for the general public.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Former Dead Kennedys frontman Jello Biafra will speak today at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium about political and social uprisings.

No madness at midnight

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

By Kristin Shrewsbury and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

On a night when the University of Massachusetts' men's basketball team debuted in a show of dunks and smoke, UMass students turned it into the annual occasion to party.

Students stumbled in one by one for the roughly thirty-five minute show. With such a large event at hand, questions of overall control were brought into full effect. However, this years event proved to be more quite than those in the past.

"Although this is my first time working the event, I thought it went really well. It was really busy, but they've [Mullins Center Staff] got it down to a science," said Mullin's Center staff member Ellen McGrita. "As far as alcohol is related, I would have to say that they watch it very carefully, they perform a light search on students and watch them closely."

Other comments were made throughout the night on the grounds that many students were more controlled than previous years, however others begged to differ.

Sue Lecyer, an event staff member, commented on the fact that it was a good show, but students were still rowdy throughout the event.

Surprisingly, contrary to what freshman psychology major Jill McPhillips stated, "obviously everyone is drinking. It's UMass, everyone gets loaded before this event," there were no reports of any alcohol related incidents by the UMass Police Department.

"Kids are just out there to have a good time," officer Bob Waskiewicz said. "It's funny because at 10:30 p.m. when the doors opened there was nobody there [Mullin's Center] but once 11:30 p.m. came around the kids started coming down."

Although those of authority claimed that nothing went wrong, numerous rules

Turn to MIDNIGHT, page 2

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jameel Pugh (top) and Raheim Lamb (above) were caught hanging around during the slam-dunk competition at Midnight Madness on Friday night. Pugh, a freshman, took the title home.

Students protest holiday

Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

A crowd consisting of University of Massachusetts students and community members from the Five College area convened last Thursday at the Student Union steps to honor the lives of Indigenous people by protesting the meanings and significance of Columbus Day.

Meir Hamilton, a UMass student and representative of Mass Action, said he worked with on-campus groups such as the Radical Student Union and Mt. Holyoke groups including La Unidad, a Latin American women's group, MECHA, the National Chicano/Mexicano political organization and the Student Coalition For Action to make this event possible.

Hamilton said the idea to have a rally originally started with the National Zapatista Student Alliance Day of Action where over 100 schools across the country participate in a solidarity action protesting the U.S. military aid going towards the Mexican government. The Mexican government, in return, uses it for low intensity warfare, directly violating the San Andreas Peace Accord between the Zapatistas and the Mexican government.

"We wanted to do something that broadened our focus of the Zapatista movement to Columbus Day," said Hamilton. "This is a good opportunity to bring attention to the larger struggles of Indigenous Rights."

Mass Action, a new group on campus, has held other events in the past concentrating on bringing a consciousness of social and environmental global justice to UMass.

Last April they brought 600 people to Washington D.C. to protest the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank as well as going to protest the Free Trade area of the Americas in Windsor, Ontario.

Recently, they had a successful rally at the local Wal-Mart in Hadley and brought over 100 people to the presidential debates in Boston.

"What we are trying to do is focus on building a progressive movement in the Pioneer Valley community," said Hamilton.

Speakers that attended Thursday's event concentrated on historical aspects of foreign imperialists such as Columbus to express their concerns for the future. Thomas Roberts, who studies Internal Relations, spoke about the history of the Indigenous Maya people in Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala. He said that many issues have consumed them since Spain colonized them five centuries ago, which started the massacres they have endured since.

"The Maya were killed while fighting for their lives and land," Roberts said. "They were killed on their own lands that they have tried to keep sacred for centuries."

According to Roberts, thirty years of civil war, starting in the late 1960's and ending

Turn to COLUMBUS, page 3

ANNA WEISFEILER/COLLEGIAN

Students gathered outside the Student Union to discuss the meaning of Columbus Day.

Vice Chancellor spot up for grabs

Suzanne Furst
Collegian Correspondent

While Al Gore, George Bush and Ralph Nader are battling for the Presidential office, Dr. Richard Koehn and P. Michael Conn will be competing for the title of Vice Chancellor of Research at the University of Massachusetts during the next two weeks.

According to Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Cora Marrett and Vice Chancellor for Research Search Committee Chair Mike Malone, the Vice Chancellor of Research administers faculty research grants and provides cost-sharing support.

"The Vice Chancellor also oversees all policies and procedures relating to research, conflict of interest, consulting, technology transfer and economic development," Marret and Malone stated. "[Vice Chancellor] generally works to encourage and support research and scholarly activities."

The offices of Grant and Contract Administration, Commercial Ventures and Intellectual Property, and the University Press report directly to the Vice Chancellor for Research.

Students will have the opportunity to meet both finalists in an open meeting today at 4:30 p.m. in room 803 of the Campus Center and on Oct. 23 at 4:30 p.m. in room 811 of the Campus Center.

Each candidate will speak for approximately 15 minutes followed by a question and answer session that will provide students and faculty with the opportunity to learn more about the prospective candidates.

Today's open meeting forum will feature Dr. Richard Koehn, professor of biology at the University of Utah where he was also the former Vice President for Research.

The second open meeting, a week from tomorrow, will focus on P. Michael Conn, whose credentials include working at the Oregon Health Sciences University as a Professor of Physiology and Pharmacology and Special Assistant to the President. Conn also worked at the Oregon Regional Primate Research Center as the Associate Director and senior scientist.

While only two open forums have been announced, students will have the opportunity to attend others in the upcoming month.

In a statement, Marrett and Malone expressed the importance of student and faculty participation in the open forums.

"It is critical that faculty and students involved in research meet the finalists for this important position not only to provide feedback to the search committee, but also to demonstrate our level of interest in research and creative activities," Marrett and Malone stated.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Shadow boxing.

Juniors Marc Loke-Redwine and Ryo Grintz practice Chinese Martial Arts last week.

■ midnight

continued from page 1

and regulations were broken prior to and during the event. The questionability of those in leadership positions came into play when more than one student claimed to have drank with Resident Assistants prior to the event.

"Our entire floor drank, two of our RA's [resident assistants] drank with us, and they didn't get caught," sophomore Becki Iersyr said. "Since the basketball team couldn't drink tonight, we drank for them – they better surprise us and win a lot."

Other students shared similar experiences in the idea of "pre-gaming" prior to the event. Chris Fielding, a sophomore sociology and criminal justice major expressed his concerns for bring UMass back to the "ZooMass" reputation it once held. a college known for, not academics, but it's ability to party.

"A little power hour beforehand, brothers funneling mad beers," Fielding said. "We want to bring UMass back to what it used to be. I feel bad now, because I break the laws of my major every weekend."

Whether or not Midnight Madness is an event where students express pride and excitement for the up-and-coming season, it could noticeably be considered something beyond just definition.

"Some people could see this as an event where its focused on drinking, but others could just be out here to have a good time," said emergency medical technician Byron Call.

Both of these scenarios may be the case, however, this event not only brings in students and faculty of UMass, but other members of the Amherst community as well. The behavior of students at this event, as well as any other is what many feel to be a representation of UMass as a whole.

Questionably, does this event present UMass in a way in which it would like to be perceived? At a recent Faculty Senate meeting the issue of student respect at events was stressed as something in need of change on the UMass campus.

"I don't mind students that are rambunctious, but what I don't understand is why we [students] have to be rude towards other people, Chancellor David K. Scott said. "Faculty need to start saying things to their classes and articulating to students that we've tried to make this campus a better place, and rudeness is not the answer."

Looking beyond the fact that many students may have been Intoxicated while at Midnight Madness, the overall event provided fun for all in attendance.

Freshman basketball player Jameel Pugh took the dunk contest by storm winning first place, although this was not his first win in this category. With a record of 15 prior wins in national and international dunk contests, this was a sight to see for many viewers. The UMass dance team, cheerleading squad and funk club provided the audience with music, dance and spirit to get on-lookers into the groove of the night.

The event was not only for the Minutemen basketball team. Minutewomen head basketball coach Joanie O'Brien introduced this year's women's basketball team as they made an appearance as well.

The Minutemen open their season at home game against Iona on Nov. 13 and the Minutewomen debut with a home contest Nov. 17 when they battle UNC-Charlotte.

Poll tracking may affect opinions

By Anne Diebel
Badger Herald (U. Wisconsin)

(U-WIRE) MADISON, WI – Would you switch your bet if your horse was losing? Experts worry that voters are, following the proliferation of daily tracking polls for the 2000 presidential election.

"There is evidence to show that public opinion polls affect how people view the presidential candidates," said University of Wisconsin assistant professor of journalism Dhavan Shah. "If people's views are in the majority, they are more willing to voice their opinions than if they are in the minority. This becomes a problem when people from one time zone hear about the results of an election in an earlier time zone and discredit their own opinions if they aren't in agreement with the majority. They think their opinions no longer matter."

But while the numbers are always there and always fluctuating, to what extent are voters actually influenced by the results of public opinion polls?

"Frankly, I don't think most of the public pays very close attention to polls, except maybe right before elections," said Harry O'Neill, of Roper Starch Worldwide, a media research firm. "I haven't seen anything in my career that makes me think the voting population is very influenced by opinion polls."

While it is unclear how important polls are to the voting public, they are indispensable to both office-seekers and the media.

"Politicians care about poll results because public opinion relates to election outcomes," Shah said. "They often filter what they believe through the lens of public opinion. The media cares about polls because polls make news stories. However, news coverage of polls often focuses on the horse race of elections. The question of who's winning dominates the news and leaves out more important things, like the candidates' views."

While opinion polls are everywhere, from the street to the Internet, both O'Neill and Shah said the only truly reliable polls are conducted by news organizations in coordination with professional public opinion firms.

"The major polls that are conducted by news organizations are reliable, and their methodologies are sound," O'Neill said. "However, that's not to say there aren't unreliable polls, such as web-based polls. They are unsound to the extent that they only interview people with access to the Internet, which is a far cry from representing the whole voting population."

Shah said web-based polls, are unscientific because participants select themselves instead of a pollster selecting them.

The major difference between a scientific and an unscientific poll, according to the National Council on Public Polls, is who picks the respondents for the survey. In a scientific survey, the pollster identifies and seeks out the people to be interviewed, while in an unscientific poll, the respondents usually volunteer their opinions, selecting themselves for the poll.

"Generally, scientific polls are conducted using national random-digit dials of adults, although they are sometimes specifically aimed at voting adults," Shah said. "What they are looking for is a random sample."

UW sophomore Andrea Straebel said she is influenced by opinion polls, but on a limited basis.

"Opinion polls don't dictate who I vote for, but they do dictate what issues I pay attention to," she said. "I tend to pay attention to the issues polls emphasize, and then see how each candidate feels about them."

UW sophomore Cara Kugle said she is not influenced by polls in the least.

"I'm not influenced by polls because I have my set views about if I like a candidate or not," she said. "Just because the majority may like a certain candidate doesn't mean I'm going to change my views. More important are the candidate's views, not who is ahead. Polls change from day to day; views stay the same."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Discover the Power to Innovate

Put some power behind your ideas. At MIT Lincoln Laboratory, your research and ideas will be transferred directly into the development of leading edge, real-world applications, including air defense, space surveillance, communications and air traffic control systems.

If you're looking for a way to power up your career, please forward a cover letter and scannable resume to:
resume@ll.mit.edu
Fax: (781) 981-2011;
or mail to: Human Resources, MIT Lincoln Laboratory, CN00, 244 Wood Street, Lexington, MA 02420-9108.
M/F/D/V
An Equal Opportunity Employer, US Citizenship is required.

Please visit our website or Career Services for time, location and date of our informational session and date of interviews for Fall 2000

If you are pursuing a degree in:
- Electrical Engineering
- Physics
- Computer Science
- Mathematics
- Mechanical Engineering
- Aeronautics/Astronautics

maybe you have the power to succeed at:

LINCOLN LABORATORY
MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY

www.ll.mit.edu

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY
WITH
D.J. MATT Filmore
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
DRINK SPECIALS
GIVEAWAYS
CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

Pending grads weigh risks of working for startups

By Eric S. Barr
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE – For students with backgrounds in computer science, Internet startup companies – with their exotic stock options, skyhigh signing bonuses and bright prospects – have long presented attractive career opportunities after graduation.

But some are discovering that the picture can sometimes be less rosy than it seems. Just ask the Harvard University graduates who were hired at the end of the last academic year by MicroStrategy, a software company in Vienna, VA – at least a dozen, one graduate estimates.

Like many other tech companies, MicroStrategy found its stock plunging this spring. Still, the recent graduates who had received job offers were told not to worry because their jobs would not be affected, according to The Washington Post.

But just weeks before they were to begin work, 236 college graduates who had accepted job offers were abruptly terminated – after having turned down other companies.

"People were upset when they had to completely change their plans," said one member of the Class of 2000. "They had housing and everything and were all set to start work."

Former MicroStrategy employees signed non-disclosure agreements with the company and declined to comment.

The MicroStrategy story is not unfamiliar to students venturing into the high-tech world. After years of seemingly limitless growth, many Internet companies have been forced to face the realities of business.

A report published by Webmergers.com in August revealed that of 238 startup companies profiled, 41 shut down this year, 83 withdrew plans for initial public offerings (IPOs) and nearly 30 had been sold in "fire sales" after running short of cash.

But despite the sea of uncertainty associated with startups, many students are sticking by them. Computer science concentrators and others say the excitement of working at a potentially lucrative dot-com is worth the risk.

"I think some people are really attracted to the experience you get working 50 feet away from the company founder," David J. Mitby '01 says. "The hope is (the risk) produces some gains, both in terms of experience and financially."

Last summer, Mitby, a computer science concentrator, worked at a technology startup called Tellme Networks. Mitby says he met Tellme's vice president of production at last year's dedication of the Maxwell-Dworkin building. Tellme's CEO visited Harvard that November, and after meeting him, Mitby decided Tellme would be a stimulating place to work.

Tellme builds infrastructure for the telephone network, not just the computer network," he says. "It is a unique way to look at an old medium."

Mitby says he views Tellme as less of a risk than other startups because it has big-name backers and founders who have already been successful in the computer industry.

But while not all startups can claim that, many soon-to-be-graduates say they still aren't too wary of companies that might not be around this time next year.

"Even if the startup you are at fails, it's easy to roll to the next startup company," Mitby says. "The risks are there, but are not all that terrible."

Mitby says he plans to return to Tellme after graduating this spring.

Computer science concentrator Scott A. Penner '01, who is also a Crimson executive, says he is fully aware of the uncertainties associated with startups. But that has not dissuaded him from considering working at a startup.

"It's my No. 1 choice," Penner says.

What is the attraction associated with these companies? The answer, says Penner, is simple.

"It's a lot of fun for someone that comes out of Harvard to work at a company that really depends on them," he says.

But he acknowledges that this fun can have a real downside if the companies bottoms out.

"If you pour a lot of time and energy into a startup, you can get burned seriously," Penner says. "If there is an upside, it is about a thousand times better than the downside."

Some students have already witnessed that downside.

"I've seen them fail," Alex J. Lilhauer '01 says.

Regardless, he says he would still look at a startup company as a potential employer after he receives his computer science degree this spring.

"The big advantage with a startup is that it's smaller and you feel like a bigger part of the project you're working on," he says.

Over the past summer, he worked at a fledgling firm called Epesi – and says the biggest draw was working on projects every bit as important as those of senior developers.

Even the possibility of a company's failure can be appealing.

"With Microsoft, if I do a bad job, it will still be there," says Lilhauer. "Maybe there is some security in that knowledge, but it's really exciting to know that I'm important to the fate of a company."

At a small company, he says he finds it exhilarating to think, "Wow, that's just us!"

According to one Harvard student employees at larger companies often daydream about working in startups.

"They're losing tons of people to new IPOs," computer science concentrator Octavian S. Timaru '03 says of Alcatel, an established communications firm where he worked last summer. "People inside the company go and start new companies and hire people away form Alcatel."

Employees at large companies often are frustrated that their work isn't making any big waves, he says. But at a pre-IPO startup, things are different.

"You're setting the standard," Timaru says.

The good news for many students is that they may not have to choose between the two extremes. Not all startups are huge risks – as articles in Alcatel's company newspaper darkly prophesize – and not all major corporations are stifling or boring.

Timaru points out that many big companies are starting to offer attractive stock options to lower-level employees, not just managers.

Mitby says Tellme Networks is an ideal startup. While it offers the excitement of a new venture, he says that the company is much more likely to succeed because of the big names behind it, including Netscape's former vice president of technology.

"There's a lot of people who are risk-averse to startups," he says, "but when you look at who they are backed by, this company seemed to have it all."

The particular company can make all the difference, according to Timaru.

"You can work 10, 15 hours a day and get paid in options," Timaru says. "The company goes down, and you end up with nothing."

But the rewards of choosing a successful startup can be great – including the potential to influence the future of technology.

That possibility, many students seem to think, makes finding themselves at another MicroStrategy an acceptable risk.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Halftime music.

The UMass Marching Band entertained the crowded stadium on family weekend.

■ Columbus

continued from page 1

with a peace accord in 1996, has caused a tremendous loss of land, lives and economic devastation for the Maya.

"Four million Maya refugees were left and 300,000 lives were gone," Roberts said. "Many have disappeared and whole villages wiped out. How can people and history be accounted for when there is no one left?"

People across the country are raising their awareness on these issues and are beginning to do something about it, starting with vigils such as this one.

Joyce Vincent, who also spoke, said she is not representing the University at this time, but a Native American woman advocating for Native American rights. She read excerpts from "Inter Caetera," a document dated May 4, 1493 that called for the subjugation of non-Christians and the surrendering of their land from Pope Alexander VI to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain.

On Oct. 12, 1998, over fifty human and Indigenous rights activists gathered in Honolulu to demand the revocation of Inter Caetera and called for the United Nations to revoke it by the year 2000. In addition to this, the University of Hawaii at Mnoa is taking great strides to change the meaning of Columbus Day.

"In the spirit of diversity and in respect for the past 500 years, the University of Hawaii plans to make the transition from Columbus Day to Indigenous People Day," Vincent said. "I ask that you consider supporting this as students, as a resolution that has been put forth."

The purpose of the vigil was to help people learn something about the mistreatment of Indigenous people and to question the reason behind recognizing Columbus Day as a national holiday.

Mt. Holyoke student Autumn Gonzalez said that providing information about the reality of this day is about coming to terms with her identity and the reality of her heritage.

"As a Latino woman, I think it is important to know the reasons we celebrate Columbus Day," Gonzalez said.

According to her, she thought the event would help students get involved without feeling threatened.

"It's very low pressure, and will help clear up a lot of confusion and a lack of knowledge surrounding the subject," Hamilton said.

Hamilton expressed the whole idea of Columbus Day as being wrong and groups in the Five College area wanted to recognize that.

"We didn't want to let Columbus Day go by without some kind of commentary so that people will know and realize that it is problematic," Hamilton said. "We need to keep that seed in people's mind to make them realize what this holiday stands for."

WRITE FOR NEWS... OR BE EXTERMINATED!

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
FREE
Workshops include lectura on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy - just a great chance to learn how to meditate

Hotel Northampton
JOB FAIR
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17th
10:00 AM - 5:00PM
in the Hampshire Room
for on the spot interviews for the following full-time and part-time positions:

Front Desk Guest Service Representative
Banquet Servers
Banquet Houseperson
Line Cooks-Breakfast/Lunch/Dinner
Dishwasher
Cafe Servers
Breakfast Servers & Weekend Servers
Cafe Bussers and Runners
Bartenders
Housekeepers
Night Laundry Person (4-9 PM)

We offer an excellent health/dental benefits package.
If you can't attend the Job Fair, please fax your resume or apply in person at:
The Hotel Northampton
36 King Street
Northampton, MA 01060
Fax (413) 585-0210

FREE EVENT
Ready for law school?
Attend a mock first-year law class with a leading law school expert.

Wednesday, Oct 18th 6:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass

Presenter: Noted author & legal expert, Dr. Paul M. Lisnek, JD, PhD

To register today, call 1-800-KAP-TEST or visit us online at www.kaptest.com/events.

Alumni Association
sponsored by:
KAPLAN
barbri BAR/BRI
OLSA0051.4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Letters to the Editor:

We want reactions

Letters to the Editor are a tradition in newspapers dating back for longer than anyone can remember. They have always, as long as any of us have been alive, been a staple on the editorial page of every paper, big or small, city or town, and, yes, even college.

It's a wonder, then, that they are so misunderstood today. Letters to the Editor are not meant for personal attacks on actual living, breathing people.

Letters to the Editor are not to hype up your personal political campaign. Letters to the Editor are not meant to be hilarious.

Dear Abby-style pieces wherein you mention all your physical shortcomings with no conceivable point.

Letters to the Editor are meant to serve a very real purpose.

If we at the Daily Collegian print something that is offensive to you, something that is innacurrate, something that you feel was simply inappropriate, a Letter to the Editor can help alleviate the problems.

If you have a legitamate complaint about something in society that you feel should be brought to the attention of the general public, and you feel that a newspaper would be a good way to get that information out, then you may write a letter to the editor with a clear conscience. There is a faulty handicapped ramp on a public building, for instance, or a certain intersection is undoubtedly dangerous and yet there is no street sign – these are examples of this style of letter.

If there is a certain issue that you want awareness raised of (and you, yourself, are not the candidate hoping to drum up support for yourself on this issue), then a letter (say, that age discrimination should be an issue in the upcoming election) is a good way of getting your point across.

The goal of letters to the Editor is to help the public by giving them other opinions, other information, and a chance to make themselves heard in the pages which they read.

It is also to help us help ourselves, by fixing any glaring errors we may have made and missed, and must apologize for.

They are not the tool of propaganda machines designed to get free ads for themselves without going to the trouble of paying for it. They are not for just anyone to wander down and tell us what is right.

They are, above all, not meant to hurt people. No one has the right to personally insult another citizen in print, even if you think it is unimportant. That is never, ever right, and the Collegian will stand by that.

Letters to the Editor may have been an institution forever, but that doesn't mean you should abuse it.

Remember that the next time you pick up a pen.

Going the "distance"

SETH KOENIG

For the past couple weeks, there's been a buzz on campus about something called "distance learning." Well, actually the buzz has been about the Major League Baseball playoffs, but "distance learning" isn't too terribly far behind.

Hell, "distance learning" is so much of a buzz on campus that the University's Grand Poobah himself, President Billy Bulger, actually left Boston for a few minutes to come to Amherst – somebody finally told him where it was – to give an inspiring speech about it.

On a brief tangent, does it strike anybody as odd that the flagship school in the UMass system is in western Massachusetts and Bulger is only seen further west than Waltham when he wants something from us? I don't know about you, but I like to be courted a little more than that. I hadn't seen the guy in months and then he shows up and tells me that he's trying to hand my education over to Microsoft and then he leaves again.

Bulger may be the president, but I don't remember electing him.

But anyway, as usual, I digress from the real point of this column, and that is "distance learning." Keep in mind that "distance learning" so much of a buzz that the phrase has to constantly be in quotations. This is big, people.

For those of you out there who were lucky enough to miss Bulger's inspiring speech and avoided picking up the Collegian the next day because you knew that I wasn't going to have a column in it (every other Monday, people), "distance learning" is not when the professor teaches a class in Thompson from the Metawampe Lawn with a megaphone.

No, with "distance learning" there are no megaphones, no Metawampe Lawns, no Thompsons and, well, no professors. Curious as to how this amazing new educational system works?

Me too. Quite frankly, I don't think it will – but I hope I never have to find out.

The theory is simple: save money by axing the entire school's faculty and have all the students take classes online. Without tried and true professors and teaching assistants to come up with neat collegiate essentials like syllabi and course work and so on, UMass will hand those responsibilities over to some faceless, multinational corporation, which will put its Indonesian sweatshops right to work punching up homogenous courses that every university in the "distance learning" program will use.

This is, of course, a gradual process. First the UMass hierarchy will test this process out in a couple of classes to see how the students respond and to gauge how much learning is actually taking place, and how much the students are actually just figuring out how to cheat more easily because there's no wily prof they have to dupe.

The University will then jack out-of-state tuition up about $5,000-a-month so that it can spend exorbitant amounts of money on committees that will put together informative studies on the effectiveness of the program. These studies, which will come in the form of thick stacks of paper that used to be the Brazilian rainforest, will end up on the desks of people like Bulger and Chancellor David K. Scott, who will promptly ignore them and set this "distance learning" thing underway regardless.

Once UMass, the University of Michigan, Boston College, Florida State, Texas A&M, Colorado University and wherever else all decide, somewhat idiotically, that "distance learning" is the fab thing to do, they'll all save even more money by hiring one company between them that will put together our education.

The word is "privatization." Remember last year when everybody was getting all worked up about the fact that the Blue Wall might be yanked in favor of Burger King or some other "over-100-bazillion-served, 23 digested" sort of restaurant chain? What if they handed your courses over to Burger King?

Would you like fries with that?

In all seriousness, though, some company with more money than it knows what to do with will likely be putting together your syllabus, which, mind you, is the exact same syllabus that the folks over at somewhere like Texas A&M will be using. Provided individuality has always been one of your weak points, this is just fine.

For those of us who chose UMass for a reason, though, it sort of defeats the purpose of going to college. Alternative views on advertising and the media, popular with such communications professors and such as Sut Jhally and Lisa Henderson, will not be part of the learning process anymore, as instead the advertisements will likely be built right into the Comm Class A2 homepage that we'll all be visiting daily for more information on how the gramophone worked.

Does this seem a hair scary? It does to me, but last time I checked, nobody really asked me if I wanted "distance learning" to exist. I guess that means the students don't really have a say in the whole process. I think if "distance learning" comes here before May, I'll leave earlier. I'll be damned if I'm going to pay for professors and get the internet. Hell, I can get online at my apartment for much less than $17,000 a year.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

Be all you can be with ROTC

LINDSAY ELDER

I love wearing my uniform through campus. Camouflage is worn to conceal, but if anything, it gets even more attention directed my way. I don't mind. In fact, I like getting a little extra attention because of it. However, I don't think it's me that they're seeing. It's the uniform.

People see it and have automatic opinions generated about the program and the person wearing its calling card. Sometimes the opinion is a positive one, but more often than not people don't know what Army ROTC is really about and how beneficial it can be, other than raising one's abilities to do push ups. The misconception of ROTC being like a mini-boot camp worked into a class, where all we do is push-ups, scream "Yes, Sir" to everything, and learn to be mercenary soldiers could not be further from the truth. The truth is ROTC is the best class one can take as part of their college educations, whether or not pursuing a military career.

If the Army's Motto is "Be all you can be," then the ideal motto for Army ROTC can be nothing less than "be all the student you can be." I suppose one could consider ROTC a class: in that you attend a lesson, listen to an instructor, read, receive college credit, and learn. However, ROTC is so much more than just a mere class, it is an experience. You attend, but you do so with pride knowing that you are participating in something that only a select few ever will. Also, you attend with the members of your battalion, company, and squad. Those are the people who, outside of the classroom and in, are with you supporting you just as you are for them. Just as they are there to answer a quick question you may have in class, they are also the ones giving you a boost when you're pulling yourself over an 8ft wall. Indeed, it is a relationship much more remarkable than that with the people you like to sit with in astronomy class and borrow notes from.

You listen to an instructor, a man or woman that has already served with pride in the United States Armed Forces, but who was at one point as unsure about what to do in life as you are now. The interest you share in the military is just the beginning of the connections one has with their instructors. The instructors are here not only to make sure that I learn what we've discussed that day, but also to make sure I become a better, more responsible, self-respecting person by the end of my time in the program.

By having activities in which I have to push myself, I have to depend on only my knowledge and strength to get me though it. Then, I will be responsible for the guidance of others and helping them realize that they can do anything as well. The instructors are behind you in your actions, but it is you that make them happen.

You do read in ROTC. It is class with very little textural work. it's one based more on learning by doing with hands-on training. We do read and one reading assignment comes to mind: Map reading. This type of reading came in handy in one of the many "extra credit" assignments in ROTC, the FTX or field training exercise. We, cadets, in groups experienced hands on map reading and land navigation through woodland terrain of Florence, Massachusetts; with only a compass, map, protractor and our common sense to guide us. This is useful because there are going to be times when you can not just stop somewhere and ask directions, you have to rely on yourself to get you through challenges. In doing so, I learned a lot more and had more fun, as opposed to merely reading a chapter or two about it back in my dorm room as most classes are catered to.

In taking part in Reserve Officer Training Corps you are given one college credit. When I tell people that, they're usually surprised. It seems that they are not surprised that that's all the credit we're given, but why I bother to participate in the first place. I usually explain that one does not join the program for the credit.

Although, to be true, as long as you attend class you will get an A. You will get your credit. The physical aspects which people most often fear, like waking up before the sun is up to go run two miles, sit ups, push ups and other strengthening exercises are not mandatory. Why, even the wearing of your uniform is not obligatory if you choose not to attend the lab where all the actual training comes into play. Your presence is all that is really required of you. Unlike other classes though, ROTC is all what you make of it. It is not the grade you want; it's the experience.

First and foremost, as in any class, you learn In ROTC. Not only topics like army ranks and history, US history and politics, but also things a little more interesting and personal.

Things like "drill and ceremony" which is the term for the marching and moving done in formation. Map reading and land navigation are also fun. A little more to the topic of the army, we also study how the army functions. How, for every solider out on the field fighting to defend our great nation there are at least 10 more on the sidelines supporting him. Hearing that for the first time, it made me realize that even I had misconceptions about the military. One does not have to be holding a gun to be of the greatest significance. So many have given their lives for the future of our country. They were men and women with families. And when I think about those soldiers waiting for a letter from their family, I understand how important those on the sidelines truly are. The soldier's food, water, supplies are of unimaginable importance, but mail, getting a letter from a loved one is something that is overlooked. This is what kept their faith alive, knowing that the people back home and future generations are what they're there for, I learn from Army ROTC how unified the army is. In ROTC someone is always there supporting you, just as they would be in the army.

The training we do is lot of fun and there are activities not known to many. I have already learned how to shoot, assemble and disassemble an M16 and M60 rifle. Simply having one strapped to my back for an entire weekend was a lesson in responsibility in itself. I have taken part in assaults, strategizing for both the defense and offensive sizes. I know crawling techniques for when in combat. My throwing arm is getting better; it must be from our practicing in throwing (dummy) grenades at targets on the FTX. I also know how to apply camouflage make-up. I only wish my camera was working the day we put it on. I've been rappelling off of a 90ft dam. As a battalion we've been skiing, paint balling and we've built a rope bridge across the campus pond for a challenge on campus. Another of my favorites of what I've done in Army ROTC is driving an army tank. Flooring this massive cruiser through a huge mud puddle was great, of course my friends holding on for dear life in the back would probably have a different view of the experience. Truly, aside from the qualities it instills, ROTC is rewarding for the new and different things you do.

Lindsay Elder is a UMass student. This is part one of a two part series.

For action, there is reaction

BOOD DOWNS

Last Wednesday night I was watching the presidential debates. Like any concerned citizen, I was measuring up the candidates, their issues, and their overall performances. Bush and Gore, on national television, speaking about education, the environment, health care, and the surplus, to mention a few. While peripheral candidates such as Nader were absent, the two mainstream candidates spoke about the issues we are supposed to care about. During the debates, in the midst of all the rhetorical clutter, cheap jokes, and the finger pointing, one statement from Bush hit home.

The subject was the environment, and Gore and Bush were squabbling on who should be responsible for environmental control, rather than on the solution. Gore mentioned that the environment was in trouble, and that steps should be taken to rectify the situation. Bush, in response, agreed that steps should be taken, but only after the cause of pollution is found, and only then, should efforts be taken on a local level. While this statement in itself hints that Bush is tied in with the corporations causing the pollution, there is a greater issue at stake, and it is not just our air and water.

We are members of a reactionary society. There is an old adage, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." Taken literally or metaphorically, it applies on all levels of life, from the Presidency of the United States to our alcohol-soaked college experiences. As long as things seem all right today, we never feel the need to change anything until tomorrow.

What do security camera and call boxes have in common? They both are precautionary measures against crime. However, it took several sexual assaults and extensive violence in order to get the ball rolling. Instead of a few scattered call boxes a year ago, you can't turn now without slamming into one. While the reactions were logical to the respective crimes, they still are reactions. Everything was just fine and dandy as far as the popular thought was concerned. Think of how things would be if precautionary steps were taken before lives were ruined.

What do Alcohol, tobacco, and pollution have in common? It is easy to enjoy ourselves without paying attention to future consequences. So what if we are dumping toxic chemicals into the air? We have our nifty Sketchers to wear for Friday's party. So what if we are breathing toxic chemicals and shortening our lifespan? After taking some drags, we can finally relax man, no worries. So what if we are throwing our bodies into chemical chaos several times a week, and subjecting others to childish behavior? Stop being a square, and grab a few brews for me.

Right now, it is fine to indulge ourselves. We are young, we are healthy, and we have money (after 10 hours working at the D.C.). Indulgence is not the issue here, but rather the excessive levels to which we take everything. We can't take one beer; we must down half a keg. We must buy 30 pairs of identical shoes to match the two sets of 15 outfits. I, like everyone else, indulge on things, living the youthful, immortal life. However, what happens in ten years when we've destroyed our bodies, spent our savings, and ravished the environment? Then we have a midlife crisis, and our world falls apart. In short, we don't want to think about tomorrow because today's too much fun. When tomorrow comes, and we are hit with the anvil, then we finally decide to change.

What do school shootings and Nazi German have in common? Besides civilians killing others in ignorance, they both were responsible for extreme right wing reactions in response to an ailing society. Instead of slowly rebuilding the shattered Germany economy, the Social Democrats sat around, and encouraged hyperinflation and the ultimate abject poverty associated with that. Instead of seeing the warning signs, little was done to fix post-war Germany. This set the stage for extremist Right-wing reactions, in the form of the Nazis, who seized power in 1933. The rest is history.

While public education and family matters have been on the forefront in countless elections, we have seen the destruction of the traditional family unit, and under funding of many public schools. We ignored the telltale consequences of an unstructured generation, and that lead to moral chaos. Divorce and Single parenting is rampant, and children are subject to physical or emotional child abuse. Violence erupted, and innocents died as a result. It took guns in the hands of children to make us aware of our own folly. Even with this awareness, we are swinging to the Right. Hitler blamed the Jews for the country's economic catastrophe. The moral Right blames Hollywood for this social catastrophe. These scapegoats circumvented the real problem at hand and dove to an extremist stance. History speaks to the terrible persecution and violence associated with extreme reactions.

If we are that blind to the present, we then need to have the Eminems, the Kid Rocks, and the Puff Daddys in our culture. As it is the turn of a new millennium, we like to think ourselves as being perfect. The Civil Right movement was successful, there are more women in the workplace, and the GLBT communities are gaining momentum. However, the ism's that plagued us last century are still present, but without the fireworks. If there are no demonstrations, marches, or extreme violence, then we assume everything worked out. Out of sight, out of mind. This can only lead to sort of enlightened ism's that keep the issues buried, rather than exposed. When Eminem is attacked for homophobic language, the buried is exposed, and we realize that our perfect little world is not so perfect. However, the balance between generating awareness and glorification of ignorance is a fine line, a line that is often crossed.

Feel the need to save our nation from itself? Generate awareness. Never assume that your points are "common sense," as common sense doesn't exist. Creating social ripples however, will become the action that must be reacted to. Follow the example of the great movements of the last century, leading up to the WTO and IMF demonstrations this year. We could use some positive awareness, that informs, but doesn't offend the society that it is healing. Then, and only then, can we keep from falling off the approaching cliff like the lemmings before us.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist

"Ladies Man" would still be awful after a huge bottle of courvoisier

THE LADIES MAN
directed by Reginald Hudlin with Tim Meadows, Karyn Parsons, Billy Dee Williams and Tiffany Thiessen playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

The year 2000 has been filled with some really lame movies. After a disappointing summer and even more disappointing fall, it seems like Jim Carrey's The Grinch can't get here fast enough. Though there have been some really hideous pictures over the past ten months; Scream 3, Mission Impossible 2, Get Carter, the film industry has finally hit an all time low.

In the tradition of Coneheads, It's Pat: The Movie, Stuart Saves His Family, A Night at the Roxbury and Superstar, Lorne Michaels and his crew from "Saturday Night Live" are back to deliver another masterpiece. This time, they bring us Tim Meadows' moderately funny character, Leon Phelps, the cognac loving ladies man.

The Ladies Man is pitifully terrible with almost no redeeming qualities. The worthless characters intermeshed with an even more valueless plot make each minute of the film more atrocious than the next. It isn't even one of those cases that gives away all of the humorous scenes on the previews. The film contains almost nothing funny.

The extremely far-fetched plot wanders all over the place and never really chooses a direction. Through the course of the film, there is so much going on that the viewers is forced to decide what is important and what is not. It takes about twelve seconds to realize that there is nothing at all interesting or important about any of the film's plots.

The story centers around Leon Phelps and his termination from a 2:30 a.m. radio show for being too vulgar. Phelps, along with his Robin Quivers-esque partner Julie (Karyn Parsons) have to search desperately for a new job. It doesn't take more than the opening scene to see where the writer's are going with the Leon-Julie relationship. That could have been done in thirty seconds, you shouldn't have to suffer through the pain induced 85 minutes to see them get together.

While the two look for a job, Phelps jumps around from bed to bed making up new euphemisms for sex that get old and annoying really quickly. He sleeps with everyone's wife, and there is even a group of victimized husbands, led by "SNL" star Will Ferrell, who only can identify Phelps by the "have a nice day" tattoo that they son on Phelps' backside, but want to kill him.

Much of the film takes place in a ratty bar where Phelps hangs out with bartender Lester, played by Billy Dee Williams. (You think they drink Colt-45?) The bar scenes come fully equipped with an "eating challenge" that culminates after Phelps' victory over a man who eats human feces.

One more subplot that finds its way into the story, involves a mysterious love letter sent to Phelps by one of his old flings. The letter turns out to be from a millionaire played by Tiffany "don't call me Amber anymore" Thiessen. About half the film deals with Phelps' confrontations with his former one-night stands.

The film's supporting cast makes you wonder why they even decided to produce it in the first place. It's made up of a group of actors that should be banned from Hollywood for lack of talent. There's Karyn Parsons whom we last saw as Hillary on "Fresh Prince of Bel-Air." Lee Evans, who played Tucker in There's Something About Mary, John Witherspoon from Friday, Ken Hudson Campbell from "Herman's Head," and the obvious plethora of "Saturday Night Live" cast members such as Jimmy Fallon, Chris Parnell and Will Ferrell. Somehow, Julianne Moore ends up the film as a nymphomaniac circus clown as well.

The entire movie is completely void of anything funny or enjoyable. It has rock bottom when Ferrell's crew of vigilantes burst into an awful Song & Dance rendition.

After displaying dreadful scenes such as Phelps talking to a nun about her "missionary position in Bangkok," or a joke where Lee Evans tries to hump himself, but ends up getting caught masturbating with a [illegible] by his wife, the film [illegible] with an oil-wrestling match between Meadows and Ferrell. As if that [illegible] enough, this try to throw a moral into the whole story. Phelps tells all of the men to treat their wives better, so [illegible] won't get cheated on.

Director Reginald Hudlin has [illegible] made less than stunning [illegible] The Great White Hype and [illegible] falls remarkably short with the [illegible] of garbage. It's pretty sad that [illegible] the first project [illegible] who has been out [illegible] than four years.

The Ladies Man is [illegible] example in the [illegible] SNL alum that bards work [illegible] cannot carry over to the [illegible] Lorne Michaels' [illegible] unpleasant carrys over [illegible] World. Quite surprisingly, [illegible] Man hardly resembles [illegible] skit at all. The film is [illegible] minutes, and will [illegible] office disaster. For [illegible] product, it's allowed [illegible] rating, when with a [illegible] it could've easily [illegible] Phelps. With that rating, [illegible] been able to be [illegible] ever.

The movie [illegible] makes A Night at the [illegible] like Gone with the Wind.

With The Ladies Man, Tim Meadows proves that even the best "SNL" performers still can't save the wretched adaptation films.

Shoes!

Style with File SHAUNA BILLINGS

"You know how picky I am about my shoes, and they only go on my feet." Cher, from Clueless definitely knows what's up. Shoes are my weakness - heels are my Achilles heel you could say (cue cheesy drum set cymbal crash... thank god for my stage band!). I own at least 40 pairs of shoes, and that's only what I can think of off the top of my head. Here at UMass, I have limited space, so I have to be content with my traveling road show of nine pairs. Sigh. But despite my shoe obsession, I am nowhere near the level of Imelda Marcos. While I'm up there with the shoes, I still have that whole married to a dictator thing to work on.

Shoes and I have a love-hate relationship. I love to see the newest shoe designs and love to wear a new pair of shoes, but I absolutely hate finding them. I think that this love/hate relationship stems from the fact that my feet are too big to actually buy normal sized shoes. (My friends buy new shoes, and then they sell me the shoe-boxes, so that I can walk around in those.) You thought you couldn't find those perfect little black boots?

I'm a thirteen narrow – try to find those!

So, I can't actually buy shoes at the mall, or Payless, or basically anywhere in Western Massachusetts. Every season, I have to make my annual pilgrimage to Newbury Street, in Boston. There, on the fifth level of an old brick building is my shoe mecca – Investments, For women who leave a larger footprint. It's actually great fun – it's one of those terribly –posh Newbury stores where you get to sit in a brocade arm chair, and they offer you sparkling water. But it is also killer on the wallet, and due to my Hampshire dishroom paycheck, when I bought a pair of black boots for this fall, my mom bought my left shoe for my birthday, and I shelled out the cash for the right. Luckily she didn't withhold the shoe to give me all wrapped up at a later date, or I would be limping around campus with one stylishly-shod foot, and one very worn out sock. I was at the mall recently with my friend Diana, and she was looking for a pair of Dr. Martens-esque tie-on shoes. In Aldo, she was biting her fingernails, trying to decide if she really wanted to shell out the 50 for the pair of shoes she wanted. Ha! Aldo, I spit at your prices! Actually I was drooling at the thought of real leather boots for a mere 60 bucks. But those wily bastards only go up to 11. When will this discrimination against large feet stop?

I don't know about anyone else, but I cannot stand to feel restricted. I am a huge fan of freedom, thus the reason why I vote, and why I wear flip-flops. I can't stand it when anyone tells me what to do (but I don't mind dolling it out, as you can tell by this column), and if someone says I can't do something, I'll do it. Thus, the reason why I cling to sandals so late into the fall, and go barefoot as soon as I get inside. Now there are those who take it to the absolute extreme, of being the campus barefoot people. You know the ones... the ones that walk around campus with their shoes tied to the back of their bags. I envy these people, as shoes of any sort bother me. However, stepping on tacks is a big concern for me. Now perhaps before they head off to class they take part of the Peruvian ritual of dipping ones feet in wax to create a thick second skin on the bottom of their soles, but I highly doubt it.

But due to the recent shift in the North and South Poles, making

UMass the dead north of the earth (or due to that crazy thing called a season change), it has been positively freezing up here. And my feet have been weeping,, or more accurately, the blisters bursting from breaking in my new boots have been oozing. So, no more shall you see this fashion writer walking about campus in her sequined sandals. I have to actually wear shoes.

But anyway, to get to the whole style recommendation part of this column, ATTENTION UMASS – It is fall. There can be no more hemming and hawing over whether it is cold or not. As college adults, you are old enough to decide whether you should be wearing flip-flops to class. I leave it in your hands. However, realize that Health Services struggles, and people tend to only go there when they are dying. To avoid catching a particularly bad case of pneumonia, try wearing closed toe and heel shoes with socks. Novel idea, huh?

For the latest in fall shoes, try a sleek look. For girls knee-high boots look fantastic with knee-length and mini-skirts. Two-piece suits are a hot-item of the season, and look great with 40's style shoes with t-straps and two-colored leather. Shoes with animal skin patterns or a Burberry plaid are also very hot. For guys – Slip-on shoes are coming in huge this season, as are boots and loafers with very few laces. The look is sleek and monochromatic, in smooth leathers and suedes, and new color options are big for men. Black and chocolate browns are classic and go with the most, but what about slates and olives?

So, to recap: Shoes = good, 40+ pairs of shoes = cut up your credit card and get some help.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian columnist.

Hackneyed attempt at finding "Lost Souls"

LOST SOULS
directed by Janusz Kaminski with Winona Ryder, Ben Chaplin
playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

You don't walk into a movie like Lost Souls looking for a lot. Religious thrillers, especially those spring from the recent millennium-fed resurgence of religious interest, all play upon similar themes and fears, and so take similar roads to success. Satan is making plans to infest the world, and has selected a suitable host mortal. The mortal is, of course, an atheist, and his or her only salvation lay in the hands of a religiously devout outsider.

And so, Lost Souls gives us Peter Kendell (Ben Chaplin), a best-selling author who studies murderers and lives a materially satisfying but spiritually troubling life, and Maya Larkin (Winona Ryder), a young teacher and secular assistant to exorcisms at the church where she lives. Maya, to the disapproval of her clerical overseers, is obsessed with the idea that the devil is an actual being, and not merely the allegorical construct the Church favored, and while participating in an exorcism gone terribly wrong, she comes across evidence of Satan's impending assumption of mortal form. Her investigations lead her to Paier.

To its credit, Lost Souls makes every effort to break away from the pack, but in almost each of these attempts it reaches too far and comes up empty. The cinematography is novel and at times interesting, but ultimately cluttered, the movie's visual style too attention-getting and detached. The story is difficult to predict, but also difficult invest oneself in, and as the movie drags on the evidence of cut scenes begins to mount until things appear to happen for no reason. Story arcs are begun and then left to hang, as in the identity suggestion of romance between Maya and Peter, and although intelligible enough while you're watching it, the movie, upon reflection, is nothing more than a loose web of ideas hammered crudely into form in the editing room.

Along the way, Lost Souls manages to sneak in a few genuine spooks of the jump-out-and-scream-boo variety, but none of the director's more extended efforts at developing mood succeeded, so the movie lacks any pervasive sense of dread, the bulk of the film is, in fact, emotionally dry, playing on neither our fears nor our sympathies. It's pretty much a foregone conclusion that Satan won't be ruling the world by the movie's conclusion, so the fun is all in the getting there. Unfortunately, though, getting through Lost Souls is a jerky subway ride that stops too briefly a few points of interest before shoving you out the door at an arbitrary stop.

Ultimately, this is just another patch of muck in the latest Hollywood rut. If you've seen Stigmata you've seen Lost Souls, and either way there's no reason to waste your time.

...inds you!
...n't forget that midnigh...
...t is your first chance ...
...ste of Chocolate Star...
...he Hot Dog Flavored...
...Of course, if you w...
...could'...

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

Apparently Winona Ryder's answer to the restored version of the Exorcist is to make her own more expensive and crappier version.

80 Courses in Art & the Environment
Campus Provincetown
AT THE TIP OF MASSACHUSETTS
AT THE FOREFRONT OF THE ARTS AND THE ENVIRONMENT
Learning in a special place
Call at 508 487-9666 or Email: campusptown@aol.com www.campusprovincetown.org

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

UVC Workshops Learn about video shoots Oct. 16, 7-9pm Student Union orientation & cablecasting free!

AUTO FOR SALE

89 VW Golf 112k, 4dr, maroon, auto, sunroof, cd, perfect condition. $2900 253-2443

1988 Ford Festiva 155K miles. Excellent condition! $700/obo 413-665-7725

88 Saab 900 5spd blue $1900 obo Mike 413-772-2686

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

87 Toyota Tercel Good engine 134,000m $700 Contact 546-2870

91 Honda Accord EX Auto, AC, CD, moonroof. 4 new tires. Great condition. 14k $4200. 546-2568 or 617-335-5366

1990 Acura Integra GS. 2dr, manual, 108k, sunroof/ed/power. $4895. Call 546-5854

86 Honda Accord LX, new tires, exhust. Great car 159k. $2300 o/b/o 256-1952

88 Dodge Caravan for parts $500 obo 413-549-6175

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Jeep Wrangler 55k miles, black w/hardtop, aluminum rims, detachable face radio. $8295 obo 253-5547

69 Mustang Grande, 351 windsor, A/T, runs, needs work $2000 OBO 665-7353 evenings

COMPUTERS

HP Internal CD-RW Burner 8x4x32 NEW $250 Call Caroline 253-2362

LAPTOPS for only $599, warranty included + delivery. Email:laptopworldwide@hotmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spring 2001 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provieded. Contact Student Legal Services today; 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Paid Business Intership Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered For info and applicaton Go to http://www.jablon.com

Personal Assistant/Housecleaner. Julia 413-367-0227

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening, weekend hours available. 3hrs per wk to 20hrs per wk flexible work environment. Great gymnastics center with loose foam + resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, Mass. 01301 413-773-3646

Unscented/nonsmoker needed for errands, etc. For 4hrs per week, at $10.12 per hour. Car required must be reachable by phone. 413-323-9133

EMPLOYMENT

We'll pay you to listen to the radio. Need someone to listen to local radio stations and report on what heard. EOE Call 413-586-7400 ask for Sean Davey

DP Dough is hiring drivers and kitchen help. Flexible hours. Apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

RECREATION POSITIONS
Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Adult Volleyball Officials, Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Dishwashers
Great part-time evening positions. $8.50 to start. Must be 18 years old. Apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton

Drivers Wanted
Flexible schedule. Must have own vehicle. No late hours or cleaning. $8-$12/hr. Delivery Express 549-0077

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

Earn $480/week part time @ home or dorm room. For free details send sase to: Employment P.O. Box 41 Leverett, Ma 01054

Housekeeper Wanted All supplies provided. 3-6hrs wkly. Car a must. $7.50hr. Big fall cleaning job initially pays more. Call Darci 367-9129 Eves.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

1 couch, 4 sleep sofas, 3 loveseats. $85-$150 586-2221

Snowboard! Morrow 158cm, good condition, bindings not included, $100 Call Adam (413) 786-4291

Trek 930 Excellent condition. $325 bo. Call Todd 586-4589

Calloway Golf Clubs. Excellent condition. Complete set. $300 bo call Todd 586-4589

G.E. Dorm Refrigerator works fine $60 Tel. Northampton 584-3364

FOR SALE

Three Couches, 4 loveseats, 4 sleep sofas. $65-$150 free delivery 586-2221

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons. Recreational & competitive boxing. Retired pro Djata Bumpus. 256-0364 (Incorrect number ran in previous ads.)

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

3 Guys looking for roommate in four bedroom Rolling Green Apt. $300 a month incl. utl. Call 253-4014 ask for Steve, Jim, Justin

SERVICES

Affordable Therapy? Yes! Get professional, sensitive care. Clientcentered and holistic. UMASS insurance accepted. Call now! Renee Mendez, MA (413) 665-8532

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring break.com

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Spring Break Reps Needed! Free materials provided. Earn easy $$, travel free! 1-800-367-1252 or www.springbreakdirect.com

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need a Break?

Think SPRING BREAK!!

Check out the opportunities in The Daily Collegian!!

We have it all!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS/4 Boston
5	ABC/5 Boston
6	PBS/57 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Ch.
8	UPN/20 Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30 New British
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS/24 Hartford
13	WCDN & HSCN
14	International
15	UMass Academic TV
16	WB/New Haven
17	Sundance
18	The Learning Channel
19	UVC-TV19
20	ABC/40 Springfield
21	Gravel Gavel
22	NBC/22 Springfield
23	CNN Headline News
24	CNN
25	CNN Fn
26	CNN Si
27	TBS
28	BET
29	College TV Network
30	Univision
31	Comedy Central
32	Cartoon Network
33	TV Land
34	C-Span
35	ZDTV (Tentative)
36	Bloomberg Financial Network
37	History Channel
38	HSCN Programming

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 16, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience "The Rockefellers" (N)		Crown		I'm on the Ballot
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	20/20 Downtown (N)		Roswell "Surprise" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Losers" (In Stereo)		Deadline (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Daddio (N)	Tucker (N)	Deadline (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch "Four Days" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha	Parkers	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Third Watch "Four Days" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Daddio (N)	Tucker (N)	Deadline (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Frasier
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Major League Baseball Playoffs: NLCS Game 5 – Mets or Giants vs. Cardinals						News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Daddio (N)	Tucker (N)	Deadline (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch "Four Days" (N)		News	Frasier
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience "The Rockefellers" (N)		Fender Philos.		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	20/20 Downtown (N)		NFL Football Jacksonville Jaguars at Tennessee Titans. (In Stereo Live)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Moesha	Parkers	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier		Mad Abt. You	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Movie: "The Shawshank Redemption" (1994, Drama) Tim Robbins, Morgan Freeman.							The Shawshank Redemption
A&E	53	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Helpless"		Biography: Connie Francis		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Ritual"
CNN	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Devil's Play		Wild Discovery		On the Inside: Vegas Wedding		Pet Love (N)		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files
ESPN	51	Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night Countdown (N)			Cheerleading		Bay Colony Dog Show		ESPNews	Baseball
LIFE	50	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimans Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Stolen Women, Captured Hearts" (1997, Drama) Jenna Lumeli.		Rosa Rules		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	81	Direct Effect	Campus Invas.	TRL (In Stereo)		Ultra Sound "One Hit Wonders" (In Stereo)				Road Rules	Making-Video	Truth (N)	Jackass
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Rocket Power	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45	Sliders "Dead Man Sliding"		Babylon 5 "TKO" (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Worlds Apart"		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits	Bits of Love	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	97	48 Hours		Turning Point		Code Blue: Second Chances		Best Kept Secrets: Law		Bounty Hunters		Code Blue: Second Chances
TNT	45	ER "May Day" (In Stereo)		Pretender "F/X" (In Stereo)		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)				Bull "The Quick Hit"		Pretender "Mirage" (In Stereo)
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Act of Terror" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Lady Killer"		"Prom Night" (1980, Horror) Leslie Nielsen. (In Stereo)				Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	33	"Seven Minutes in Heaven" (1986) 'PG-13'		Worst Witch		"Gloria" (1999, Drama) Sharon Stone. (In Stereo)				"Bad Company" (1994, Drama) Ellen Barkin. (In Stereo)
MAX	65	(5:00) The Confession (1999)		"Drive Me Crazy" (1999) Melissa Joan Hart.				"Nyorician Dream" (1999) 'NR'		"Vampires" (1998, Horror) James Woods. (In Stereo) 'R'
SHOW	55	(4:45)		"Radio Days" (1987) Mia Farrow. 'PG'				"Diggstown" (1992) James Woods. 'R'		Exorcism		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	"Fait Accompli" (1998) 'R'

Buttercup Festival By Elliot Garbauskas

Adm & Eric By Ross Burach

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, I DIDN'T GET A RAISE IN MY ALLOWANCE, EITHER.
YOU'RE ASKING FOR 10 TIMES MORE THAN SATCHEL GETS, AND HE DOES CHORES!
I FEEL I BRING CERTAIN UNIQUE ENTANGLEMENTS TO THE TABLE.
I'M SORRY, BUCKY, BUT THIS DISCUSSION IS OVER. PLEASE EXCUSE ME WHILE I IGNORE YOU.
SALE!
BUT WAIT, I... UM SEE, IT... UH OH. ALL RIGHT, YOU'RE EXCUSED.

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

SAMMY, WHO ARE YOU, REALLY?... WHAT MAKES YOU, YOU?... WHAT MAKES YOU...
...TICK?
HEY!...
IF YOU DON'T MIND... BREAKFAST IS THE MOST IMPORTANT MEAL OF THE DAY!
PRIED THE WOOD. TICK.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

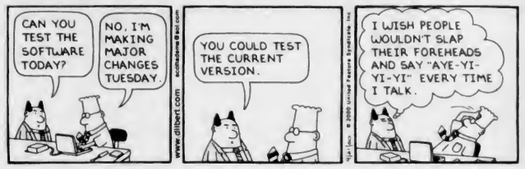
I LIKE THE FRAME, BUT THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG WITH THE MIRROR.
UH... I DON'T SEE A PROBLEM.
WHAT? ARE YOU AN IDIOT?! IT'S ALL DISTORTED! IT MAKES MY NOSE LOOK ENORMOUS!!!
MAYBE I NEED TO TALK TO YOUR MANAGER ABOUT YOU AND...
MENTAL NOTE: DO NOT MOCK CUSTOMERS IN MIRROR DEPARTMENT.
THE HORSE'S HEAD
THE HORSE
THE HORSE'S ASS

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

PLANET OF THE APES
TAYLOR BEFRIENDS CORNELIUS & ZIRA WHO HELP HIM ESCAPE THE CITY UNFORTUNATELY
HE IS CAPTURED AGAIN AND BROUGHT BACK
ENJOY YOUR CAGE, HUMAN! DO U DO A HA HA
AND SUDDENLY
THE PLANET OF APES WASN'T SUCH A BAD PLACE

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



CAN YOU TEST THE SOFTWARE TODAY?
NO, I'M MAKING MAJOR CHANGES TUESDAY.
YOU COULD TEST THE CURRENT VERSION.
I WISH PEOPLE WOULDN'T SLAP THEIR FOREHEADS AND SAY "AYE-YI-YI-YI" EVERY TIME I TALK.
www.dilbert.com

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

THIS TO-DO LIST WILL MAKE ME MORE EFFICIENT.
I HAVE THREE FAKE EMERGENCIES, TWO DOOMED PROJECTS, FOUR UNNECESSARY MEETINGS...
I FIGURED OUT WHY YOU NEVER ASK ME HOW MY DAY WENT.
OFF YOU GO.
www.dilbert.com

Horoscopes

Gemini (May 21-June 20) - Don't bike down Mt Toby under the influence. With a bunch of girls. In the dark. With no flashlights. It sucks.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) - Visiting Day is pretty funny. You can talk to hot girls and they'll be nice to impress their parents.

Leo (July 23-August 22) - How long does it take to process some scantrons anyway? I guess time-value competition loses meaning when you have a PHD.

Virgo (August 23-Sept.22) - So what's the deal with the little scooters? Clever marketing scheme, but c'mon people, they're targeted at kids who don't know not to throw their money away.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - You don't want to attract the wrong kind of attention today, so you'd best keep your more controversial opinions to yourself for now, Steve.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - You may be ruled by the more basic instincts today. Get down to basics - and insist that others interact with you on past that very level, damn it!

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec.21) - So sodas are now $1.10. Who the hell has a dime in their pocket?? What an outrage...

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Call on all your sense of humor to see you through dramatic mood shifts today. You can help alleviate stress by laughing at yourself, everybody else is laughing at you.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Expect the unexpected today. Be prepared to address those topics that you never thought would arise openly - at least not this soon.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - The more you risk today, the more your potential rewards - but it is absolutely essential that your preparations are thorough and complete.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Though you may be able to bend the rules once ina while, you must not get used to it. Abuse of his privilege can only bring trouble ad frustration, buddy.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today you will wake up at 7:30 wishing you were dead, then trudge through hours of classes until 8pm when Central Hill takes your last breath on the way home. You will then egage in self-destructive behavior untill passing out to do it again. Oh wait, thats my horoscope.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 34	HIGH: 57 LOW: 42	HIGH: 61 LOW: 41

Quote of the Day

"If I wanted smoke blown up my ass, I'd be at home with a pack of cigarettes and a short length tube."

–Detective Don Brodka

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Mesquite Chiken Sandwich

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

Tri Bean Casserole (vegan)

Dinner

South Pacific Risotta with chicken, shrimp and Cilantro

Big Burger

Seven vegetable stew (vegan) (Berkshire & Worcerster)

Grilled Marinated Tofu with Black Bean Salsa (vegan)

SALVADOR DALÍ IN CHINA (CIRCA 1927)

© 2000

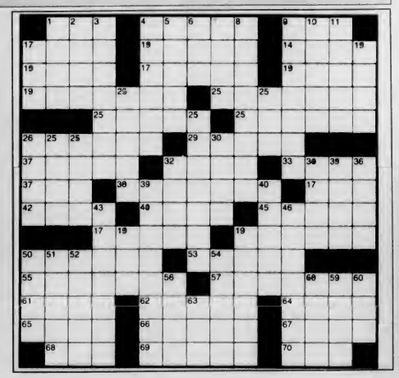
ACROSS
1 Baby-clothing protector
4 Happen
9 The woman
12 Senor's corn
13 Get in touch with
14 Mothers
16 Flag down
17 Shiitake
18 Writer Wiesel
19 Boring
21 Sewing-machine parts
23 Windmill parts
25 Swiss
26 Trial activity
29 Like a house — in a opponent
31 Ike's opponent
32 "Understood"
33 Evening
37 Work a row
38 Some nuts
41 Map abbr
42 Pub drinks
44 Thoroughfare
45 Ore last
47 Like Kansas in August?
49 Tobacco pipes
50 Honda rival
53 Slow mover
55 Shaftish
57 Cora
61 Norse trickster god
62 Airport axits
64 It could be proper!
65 Neck-and-neck
66 Dodge
67 Camp beds
68 Unit of energy
69 Grinch creator
70 — out use thriftily

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Vanilla source
2 Chime in
3 Sucre's place
4 Choosing
5 Reprimand
6 Make swan
7 Platoon
8 Type of mirror
9 Blurred
10 Cargo areas
11 Novelist Zola
12 — Beta Kappa
15 Farmer's boy
20 Take fright
22 "Ballad" and Bruce
24 Bruins
26 Merry sounds
27 Statue of a goddess
28 Swiss painter Paul
30 Nourish
32 "This one — me!"
34 Celestial bear
35 Headliner
36 Clues
39 Fixes the flowers
40 Rara's garments
43 Surmounting heights
46 Stillness
48 Expression of surprise
49 Low voices
50 Ivy League school
51 Superior to
52 Inventor
54 Figurines
56 Roof part
58 Crannny companion
59 Adorable
60 Nav. rank
63 Greek letter

10-17-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

ALL YOU CAN EAT WINGS MONDAY NITE FOOTBALL
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
55 UNIV. DRIVE



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Bryan Smith
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Vlad Zakashansky, Soren Nasha

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Defense dominates in route of Maine

11 sacks halt Black Bears offense

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Looking to build on its hard fought victory last week over Atlantic 10 foe Northeastern, the Massachusetts football team had to face one of the nation's best offenses in the Black Bears of Maine. UMass [4-2, 3-1 A-10] started out strong and never relinquished control of the game in defeating the visitors 33-10 at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

After allowing a field goal on Maine's second drive of the game the Maroon and White defense took over allowing a meager 85 yards in the first half. But it was not only the defense that shined in the first half; the offense put up three touchdowns and headed into halftime with a 21-3 lead.

UMass	33
Maine	10

Kelly Seibert, who was making his second start of the season after replacing Richard Lucero last week against the Huskies, managed the offense to perfection going 11-for-15 for 142 yards and two touchdowns in the first two quarters. Seibert also added a rushing touchdown in the first half to account for the third Minuteman score of the frame.

Seibert, who has been playing with a dilapidated receiving core due to injury with the most notable being All-America candidate Adrian Zullo (torn anterior cruciate ligament against NU), had to make use of others that at season's outset were supposed to be role contributors. The sophomore signal caller, having been the backup to former UMass great Todd Bankhead, is no stranger to the receivers that will now play an integral role the success of the Maroon and White.

"I've been here a while, I know the offense," Seibert said. "Zullo's our go-to-guy as far as receivers. Now a lot of younger guys have to step up and move on."

Another bright spot for the Minutemen was the return of star running back Marcel Shipp. Shipp, a Walter Payton Award candidate, was playing after he sat out the previous week against Northeastern. The senior carried the ball 20 times for 114 yards in his return to the field.

"Am I happy to see him go? Absolutely," said Maine head coach Jack Cosgrove. "[Marcel] probably got healthy knowing Maine was coming to town with his career against us."

The tri-captain terrorized the Black Bears defense in his career in Amherst and finished with a four-game total of 715 yards rushing against Maine [2-4, 0-3 A-10].

But for all the offense's successes in the first half it was the defense that played best.

On the Black Bears' first possession, UMass pushed Maine back eight yards and from that point on the Minutemen had the visitors in their grasp. Freshman standout and Northampton native Valdamar Brower was consistently in the backfield reeking havoc for Maine quarterback Jake Eaton. Brower has also been a positive in stopping the run as he, along with the rest of the UMass defense, held Maine to 24 rushing yards on 34 carries.

A lot of the rushing yards that were lost came via the sack as the Maroon and White notched 11 sacks of Eaton. Brower led the way with four and Corey Potter, Dan Schneider and Compton Webster had two apiece. Paul Bolden added the other.

"We played well on both sides of the ball in the first half," UMass head coach Mark Whipple said. "Our defense played very, very well all the way through."

The second half was an entirely different story for the Minutemen as they seemed to lose a little of their focus which resulted in a Seibert interception on their first possession. "I was disappointed with the way the entire offense played in the second half," Whipple said.

"I put a couple of [receivers] in there and they couldn't line up right. How can you call a formation when they don't know where to go"

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Jeremy Robinson (1) and Marcel Shipp (5) celebrate after Robinson intercepted a Jake Eaton pass in UMass' 33-10 victory over Maine on Saturday.

Shipp docked no longer: Marcel returns to lineup

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Not until the morning before the battle did the men find out that their fallen leader would return. Just as some leaders would rally their troops with an inspiring speech, others such as All-American Marcel Shipp lead by example, through brave deeds while staring into the eyes of the enemy. And so as the senior tri-captain fought through the trenches of grass and dirt and ran past the shadows of massive linemen his teammates pride was heightened, as they knew there general had returned.

Tailback and go-to guy Marcel Shipp took the field for the first time in two weeks on Saturday afternoon and he proceeded to lead Massachusetts to a 37-10 thrashing of Maine. Against the Black Bears, a team that he historically dominates, Shipp dashed and rumbled his way to 114 yards on just 20 carries.

Shipp had an immediate impact, bolstering the offense on the opening drive with a 34-yard gain. On his first carry of the game Shipp beat one defender at the line of scrimmage who hopelessly attempted to arm tackle him. After escaping a loss he hit the hole like a jackhammer sprinting inside the offensive tackle and cutting outside for a long run that stirred the crowd and motivated his teammates.

Shipp's exploits not only had an effect on the offense, his return helped the UMass effort on the other side of the ball as well. With his captain carrying the rushing load head coach Mark Whipple was able to control the ball as well as the flow of the game.

By controlling the field, the Minutemen had almost 33 minutes of possession, the defense was fresh every time they stepped on the field. The end result was 11 sacks and one interception by a formidable, stingy and physical defense. In previous games, Hofstra for example, quick turnovers and short drives had the Maroon and White defense worn out by halftime. With Shipp running the ball, Whipple was able to pound the Maine defense with long scoring drives and a 21-9 first down edge.

Whipple said after the game "anytime you have [Marcel] in the game you feel a lot better." Whipple felt a lot better and his team played a lot better as he used a balanced running attack in exploiting a maligned Maine defense. With Shipp punishing the Black Bear line and emerging star Kevin Quinlan testing their defensive legs, UMass running backs totaled 171 yards on the day with one touchdown.

Limited by an ankle sprain, Shipp was forced to split time with Quinlan, they ended up complimenting each other as well as making a previously predictable offense spontaneous. Whipple said in the post-game press conference that "yesterday [Marcel] jogged for the first time," considering that fact he did well, carrying the ball 20 times and taking all the punishment that comes with power running up the middle.

After the game Shipp affirmed that this was "just a game that I had to step up and play in." The senior showed his leadership and bravery on Saturday afternoon by guiding his team to an essential conference victory.

Minutewomen win fifth straight

Rudy earns career win No. 250 in one-goal victory over Colonials

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Winning makes things a whole lot more enjoyable. Just ask the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

Since dropping a 2-0 decision to Arizona State on Sept. 24, the Minutewomen have won five straight games. More importantly, all of those victories have come over Atlantic 10 conference opponents.

George Washington became the most recent victim for UMass yesterday afternoon. The Minutewomen dictated play for almost the entire 90 minutes and left Totman Field with a 2-1 win over the Colonials.

The victory was career win No. 250 for UMass coach Jim Rudy, and it also allowed the home team to improve to 9-5 overall, 5-1 in the A-10.

UMass	2
George Washington	1

"It's good to get another A-10 win," Rudy said. "This is a big step for us. Whatever Dayton did or is doing now, the win puts us in good position."

Said UMass senior forward Kara Green, who tallied a goal and an assist in the win: "Everyone is much more confident since we've been winning. Everyone realized what role they have on the team, and everyone has been doing what they have to do. That's why we're on a winning streak now."

UMass jumped out to 1-0 lead midway through the first half on a goal from Brooke Bartlett. The Clifton Park, NY native took a pass from Kara Green and lofted a shot home from the right flank.

From there, the Minutewomen looked hungry for more. They had a host of chances from in close that just didn't find the back of the net. Included in the lot were a bomb by Michelle Luttati that clanged off the cross bar and a hit post by Bartlett midway through the second half.

Eventually, the elusive second goal came off the foot of Green just under nine minutes into the latter stanza. Martha Conover fed the senior with a crisp pass right through a seam in the George Washington defense that Green deposited into the upper left corner for a two-goal advantage.

The Colonials would eventually get on the board with 5:45 left in the game. UMass turned the ball over in the midfield, where Erin Coppedge gathered it and carried it down the right side. She crossed a pass into the box to Tiffany Williams, who played it over to Kim Warner. The GW midfielder then tucked it past UMass keeper Julie Podbrasky to cut the lead in half at 2-1.

"We lost control of the ball in the midfield," said Rudy of the GW goal. "We got a little crazy with everyone attacking and trying to get into the deal, and our defense had to pay the price."

However, that goal would be all that the visitors would get on the afternoon, as the UMass defense bore down in the final five minutes to preserve the victory.

"We went through some serious evolution and growing pains," Rudy said. "We had to find out who could do what and what shape we would look like, and it took some time to get things straightened out. I've been urging all year for the team to be patient, that things were going to take time. But now, with time, we're beginning to come around."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Freshman Janelle Khouri helped the UMass women's soccer team earn its fifth straight win yesterday at Totam Field.

UMass grabs pair in Philly; Schmidt leads way in wins

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

A shot so nice, Kristen Schmidt scored with it twice. And with that, the Massachusetts field hockey team was two wins better off.

This past weekend, UMass traveled to Philadelphia to begin its Atlantic 10 schedule with games against foes Temple and Saint Joseph's. And the No. 9 Minutewomen, by shutting down St. Joe's 1-0 and beating Temple 2-1, came out of their Philly holiday with a 2-0 record in the A-10 and a 12-3 mark overall.

In both games, it was Schmidt, the senior tri-captain, who would lead the Minutewomen to victory.

Yesterday against St. Joe's, she scored with 8:40 remaining in the first overtime to propel her squad to a 1-0 victory over the Hawks at Finnesey Field. The goal was the result of an ideal cross pass from junior Lindsay Abbott to Schmidt who fired the ball from her centered position, past St. Joseph's goaltender Lauren Bradley.

As has been the case so far this season, the respective defenses controlled regulation play, not allowing either offense any significant scoring chances. Both squads were halted regardless of the 13 total penalty corners (UMass 7, St. Joseph's 6) that were awarded during the two 35 minute stanzas. Junior Anke Breummer was held to just to one shot.

The contest was the Maroon and White's fourth overtime game of the season. It was the Hawks seventh extra period battle thus far.

And in similar fashion, UMass goaltender Zowie Tucker blanked the Hawk offense to record her seventh shutout of the 2000 campaign. Tucker made five saves on the afternoon as St. Joseph's fell to 4-11 on the season and 0-3 in the A-10.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen faced their first conference match up of the season versus rival Temple and survived with a 2-1 triumph. Schmidt and junior Kaitlyn Byron both scored in the winning effort that occurred on the Owls' Geasey Field.

With neither team scoring in the first half of play, it almost looked as if overtime would again, be the inevitable outcome. But with 25:23 left in the second half, Abbot hooked up with Schmidt again to give UMass the 1-0 advantage. The goal was similar to their St. Joseph's overtime connection as Abbott delivered a cross pass to Schmidt who fired it into the back of the cage past Temple goaltender Serene McGrath.

A couple minutes later, Byron beat McGrath with a low shot to the right side of the net to give her Minutewomen the 2-0 lead. The eventual game-winning goal was the product of a gathered loose ball at the top of the circle, a direct surge to the net and a successful blast past the Cherry and White keeper.

Junior Juliann Leskiw scored with 11:04 remaining in the game to put one on the scoreboard for the Owls, but it was all the Temple offense would muster.

Tucker made nine saves between the pipes for UMass while McGrath made 11 for the Owls.

Nevermore rocks, John Oszajca flops and this young thespian is part of The Food Chain in today's Arts section. Bon Appetite!

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Benny Hoffman and the men's soccer team shut out George Washington in DC on Sunday. Check out the full scoop on the back page.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 29 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 17, 2000

Supreme Court draws UMass Prof to testify

By Lindsey Knox
Collegian Correspondent

Joseph S. Larson, a retired University of Massachusetts professor and former director of the Environmental Institute, is one of 18 nationally known wetland scientists to participate in a Supreme Court case to be heard on Oct. 31.

Larson is a nationally known expert on functions and values of freshwater wetlands and currently serves as the endangered species habitat expert on the state's Fisheries and Wildlife Board. He is also on the advisory committee for the state's Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program.

"This is a supreme court case that improves part of the national clean water act that has been in place for many years," Larson said. "The objective of the clean water act is to clean up rivers, lakes and ponds in the country. Part of that act speaks to wetlands, marshes and bogs."

This act also requires that anyone who wants to altar wetlands that are connected to rivers and streams, have to get a permit from the United States Army Cores of Engineers. The reason for this is the army has a large civilian engineering component that is concerned with keeping rivers and harbors open for navigation. They are also involved with flood control of major rivers. Because they have the expertise, they were provided with the role of offering permits for wetlands, according to Larson.

Under the clean water act, the Army Core denied a request from the Solid Waste Agency of Northern Cook County in Chicago to put a waste-disposal landfill on a site containing 22 wetlands. The Solid Waste Agency retaliated by challenging the decision, arguing that these wetlands are isolated areas and would not directly affect ponds and streams.

"The reason for protecting wetlands is because they perform major functions," Larson said. "They provide a natural flood control basis and act as a base for catching pollutants."

According to Larson, even though these wetlands have no direct connection, the Core's argument is based on the fact that they are connected through groundwater. Larson and a group of scientists who support the ruling of the Core have submitted a brief called the "friends-of-the-court" brief that supplies information to help the court make an educated ruling.

The Environmental Defense, a non-profit government organization that specializes in environmental law, is an organization that often goes to court and assists others in defending environmental laws that have already passed. They also provide legal defense for laws that are being developed.

In a brief, the Environmental Defense pointed out that isolated wetlands provide for a critical habitat to endangered wildlife. They said if these wetlands are filled or drained, water and pollutants they normally capture would overflow to ponds and streams, contributing to stream flooding and a reduction in water quality.

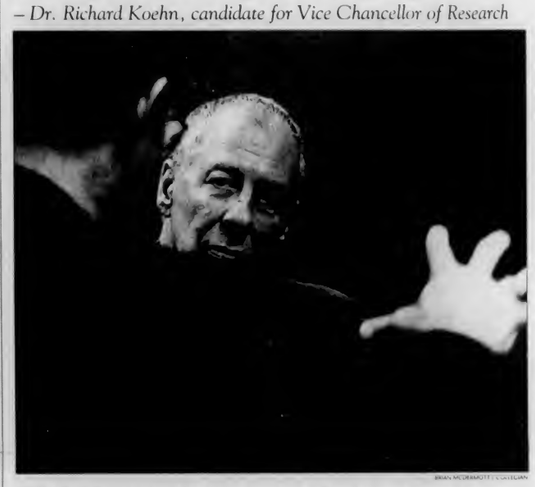
"This [wetlands] has enough water that you could flood the pentagon up to a depth of four feet," Larson said. "We are talking about a large area of wetlands, not isolated water. If you displace that water or put it in ditches or channels to move that waste, it will move pollutants into rivers and streams rather than letting it keep and go through the natural process."

According to Larson, the Solid Waste outfit is arguing that because these wetlands are not directly connected to rivers and streams, they are not subject to the law.

"This is a legal question about whether or not you need a service connection," Larson stated. "They say you don't. Congress did not intend for land to be restricted, but that the valuable part of these wetlands is to be protected. Wildlife is also protected but in this case it is a beneficial spin of reducing flood damage."

Candidate Koehn introduced to University

"The difference [between this school and non-research schools] is the opportunity to participate in discovery…it is like being struck by lighting."
– Dr. Richard Koehn, candidate for Vice Chancellor of Research



BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN
Dr. Richard Koehn, one of two finalists for Vice Chancellor of Research at UMass, listens to a faculty member before yesterday's open meeting in the Campus Center.

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Correspondent

Students and faculty gathered in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts yesterday to participate in the first of a series of open meetings to introduce candidates competing for the new Vice Chancellor of Research position to both faculty and students.

One of the two chosen finalists and the first to speak at UMass was Dr. Richard K. Koehn, an evolutionary biologist and co-editor of The Evolution of Genes and Proteins. He has written over 100 papers. His background and credentials include lectures on evolutionary genetics, biotechnology policy, entrepreneurial universities and the responsible conduct of scientific research in more than 20 countries.

A graduate of a state school, Dr. Koehn received his degree from Arizona State. However, his involvement with state schools didn't stop there, as he continued to work at the University of New York at Stony Brook (SUNY) for 22 years.

It was at SUNY that he was professor of Ecology and Evolution, Dean of Biological Sciences and Director of the Center for Advanced Biomedical Biotechnology for New York State. In addition, he has been honored with numerous awards in the state's biotechnology industry for leadership.

Following his positions at SUNY, he worked for eight years at the University of Utah. Koehn was the Vice President for Research at the university. However, he left Utah's state school because he didn't see eye-to-eye with the new president of the college.

Koehn described research as "crucial and fundamental." He compared UMass, Amherst as a research institution where, "the difference [between this school and non-research schools] is the opportunity to participate in discovery." He later spoke about the exhilaration of research discovery and powerfully added "it is like being struck by lightning."

Speaking in an easy, comfortable manner, Koehn appeared humorous and light hearted even when his opponent's biographical information was mistakenly handed out.

In a question and answer session, Dr. Koehn addressed many topics and issues. When asked about research and ethics, he referred to a course he had taught on research ethics at the University of Utah. The eight-session course touched base with subjects such as managing laboratories, usage of animals, file confidentiality and research misconduct. According to him, the Office of Research and Integrity (ORI) recently began to offer funding in the field of research ethics.

The issue of overhead pay was also addressed during the open meeting. When a company of corporation signs on to aid research they must pay for certain needs such as electricity or facilities. Koelin commented that some corporations have problems with paying for additional expenses and he would solve this issue by requiring all to pay overhead.

One woman interested in the issue of sustainability questioned him on the amount of resources used, and the impact on the physical environment and our role in it with relation to research and teaching. She also inquired about what the campus offers on the subject.

"As an entrepreneur do you see much opportunity for sustainability here?"

"We struggle with these issues," Koehn replied. "The goal is a very good one. There's not much opportunity for sustainability. You can't throw radioactive material on the street."

The next open meeting will feature candidate P. Michael Conn and will be held on October 23 in room 811 of the Campus Center. The meeting is open to the public and there will be another question and answer session to address the issues surrounding the search for the new Vice Chancellor of Research.

Select Board Responds to Marijuana Referendum

By Kavan Peterson
Daily Collegian

The Amherst Select Board has agreed to draft a statement urging Massachusetts' State and U.S. Representatives to reform the war on drugs by decriminalizing marijuana.

The Select Board met last night with the Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy in response to the marijuana referendum passed last spring.

However, no action will be taken to de-prioritize enforcement of marijuana laws, the second request of the referendum, by the Amherst Select Board or the Police Department, said town officials and Chief of Police Charles Scherpa.

Representatives for Citizens for a Sensible Marijuana Policy (CSMP), the organization that sponsored the referendum, and members of the community debated heatedly for one and a half hours with the Select Board over how to respond to the referendum.

The referendum passed 1659 to 981 March 28, and said, "…We urge the members of the Select Board and the Town Manager to persuade our State Representative, State Senator, U.S. Representative and U.S. Senators to repeal the prohibition of marijuana; and, in the interim, before repeal has been effected, we urge the Amherst Police Department to de-prioritize the enforcement of laws covering the possession of marijuana against persons over the age of eighteen."

Anne Awad, Select Board member, said people in the community have said they were concerned that the federal war on drugs was having a negative impact on society.

"The war on drugs is not constructive," said Awad, "and it is damaging to our youth."

According to Awad, the Draconian methods used to enforce drug laws do not seem to curtail drug use. She said that instead, they expose youth to the stigmata of a lifelong criminal record.

Reservations over how to respond to the referendum were expressed by Brian Harvey, Select Board Chair, and Eva Schiffer, Select Board Clerk. Harvey said he was concerned over the clarity of the referendum's meaning.

"If the board takes action it needs to be clear on what we're saying," Harvey said.

Several community members argued that the message sent by the voters when they passed the referendum was clear and the facts behind the war on drugs spoke for themselves.

"I think the message is very clear- the war on drugs is a problem," said Diana Ditmore, an Amherst resident.

Aaron Wilson, treasurer for CSMP, said the Select Board did not need to draft the legislation for new drug enforcement, but asked them to seriously consider the impact of marijuana enforcement on Amherst's community.

"We represent a constituency of people who live in fear of being arrested and imprisoned," said Wilson. "We don't expect the town to do anything illegal. What we want you to do is think about this and do something to protect us."

The war on drugs, said Wilson and other community members, wastes millions of dollars to imprison thousands of non-violent offenders without preventing drug use. Marijuana arrests make up half of all drug offenses, said Wilson, but consist mostly of those same offenders.

The general principle behind marijuana reform, said Wilson, was to move enforcement policies away from policing and imprisonment to public health and harm reduction programs.

"My concern," said Wilson, "is that a large percent of marijuana users are law abiding, hardworking citizens, but are subjected to extremely punitive punishments for minor drug use."

The debate shifted between arguments over the severity of drug enforcement in Amherst and the role of the Select Board in dictating police enforcement.

"I think it is an extremely dangerous thing to intercede in the way police use their discretion," said Harvey. "I think Amherst is already a community that de-prioritizes marijuana enforcement. I don't think we could do it any further."

Terry Franklin, representative for CSMP, disagreed with Harvey. Franklin accused the Amherst Police department of increasing marijuana enforcement in response to the referendum. Franklin said that according to the Amherst Bulletin police blotter, 58 arrests have been made for possession of marijuana in the last six months, in comparison to only 19 arrests in 1999. Police Chief Scherpa verified that there were only 19 total arrests for 1999, but Harvey pointed out that there were 53 arrests in 1998.

Scherpa denied the allegation that police enforcement of marijuana possession has increased. When asked before the meeting if marijuana enforcement is a priority for Amherst Police Department, Scherpa said, "No, we are not targeting marijuana users," and when asked if enforcement of marijuana possession has increased Scherpa said, "That's not true, not to my knowledge."

"Honestly, usually on minor offenses, short of larceny or felony offenses, cops use a lot of discretion," Scherpa said before the meeting. "Primarily with marijuana it depends on three things: the quantities involved, the circumstances of the arrest, and the attitude of the suspect," Scherpa said.

Scherpa repeated these same points in the meeting and said he had no conversation with the town manager or any other individuals about increasing marijuana enforcement.

"As a police officer I am obligated under the oath that I swore to uphold the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and to protect everyone under the Constitution," said Scherpa.

One audience member pointed out that many laws exist on the books that are not enforced. As an example, he said sodomy is still illegal in Massachusetts, but police chose not to enforce that law. Select Board Members and Police Chief Scherpa agreed that what people do in the privacy of their own homes, whether it involved marijuana or sodomy, is usually none of their business.

"I don't know if I went to too many Dead shows when I was younger, but I support what you're trying to do," said Carl Seppala, Select Board member, in response to the agreement that the board would draft a letter according to the recommendations in the first part of the referendum.

After the meeting, several people commented on the amount of discussion achieved over the issue.

"This is the best discussion the (Select) Board has ever had," said Vince O'Connor, an Amherst resident, "because they (Select Board) relaxed a little and let down their defenses."

BRIAN MCDERMOTT/COLLEGIAN
Gun Control
Shamus McClain, a freshman Fine Arts major, fine tunes a mold during his plaster and mold making class in the Marshall Annex yesterday afternoon.

Police Log

Alarms

October 10

An intrusion alarm went off in the School of Management at 1:33 pm.

An elevator alarm went off in W.E.B Dubois Library at 12:33 pm.

October 11

An elevator alarm went off in Washington Dormitory at 12:27 am.

An intrusion alarm went off in Parking Services at 7:25 am.

An intrusion alarm went off in Patterson Dormitory at 1:22 pm.

A fire alarm went off in Hill House at 7:46 pm.

October 12

A fire alarm went off in the Child Care Modular Facility at 1:20 am.

A fire alarm went off in Hamlin Dormitory caused by cooking smoke at 11:20 pm.

October 13

A fire alarm went off in Butterfield Dormitory at 6:31 am.

October 14

A pre-fire alarm went off in MacNamara Dormitory at 1:33 am.

A fire alarm went off at the University Library at 8:05 am.

A fire alarm went off in the Continuing Education Building at 6:13 pm.

A fire alarm went off in Crampton Dormitory at 7:15 pm.

October 15

An elevator alarm went off in Dickinson Dormitory at 12:31 am.

Annoying Behavior

October 12

A suspicious individual was found in the parking lot at Lincoln Apartments.

October 13

An individual was cutting branches close to a parked vehicle in lot 46.

Individuals entered a room in Chadbourne Dormitory and verbally harassed a resident.

Skateboarders were found at Lederle Research Low rise.

An offensive notice was affixed to an office door in Whitmore Administration Building.

Intoxicated Person

October 13

An intoxicated person was found in Cashin Dormitory at 1:55 am.

An intoxicated person was found in lot 42 at 11:55.

October 14

An intoxicated person was found in Melville Dormitory at 12:53 am.

An intoxicated person was found in John Adams Dormitory at 2:13 am.

An intoxicated person was found in MacNamara Dormitory at the Sylvan Snack bar at 3:27 am.

October 15

An intoxicated person was found in Dwight Dormitory at 2:15 am.

Medical Emergencies

October 10

There was a medical emergency in Chadbourne Dormitory at 1:24 pm.

October 13

There was a medical emergency in Herter Hall at 9:35 pm.

There was a medical emergency in Thoreau Dormitory at 11:54 am.

There was a medical emergency at Hills House at 2:39 pm.

Countdown with "W" nears end

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

For students at the University of Massachusetts, October 30 marks the last day to drop a course without any adverse affects on their cumulative grade point average.

Students may drop a course until Monday Oct. 30, the mid-point of the semester, with a "W," or withdrawal notation, appearing on their transcript in place of a grade.

"This can be a positive thing," said Elaine Parmett, academic advisor and assistant to the Dean in the Pre-Major Department. "To drop a course rather than stay with a sinking ship."

Susan Machala, an academic advisor for Pre-Major Advising, explained that while in the first few weeks of a course there's often little feedback from a professor on student performance, by the mid-semester point a student should be able to assess their standing in a course.

"The first step for a student should be to speak to the professor to gauge their performance to determine if a class is right for them," Machala said.

Machala also noted that it is better to receive a "W" on a transcript than an "F" which could lead to academic probation.

"Students don't realize the danger of probation which increases the chances of suspension," Machala said.

If a student's cumulative grade point average falls below 2.0 that student is placed on academic probation. If a student's average falls below 2.0 a second time the student faces possible suspension, and a third instance scoring under 2.0 may result in dismissal from the University.

"The poorer a students performance in past semesters, the more important the decision of whether to withdraw from a course becomes," Parmett said.

> "This can be a positive thing, to drop a course rather than stay with a sinking ship."
> - Elaine Parmett, academic advisor and assistant to the Dean in the Pre-Major Department.

"There's no academic penalty for withdrawal."

Machala went on to say that making up credits is much easier than most students realize. She explained that a student could take an intercession course, participate in an internship, or take physical education classes.

"It's a lot better to play catch-up than to suffer with a bad grade," Machala said.

According to Machala students should be aware, however, that to remain a full-time student they must carry 12 credits per semester and that carrying less than 12 credits may reduce a students financial aid package.

"There is some possible financial risk if you fall below 12 credits," Machala said.

Machala added that students should be aware that they may retake up to 5 courses in which they scored a "C.D," "D," or an "F."

"If a student retakes a course and receives an A or a B, the new grade will figure into the students cumulative average and the old grade won't," Machala said.

Pre-major advising services runs programs to help give direction to students with undeclared majors. The department is sponsoring the annual Majors Fair between 6 and 8 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 1 in the Student Union Ballroom.

Post-football game mob loots UCal-Berkeley area stores

By Will Evans & Rong-Gong Lin, II
Daily Californian (U. California Berkeley)

LAWRENCE BERKELEY LAB - A raucous crowd stormed through Telegraph Avenue early Sunday morning, laughing as they looted The Gap, Athlete's Foot, Tower Records and other businesses.

The result of overflowing crowds at a fraternity party celebrating Saturday's UC Berkeley football victory, hundreds of people crowded the street as high school and college-aged youths broke into the businesses at approximately 12:30 a.m.

"It was a stampede," said Shahla Flores, a UC Berkeley sophomore, who attended the party. "People were jumping on taxis, shattering store windows, and coming out of stores with piles of clothes. People were running everywhere."

Celina Andrade, a senior majoring in history, said she was walking home from the BART station when she saw someone running down the street with a mannequin under his jacket. Outside of the store one person was holding up a pair of Gap pants, offering them for $10.

She said someone yelled, "I want shoes," and she heard a gunshot when the crowd turned to Athlete's Foot.

"(A window shattered) and then everybody ran (away) and when they saw there were no cops they all ran back," Andrade said.

Xavier Sanchez, the manager of Athlete's Foot, was inside the store at the time and said that within 10 minutes 100 people came in and out. So many people tried to cram through the window, many of them were cut and left spots of blood on the carpet and merchandise, Sanchez said.

"They were just helping themselves to as much merchandise as they could," he said. "They were like sheep - like a herd."

Ian Hetzner, a junior in resource management who was with Andrade said most people were just watching.

"Everybody was totally friendly and we were all just having a good time laughing," he said. "It was pretty much the best thing I've ever seen on Telegraph."

According to witnesses, the "riot" broke out when a crowd of about 500 people, mostly non-UC Berkeley students, were denied access to a Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity party at the Martin Luther King, Jr. Student Union. A fire alarm was pulled and everyone was forced outside.

"It was the spectators outside who started running down the street," said Daniel White, 25, of San Leandro. "A lot of young people did not have the proper identification, and the people outside who couldn't get in (started the trouble)."

The fraternity was unavailable for comment.

Some people on the street, noticing the brewing trouble, pulled over and got out of their cars to participate in the ruckus, said Sam Cook, 25, of Oakland.

Ben Szynal, who does security at Blake's, said the bar had to lock all of its patrons inside to protect them from the melee.

The looters broke a front window at C'est Cafe and took all of the money in the store, said employee Gabriel Medina. They also rushed Tower Records, taking merchandise, but everything was videotaped, according to an employee.

"We didn't get hit at all," said Samuel Fugate, assistant manager at Hot Topic. "We were actually very lucky because Mr. Rags got destroyed and our back rooms are connected."

According to Alexis McClure, the assistant manager at Mr. Rags, extensive merchandise was stolen not only in the store but from the front window, where they had a display of scooters.

"I think it was ridiculous, immature and stupid, and I just hope it won't happen again," she said.

Several students criticized the Berkeley Police Department for their delayed response. The department was unavailable for comment.

"The cops (were probably thinking), 'There's only five of us and if we go in, we're only going to hurt ourselves and other people,'" Hetzner said.

A group of at least 10 people were beating a man outside of Athlete's Foot, said Jemine, 18, who attends Claremont McKenna College and who did not want her last name used.

"We saw crowds telling you to run (and) people were driving down at 60 miles an hour down the streets, flooring it without headlights," she said.

After the situation calmed down, police blocked off Telegraph and patrolled the area on foot carrying rifles.

Though occurrences such as this one are not frequent, there have been several such riots and ransackings of Telegraph Avenue in the recent past, most notably the 1991 riot over People's Park.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Jenny Holstein Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Marigmetti Co-Sports Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kolodiarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargarita Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

FORWARD THINKING

"That's New England School of Law, since the first day we opened our doors. We were the only law school ever established exclusively for women. Today we continue to open doors for both men and women with innovative and relevant programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a business law center and coursework that includes Internet Law. Looking to the future is what we've always done."

Michael Scharf, Professor
Director, Center for International Law & Policy
J.D. Duke University School of Law

New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu

ABA Accredited Member of the Association of American Law Schools

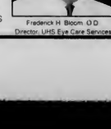
SEE US AT THE STUDENT UNION BALLROOM, OCT. 25, 10 A.M. - 3 P.M.

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Special Offer: $25 off

Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services".



Frederick H. Boom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Learn to Meditate!
Meditation Workshops
UMASS Campus Center, Room 811
Saturday October 21, 3-5 pm
Sunday October 22, 3-5 pm
Workshops include lecture on meditation techniques, meditation practice, music for meditation, and instructional video
FREE, no charge, nothing to buy - just a great chance to learn how to meditate
FREE

Ebola Virus breaks out

Scores perish in Northern Uganda

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Like Alka Seltzer in a glass, the human body dissolves within itself upon infection by the fatal Ebola Virus.

Four different strains of this virus have been discovered since the first outbreak in Zaire, Africa in 1976. Ebola-Zaire, Ebola-Sudan and Ebola-Ivory Coast are all separate mutations of the disease, but it is the Ebola-Reston virus that effects humans, and has killed 43 people within two weeks in Uganda.

Gulu, Uganda, a village about 180 miles from the capital of Kampala in northern Uganda, has been declared the center of the most recent Ebola outbreak. Schools have been closed, and three districts have been put under quarantine to try and curb the infection.

The World Health Organization has sent an emergency response team to the country headed by Mike Ryan, the WHO outbreak coordinator. The team consists of doctors and scientists that hope to learn more about the virus as well as treat dying patients.

Health Minister Crispus Kiyonga has confirmed 63 cases of Ebola Fever in Kampala. Though Uganda has never suffered from an Ebola outbreak, it did suffer an outbreak of Marburg Fever in 1976, which killed 19.

Ten of the victims of this Ebola outbreak were from a Roman Catholic Mission from Italy.

Officials say that they are trying their best to contain the infection within quarantined areas, but stress that lack of security has been a problem, as well as under-staffed and under-equipped hospitals. Three Nurses have died and two more are in serious condition after treating patients without the use of gloves, masks or gowns.

When the first western scientists arrived in Gulu, they were confronted with hospitals on the brink of breakdown, with patients scattered all over the floor and the veranda, with poor sanitation and disposal of waste.

Sanitation is a key weapon against the virus, as it is spread through blood and human secretions. To keep more people from getting infected while treating patients, nurses are encouraged to keep their contact with victims at a minimum.

Travel has been slowed and Uganda's neighbors, Tanzania, Sudan and the Democratic Republic of Congo have restricted travel through their boarders. However, it is difficult to secure boarders due to the fact that hundreds of people pass through every day, many of them infected with diseases such as AIDS and Malaria that show similar symptoms.

There have been several outbreaks of the virus since its emergence in 1976. Gabon, Sudan and the Ivory Coast have all suffered the wrath of the killer.

One of the worst outbreaks occurred in 1995 in Kikwit in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. That scourge claimed the lives of 245 people.

According to World Health Organization statistics, the fatal disease has killed 793 out of 1,100 since 1996.

There have been rare and individual cases in Britain and Liberia as well, but those were the fault of scientists who had accidents with needles. So far there have been no reported cases in the United States.

Officials speculate that the disease entered into the Gulu community through Ugandan troops that have been passing through the area on their way back from the war in the Congo. However, army officials have claimed that there have been no cases within any companies.

Ebola has a cloudy history. Scientists do not know from where the virus originated. It seems to hide from researchers most of the time, only to pop up in random outbreaks like this one.

Some scientists believe that the virus originated in the Zaire River in what is now the Congo. However, others have theories that link the disease to bat guano found in mountain caves. Either way, without the known origin, it is a hard virus to study.

Ebola is usually fatal. Its survival rate is 3-in-10. Though its gestation period is about eighteen days, the virus can kill within 48 hours. The New York Times reported one that doctor described the sickness as, "like watching someone dissolve before your eyes."

The severity of this disease comes from its quick action. What usually starts as a headache escalates into abdominal pain, sore throat and eventually the entire "bleeding out" of the body; where every orifice bleeds, including eye sockets and ears. The effect is essentially the hemorrhaging of the entire inside of the body.

It is hard to diagnose the virus in the beginning because it shares common symptoms with other prominent diseases in the area such as AIDS, Malaria, or even the common flu. Diagnosis can only be done early when there is the presence of special antibodies.

Diagnosis is often difficult because of the sheer speed at which the virus works. It's possible for a patient to die before the results are in from the blood sample.

Viruses attack the immune system by infiltrating cells. The virus breaks into the cell, eats up protein inside of it, finally exploding the cell, reproducing hundreds of times.

While viruses commonly have vaccines, Ebola does not. Some viruses can be obliterated, thus curing the infected. Ebola, however, has no cure.

The Ebola-Reston virus subtype (the only one thought to infect humans) was first discovered in a Primate Research Center in Virginia. It is known to be zoonotic, or animal borne, and is thought to have jumped species at some point in its evolution.

Cynomolgous monkeys are known to have carried the disease, as well as several monkey types in the Philippines. Scientists have speculated that the virus can jump from primate to human due to their similarities in DNA.

Recently cases have been discovered in rodents.

While researching the virus, scientists also discovered its ability to become airborne. However, this has only been established within the laboratory, and has not had proven cases of this phenomena within the real world.

If the virus did somehow become airborne, the consequences would be apocalyptic. Take for instance the scenario of an infected person on an airplane. If one infected person got on a plane with the airborne infection getting into the air system, it could possibly infect all the other passengers. If that plane were then to land in a large airport, it would be possible to infect hundreds of thousands with the virus, sparking a worldwide epidemic.

But that has not happened yet and is not possible to happen any time soon. However, it is a scenario researchers are aware of.

There are many scary aspects of the disease. It is also very sad. While many nurses and scientists have arrived to combat the outbreak, there is little they can do to help the victims.

Since there is no cure, the treatment of the disease is minimal. Nurses are limited to balancing electrolytes, oxygen status and blood pressure. On rare occasions patients are transfused with blood from survivors.

At this point, the main objective in combating the Ebola virus is to keep it under wraps. The World Health Organization is working around the clock to keep the infected peoples under quarantine.

Though this is probably not the last outbreak of Ebola, hopefully with more research a cure can be found and more people can be saved.

Violence delays peace agreement

Deadlock postpones Clinton's return

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Emotions ran high yesterday at the Middle East Peace Summit as attempts to halt Israeli/Palestinian violence kept leaders talking for 16 hours.

Although progress was made on some issues on both sides, a peace agreement is far from being reached. The stalemate has caused United States President Bill Clinton to postpone his return to the United States indefinitely. The summit, which was hosted by Clinton and Egyptian President Hosni Murback, opened Monday in the Red Sea resort of Sharm-el Sheik. It was being held in a hope of solidifying a peace deal between both long-leuding Palestinians and Israelis.

The event opened with a plea from the President to "move beyond the blame" and try to set aside some of the animosity that has plagued both countries for nearly 40 years.

"We cannot afford to fail," Clinton said. "The future of the peace process and the stability of the region are at stake."

A recent resurgence in violence began on September 28 after right wing Likud party-leader Ariel Sharon led a group of Israeli legislators into the bitterly contested Temple Mount, a holy place where the Prophet Mohammed was said to have descended into heaven. Sharon asserted Jewish claims to the area.

This caused a riot within the temple that moved out onto the streets, where rioting Palestinian citizens injured six Israeli police officers. This later resulted in violent retaliation in which 95 Arabs were killed at the West Bank.

The conflict has Israeli military digging trenches and installing barricades across Israeli/Palestinian crossing point. With a few exceptions, Palestinians have been denied access to Israel while Israelis have been refused entrance into to Palestinian areas.

Raw emotions from both sides caused emotional outbursts early in negotiations for a cease-fire between the two countries. The New York Times reported that Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat responded to talk about the conflict accusing Secretary of State Madeline Albright, Israeli acting Foreign Minister Shlomo Ben-Ami and UN Middle East envoy Terje Roed-Larsen of being "murderers" at the third meeting of a drafting committee for a peace agreement.

Erekat asserted that, "you have taken the whole Palestinian people hostage; this is unacceptable!"

Impeding the attempts at peace even further is the fact that neither leader will meet the other face-to-face unless forced. Both Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian President Yasser Arafat sat through an entire luncheon for summit participants without uttering a word to each other. Both issue their demands through liaisons.

Peace talks also reached an additional hurdle with Israeli demands that Palestinians disarm militants and re-arrest radical Hamas and Islamic Jihad activists released by the police two weeks ago before peace talks can begin. The country wants to determine the right time for peace talks through the help of the United States but only after violent protests end.

The Palestinian people have demands of their own, requiring Israeli troops to pull back to flash-point areas where they had previous to the eruption of violence. There is also a demand for an international inquiry into Middle East violence.

So far none of the summit goals, which are to end violence between the two areas, have been agreed upon. Further, none of the attendees have agreed to an investigation into causes for the violence and to find a way back to peace negotiations.

Joe Alterman, a Middle East expert at the US Institute for Peace commented to the New York Times on the overall effect that these conflicts have on the moral of the people and on the possibility that trust in the governments may be harder to rebuild.

"There are people who have been working for a decade that feel completely betrayed about what's happened on both sides and that ultimately is a much, much more difficult thing to rebuild," he said.

No stopping the drug trade

US aid package seen as stopgap

Colombia

The United States approved a 7.5 billion dollar aid package for Colombia three months ago that was aimed at stabilizing the nation and seizing rampant drug traffickers. However, the General Accounting Office has made a report to Congress accusing the plan of being a virtual flop.

The report includes claims that the Colombian government does not have the management, detailed plans or international backing to meet the plan's goals.

Meanwhile, other Latin American leaders are worried about US militarism, and claim that President Andres Pastrana has refused to promote the plan at home, which he proposed to his government a year ago.

Skeptics around the world concede that the aid is just a front for the United States to quell its own drug problem, and not a genuine plan to help Colombia emerge from a stagnant war between guerrillas and right-wing radicals.

The goal was to reduce coca distribution and cultivation by 50 percent in the next six years. The country allocated $4 billion to the plan and asked the United States and other international constituencies to pledge $3.5 billion to promote peace in the region.

President Clinton just approved another $1.3 billion in military aid to the country, including a dozen Black Hawk helicopters.

Colombia has also received promises for funds from countries such as Japan, Spain and Norway. Even the United Nations has pledged $131 million. However, officials say that though Colombia may have financial backing from the UN, they cannot hope for any support from the European Union, who sees the plan as an American goal.

Many international organizations may not agree to match funds, but everyone seems to be in favor of finding peace in a country that is riddled with violence. Some groups fear that strong American influence could spark even more controversy within the country and anti-American sentiments will escalate.

Colombia's surrounding neighbors are also committed to peace, however they are skeptical of the actual effort the country has promised. So far drug consumption has not decreased at all, and the Colombian economy continues to be in recession, due to seventy years of mismanagement.

President Clinton believes that abstaining from helping the problem will make it worse and guaranteed that no US soldiers will be called to South America.

